In many cases it had been held that the parties could not have meant what they have apparently said; for instance, where a number of things are stipulated to be done, it has been held that the parties could not have meant that a large sum should be payable, as liquidated damages for a failure to perform one or more of them. KEATING, J., in Lea v. Whitaker, L. R. 8 C. P. 74. In such cases the lump sum is to be regarded as a penalty. Kemble v. Farren, 6 Bing. 141; Galsworthy v. Strutt, 17 Law J. Exch. 226; Betts v. BCrch, 28 Law J. Exch. 267; Sparrow v. Paris, 7 Hurl. & N. 599. The tendency and preference of the law is to regard a stated sum as a penalty, except where the actual damages cannot be ascertained by any standard. But, where the damages which must result from the breach of a single contract are uncertain in their nature, any stipulation which the parties may make, ostensibly for the purpose of liquidating the damages, should receive favorable consideration. Where the sum is agreed to be paid for any of several breaches of contract, and the damage resulting from a breach of all of them are uncertain, and there is no fixed rule for measuring them, but the breaches are apparently of various degrees of importance and injury, the cases in this country are somewhat conflicting as to whether the sum should be held to be a penalty or as liquidated damages. "But," as said by RYAN, C. J., in Lyman v. Babcock, 40 Wis. 503, "on principle, we are very clear the sum should be held a penalty; for it appears to us it would be as unjust to sanction a recovery for the sum agreed to be paid alike for one trivial breach, or for one important breach, or for breach of the whole contract, as it would be to sanction a recovery equally for damages certain or uncertain in their nature." And see 1 Pars. Cont. 161. Mr. Sutherland says: "This is believed now to be the doctrine generally held: If a gross sum is stipulated to be paid for any failure to fulfill an agreement consisting of several parts, and requiring several things to be done or omitted, it is a penalty." 1 Dam. 525. The statement is true, as we have seen, even where the actual damages are uncertain, if it appears that the damages resulting from one of the breaches may be great, and from another small, since the inequality is logically certain. But where, as in the case at bar, the sum is made payable for one breach, and for many, for a breach attended with a small loss or a great loss, and the actual damages are easily computed, the inequality is at once seen; the stipulation as to a definite sum is so framed that it cannot possibly be construed to adjust the recompense to actual injury. The sum mentioned and referred to in the act of the legislature is to be treated as a penalty, and not as liquidated damages.

Can the present case be treated as an action to recover damages for a breach of one or more of the conditions to be performed by the defendant? At common law, where there was an agreement, under seal, containing a penalty, the plaintiff could bring debt for the same; or covenant, and recover damages for a breach of a covenant. Martin v. Taylor, 1 Wash. C. C. 1. But after a judgment in an action of debt, if it appeared that the demand was not for damages liquidated, but was a penalty, the defendant could seek relief in equity. Perkins v. Lyman, 11 Mass. 76. Courts of equity relieved against a penalty upon compensation, but, when the covenant was to pay a particular liquidated sum, a court of equity could not make a new covenant for a man. Lowe v. Peers, 4 Burrows, 2228. Courts of law everywhere now administer the same equity to relieve from the penalties in other forms of contract as from those in bonds. 1 Suth. Dam. 481. Under our system of pleading, if an amount is stipulated as liquidated damages in a contract, whether under seal or not, the plaintiff should sue for that amount, for such is the contract. And such (aside from the suggestion as to defendant's alternative promise) seems to be the theory of the present action. But, where the sum stated is merely a penalty, a plaintiff must sue for the actual damage sustained by reason of the breach of the particular condition or conditions he claims to have been broken. The allegation of a breach must be governed by the nature of the contract, but it must be distinctly stated. It should be assigned in the words of the contract, or in words co-extensive with the sense and effect of it. McLaughlin v. Hutchins, 3 Ark. 213. The statement of a penalty in a contract is of very little importance, its only consequence being to limit a recovery of actual damages, so that no more, perhaps, can be recovered than the sum named in the penalty. In cases of penalty, the penalty is not a debt; the recital of a contract containing the penalty is not the equivalent of an averment of damages caused by a breach of a condition of the contract; nor is a prayer for judgment for the penal sum an averment that the plaintiff has suffered damages in that sum by reason of the breach. It follows that each breach of a condition on the part of the defendants, relied on, should have been specifically assigned, and the damage sustained as the result of such breach should have been alleged. The complaint avers that between the 5th day of May, 1864, and the 1st of January, 1883, there were transported numerous public messengers, etc. So far, no breach. It further alleges that, between said dates, on occasions not specified by date, or otherwise identified or described, the defendant exacted fares (if that is alleged) of "numerous public messengers of the state, and of various counties and cities and counties," no one of such messengers being named, or his official character or agency given, and exacted fares for numerous convicts and lunatics, not named, for transportation upon portions of defendant's railroad, not described; further, that defendant charged and collected freights (assuming so much to be averred) for the transportation of "various" materials for the state capitol, and for "various articles" for exhibition at the state fairs, not specifying any of such materials or articles, or its point of shipment, or by whom shipped, nor stating that any of such articles was in fact exhibited at a state fair. If the complaint in these respects were sufficient, the plaintiffs would be at liberty, at the trial, to prove any instance in which, during a period of more than 18 years,—or, at least, within the statutory period of limitation,—the defendant had collected fare for the transportation of any public messenger, convict, or lunatic, or for any article "intended" for exhibition at a state fair. The Code provides for no "bill of particulars" in such case, nor was defendant bound to move that plaintiffs make their complaint more specific. The complaint does not inform the defendant that the plaintiffs will rely upon any particular omission or refusal, or omissions or refusals, to carry free; indicating it or them by any description which could enable the defendant to prepare to meet the case which might be made by plaintiffs at the trial. Nor is there any averment that the defendant has refused to carry all and every public messenger, etc. We think the averments referred to are insufficient as an assignment or assignments of breaches of conditions. Beyond question, they are "uncertain."

With respect to the land described in the statute, the defendant was to convey it to the state within 90 days after receiving a patent from the United States therefor. The complaint contains no averment that the defendant has received a patent for the land. Though it avers no breach of the literal contract, does it set forth facts showing a substantial breach, within the purpose and intent of the supposed contract? The complaint avers that the defendant has been the owner of the land since the passage of the act of the legislature. It may be argued that, since it is the manifest purpose of the act and agreement that the state shall receive a good title from the defendant, it was the duty of defendant to convey the title which it had as "owner." But, whatever may be the meaning of the averment last referred to, that it means that the legal title has been in the defendant is made uncertain by the language which immediately follows it, and is directly connected therewith: "It has been within the ability and power of the defendant at all times to apply for, accept, and receive a patent from the United States." This last is not an averment that the defendant has been in a position to demand, or could put itself in a position to demand, a patent. It may be that, without fault of the defendant, its application for a patent would have been fruitless; the plaintiffs do not allege that it would have been effectual. Nor is there an allegation that the plaintiffs have suffered damage by reason of the failure of the defendant to convey to the state, either in the amount paid out by it for interest, or in any sum. As we have seen, the defendant would not have been indebted to the state in the amount paid by the latter for interest, upon failure to secure a patent or to convey the land. The doctrine of nominal damages may sometimes be resorted to where there is a failure of proof; not where there is a failure of averment. The attempted statement of a breach of a condition to convey the land within 90 days after receiving a patent therefor is ambiguous and uncertain.

It is unnecessary to decide whether, if the complaint had not been subject to demurrer in other respects, the general averment of performance of all the conditions mentioned in the act of the legislature would be sufficient under section 457, Code Civil Proc. It may, however, be proper to say here that the provision in the statute that the defendant, "when required," shall transport, free of charge, imposes on the state, or those made agents of the state, a special request or demand in each case that the person or article be carried free. It has been insisted the words of the statute are not the equivalent of "when required," or "demanded;" that they only mean when "necessary,"—when it is for the public interest, or, in a larger sense, the public convenience. But, the scope and purpose of the act being considered, it could not have been contemplated that the defendant should become liable in case its officers or agents should charge a fare or freight, in ignorance of and without any notice that the man or article was of a class mentioned in the statute. So to hold would be unreasonable in itself, as it might set a trap for defendant, and would make its liability depend on an event not in the contemplation of the law-makers. It has been said that "required" cannot mean "requested," because there was and has been no legislation providing any special mode by which a request can be made by or for the state. But effect must be given to the language of the act which provides for a request or demand. By accepting the act and executing the agreement, the defendant consented to be bound by such reasonable request as is appropriate in the cases provided for. The defendant could disregard such reasonable demand only at its own risk, and would become liable on refusing to comply with it. Thus, if one claiming to be a public messenger, or the convoy of a convict or insane person, shall demand free passage, the defendant must inform itself of his real character, and for the purpose of ascertaining it may adopt reasonable rules and regulations. Practically, there can be little difficulty in carrying out the intent of the statute. Of course the defendant, under pretense of an investigation, cannot avoid its duty, or escape responsibility, by requiring unreasonable vouchers, or imposing conditions which will delay or interfere with the exercise of the right of a particular applicant. The averment that a defendant "although often requested," like the averment of a promise, is often made where the law implies a request or promise. It is an immaterial allegation. "In point of form there are in pleading two descriptions of request,—one termed a special request; the other the licet scæpe requisitus." 1 Chit. Pl. (16 Amer. Ed.) 541. Where the special request is not necessary, the licet scæpe requisitus is of no avail, and the omission of it will not vitiate the pleading. Quimby v. Lyon, 63 Cal. 395. This merely formal allegation cannot be substituted for a special request to be alleged and proved.

The objection that the complaint was ambiguous and uncertain was taken by demurrer, and the demurrer was sustained. The Code (Civil Proc.) contemplates one demurrer to a pleading, in which may be taken any or all of the objections enumerated in section 430. If a demurrer is overruled, it is a determination that the pleading is good as against all the objections to it; and if, on appeal, it appears that any of the objections were well taken, the judgment is reversed. On the other hand, if any one of the objections taken is valid, and the demurrer is sustained below, the judgment based on the order sustaining it will be affirmed. Where the order sustaining or overruling the demurrer is general, the rule cannot be questioned; and, as a general order is alone contemplated by the Code, any matter inserted in the order other than the decision for or against the demurrer is surplusage, and not to be regarded. In the case at bar the order is either a determination that the complaint is insufficient, or the issues of law made by the demurrer have never been determined. A decision in favor of the plaintiffs upon the supposed issues made by the objections other than the specific objection mentioned in the order cannot be implied. The party against whom an order is made sustaining a demurrer is not entitled to notice of the motive or reasoning which induced the judge to make the order. In considering the appeal from the judgment, we are to treat the order on demurrer as if it were itself directly appealable. In such case both parties could not appeal, since the party in whose favor the order was made would not be injured by it. When one of several objections to a complaint is held valid, and the demurrer is sustained, and the plaintiff declines to amend, but stands upon the complaint as sufficient, he cannot be permitted to say here that an "opinion" of the judge below—or matter in the nature of an opinion inserted in the order—indicates that the judge made the correct order for a wrong reason. The question always is, ought the demurrer to have been sustained? Judgment affirmed.

NOONAN v. NUNAN. (No. 9,997.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 30, 1885.)

1. EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—PROOF OF FACTS FOUND BY THE COURT.

Where the court found all relevant facts which the judgment roll in a previous action, sought to be introduced in evidence, would have proved, such judgment roll was properly excluded.

2. PARTNERSHIP—WHAT CONSTITUTES—PURCHASE OF DECEASED PARTNER'S SHARE.

The purchase of the share of a deceased partner does not of itself create a new partnership between the purchaser and the surviving partner, as the assets purchased are primarily liable to the payment of the claims of the partnership creditors, and to the balance of advances made by the surviving partner during its existence. It is merely a purchase of the residuum, and the purchaser in equity only becomes therein a tenant in common with the surviving partner.¹

3. TRUSTS—ACTION TO ESTABLISH—PLEADING AND PROOF.

In an action to declare a partnership, for dissolution and an accounting, it appeared that plaintiff purchased the share of a deceased partner, but the assignment was made in the name of defendant, the surviving partner, and the property was used in the business. Held, the court finding no actual partnership, that defendant could not be charged with a trust so as to render himself liable to an accounting; no facts being alleged in the complaint constituting a trust, but, on the contrary, it being averred that the property should constitute assets of a partnership.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; H. REARDEN, Judge.

Thomas Noonan brought suit against Matthew Nunan to declare a partnership, a dissolution, and an accounting. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

O. P. Evans, J. C. Bates, and E. J. & J. H. Moore, for appellant. McAlister & Bergin, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. The notice of appeal was served January 12, 1885, and filed on the 13th of the same month. The certificate of the clerk shows that the undertaking on appeal was filed on the 16th day of January, 1885. The motion to dismiss the appeal must be denied. If the facts found in the action, Odd Fellows' Bank v. Thomas Noonan et al., to the effect that the right, title, and interest of the estate of Armstrong, deceased, in the leasehold and its appurtenances were purchased from the administratrix, in the name of Matthew Nunan, but really by the plaintiff herein, who paid the whole purchase price therefor, for his sole use and benefit, (and the decree thereupon,) determined any fact which tended to establish a partnership between the parties hereto, the ruling of the court herein, excluding the judgment roll in that action, did not injure the appellant, because the court below found the same facts in the present action. The court found all the facts in this action which the judgment roll would have proved, so far as they are relevant to any issue herein.

In the complaint in this action it is alleged "that it was agreed and understood by and between him, this plaintiff, and this defendant, that if he, the said Thomas Noonan, would buy the said interest, [of Armstrong's estate,] he and the said Matthew Nunan would thenceforward be partners in the said business, and would conduct the same as such, in the same manner as the said Armstrong and the said defendant had done," etc. The court below found this averment not to be true, and there was a substantial conflict, at least, in the evidence bearing on the issue made by it, and the denial thereof. If it be assumed that there was a sale and conveyance of the interest of deceased in the leasehold which placed the legal title in an undivided one-half thereof in Matthew Nunan in trust for Thomas Noonan, the latter would perhaps be entitled, upon proper averments, to a decree directing a conveyance of said undivided one-half of the legal title to him, unless it appeared from the facts alleged and proved by the defendant that there were debts due from the former partnership, or from Armstrong to the former partnership, which rendered it necessary and proper that the leasehold should be sold, and its proceeds applied to the liquidation of such debts. But the leasehold and appurtenances were assets of the late partnership between defendant and Armstrong, which was dissolved by the death of the latter. It was the duty and right of the surviving partner to settle the affairs of such partnership, and the purchase by the plaintiff was of course subject to the application of the assets to the satisfaction of the creditors of the former partnership, and of the balance of advances, if any, made by defendant to the partnership during its existence. In equity it was a purchase of the residuum, if any there should be. Subject to a settlement of the partnership affairs, plaintiff became in equity tenant in common with the defendant in the property of the late firm. But the mere purchase of the interest of the estate in such property did not create a new partnership between the parties hereto.

It is insisted, however, that, conceding there was no conventional partnership, the subsequent use by defendant in his business of the property of which he and the plaintiff were owners as tenants in common, charged the defendant with a trust, and with the duty of accounting to the plaintiff for profits derived from such use. It was held in Heinlen v. Martin that where the defendant had the mere legal title to the land, and the plaintiff was entitled to the use thereof, and the defendant had excluded the plaintiff therefrom, and the suit was brought for a conveyance of the legal title, equity and justice demanded that, in analogy to the relief granted at law, the plaintiff should recover the "rental value" of the land from the time he demanded a deed, which in that case was the commencement of the suit. 53 Cal. 321. In the case at bar no demand was made for a conveyance of the plaintiff's alleged portion of the leasehold. On the contrary, the averments are that the leasehold constitutes part of the partnership assets. In Quackenbush v. Sawyer there was a specific agreement between the parties, substantially alleged and proved, that the defendant should account for moneys received from a third person for the benefit of himself and the plaintiff, (54 Cal. 439,) and the court there held that the mere joint ownership of property does not constitute a partnership. Stokes v. Stevens, 40 Cal. 391, was an action of replevin. The cases cited by appellant from 15th and 16th Vesey only redecide the established rules that partnership for an indefinite period may be dissolved by either partner at any time, and that, when there is a partnership, without any stipulation as to proportions, the partners are entitled to equal moieties. Peacock v. Peacock, 16 Ves. 49; Featherstonhaugh v. Fenwick, 17 Ves. 298.

No facts are alleged in the complaint herein from which would arise an implied or constructive trust with respect to the real property employed in the defendant's business. It is averred, on the contrary, that it was so used by him in accordance with an agreement that it should constitute assets of a partnership. If it be conceded that a trust may arise sometimes from the fact that property owned by a plaintiff and defendant, as tenants in common, has been profitably used by the defendant, and that, in such case, the latter may be held to an account, the complaint is not drawn upon that theory, nor are facts alleged which justify a decree appropriate to such a supposed case. It is a cardinal rule in equity pleading that the allegata and probata must agree. Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 332; Murdock v. Clarke, 59 Cal. 693. A party cannot be allowed to claim relief inconsistent with his pleading. Weil v. Posten, 77 Mo. 287; Gregory v. Nelson, 41 Cal. 278; Cummings v. Cummings, ante, 442; Carpenter v. Brenham, 50 Cal. 549; Burnett v. Stearns, 33 Cal. 549. The averment of the complaint is that the leasehold and the appurtenances constitute the capital of the partnership formed by the plaintiff and defendant, and any accounting based on a finding of the fact of such partnership ownership must be upon different principles from an accounting based on the mere use of plaintiff's property by defendant. The purpose of the present action is to obtain a decree declaring a copartnership, decreeing its dissolution, and an account as incident to and consequent upon such dissolution. The court found there was no partnership. Its existence or non-existence was the main issue joined. There was no question presented by the pleadings in regard to a co-tenancy of those not partners, or in respect to the liability of co-tenants as such. As the appellant neither asked for the judgment which it is now claimed should have been entered in the court below, nor alleged facts upon which such a judgment could properly have been entered, he cannot here demand a reversal of the judgment which responded to the issues actually made and submitted to the trial court. Judgment and order affirmed.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an appeal from a judgment, and the case comes here on the judgment roll. The action grew out of a contract to construct a house, and was brought by material-men and laborers. The owners and contractors were made defendants, and the contractors filed a cross-complaint asking affirmative relief against their co-defendants. No good would be subserved by stating the facts more fully. The pleadings, we think, were sufficient. The findings are full, and cover all the issues. The conclusions of law and the judgment are warranted by the findings. We find no error in the record prejudicial to the appellants, and we therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

COX v. McLAUGHLIN. (No. 12,189.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1888.)

1. ASSUMPSIT—WORK AND LABOR—PLEADING—AMENDMENT.

In an action for services rendered in grading a railroad, where the complaint is for the recovery of contract rates on the original contract,—profits which would have been made, etc., had not plaintiff been prevented from finishing the work by defendant's default,—it is proper to permit an amended complaint to be filed, stating no new facts constituting a new cause of action, but seeking to recover the value of the work actually done upon a quantum meruit.

2. SAME—QUANTUM MERUIT—RIGHT TO INTEREST.

In an action on a quantum meruit for the actual value of work done, etc., in grading a railroad, where the amount, character, and value of the services rendered, and material furnished, are uncertain, and can only be established by a verdict or the findings of a court, and are not susceptible of ascertainment either by computation, or by reference to market rates, or other known standard, plaintiff is not entitled to recover interest prior to verdict or judgment.

TEMPLE, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

Action by Jerome B. Cox against Kate D. McLaughlin, executrix of the last will and testament of Charles McLaughlin, deceased, for the actual value, under a quantum meruit, of services rendered and material furnished under a contract between plaintiff and Charles McLaughlin for grading a railroad, a portion of the Western Pacific Railroad route. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

Wilson & Wilson, (L. D. McKisic, of counsel,) for appellant. D. M. Delmas and Henry E. Highton, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This cause has been before this court several times on an appeal, and it is unnecessary to restate the facts. The history of the case may be found in the following volumes of our reports: 44 Cal. 18; 47 Cal. 89; 54 Cal. 605; 52 Cal. 590; 63 Cal. 196. It is sufficient to say that in 1864 Charles McLaughlin, now deceased, entered into a contract with the Western Pacific Railroad Company to grade the road-bed of its railroad from near the city of San José to Sacramento, a distance of 123 miles, and to construct all the superstructures, etc., necessary to place the road in complete running order, for the sum of $5,400,000; and that in January, 1865, said McLaughlin made a contract with the plaintiff, Cox, and his associates, by the terms of which the latter were to grade that part of the road which lies between San José and Stockton, a distance of seventy-four and a quarter miles, to do the masonry work and all things necessary for placing the cars, ties, and iron equipments on the track, for which McLaughlin was to pay them the sum of $900,000. Cox afterwards became the assignee of all his associates. Payments were to be made by McLaughlin to Cox as the work progressed, at amounts to be fixed by the estimates of the chief engineer of the said Western Pacific Railroad Company. Cox finished the first twenty miles, and part of the twenty-first mile, and received certain payments; but, McLaughlin then failing to make further payments as provided in the contract, Cox was unable to proceed further with the work through want of funds, and abandoned it. Upon the former trials in the court below, (except the first, when an attempt was made to enforce a mechanics' lien,) Cox persistently proceeded upon the theory that the failure of McLaughlin to make the payment due operated as a technical "prevention" of a compliance with the contract by Cox, and that, therefore, the latter could recover contract rates on the original contract, profits which he would have made, etc. This position was held repeatedly by this court to be untenable; and after the case was last here he amended his complaint in the court below so as to aver a claim for the value of the work actually done as upon a quantum meruit. The court below tried the case without a jury; found the value of the work, over and above all moneys paid, to be $98,228.49, and gave plaintiff judgment for said sum, with interest at statutory rates from June, 1866, the time of the failure of McLaughlin to make said payment. From this judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Said Charles McLaughlin having in the mean time died, his executrix, Kate D. McLaughlin, was substituted as defendant. On the 26th day of April, 1888, Kate D. McLaughlin having died, J. C. Pennie, administrator of the estate of said Charles McLaughlin, was made party defendant. The main points made by the appellant are these: First, that the court abused its discretion in allowing said amendment to the complaint; second, that plaintiff should not recover because of a certain contract which he made with the chief engineer of the Western Pacific Railroad Company; third, that there is no evidence to support the finding as to the work actually done or its value; fourth, that no interest should have been allowed.

1. We think that there was no abuse of discretion in allowing the amendment setting up the quantum meruit. There were no new facts stated upon which a new cause of action was based. The facts as stated in all the complaints were substantially the same; and, indeed, it is not clear that plaintiff could not have proceeded upon the theory of a quantum meruit under his former complaints. The same contracts, assignments, the work done and materials furnished, performance by the plaintiff, the breach by the defendant, the existence of all the conditions precedent to payment, have appeared in all of the complaints as the basis upon which the right to compensation in the plaintiff rested. When this case was last here, the court directed that the judgment should be reversed, and that judgment should be entered in the court below on the findings for defendant. Afterwards, on rehearing, the judgment of this court was modified so as to reverse the judgment of the lower court, and send the case back for a new trial. There must have been some object in this modification, and in view of the facts which have been repeatedly before the court, it was evidently regarded as possible to frame a complaint which would enable the plaintiff to recover the reasonable value of the services rendered and materials furnished. Of course, unless the facts stated constitute a new cause of action, the plaintiff's cause is not barred by the statute of limitations.

2. Under the contract between the railroad company and McLaughlin the road was to be constructed according to a general route and profile, but it was to be varied according to the directions of the chief engineer. Cox was to receive the round sum of $900,000 for his entire work between the points named in his contract with McLaughlin, whether the variations ordered by the engineer should make that work heavier or lighter. Under these circumstances, Cox entered into a secret contract with the person who for part of the time was the engineer, that he would give to said engineer a certain percentage of the profits of his contract if he (the engineer) would, without impairing the character of the road or doing anything to the disadvantage of the railroad company, make such variations, when it should be possible to do so, as would make the work of said Cox less expensive. It is claimed that this constituted a breach of the contract by Cox, Meyers & Co., a fraud upon the defendant, which in any event should defeat the claim of the plaintiff. The court found that both the railroad company and McLaughlin were willing that the engineer should make the work lighter without injury to said interest; that the variations were made, in some instances, at the request of said company and McLaughlin, and were all submitted to and approved by them; and that the said contract between said engineer and Cox was not fraudulent. Under his agreement with Cox, the engineer, for a period of about three months, shared in the dividends of the contractors to the amount of $3,500 altogether. The original profile had to be succeeded by a definite location, which necessitated many changes, and these changes, as we have seen, were sanctioned by all parties. It was possible for the engineer, in making his definite location, by the exercise of extraordinary diligence and skill, to so perfect the work as to suit the convenience and the interest of all parties concerned. It appears that his work was done openly, and was in all respects indorsed. After the period mentioned, in which the engineer was receiving 10 per cent. under said agreement with Cox, a new contract was made between the contractors and McLaughlin. Assuming that the contract between the engineer and Cox was one not proper to have been made, we cannot see how McLaughlin was in any way injured by it, or that it should prevent plaintiff from recovering in this action. McLaughlin received all the benefit of Cox's work, and was paid for it by the railroad company without objection. Furthermore, it is proper to say that this same claim of fraud has appeared in every answer and on every appeal without receiving any notice. If it has been passed upon in any respect, it must have been adversely to the defendant. We must assume that this court, on former appeals, has considered all the points, this one among the rest. The case has appeared here repeatedly upon substantially the same facts. If this point, now made, is good, it has always been good, and certainly would have been noticed in the former decisions of this court herein. Again, if we admit that this agreement with the engineer was fraudulent, and sufficient to prevent a recovery by Cox under his contract, the answer is, the present action is not upon such contract, but upon a quantum meruit for the value of the services and materials furnished.

3. After the lapse of a great many years it was, of course, a difficult thing to show accurately the amount and value of the work actually done. The whole contract price for the entire distance of the road which was to have been built by Cox was $900,000. McLaughlin, himself was to be paid for the same work $2,058,000, absolutely, whether performed by him or for him by others; and he testified that the price which he was to be paid for the work was reasonable. Mann, the agent for McLaughlin, who executed the contract for McLaughlin, testified that the contract was fair; that the price, with 10 per cent. kept back, would allow a man to build the road, and not give him much profit, if any. At the time the work was done the chief engineer believed that the work could not be done for the price named. Under their contract the contractors were entitled, for the first 20 miles completed, to the sum of $308,427.46. McLaughlin's contract with the railroad company entitled him to receive from it the sum of $440,000, and he actually cleared the sum of $131,573, profit on the first 20 miles. There was testimony showing that there are no means now of ascertaining how much earth and how much rock had been removed by the contractors upon the road. Defendant's witness Stangroom testified that the value of the labor performed and materials furnished by the subcontractors was $186,963. The plaintiff testified that the actual value of the work and material was more than the estimates made by the engineer; was, in fact, about $360,690. The court found that the value of the labor and materials was $285,918.49. It would seem, therefore, that the court took a sum which is nearly an average between the estimates made by the plaintiff and by Stangroom, and rendered judgment accordingly. The uncontradicted testimony shows that the work done was about four-ninths of the whole work. The price to be paid for the entire work was $900,000. The 20 miles were completed, according to the contract, in a good and workmanlike manner. Changes and deviations were made under the orders, and with the consent of McLaughlin and the railroad company. The work was turned over to the company by McLaughlin in fulfillment of his contract with the company, and according to estimates made on his behalf. If the rule be that the contractors are entitled to such proportion of the whole contract price as the work done bears to the whole work, then the evidence would warrant a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $400,000; but we assume that the value must be determined regardless of the prices fixed in the contract, and it is sufficient to say that the evidence as to such value is conflicting, and the finding of the court is warranted by some of the testimony in the case.

4. The court below allowed interest on the amount recovered, from June 15, 1866. Appellants attack this portion of the judgment as unwarranted by the facts and law. It may be stated as a general principle that interest is not allowed on unliquidated damages or demands. This term "unliquidated damages" applies equally to cases of tort, as slander, assault and battery, etc., and to cases upon a quantum meruit, for goods sold and delivered, or services rendered. The reason of such denial of interest is said to be that the person liable does not know what sum he owes, and therefore can be in no default for not paying. The damages in such cases are an uncertain quantity, depending upon no fixed standard, are referred to the wise discretion of a jury, and can never be made certain except by accord or verdict. As to such damages there can be no default, and hence the initial point at which to fix the starting of interest is wanting. To this general rule there are many exceptions; and while it is said "a demand is unliquidated if one party alone cannot make it certain,—when it cannot be made certain by mere calculation,"—(1 Suth. Dam. 610,) yet the same author, in the next sentence, adds: "The allowance of interest as damages is not dependent on this rigid test." A review of the cases relied upon in support of this last assertion assert this proposition: "Whenever a debtor is in default for not paying money, delivering property, or rendering services in pursuance of his contract, justice requires that he should indemnify the creditor for the wrong which he has done him." Van Rensselaer v. Jewett, 2 N. Y. 135; Lush v. Druse, 4 Wend. 313; Van Rensselaer v. Jones, 2 Barb. 643; Adams v. Bank, 36 N. Y. 255. These, and many other cases which might be cited from New York, were mainly based upon express contracts, in which money was to be paid, services rendered, or a duty to be performed at a fixed and certain time,—cases in which the default of the debtor at the fixed period was apparent; the amount of the recovery, and not the right to recover at all, being the sole question. This further distinction may be drawn from the New York cases: notwithstanding the damages are unliquidated and not capable of ascertainment by computation, still, if they can be determined by computation, together with a reference to well-established market values, then interest may be recovered. The reason given for this modification of the earlier rule is that in many cases market values are so well established and so easily obtained that it is easy for the debtor to obtain some proximate knowledge of how much he is to pay. This distinction was noted by SELDEN, J., in McMahon v. Railroad Co., 20 N. Y. 463. Under the law as held in New York at the present time, it is not far wide of the mark to say all the cases in which interest may be recovered by the creditor upon an unliquidated demand for damages arising upon a contract proceed upon the theory—First, that the damages are capable of ascertainment by calculation; second, that, if not capable of being thus ascertained, they may be determined by reference to well-established market values, together with computation; or third, that the debtor is in default in not performing some obligation devolving upon him, whereby the amount of his debt could be rendered certain or susceptible of being made so by calculation. These distinctions were referred to in McMahon v. Railroad Co., supra, and the right to recover interest upheld upon the third ground, namely, that it was the duty of defendant to have caused its engineer to furnish estimates of the work done, and that, had he done so, the amount of the claim would have been so ascertained as to carry interest. We have referred to some of the New York cases, for the reason that we think that they are in the advance upon the question of allowing interest upon unliquidated demands.

The case at bar is not an action upon an express contract between the parties. Such a contract, it is true, existed; and, had plaintiff recovered under it, he would have been entitled to interest upon the several payments provided for therein from the dates at which they fell due, but for reasons not now necessary to be enumerated a recovery upon the contract has been abandoned, and plaintiff counts upon a quantum meruit, for the performance of labor and services, precisely as he might have done had there been no contract. His services, and the material furnished by him, were uncertain as to amount, character, value, and time of payment, until fixed by a verdict or findings of the court. They were not of a character to have a fixed or ascertainable market value. They could not be ascertained by computation, either in extent or value. Defendant was not in default for not ascertaining that which, outside of the abandoned contract, he could not ascertain except by an accord or by verdict or its equivalent. In Bank v. Northam, 51 Cal. 387, this court held that interest could not be recovered upon an account for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered. In Brady v. Wilcoxson, 44 Cal. 239, it was said: "The plaintiffs are not entitled to interest. Their claim was an uncertain and unliquidated demand. The amount due cannot be ascertained from the face of the contract, but is to be settled by process of law. On such demands, interest eo nomine cannot be allowed." The case of Hamer v. Hathaway, 33 Cal. 117, cited by respondent, was an action of trover, in which the rule as to damages is quite different from that in cases like the one at bar. The rule in such cases was that the plaintiff could recover the value of the property, with legal interest from the time at which the value is estimated. Douglass v. Kraft, 9 Cal. 562. Section 3336 of our Civil Code has substantially continued the rule as it existed previously, with the addition that, under certain specified circumstances, no interest can be recovered. In McFadden v. Crawford, 39 Cal. 662, which was an action for work, labor, and services, this court allowed interest on the demand from the date of the filing of the complaint, reversing the action of the court below allowing interest from the rendition of the services. The rule thus enunciated finds some support in Sutherland on Damages, where it is said: "After demand, or after commencement of suit, accounts generally bear interest. The commencement of suit is a formal demand. Accounts are generally made of items which represent money paid, goods sold and delivered, or services rendered, on request. They are severally demands on which interest may be claimed, though the price had not been fixed by agreement, and must be established by evidence." 1 Suth. Dam. 616. The same author adds that "where, however, the account or demand is for particulars, the value or amount of which cannot be measured or ascertained by reference to market rates, and are intrinsically uncertain, or the creditor's demand of payment is excessive or vague, a different case is presented." The distinction mentioned is pointed out in many of the cases, and it is only by bearing it in mind that otherwise apparent conflict can be reconciled. We are not prepared to say, in general terms, that no interest in any case can be recovered in an action upon contract for an unliquidated demand. Mix v. Miller, 57 Cal. 356, decided since the adoption of the Code, and McFadden v. Crawford, supra, decided previously, attest the doctrine that in this state interest is allowable on such demand under some circumstances. These were cases in which the contract had been fully performed by the creditors, the fruits thereof accepted by the debtors without objection, and they were clearly in default, and in the latter case the only question was as to value. But where, as in the case at bar, the amount of the services, their character and value, can only be established by evidence in court, or by an accord between the parties, and are not susceptible of ascertainment either by computation or by reference to market rates, or other known standard, we are of opinion plaintiff is not entitled to interest prior to verdict or judgment.

The cause is remanded, with directions to the court below to modify its judgment in favor of the plaintiff by striking out the interest, and leaving the judgment to stand in favor of plaintiff for $98,228.49, with interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum from October 21, 1886, the date of the entry of such judgment, together with costs of suit. The judgment and order are in all other respects affirmed.

THORNTON, J., concurring in the judgment. MCKINSTRY, J., not participating in the decision.

TEMPLE, J., (dissenting.) Charles McLaughlin entered into a contract with the Western Pacific Railroad Company to construct and equip the railroad from San Jose to Sacramento for $5,400,000, payable partly in stock. Having this contract, on the 7th day of January, 1865, McLaughlin contracted with Cox, Myers & Co. to build, construct, complete, and furnish materials for the construction of the road-bed of the railroad from San Jose to Stockton, a distance of 74½ miles, for $900,000. Before the contract was entered into a preliminary survey had been made, and a profile of the road showing the cuts and fills. Specifications were made as to other work. Prices were attached, showing the estimated cost of the different species of work; the excavations and fills at certain rates per cubic yard, the bridging per lineal foot, etc. There was a stipulation in the contract, however, that the location of the road might be varied by the company, and yet no change should be made in the contract price for the work, whether the actual amount was increased or diminished. It was further stipulated that, in case certain bonds were issued by named counties to aid the corporation to construct the road, "all work done and materials furnished, and all other things required to be done and performed, by and on the part of the parties of the second part by the terms of this indenture of contract, shall be allowed and paid as the work progresses, and materials are furnished from time to time, at the prices and quantities made and fixed by an approximate estimate of the cost of said work, made by * * * chief engineers of said company, dated January 4, 1865, and hereto attached. * * * Said estimates shall be made upon the report of the chief engineer of said company from time to time as the work progresses and materials are furnished as aforesaid, and which said engineer shall examine and report to the parties hereto as the said work progresses and materials are furnished, as aforesaid, giving accurate estimates thereof from time to time, as often as once per month if so required by the parties of the first part." Cox, Myers & Co., in March, 1865, entered into an agreement in writing with the engineer, who was to superintend the work for the company, and make the estimates provided for in the contract, and whose salary was to be paid by McLaughlin, by which they agreed to give to the engineer 10 per cent. of their profits upon their said contract with McLaughlin, in consideration for which said engineer agreed that, as such engineer, he would take pains in the location of the work and in laying it out so as to save as much work as possible to them, and make such changes as would make the work lighter. This agreement was kept secret, and was unknown to McLaughlin and his agents. Estimates were made, as provided in the contract, by the engineer, based upon the alignment and profile, although both had been departed from by alterations made under the advice of the engineer, who had become the secret partner to the extent of sharing the profits with Cox, Myers & Co. The first four estimates so made were paid, less 10 per cent., reserved, within a few days after they were certified. The fifth, for $14,530.80, was made September 9, 1865, and a portion only was paid, leaving about $14,000 due. McLaughlin, who had been absent from the state when the previous estimates were paid, then objected to the mode of making the estimates, claiming that they should have been made, not on the profile where the line of the road had been changed, but upon accurate estimates of the work actually done, made from time to time by the engineer. The line of the road had been changed by the engineer so as to greatly diminish the amount of work to be done, yet in making the estimates he ascertained the proportion of the work done necessary to complete the road-bed for a specified distance, and then allowed for that proportion of the work which would have been received if the line had not been changed. It was claimed, for instance, that in the fourth estimate 31 road and farm crossings and $7,285 of masonry had been included, none of which was constructed; and in the fifth estimate a charge of $30,000 for tunneling, when the line and grade of the road had been so changed as to avoid the proposed tunnel altogether. This controversy was settled October 2, 1865, McLaughlin paying $7,000 more only, on the fifth estimate. At that time a supplemental contract was entered into, in which it was provided that thereafter accurate estimates should be made monthly of the work actually done as the basis for the progress payments, and it was stipulated "if the contract is at any time annulled by mutual consent, or the work under it entirely suspended by direction of McLaughlin, then, in such case, (but in no other event except upon the full completion of said contract,) the said Cox and Arnold shall be allowed, for all the work done up to that time, the amounts and quantities shown in said profile for the corresponding sections or portions of said actual quantities of work performed." The contract between Cox and Arnold and the engineer, it is said, was terminated about the time McLaughlin was expected to return from the east, after three or four estimates had been made. After the fifth estimate a new chief engineer was appointed. Three other estimates were made; but between November 20, 1865, and June 5, 1866, no estimate was made, although plaintiffs insisted and repeatedly requested to have them made. May 5, 1866, however, $9,000 was paid without an estimate. The eighth estimate was made on June 5, 1866, for $35,254.83. On this, $2,500 was paid in addition to the $9,000, leaving $23,754.83 still unpaid. On the 15th day of June, 10 days after the estimate was made, Cox and Arnold notified McLaughlin's agent that, in consequence of the failure to pay the estimate, they were compelled to suspend work entirely from that date, and would settle with him according to the terms of the contract. McLaughlin, through his agent, promptly replied, denying the right to abandon the contract, and requesting Cox and Arnold to proceed with the work. McLaughlin was, at that time, in New York, endeavoring to place the bonds he had received, or in some other mode to procure money to make these payments.

This court has, on former appeals, unmistakably held that the installments or progress payments, provided for in the contract, are not conditions precedent, the failure to perform which would justify plaintiffs in abandoning the contract, and enable them to sue for profits they would have made had they performed it, or for compensation at conventional rates. It was said that this did not constitute prevention, or excuse the plaintiff from performance. For this breach, plaintiffs had simply their right of action for damages. Counsel now say they do not claim to have established technical prevention, such as this court has said the default to make the payments does not amount to, but they do claim that McLaughlin's failure incapacitated the plaintiffs to perform, and authorized them to consider it a consent to a rescission on the part of McLaughlin, which, if plaintiffs assented to, would justify them in demanding payment at contract rates; that is, it is not technical prevention, but yet is prevention which will have the same effect. I do not understand this distinction. In fact, I think it is trifling with the rulings of the court. This court attached no importance to the word. It simply held that the failure to pay did not authorize Cox and Arnold to abandon the work, and sue on the contract. There certainly was no rescission by mutual consent. McLaughlin is not shown to have been insolvent and unable to perform. He did not entirely refuse to perform his part of the contract. Plaintiff apparently knew he was absent trying to realize upon his securities, to enable him to make the payments. Under such circumstances it seems absurd to claim that, by this temporary failure McLaughlin indicated an intention of abandoning the contract, or of refusing to go on with it. This court has held that this failure was one which did not authorize plaintiffs to cease work and sue on the contract, but that their remedy was an action for damages. Of course, it did not terminate the contract, or authorize plaintiffs to rescind. Undoubtedly, there are cases which hold that a total failure of performance, which indicates a disposition on the part of one party to abandon the contract, or a refusal to go on with it, may be considered as a consent to a rescission; but, where it is known that the party in default is struggling to perform, it would be as unreasonable as unjust to conclude from a temporary failure a consent to a rescission.

But, if the charge of fraud be considered, it is equally plain to my mind that it constituted such a breach of the contract on the part of the plaintiffs as would of itself render it impossible for them to recover upon the contract. The parties contracted for payments to be made upon the certificates of the engineer. He was to ascertain the amount of the various kinds of work done, and to make the estimates upon which the installments were to be paid. The contract provided for changes in the alignment and grades, which would, of course, only be made upon surveys, and recommendations of the engineer. Cox and Arnold secretly bribed this engineer, by contracting to give him 10 per cent. of all the profits they might make. They say that for this interest the engineer was to take pains to locate the road so as to save as much expense as possible without injury to the corporation. Unfortunately, however, by the terms of the contract, the profits of the contract would be increased, to the advantage of the engineer, as much by changes to the injury of the road as by those which were indifferent or advantageous. Had McLaughlin known of this corrupt bargain, it would plainly have been his duty to end the relation at once, and it is not clear that he would not be liable to the corporation for changes assented to by them only upon the advice of their confidential agent, who had been secretly interested against them by McLaughlin's employees. But I think, in addition to being a fraud for which equity could give relief, it was a clear violation of the contract. The engineer, to some extent, occupied the position of a chosen umpire. He was to ascertain the proportion of the work performed, and upon his certificates the installments were to be paid. Certainly, it was an agreement for a disinterested umpire, and clearly, when one of the parties to the contract made the umpire a secret partner, he disqualified him from acting. He thereby rendered it impossible to perform the contract. The finding that there was no fraud contradicts the other findings of fact, and is not only unsupported by evidence, but is as clean a traverse of all the evidence upon the subject as could be drawn. McLaughlin was injured by being deprived of the services of an impartial engineer and umpire, and by risking the loss of his expenditures on the ground that the corporation would not be bound by alterations assented to under the advice of a corrupted engineer. But, while this is clearly so, it does not follow that plaintiffs could not recover the value of their work which had been received by McLaughlin, to the extent to which McLaughlin had been benefited thereby, and not exceeding the contract price.

In my judgment, the allowance of the amendment setting up the claim for the actual value of the labor performed, was, under the circumstances, an abuse of discretion, which ought to be reviewed by this court. This litigation has been pending for some 16 years, during all of which time plaintiffs had been contending for compensation at the conventional rates fixed in the contract. During all this time, defendant has contended that plaintiffs have been paid the full value of the services rendered and the materials furnished. Defendant, had he desired, could not have made an issue upon that question, because plaintiffs persisted in urging their unfounded claim for the contract rates. Not only so, but this contest has been kept up after most clear and explicit rulings of this court that no such action could be maintained, and intimations that plaintiffs' remedy, if they had any, was for the reasonable value of the labor performed and materials furnished. Now, even one who has a grievance owes some duty to his adversary and to society. Because he has been injured, he is not justified in vexing the wrong-doer with malicious litigation, nor can he persist for years in waging a suit which he cannot maintain, and then, upon being defeated, amend, and recover that which for years he has virtually declined to accept, when the suit he might have brought has been barred by the statute. Here, before this amendment was asked, the suit upon a quantum meruit had been barred seven times over. It may be admitted that, if made in time, such an amendment would have been proper. Courts are now very liberal in allowing amendments. It is often only a question as to whether the plaintiff should be put to the expense of bringing a new suit. But, because the courts are liberal in allowing amendments, parties cannot thereby be deprived of a defense to what is really a new cause of action. If barred when the amendment is asked, it should not be allowed. This was a new cause of action. It was founded upon a different contract from that alleged; it was for services and materials differing in amount and differently classified. One is for actual services, and the other, though not in form, yet in reality, largely for services and materials only constructively done and furnished. The evidence required to sustain the two actions differs materially. On former appeals this court has held that the action was not brought upon the implied promise to pay for the actual value of the work, but was an action upon the contract to recover for the part performed according to an arbitrary and conventional standard found in the specific contract; and the precise ground upon which they claimed the right to recover, was that they had been prevented by the defendant from performing. Prevention constituted a part of their cause of action. Here, if they can recover at all, it is upon the ground that the defendant has been guilty of a breach of the contract on his part, in consequence of which he cannot insist upon the performance on the part of plaintiffs, and that, therefore, plaintiffs can abandon the contract, and sue for the actual value of the service rendered, and the defendant cannot defeat the action because of the non-performance of the specific contract, simply because he was first in default himself. In such a suit the specific contract cuts no figure except as evidence. It is evidence that the work was performed at the instance and request of the defendant; and as the plaintiff cannot, by refusing to perform, recover a greater price for his work than he would have been entitled to had he fully performed, the contract price will constitute a limit to his recovery. The contract may also, in a proper case, furnish evidence, by way of admission, of the value of the services. But in no sense is this an action upon the specific contract. To the contrary, if that can be established as still subsisting, that fact will defeat the action upon the quantum meruit.

Admitting, however, that the amendment was properly allowed, and that the claim was not barred by the statute of limitations, is there any evidence whatever in the record to support the finding that the actual value of the work and labor done, in constructing twenty miles of the railroad, was $275,304.07, or that the actual value of the labor performed and materials furnished in the construction of the twenty-first mile was $28,214.42? It is a circumstance of some significance that the plaintiff upon the last trial, which was the first under a complaint claiming the actual value, put in no new evidence upon the subject. All his evidence consisted in reading from the testimony given on former trials, where the specific claim was to recover compensation at contract rates for the profile quantities; and, as it is shown without conflict that much of the profile work was never done, it is literally true that, in an action upon a quantum meruit, plaintiff has recovered upon proof of the value of labor not done and for materials not furnished. The proof was as to the value of contemplated work delineated upon a profile which the contract stipulated might be departed from, and which, in fact, was not followed, but was intentionally departed from, the work actually done being upon a new survey upon another and a distinct line.

It is claimed, and numerous authorities are cited to the point, that where a specific contract has been partly performed and abandoned, under such circumstances that the contractor may sue for the work actually performed, the contract rate of compensation governs even in the suit for actual value. That such rates generally constitute prima facie evidence of the value of the services, by the way of an admission of the parties is not disputed; but it would be so only when, under general rules applicable to admissions, in reason and justice, such stipulation is an admission of the actual and reasonable value of the service rendered. There is no iron-clad rule that it should constitute an admission, however plainly it may appear that it was in fact no admission. It is true that, prior to the contract, a profile of the projected road had been made, showing the estimated amount and character of work and materials required; and that, when the contract price was agreed upon, the engineer affixed to the specifications prices for the different kinds of work and materials, which should govern as to progress payments, and which in the aggregate amounted to just $900,000, the contract price. It was also stipulated that the profile might be departed from, and a new alignment and grade fixed by the corporation; that the road should be constructed according to such changed alignment, but there should be no change in the compensation. The contract price was to be paid, no matter what changes were made. If changes were made, therefore, this amounted to an express stipulation that the payments should not be made upon the basis of the reasonable and actual value, but upon a conventional standard, expressly ignoring actual values. When the plaintiff brought suit upon a quantum meruit, he expressly waived the benefit of this stipulation. It is in its very nature inconsistent with a quantum meruit. It was a speculating contract, in which both took the chances of making or losing, but each expressly stipulated that the actual amount of work done should not affect the compensation. The evidence shows without contradiction that the profile was widely departed from. Indeed, the diagram exhibited, and the correctness of which as to the alignment and grade is not contradicted by any evidence, shows that where the heavy work was done the coincidences of the profile and the actual location are hardly more than the crossing of different lines. Under such circumstances, the profile was not even prima facie evidence of the work actually done. When the changes were shown, it became as irrelevant as would be the profile of a road in China or Timbuctoo. The fact that the two alignments were near each other cuts no figure. The country was hilly; the surface constantly changing. The engineer states, in explanation of his secret engagement with Cox and Arnold, that the change of a few feet would make a material difference in the amount of work to be done.

It is claimed that Arnold and Cox have testified as to the reasonable value. Arnold died before suit was brought upon the quantum meruit. His evidence was in regard to the conventional rates which he said was fair compensation for the work. He did not pretend to know the work actually done, and his whole testimony shows that he estimated it from the profile. For instance, he testified, as to the twenty-first mile, that four-fifths of the work had been done, and his mode of arriving at this conclusion was this: The mile could be completed for $10,000, and the profile rate would be $50,000. As the location had been altered, this might be true, although but $1,000 of the work had been actually performed upon this mile. Cox's testimony still more plainly refers to contract rates. He admits he did not know the amount of work actually done, and, when questioned, says: "We were not working by the yard." He fixed the amount due at $173,000 before he commenced suit at all; and his testimony was read from the evidence given at a former trial when the suit was confessedly for contract rates. Evidently the plaintiffs only intended to testify to the fairness of the contract. But, perhaps, we may suppose they had been taught to believe that the profile afforded the best evidence of work actually performed, since they still insist upon that proposition, and their attorneys here insist, in most elaborate briefs, that the profiles showing work which it was agreed might not be done, and which confessedly was not done, and in a contract which expressly stipulated that compensation should not depend upon the amount of work done or materials furnished, constitutes the best evidence of work actually done and of materials actually furnished, in a suit not upon the contract, but upon a quantum meruit. The learned judge before whom the case was tried is reputed to have based his estimate upon the evidence of defendant's witness, Stangroom, who had made a recent survey and estimate of the work, so far as he thought Stangroom's work reliable; but where, from lapse of time, he thought a present estimate could not be fairly made, he followed the profile. If the learned judge did this, he followed the evidence where he thought it trustworthy; and, where no evidence was forthcoming, he followed the profile, which we have seen was entitled to no weight at all; that is, he found without evidence. The burden was upon the plaintiff. If he were unable to establish his case by competent evidence, he was no worse off than plaintiffs often are; but this fact did not shift the burden. If he cannot prove his case, he cannot recover. But this proposition emphasizes the argument against the propriety of allowing the amendment, and the bringing in of a new cause of action, after time has effaced the evidence necessary to sustain the plaintiff's present contention, or essential to enable the defendant to make a just defense. It is emphatically a case where, having made his own bed, the plaintiff should lie in it. Having persisted in a claim for years after he was distinctly told he could not recover upon that basis, he should not now be permitted to recover upon a new theory, when time has destroyed all evidence.

Holding these views, it is not necessary to review the other points made.

COX v. M'LAUGHLIN. (No. 12,220.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1838.)

EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF—NECESSARY CONTENTS.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 648, providing that, where an exception to a decision is on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify it, the objection must be stated, with so much of the evidence or other matter as is necessary to explain it, a bill of exceptions which merely sets forth the other findings of fact, and that such facts are established by the evidence, is not properly a bill of exceptions, stating evidence in compliance with above statute.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 648 provides "that no particular form of exception is required; but when the exception is to the verdict or decision upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify it, * * * the objection must be stated with so much of the evidence * * * as is necessary to explain it, and no more. Only the substance of the reporter's notes of evidence shall be stated." Action by Jerome B. Cox against Kate D. McLaughlin, executrix of Charles McLaughlin, for services rendered and materials furnished in grading a railroad. Judgment for plaintiff. Plaintiff appeals.

D. M. Delmas and Henry E. Highton, for appellant. Wilson & Wilson, (L. D. McKisic, of counsel,) for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is taken by the plaintiff from the judgment, which was in his favor; and the point is made that a portion of one finding is not sustained by the evidence. The judgment must be affirmed, so far as this appeal is concerned—First, because, if we can take the facts stated in the bill of exceptions as the evidence, it fully sustains the finding; and, second, waiving the objections that the appeal was not taken in time, there is no bill of exceptions stating the evidence. The bill of exceptions merely sets forth other findings; proceeds to state that such facts were established by the evidence. This is not a statement of so much of the evidence as may be necessary to explain the point made. It is not a statement of evidence at all, but a general conclusion that certain facts were established by the evidence. This is not a compliance with the statute. It is really an effort to array one portion of the finding against another. The judgment is affirmed, subject to the appeal on the part of defendant.

REINHART v. LUGO et al. (No. 12,019.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 27, 1888.)

PARTITION—BY JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS—ISSUES AND FINDINGS.

A complaint in partition alleged that all the parties to the action "hold and are in possession, and are the owners and tenants in common" of the land therein described. Several of the defendants did not appear; others answered, but did not deny anything stated in the complaint as to tracts A, D, and E, therein described. Held, that the allegations not denied must be taken as admitted, and findings that none of the defaulting defendants has any interest in the lands described in the complaint, and that neither of the answering defendants claims any interest therein except tracts B and C, "and a judgment that plaintiff and none of the co-defendants have any interest in any of the lands described in the complaint, are erroneous as to tracts A, D, and E."

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. BRUNSON, Judge.

Wicks & Ward, for appellant. Bicknell & White and Howard & Roberts, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in an action for partition. It comes here upon the judgment roll alone. The point is made by the appellant that the findings negative certain allegations of the complaint, which are confessed by the failure of some of the parties to the action to answer them. It is alleged in the complaint that the plaintiff and all the other parties to the action "hold and are in possession, and are the owners and tenants in common," of five certain tracts of land described as "A, B, C, D, and E." Several of the defendants, although duly served with process, did not appear, and a default was taken as to them; the other defendants answered, and denied the allegations of the complaint, so far as any claim was set up in that pleading, to any tenancy in common to the tracts B and C. But they did not deny anything therein stated as to the tracts A, D, and E. Notwithstanding the admission by all the defendants (either by default or failure to deny the allegations of the complaint) as to the tracts of land last mentioned, the trial court found that none of the defendants who made default "has, or at the time of the commencement of this action, had any right or title or interest in or to the lands described in the complaint, or in or to any part thereof." And making a further finding that neither of the defendants who filed answers claimed any interest in the lands mentioned in the complaint, except in the tracts B and C, rendered judgment for the defendants claiming those last-mentioned tracts, that they were owners in severalty,—the "estate of Woodworth, deceased," of the tract B, and P. N. O'Donnell of the tract C; and that the plaintiff and none of the co-defendants had at the commencement of or at the time of the rendition of the judgment any right, title, or interest in any of the lands mentioned in the complaint.

If the rule is to prevail which obtains with reference to ordinary actions, it is plain that the findings of the court, being in direct contradiction of the admitted allegations of the complaint, are nugatory in so far as they affect the rights of the appellant in the tracts A, D, and E. Burnett v. Stearns, 33 Cal. 469. And the finding and judgment to that extent being contrary to the facts admitted by the pleadings, and outside of the issues made or tendered, are erroneous. Gregory v. Nelson, 41 Cal. 278. It was held in Hughes v. Devlin, 23 Cal. 508, which was an action for partition where a "fact was averred in the complaint and not denied in the answer," that it must be deemed to be admitted as true, like any other material fact affecting the rights of the parties, or the form of the remedy to which they might be entitled. This would seem to establish the rule that partition suits, as to the point under discussion, are to be governed by the same rule as ordinary actions. This must be so, unless it be held that in such actions no finding or judgment predicated thereon will be sustained unless the finding is sustained by evidence irrespective of the allegations of the complaint, whether denied or not. That is to say, that all parties to such an action are actors and plaintiffs; that each is expected to set up and prove his own claims, but that in no event is the trial court to render a judgment in partition, save upon the proof made before it as to the respective rights of the parties, upon which alone it must base its findings, irrespective of any admissions made by default, or failure to answer, or denials of the allegations in the pleadings. We have not found any case in our reports which militates against the rule laid down in Hughes v. Declin, supra, and therefore we must conclude that the judgment of the court below, in so far as it affects the rights of the appellant to have partition of tracts A, D, and E, must be reversed, and a new trial awarded; the judgment to stand, however, in all other respects.

I concur: BELCHER, C. C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment of the court below, in so far as it affects the rights of the appellant to have partition of tracts A, D, and E, must be reversed, and a new trial awarded; the judgment to stand affirmed in all other respects.

MONTEREY COUNTY v. ABBOTT. (No. 11,001

(Supreme Court of California. May 3, 1888.)

1. LICENSE—FROM GOVERNMENT—COLLECTION BY SUIT—PARTIES.

Where a county ordinance imposing a license tax provides that an action to collect the tax shall be commenced in the name of the people, an action in the name of the county cannot be sustained. The failure to take out the required license does not make defendant a debtor to the county, in the sense that an action in the nature of an action of debt can be maintained by the county as the real party in interest, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 867, requiring actions to be brought in the name of the real party in interest.

2. SAME—JURISDICTION OF JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 838, providing that in actions in justice's court, if it appear from the answer of the defendant, verified by his oath, that the determination of the action will necessarily involve the legality of any tax, the justice must suspend all further proceedings, and certify the pleadings to the clerk of the superior court of the county, the justice, in an action to recover a license tax, properly suspended proceedings, and certified the proceedings to the superior court, where the answer alleged that there was no law authorizing the ordinance imposing the tax that such ordinance had been repealed; that the county had no power to assess the tax, and that the tax was unauthorized by law, and contrary to the federal constitution.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; JOHN K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

Action by the county of Monterey against E. K. Abbott, to recover a license tax for carrying on the business of selling goods, wares, and merchandise not of the manufacture or production of the state, which license tax was required to be paid by an order of the board of supervisors. The answer averred, inter alia, "that the court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, for the reason that there is no law authorizing or empowering the board of supervisors to pass the ordinance set out in plaintiff's complaint, and that the board of supervisors of Monterey county had no power to pass the said ordinance, and that the said ordinance does not give or grant or confer any power upon the tax collector of Monterey county to collect a license tax from defendant; nor does said ordinance impose any license tax upon said defendant, or impose any penalty or forfeiture for the non-payment of a license tax by said defendant, or authorize the collection of any license tax from defendant, or the collection of any penalty or any forfeiture from defendant. That the plaintiff has not the legal capacity to sue, in this, to-wit: that said action is brought under and by virtue of section 8 of the pretended ordinance set out in plaintiff's complaint, and section 3360 of the Political Code of the state of California; which said sections required the tax collector to prosecute all actions for the recovery of a license tax in the name of the people of the state of California. That said section 3360 of the Political Code of the state of California was abrogated by the adoption of the new constitution of the state of California, and that the pretended ordinance of the board of supervisors of Monterey county set out in plaintiff's complaint was repealed by a subsequent ordinance of the said board of supervisors entitled, 'Ordinance No. 2, concerning licenses,' " approved and signed by said board of supervisors on the 1st day of October, A. D. 1883. That plaintiff had not, on the 30th day of March, A. D. 1883, or at any other time, the right or power to levy, assess, or collect a license tax from said defendant, or to require a license from said defendant, or to require or compel said defendant to pay a license for the business described in plaintiff's complaint. That the license tax claimed by plaintiff from defendant is wholly unauthorized by law, and contrary to the provisions of the constitution of the United States, in this, to-wit, that section 18 of the ordinance set out in plaintiff's complaint discriminates against the productions of other states and in favor of the productions of the state of California. The defendant had judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

R. M. F. Soto, N. A. Dorn, and W. M. R. Parker, for appellant. Geil & Morehouse, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. It appeared from the answer of the defendant in the justice's court, verified by his oath, that the determination of the action would necessarily involve the legality of the license tax sued for. The justice, therefore, properly suspended proceedings in the action and certified the pleadings to the superior court. Code Civil Proc. § 838.¹

It is contended by appellant that the statement in section 1 of the license order that it is ordained pursuant to the act of March 13, 1883, (adding section 4045 to the Political Code,) is mere surplusage, and that the supervisors had power to pass the ordinance under sections 11 and 12 of article 11 of the constitution. Ex parte Wolters, 65 Cal. 269, 3 Pac. Rep. 894; Ex parte Mount, 66 Cal. 448, 6 Pac. Rep. 78; In re Lawrence, 69 Cal. 608, 11 Pac. Rep. 217; In re Guerrero, 69 Cal. 90, 10 Pac. Rep. 261. Section 8 of the ordinance provides that actions to collect license taxes shall be commenced in the name of the people. But appellant contends that this section of the ordinance is void, there being a general law requiring all actions—except as provided in section 369 of the Code of Civil Procedure—to be brought in the name of the real party in interest. (Code Civil Proc. 367.) That here the county was the real party in interest. If by section 12 of article 11 of the constitution the county has power to impose license taxes, and to provide the mode of collecting them, the ordinance does provide the mode shall be by action brought in the name of the people. On the other hand, the failure to take out a license did not of itself make the defendant a debtor of the county in such sense that an ordinary action, in the nature of an action for debt, could be maintained by the county as "the real party in interest." Neither the constitution nor any statute made him such. If, therefore, the action could not be maintained in the name of the people, it could not be maintained at all. Where a right is given and a remedy provided by statute, (or ordinance, if valid,) the remedy so provided must be pursued. True, where the right exists at common law, independent of statute, the remedy provided by statute may be regarded as cumulative. People v. Craycroft, 2 Cal. 244. BUTTE COUNTY v. MORGAN et al. (No. 12,217.)

COUNTIES—TREASURER—MISAPPROPRIATION OF FUNDS—EVIDENCE.

The California county government act, § 71, provides that the treasurer shall receive no money unless accompanied by the certificate of the auditor, as provided in section 115, or otherwise as provided by law. Section 115 provides that the auditor must settle the accounts of all persons holding money payable into the county treasury, and certify the amount to the treasurer, and, upon the filing of the treasurer's receipt therefor, give him a receipt, and charge the treasurer with the amount. Pol. Code, § 3761, provides that the auditor must settle with the tax collector, and require from him the treasurer's receipt, or, if the treasurer is collector, require from him an immediate account for any existing deficiency. Held, that it is sufficient, under these acts, where the same person is treasurer and collector, to charge him, and his sureties as treasurer, that the auditor settled with him as collector, and handed him the certificate of the amount found due, which receipt was found in the county treasury, and at once credited him as collector, and charged him as treasurer with such sum.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Butte county; LEON D. FREER, Judge.

A. L. Hart and A. F. Jones, for appellant. J. C. Gray and F. C. Lusk, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action against a county treasurer and the sureties on his official bond. The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendants appeal from the judgment, and from the order denying their motion for a new trial. There is no doubt that the defendant Morgan did misappropriate the county funds. He was both treasurer and tax collector. The two offices, though filled by the same person, are separate and distinct, and required separate bonds. County Government Act, §§ 57, 59; People v. Ross, 38 Cal. 77. The other defendants are the sureties upon Morgan's bond as treasurer; and the only point made on their behalf is that there is no evidence to show that the misappropriation occurred while he was acting as treasurer, and hence that the suit should have been against the sureties upon the bond as tax collector. There is no conflict in the evidence. The position is that there was not enough to overcome the burden resting upon the plaintiff.

The argument made involves a consideration of the statutory provisions in relation to the duties of the officers. The following is the provision of the county government act in relation to the duties of the treasurer: Sec. 71. "He must receive no money into the treasury unless accompanied by the certificate of the auditor, provided for in section 115, or as otherwise provided by law." The following is the provision of the same act in relation to the duties of the auditor: Sec. 115. "The auditor must examine and settle the accounts of all persons indebted to the county, or holding moneys payable into the county treasury, and must certify the amount to the treasurer, and upon the presentation and filing of the treasurer's receipt therefor give to such persons a discharge, and charge the treasurer with the amount received by him." This act has no provision with reference to the duties of tax collector. It appears to have left that subject to be governed by the provisions of the Political Code in relation to revenue and taxation. That Code, after providing that the tax collector shall deliver to the treasurer the books and lists showing his proceedings, (sections 3758, 3759, and 3760,) has the following: Sec. 3761. "The auditor must fully compare the list with the assessment book, and, if satisfied that it contains a full and true statement of all taxes due and unpaid, he must foot up the total amount of taxes so remaining unpaid, credit the tax collector who acted under it therewith, and make a final settlement with him of all the taxes charged against him on the assessment book, and must require from him the treasurer's receipt, or if the treasurer is the collector, require from him an immediate account for any existing deficiency." We do not understand that the section requires the auditor to demand that the money be shown to him, or that he shall count it. This is clear enough in the case of a payment by a person other than the treasurer himself. In such case it is manifest that all that the auditor has to do in the first instance is to examine the account and settle the amount due, and give a certificate thereof. The inquiry is simply as to the amount due, and not as to whether the party is in actual possession of the money. After this first operation is over, the party takes the auditor's certificate to the treasurer, and, after delivering the certificate and the money to him, receives his receipt, which he takes back to the auditor, who enters a charge against the treasurer, and a discharge of the person paying. The auditor is not required to go to the treasurer and ask him whether the amount has been actually paid, or, in other words, whether the receipt states the truth. He is authorized to accept the receipt as sufficient evidence of the fact of payment.

Now, when the person to make the payment is the treasurer himself, the only difference is that the formal receipt is dispensed with as an idle ceremony. The auditor is in such case to require the tax collector to "account" for any existing deficiency. But we do not understand that the auditor is, in this case, any more than in the other, to ascertain whether the money is actually in the possession of the party or not. Whether he may do so, or what means he is authorized to use, is not a question arising in this case. He is not bound to do so. He is authorized to rely upon the acknowledgment of the treasurer in the one case, just as he is authorized to rely upon the receipt of that officer in the other. In each case the auditor acts upon the admission of the individual who is treasurer. And we are unable to see that there is any great difference in the value of the admissions. Now, since the payment to the treasurer must precede the other acts, it might be worthy of consideration whether such other acts are essential to the cessation of liability of the party paying,—in other words, whether, if a party having money of the county pays it to the official authorized to receive it, he should have any further responsibility in regard to it. But it is not necessary to consider that question in the present case. If it be conceded that the liability of the party paying continues until he has taken the receipt to the auditor and got him to make the entry on his books, or, in the case of an official with dual functions, until he has acknowledged to the auditor that he has the money as treasurer, and is thereupon discharged as tax collector, it is manifest that when that occurs his liability as tax collector ceases, and his responsibility as treasurer begins. At least that is prima facie the case. The evidence in this cause brings it within the above rule. The tax collector produced his books and lists to the auditor, and they agreed upon the amount which was due to the county. The auditor thereupon gave a certificate which stated that "Mr. William J. Morgan, tax collector, has this day the amounts as given below to be paid into the county treasury." The auditor "handed that certificate to Morgan personally, and he took it away with him. And the auditor thereupon credited the tax collector with the amount as paid, and charged the treasurer with it." This certificate was afterwards found in the treasury.

It is not necessary to consider what would have been the result if the defendants had offered evidence showing that the misappropriation had in fact occurred before Morgan went to the auditor, and that his subsequent proceedings were a sham. No such evidence was offered; and, as above stated, the presumptions are the other way. These presumptions have for a basis the admissions of the defendant Morgan. He accepted without any question the certificate of the auditor, which contained an express statement that he then had in his hands, to be at once paid into the treasury, the amount in question; and he acted upon this statement by depositing it in the treasury. This conduct certainly amounts to an admission that the statement was true. This admission was evidence against the other defendants; for "where the question in dispute between the parties is the obligation or duty of a third person, whatever would be evidence for or against such person is prima facie evidence between the parties." Code Civil Proc. § 1851. And in view of the fact that the statute requires the auditor's certificate to accompany the payment into the treasury, the fact that the certificate was found in the treasury gives rise to an inference that the payment accompanied the certificate. We perceive no error in the record, and we therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

MENK v. HOME MUT. INS. CO. (No. 9,890.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 30, 1888.)

1. INSURANCE—MISSTATEMENTS IN APPLICATION—KNOWLEDGE OF AGENT.

In an action on a fire-insurance policy, evidence that the application was made out by an agent of the insurance company, with full knowledge as to the condition of the premises, and that plaintiff did not know what representations it contained, are admissible, under an issue of misrepresentations. The defendants cannot take advantage of misstatements in the application made by their own agent, and known by him to be false.

2. SAME—BURNING OF PROPERTY BY ASSURED—EVIDENCE.

In an action upon a fire-insurance policy, where the defendant alleges that plaintiff burned his own property, evidence on the part of plaintiff showing the loss of other property besides that which was insured, is admissible.

3. SAME—AFFIDAVIT ON PROOF OF LOSS.

In such a case, it is not prejudicial error to permit the plaintiff to read in evidence his affidavit, prepared soon after the fire, making proof of the loss, where he has testified fully as to the facts within his knowledge, and where the effect of such evidence is expressly limited by the court to showing that plaintiff had made the affidavit.

4. SAME—THE POLICY—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY—REFERENCE TO APPLICATION.

Where the application for a policy of fire insurance, in describing the property, included the cellar under the building, but in the policy itself the cellar was omitted, and reference was made to the application for a more particular description, held, that the cellar was covered by the insurance.

5. NEW TRIAL—MOTION FOR—QUESTIONS PRESENTED.

A general statement in a motion for a new trial, in an action upon a fire insurance policy, that there was no evidence to prove that plaintiff performed all the required conditions of the contract of insurance, is insufficient to allow defendant to make the point that, by the terms of the contract, if the parties could not agree upon the amount of loss, it should be referred to arbitration.

SAN LUIS OBISPO COUNTY v. DRAKE et al. (No. 12,353.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 5, 1888.)

OFFICE AND OFFICERS—FEES AND COMPENSATION—COUNTY RECORDER.

Act Cal. March 31, 1876, (St. 1875-76, p. 608,) providing that the county clerk shall be paid entirely by salary when performing the duties of auditor and recorder, becomes inoperative when those offices are filled by different persons, in which case the recorder is entitled to receive and retain as his compensation the fees allowed to him by act March 29, 1870, (St. 1869-70, p. 438;) such act not being inconsistent with the county government act of 1883, which excepts from its provisions as to fees and salaries, any officer whose salary, or fees in lieu of salary, is already provided by law; nor does it conflict with Const. Cal. art. 11, § 5, wherein is contained no mandate that such officer shall be paid by salary, and not by fees.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; D. S. GREGORY, Judge.

Action against F. E. Drake, and the sureties on his bond, to recover the fees collected by him as county recorder. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

S. M. Swinnerton, for appellant. McD. R. Venable and C. W. Goodchild, for respondents.

McKINSTRY, J. This action is against F. E. Drake, and the sureties on his official bond, to recover the fees collected and retained by him as county recorder. Drake was the recorder of San Luis Obispo county from January 1, 1883, to January 1, 1885. Prior to the year 1881 the offices of county clerk, recorder, and auditor of San Luis Obispo county were held by the same person. Since 1881 each of the three offices has been legally held by a different person. By the act of March 31, 1876, St. 1875-76, p. 608, it was provided that the "county clerk" should receive a certain annual salary as his only compensation in all three capacities as county clerk, county auditor, and county recorder. After 1881, and while a different person was the incumbent of each of the three offices, the county clerk was entitled to receive no portion of the salary fixed by the law of 1876. That law became inoperative because it was intended to be operative only while the three offices were filled by one person. Kinsey v. Kellogg, 65 Cal. 111, 3 Pac. Rep. 405. Was there, then, no law providing for compensation for the county clerk, recorder, and auditor, respectively? The question is answered by the decision in Stoddard v. Williams, 65 Cal. 473, 4 Pac. Rep. 452. The statute applicable to the fees of recorder of San Luis Obispo county was the act of March 29, 1870. St. 1869-70, p. 438. Section 182 of the county government act (St. 1883, p. 365) provided: "The provisions of this act, so far as it relates to the fees and salaries of all officers named, * * * shall not affect the present incumbents: provided, that when the salary of any such officer or fees in lieu of such salary, is not now fixed by law, the same shall, as to such officer, take effect immediately." It follows that while the defendant, Drake, was in office, he was entitled to receive and retain for services as recorder the fees allowed by the act of 1870. It is suggested, however, that the act of March 29, 1870, is "inconsistent" with the provisions of section 5, art. 11, of the constitution,—provisions which "require legislation to enforce them,"—and that the act of 1870 "ceased" on the 1st day of July, 1870. But wherein is the act of 1870 inconsistent with legislation which the legislature, to be elected under the constitution, was commanded to enact by section 5, art. 11? There is no mandate in section 5 directing the legislature to provide for the payment of salaries to county officers, nor does it prohibit the legislature from providing that such officers shall be compensated by fees. The legislative construction has been adverse to the view presented by counsel herein. The county government act provides that county surveyors and coroners and public administrators, as well as justices of the peace and constables, shall be compensated only by such fees as are allowed by law. St. 1883, p. 835. See, also, § 182, supra. The legislature is directed to provide for the "strict accountability" of county and township officers for all fees which may be collected by them. This, read with the context, may or may not include fees collected for the services of those collecting them. But an officer who is compensated by fees may be made answerable with respect to moneys collected as fees, and may be required to render an account or relation of particulars with respect to charges made by him. It would be giving a forced construction to the clause of the constitution to say it prohibits the legislature from providing for the compensation of any county or township officer otherwise than by salary payable out of the county or township treasury, and that it requires that in every case a county or township officer shall return the fees by him collected for his services into the treasury, receiving his compensation thereof in the form of a stated salary. As we have seen, such has not been the legislative construction of the clause; and, if such had been the intent of the framers of the constitution, it would seem, in view of the history of previous legislation on the subject, that the purpose would have been expressed in apt and appropriate language. Judgment affirmed.

WHEELER v. KASSABAUM. (No. 11,299.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 5, 1883.)

1. REFELVIN—DAMAGES—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action of claim and delivery for a branding-iron belonging to plaintiff, and damages for its detention, plaintiff testified that a contract to sell all his cattle of that brand fell through because the iron could not be delivered to the purchaser, but admitted that two days later the purchaser took the cattle without any "complaint about the branding-iron," and that the iron was not specified in the contract; and claimed that he suffered $500 damages in having to gather up the cattle, without showing that such damages were caused by defendant's failure to give up the iron. Held, that there was no evidence to support a finding of $500 damages.

2. APPEAL—FROM AN ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL—REVIEW OF COMPLAINT.

The sufficiency of a complaint cannot be considered on an appeal from an order denying a new trial.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mariposa county; JOHN M. CORCORAN, Judge.

Action by William Wheeler against Charles Kassabaum, to recover possession of a branding-iron, $500 damages claimed to have been caused by defendant's retention of the iron; and to obtain a decree to perpetually enjoin defendant from using the brand, which was made up of the letters "D. H." It appeared that plaintiff had purchased all, or nearly all, the cattle owned by defendant, in 1870, most of which were branded with the "D. H." iron, and plaintiff claimed to own and possess the sole right to the use of the brand after the sale, and had it recorded in the county clerk's office as his. Some time after the above sale, plaintiff delivered to defendant the branding-iron to be used by defendant in branding the increase of certain cattle owned by plaintiff, and conveyed by him to defendant as a security for a debt due from plaintiff to defendant. Afterwards, said cattle and increase were delivered by defendant to one McFarlane, as receiver, as ordered by the court, and after the sale of a sufficient number to pay plaintiff's obligations, the remainder were delivered back to plaintiff, but, as alleged by plaintiff, the iron was never returned; in support of which allegation he offered the testimony of several witnesses. In respect to the $500 damages alleged, the only testimony offered was that of plaintiff himself, as follows: "After making the trade, I went down and paid defendant $5,000 for the cattle and D. H. brand, and he delivered me the stock, and I had the brand recorded in Merced county that day, as my brand. It has been recorded here in Mariposa county. I went to defendant and told him I wanted the iron to brand increase, and he told me that two D. H. irons were under the foot of his bed; I went and got the iron. After the redelivery of the cattle to me by the receiver, I demanded this iron D. H. of defendant; he refused to do so; he didn't deny having it; I didn't get it. I don't know whether defendant has ever branded any cattle with this brand or not, since the redelivery of these cattle to me. In April last, I made an agreement to sell my cattle; they were sold and are sold now; I sold them to Adolph Zirker; they are not all delivered; we have delivered them as far as we could find them; I think there must be 50 or 75 head out. The first agreement with Zirker, in April, was that he should take the brand; this agreement fell through because I could not deliver the branding-iron, and then, two or three days afterwards, on another agreement, I sold him my whole stock. Zirker made no complaint about the branding-iron; it was with me in the first agreement. The first agreement is now in force—the agreement that he should have the entire stock. There was but one agreement; I have been damaged by having to gather the cattle. I have a D. H. iron; I have had it two or three years; it is one I had made. I have suffered $500 damages since I sold to Zirker, in having to gather the stock. The first contract between me and Mr. Zirker was that Mr. Zirker was to take the cattle as they run—was to take the whole brand; and I couldn't do it. The branding-iron wasn't specified in the contract. I could have delivered him the iron that I have, but that wouldn't have been delivering him the whole brand." The cause being tried without a jury, judgment was rendered for plaintiff that the iron be delivered by defendant, etc., and for $500 damages, as claimed. Defendant appeals.

L. F. Jones, L. N. Jones, and Fox & Kellogg, for appellant. G. G. Goucher and J. W. Congdon, for respondent.

McKINSTRY, J. There is no evidence in the transcript to sustain the finding of $500 damages. The order denying a new trial must therefore be reversed. There are other portions of the judgment which are not justified by the evidence or findings, but as a judgment falls upon the entry of an order granting a new trial, it is not necessary to indicate such portions of the judgment. The appeal from the judgment has been dismissed, and the sufficiency of the complaint cannot be considered on the appeal from the order denying a new trial. Hayne, New Trials & App. § 1; Mason v. Austin, 46 Cal. 385; Jacks v. Buell, 47 Cal. 162; Onderdonk v. City of San Francisco, 17 Pac. Rep. 678, filed April 19, 1888. It may further be suggested that the real question between the parties hereto was not the right to the possession of a branding-iron, but was as to the right to use a certain brand. If the right was exclusively in the plaintiff, equity alone could afford him effectual relief. Order reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to the court below to enter an order granting a new trial.

MOLASKEY v. PEERY. (No. 11,387.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 4, 1888.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—LACHES—EFFECT OF JUDGMENT IN EJECTMENT.

By one and the same verbal contract P. sold to M. a lot of land, and lumber with which to build a house on the same, agreeing to execute a deed for the lot when the same, together with the lumber, was paid for. M. entered into possession under the contract, and made improvements valued at $120. About six years thereafter, P. recovered possession of the premises in an action of ejectment, and made improvements thereon valued at $325. Three years after such recovery, M. brought his action for specific performance of the contract to convey; there being $40 still owing on the purchase price of the lot and lumber, and the lot having largely increased in value. Held that, the lot not having been paid for, the delay justified the refusal of a decree for performance; the action of ejectment, though not a determination of the defendant's equitable rights under the contract, being evidence that such delay was not consented to.

2. SAME—PROOF OF PAYMENT OF PURCHASE PRICE.

In an action by a vendee to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, on an issue as to whether the purchase price of such land had been paid, the testimony of the defendant was clear and positive that it had not, and the evidence of plaintiff consisted of his own testimony that it had, and of certain credits made on the books of defendant, which defendant testified were made on account of certain lumber purchased by plaintiff, as well as on account of the purchase price of the land. Held, that a finding that the purchase price of such land had not been paid, was sustained by the evidence.

3. PAYMENT—APPLICATION.

Where a payment made on account is sought to be credited to the earliest charge on the books of account, it must appear what item in such account was charged first in order of dates.¹

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; J. H. LOGAN, Judge.

Action by Henry Molaskey, as vendee, against J. W. Peery, to enforce specific performance of a verbal contract for the sale of a lot of land. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

Chas. B. Younger, for appellant. W. D. Story, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. This action, commenced November 14, 1883, was brought by plaintiff, as vendee, to enforce a specific performance of a verbal contract for the purchase of a lot of land, made in January, 1875. The contract, as found by the court, was "that on or about January 1, 1875, plaintiff and defendant entered into a verbal agreement, whereby defendant sold and delivered to plaintiff certain lumber to build a house with, and at the same time, and as part of such verbal agreement, sold to plaintiff the lot of land described in the complaint, for the sum of $20; that the sale of the lumber and the lot was one agreement, and defendant therein agreed that, upon the payment of the sums due for the lumber (which was to be used in building a house on the lot) and the $20 for the lot, that he would execute a deed for said lot, to which plaintiff assented." The court found, further, "that about January 15, 1875, plaintiff entered into possession of said lot and received said lumber under said agreement, and thereafter erected a dwelling-house on said lot with said lumber, and cleared off the said land, and made other improvements on said lot. That thereafter plaintiff paid to defendant $20 as principal, and $16 as interest, on account of his indebtedness for lumber and said lot, and demanded a deed for said lot, which defendant refused, and ever since has refused to comply with. The plaintiff's said improvements were of about the value of $120; the value of the lumber aforesaid was $70. That plaintiff resided on said land with his family until December 29, 1881. That plaintiff has not paid for said lot of land, and the sum of $40 was due from plaintiff to defendant on said lumber and said lot when this action was commenced." It is contended by appellant that the evidence does not sustain the finding that he had not paid the purchase price. But the testimony of the defendant is clear and positive, and, if true, the court was justified in finding as it did.

Appellant further contends that the evidence being that a payment made by him of $20 was credited on the general account against him, the law will apply the payment to the charge first made in defendant's books; but, if the rule and its application herein be conceded, it does not appear that the first item, in order of dates, charged against the plaintiff, was $20 for the lot.

As the lot had not been paid for when this suit was brought, the delay in commencing the action justified the court in refusing a decree. There is uncontradicted evidence that the land contracted to be sold in January, 1875, for $20, was worth $150 when the suit was brought, and the court found that the defendant, after his recovery of possession in December, 1881, had erected improvements thereon of the value of $325. January 29, 1878, the present defendant brought an action of ejectment against the plaintiff herein for the recovery of the possession of the lot in controversy in this action, wherein he recovered a judgment in June, 1878. Under an execution issued on that judgment, the defendant herein was placed in possession of the lot on the 28th day of December, 1881, and he has ever since been in possession thereof. The present plaintiff was not required to file a cross-complaint in the ejectment, nor to demand a specific performance therein. The judgment in ejectment was not of itself a determination of the equitable rights of the plaintiff herein, if any he had. But the commencement and prosecution of the ejectment is evidence that the present defendant did not consent to any delay in payment for the lot by the present plaintiff after the 27th of January, 1878,—a date nearly six years prior to the commencement of this action. Judgment and order affirmed.

KERNS v. MCKEAN. (No. 11,207.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 5, 1888.)

EVIDENCE—BOOKS OF ACCOUNT.

In an action by the grantee of a vendor to recover possession of land, on account of non-payment of purchase money, an account-book of the vendor containing a charge against and credits in favor of defendant is not admissible to show that the purchase price had not been paid; the book not being shown to be a book of original entries, and it not appearing that such entries were made at the date of the transactions recorded, or were correct of the knowledge of the person making the same at the time they were made.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; J. H. LOGAN, Judge.

Action to recover possession of a tract of land, brought by Thomas Kerns, assignee of one Patterson, against E. I. McKean. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

Garber & Bishop and J. A. Barnham, for appellant. Chas. B. Younger, for respondent.

McKINSTRY, J. This is an action for the recovery of the possession of a certain tract of land. One Patterson, being the owner of the premises herein demanded, entered into a written contract with one Sanford, since deceased, for the sale to the latter of the land for the consideration of $3,336, with interest,—$500 by exchange of lands at the making of the agreement, and the balance to be paid in four equal annual installments. Sanford, the purchaser, was also to pay all taxes. And it was further agreed that if any default should be made in any payment of principal, or interest, or taxes, the whole principal and interest should become due at the election of Patterson, who, upon such default, was authorized to declare the agreement and rights of Sanford thereunder forfeited and ended, by depositing a written notice of such forfeiture in the office of the county recorder, etc. At the trial of the present action the plaintiff, grantee of Patterson, as evidence that Sanford had not complied with his agreement by paying the full sum of $3,336 and interest, introduced "the account-book of Patterson of the Corralitos rancho, wherein the accounts of Sanford and others with Patterson were kept by Patterson, and all the entries therein were made by and in the handwriting of one Hanna, who was Patterson's book-keeper at the time." The objections of the defendant were overruled, and the plaintiff put in evidence the following entries from the book:

"LA MOTTE.

A. P. SANFORD in acc't with Corralitos Rancho.

1867, Oct. 25.	To purchase of 240.60 acres,	-	-	-	$3,336
Oct. 25.	By exchange of land,	-	-	-	500
1868, Dec 19.	" cash on acc't,	-	-	-	500
1871, May 20.	" " " "	-	-	-	200"

The non-payment of moneys to be paid by Sanford upon the contract of purchase was a fact of a nature to be proved by the usual evidence of it. The performance or non-performance of such a specific agreement is not a fact within the reason of the rule, supposed to arise out of necessity, which permits—at least when the party is not competent as a witness—matter to be proved by books of account. Nickle v. Baldwin, 4 Watts & S. 290; Lyman v. Bechtel, 55 Iowa, 437, 7 N. W. Rep. 673. Books of account were admissible when the nature of the subject was such as not to render better evidence attainable. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 117. A book kept in tabular form, by the defendant, of the days on which plaintiff worked, was held not admissible in evidence to show that the plaintiff did not work on certain days. Morse v. Potter, 4 Gray, 292. Under peculiar circumstances an entry in the books of a third person may be admissible, as part of the res geste, when the third person is dead,—possibly sometimes when he is still living. But the evidence here offered was inadmissible under any rule. Patterson had a clerk. The entries were made by Hanna, Patterson's book-keeper. And although, as shown by the statement on motion for new trial, Hanna was examined as a witness, it does not appear that he was questioned with respect to the entries; that he testified that they were made at the date of the transactions they purport to record, or that the entries he made were correct of his knowledge when he made them. Nor was it shown that the book was a book of original entries. The offer of the book was an attempt to establish a negative favorable to the cause of the plaintiff, by affirmative declarations of a third person, when it appeared such third person was within the jurisdiction and actually present at the trial. It was an attempt to establish that some money was not paid, by what was claimed to be evidence that other money was paid. But the evidence offered to prove the fact from which the inference of the other fact was to be drawn—whether the mere offer would or would not estop the plaintiff—was not such as was admissible against the defendant. For the error indicated a new trial should have been granted below. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

PARKER v. REAY. (No. 9,844.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 7, 1883.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—ACTION FOR ASSESSMENT.

An action for the amount of an assessment properly and separately made, under Laws Cal. 1871-72, § 8, subd. 4, providing that, where a street terminates at right angles in another, the expense of work done on one-half the width of the street opposite such termination shall be assessed on the lots in each of the quarter blocks adjoining and crossing the same, etc., can be sustained as to the amount of such proper assessment, though an invalid assessment, under another subdivision, is joined in the cause.

2. NEW TRIAL—NOTICE OF MOTION—SPECIFICATION OF PARTICULARS.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 659, providing that the notice of a motion for a new trial on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict must specify the particulars in which the evidence is alleged to be insufficient, a notice of motion alleging that the evidence is insufficient to support the first finding of fact, etc., is not a specification of the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient within the meaning of the section.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco. CHARLES HALSEY, Judge.

Action by C. H. Parker against Jos. W. Reay to recover the amount of a tax assessed on defendant's lot under Laws Cal. 1871-72, § 8, subds. 3, 4. Subdivision 3 provides that the expenses of work done on main street crossings shall be assessed upon the four quarter blocks adjoining and cornering on the crossings; and each lot, or part of lot, in such quarter blocks fronting on such main street, shall be separately assessed according to its proportion of frontage on said main street and subdivision 4 provides that, where a street terminates at right angles in another main street, the expense of the work done on one-half the width of the street opposite the termination shall be assessed upon the lots in each of the two quarter blocks adjoining and cornering on the same, etc. Defendant contended that the assessment made under subdivision 3 was void; and, having been united in the cause with an assessment under subdivision 4, the whole action must fail, although the assessment under said subdivision 4 was proper in all particulars. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

George E. Lawrence, for appellant. D. H. Whittemore, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. 1. The assessments levied against lot 13 are separately made, and particularly defined in the assessment list. The lot was properly assessed the sum of $647.41 for the construction of gutter-ways and macadam. The other assessment, $62.90, for the crossing on Scott and Tyler streets, should have been made against the east one-half of the lot, and the diagram ought to have shown what portion was assessed. St. 1871-72, § 8, subd. 3, p. 810. This portion of the assessment was void, and the demand therefor was invalid; but the assessment for macadam and gutter-ways, having been made separately and for the proper amount, and the proper demand having been made, as shown by the return, the motion for a nonsuit was properly denied, notwithstanding the invalidity of the assessment for work on the crossing.

2. The specifications as to the insufficiency of the evidence are too general. That "the evidence is insufficient—First, to sustain the first finding of fact; second, or the the second finding of fact; third, or the third finding of fact," etc.,—is not a specification of "the particulars in which such evidence is alleged to be insufficient," within the meaning of section 659, Code Civil Proc. Eddeibuttel v. Durrell, 55 Cal. 277. We cannot, therefore, consider the point made by the appellant that the evidence does not support the finding as to the amount due and unpaid.

3. The findings supported the judgment. Judgment and order affirmed.

In this case, the record of which is similar in other respects to that in Parker v. Reay, ante, 124, (No. 9,844,) lot 14, the lot assessed, is a corner 50 vara, and was assessed only for gutter-ways, and for macadamizing the roadway. The assessment proceedings seem to have been regular, and the lot, being a corner lot, was properly assessed for the work done. Judgment and order affirmed.

(No. 9,999.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 7, 1888.)

1. INSURANCE—MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE—ACTION ON CERTIFICATE—FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH CONDITIONS.

In an action on a beneficiary certificate issued by a temperance order it appeared that assured died from the excessive use of liquor; that he agreed in his written application for the certificate to comply with all the requirements of the order, as a condition precedent to his being entitled to the benefits of the certificate; that the certificate contained a clause in substance and effect the same as the application. Held, that plaintiff could not recover.

2. SAME—ACTION ON CERTIFICATE—PROOF OF FORFEITURE.

In an action on a beneficiary certificate issued by an order to which assured belonged, it is not necessary, in order to set up a forfeiture of such certificate, to show that assured was suspended or expelled from such order.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

Action by Catharine Hogins, wife of Daniel Hogins, against the Supreme Council of the Champions of the Red Cross, on a beneficiary certificate issued by such order on her husband's life. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

R. B. Mitchell, for appellant. Arthur Rodgers, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is an action to recover from the defendant the amount of $1,000 on a beneficiary certificate issued by the Grand Encampment of the Champions of the Red Cross of California upon the life of appellant's husband.

The defense is breach of the conditions of the contract of insurance. Judgment was rendered in the court below in favor of the defendant. The Champions of the Red Cross is a temperance order or fraternity. The order originally consisted in this state of a Supreme Council, a Grand Encampment, and subordinate encampments. The insurance system was under the supervision of the Grand Encampment, which issued the certificates. On October 20, 1881, the Grand Encampment went out of existence, and defendants assumed payment of all policies then in force. The system of insurance is called the mutual life benefit system, and every full member, who had taken the three degrees of a subordinate encampment, and had complied in every particular with all the laws, rules, and requirements of the order, was entitled to participate in this insurance from $1,000 upward, according to the number of members. On September 26, 1879, Daniel Hogins, a member in good standing of Castle Encampment No. 68, San Francisco, made application in writing for a certificate, payable at his death to his wife, appellant herein, and said certificate was regularly issued on October 2, 1879, and after having been regularly countersigned as required by the laws of the order, was, on October 10, 1879, delivered to him, and by him thereupon delivered to appellant. The court found that "on July 9, 1883, the said Daniel Hogins commenced drinking spirituous liquors as a beverage, and did thereafter continue upon a drinking spree, and use whisky, brandy, and other alcoholic stimulants as a beverage, and on Friday, July 13, 1883, at about 7 o'clock P. M., he died, his death being hastened by the excessive use of such liquor." After the issuance of the policy, and until his death, no charges were preferred against Hogins. His monthly dues and assessments on his certificate were paid as fast as they became due. In his written application for a certificate Hogins agreed "that a compliance with all the laws, regulations, and requirements which now or hereafter may be enacted by our said order is the express condition upon which I am to be entitled to participate in the mutual benefit life system." The certificate itself contained this clause: "This certificate is issued upon the express condition that said Daniel Hogins shall in every particular, while a member of our said order, comply with all the laws, rules, and requirements thereof." The controlling and distinguishing feature of this order is its requirement of daily abstinence from the use of liquors as a beverage by its members. It is the fundamental principal in every degree. In order to become a member of the order, or entitled to a beneficiary certificate, the applicant was required to take all the degrees, and pledge himself upon taking each one that, so long as he was a member of the order, he would wholly abstain from the use of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage. Violations of this pledge were punished by suspension. The system of insurance is clearly intended to be confined exclusively to temperance people. The applicant Hogins so understood it. In his application he expressly agreed that he should not be entitled to the benefits of the system unless he complied with all the laws, regulations, and requirements of the order. The clause quoted from the certificate does not, perhaps, literally express the meaning intended, but it is quite clear what was meant and intended by the parties. It does not say that payment is contingent upon the express condition, but such was clearly the intent. Appellant claims that the condition is for the issuance merely, but the conditions are in their nature matters to occur in the future. "That said Daniel Hogins shall in every particular, while a member of our said order, comply with all the laws, rules, and requirement thereof," shows beyond controversy that his conduct after the issuance of the certificate was to be the condition of payment. His application shows clearly that such was his intention and contract, and we think that the application and the certificate may be read together for the purpose of showing that the clause in the certificate is an express condition precedent to the payment of the insurance. "In all contracts of insurance certain statements are made, certain stipulations are entered into, and certain provisos, conditions, and by-laws are introduced or referred to in a more or less explicit manner. As a general rule, if these statements, stipulations, etc., are contained in or expressly made a part of the policy, they become warranties, and are so denominated in the law of insurance. * * * By a warranty the insured stipulates for the absolute truth of the statement made, and the strict compliance with some promised line of conduct, upon penalty of forfeiture of his right to recover in case of loss should the statement prove untrue, or the course of conduct promised be unfulfilled. The warranty is an agreement in the nature of a condition precedent, and, like that, must be strictly complied with. * * * Any statement or stipulation upon the literal truth or fulfillment of which depends the validity of the contract, whether appearing as a condition, or warranted or modified otherwise, amounts to a warranty." May, Ins. §§ 160, 161. The same principles apply to all kinds of insurance.

We do not think that suspension or expulsion was necessary by the order to forfeit the policy. In Knights of Honor v. Johnson, 78 Ind. 111, the certificate contained this clause: "Providing he be in good standing when he dies." It was held simply in that case that it was not shown that the member was not in good standing when he died. We see nothing in Bidwell v. Insurance Co., 3 Sawy. 261, which holds that unless the certificate refers to the written application therefor that the application forms no part of the contract. As we construe the clause in the certificate it is in substance and effect the same as the clause in the application which we have referred to, and was so intended by all parties. It is said that the defendant can always refuse to pay the certificates, on the ground that the second part of the obligation, namely, "to do all things in his power to promote the cause of temperance," has not been kept. It would be very difficult indeed for the beneficiary to prove how much was in the power of the deceased in the way of promoting the temperance cause, and the failure on behalf of the insured to prevent another from taking a drink might be claimed by the defendant as a forfeiture, etc. It is sufficient to say here that Hogins agreed, among other things, not to drink alcoholic liquors, and that he willfully broke the condition in violating the fundamental and controlling principle of his obligation and of the order. Judgment affirmed.

HARBIN v. BURGHART et al. (No. 12,373.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1888.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL-DISTRICTS—RIGHT TO PURCHASE SCHOOL LANDS—FALSE STATEMENTS IN APPLICATION.

In an action to determine whether plaintiff or defendant was entitled to purchase a portion of school lands, it appeared that defendant was in adverse possession of the lands, within the meaning of Pol. Code Cal. § 3495, relating to the purchase of school lands at the time of plaintiff's application; that plaintiff's application stated "there was no occupation of such lands adverse to any that he had." Held that, such statement being untrue, plaintiff's application was invalid, and he was not entitled to purchase.

2. SAME—RIGHT TO PURCHASE SCHOOL LANDS—AFFIDAVIT OF ACTUAL SETTLEMENT.

Code Cal. § 3495, referring to the purchase of school lands, when in reality he did not go on the land, or even see it, until two months after his application, he deprives himself of all right to purchase.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county; CHARLES P. BRAYNARD, Judge.

Action by M. P. Harbin against Burghart and others to determine the right to purchase certain school lands. All the defendants save Henry L. Gold were dismissed from the action, and to him the court awarded the right to purchase. Plaintiff appeals.

Chipman & Garter, for appellant. John F. Ellison, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. This is an action brought to determine which of the parties has the right to purchase a portion of section 36, township 28 N., range 2 E., M. D. M., school lands. All the defendants except Gold have been dismissed from the action. Gold's application to purchase was filed in the office of the surveyor general, January 23, 1884, and is in proper form. Plaintiff filed his application to purchase in the same office on the 21st of March, 1884, and on the following day filed with the surveyor general a protest against the approval of Gold's application. Thereupon the surveyor general certified the contest to the superior court of Tehama county. The court below decided that defendant Gold is entitled to have issued to him a certificate approving his application to purchase the lands in controversy. The defendant did not go upon the land until about the 18th or 20th of May following his application, and never saw the land until that time, but about the 10th or 12th of March he sent two men upon the land to build a house for him thereon, which they completed a few days thereafter. About the 1st of June following the defendant took possession, and remained there continuously for six months. He testified that he filed his application in good faith, intending to purchase the land for a home and as a place for business; that he knew the land was unfit for cultivation; that as soon as convenient after filing his application, and in pursuance of his intention to reside there, he had the house built, and, as soon as the weather and the quantity of snow upon the ground would permit, he moved his stock upon the place, and resided there until heavy storms came in the fall. The court found that the land is unfit for cultivation, and also found that the defendant Gold was an actual settler.

1. At the time the plaintiff's application to purchase the land was made, March 21, 1884, the defendant was in adverse occupancy of the land, within the meaning of section 3495, Pol. Code. In his application the plaintiff stated that there was "no occupation of such lands adverse to any that he had." This statement being untrue, his application is invalid, and he is not entitled to purchase the land. Mosely v. Torrence, 71 Cal. 318, 12 Pac. Rep. 430; Gavitt v. Mohr, 68 Cal. 50; 10 Pac. Rep. 337.

2. The statute in force at the time the defendant filed his application to purchase, required the applicant to make an affidavit that he was a citizen of the United States; * * * that he was an actual settler on the lands; that there was no occupation of such lands adverse to any that he had, etc. In his application to purchase, and his affidavit in support thereof, the defendant Gold alleged that he was an actual settler on the lands. This statement was false, for he testified at the trial that the first time he went on the land, or ever saw it, was about May 18, 1884, four months after he filed the application referred to, and that he had no improvements or cabin on the land until about the middle of March, two months after his application. An applicant for the purchase of land from the state must set out in his affidavit the facts required by the statute to be stated therein, (McKenzie v. Brandon, 71 Cal. 209, 12 Pac. Rep. 428,) and unless the matters of fact which are required by the statute to be alleged in the affidavit are proved at the trial of contests like the one at bar, no right accrues to the party alleging the same, (Plummer v. Woodruff, 72 Cal. 29, 13 Pac. Rep. 51.) The finding of the court that the defendant Gold was an actual settler upon the lands is not supported by the evidence. It is directly in conflict with the testimony of the defendant.

Judgment and order reversed, with directions to the court below to dismiss the action; each party to pay his own costs.

JACOBS v. WALKER. (No. 9,873.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1888.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS—RIGHT TO PURCHASE SCHOOL LANDS—ACTION TO DETERMINE—COMPLAINT.

In an action to determine the right to purchase certain school lands, it appeared that defendant obtained a certificate for the purchase of the land; that plaintiff afterwards filed an application and affidavit in due form to purchase the same, and also filed a verified protest in writing, with the surveyor general of the state, against the issue to defendant of any further evidence of title to any part of the lands; that plaintiff's complaint recited facts showing that his affidavit complied in all respects with the requirements of Pol. Code Cal. § 3495. Held, that the complaint states a cause of action, and need not set forth the grounds of plaintiff's protest filed in the surveyor general's office.

2. SAME—RIGHT TO PURCHASE SCHOOL LANDS—ORDER OF SURVEYOR GENERAL.

In an action to determine the right to purchase certain school lands, initiated under an order for reference from the surveyor general of the state to a district court of the county in which the lands are situated, the certified copy of the order need not show that the same was entered in a record-book in his office, notwithstanding Pol. Code Cal. § 3414, enacts that, on an officer making such a reference, he must enter the order in a record-book in his office, where it appeared that the surveyor general's certificate showed that the instrument was "a copy of a document on file" in his office. Following Eads v. Clarke, 9 Pac. Rep. 666.

3. SAME—RIGHT TO PURCHASE SCHOOL LANDS—CERTIFICATE FOR PURCHASE.

A certificate for purchase of school lands, issued by the surveyor general, is not conclusive evidence in favor of the holder against another person contesting the right of the holder to purchase such lands.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; ROBERT MCGARVEY, Judge.

This was an action brought by Abner D. Jacobs against J. B. Walker to determine the right to purchase certain school lands. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

T. J. Carothers, for appellant. I. A. Cooper, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action to determine a contest as to which of the parties has the better right to purchase from the state certain school lands, and was initiated under an order of reference from the surveyor general of the state of California to the superior court of Mendocino county. At the time the order was made, the defendant had applied to purchase the land in dispute, his application had been approved, and a certificate therefor issued by the register of the state land-office. Some time after that, the plaintiff filed, in due form, an application and affidavit to purchase the same lands to which defendant held a certificate, and filed a verified protest in writing with the surveyor general of the state against the issuance of any further evidence of title to any part of said lands to the defendant. The lands had been, on the 15th day of March, 1876, certified over as state school lands by the United States land office. The surveyor general made the order of reference, upon the plaintiff's demand, on the 7th day of July, 1884, which was annexed to and made a part of the complaint. The defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained. The plaintiff declining to amend his pleading, judgment was given for the defendant, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

The principal point urged for the reversal of the judgment is that the court below was in error in holding the defendant's certificate of purchase to be conclusive as against the plaintiff. It has been repeatedly decided in this state, by the supreme court, that such a certificate is not conclusive, and that, after it has issued, a contest as to the right to purchase may be made. Gilson v. Robinson, 68 Cal. 542, 10 Pac. Rep. 193; Christman v. Brainard, 51 Cal. 534; Cunningham v. Crowley, Id. 128; Woods v. Sawtelle, 46 Cal. 389. We think the complaint recites facts which show that the affidavit made by the plaintiff upon his application to purchase, complied in all respects with the requirements of section 3495 of the Political Code. It was unnecessary to state in the complaint the grounds of the plaintiff's protest filed in the surveyor general's office. The last point, viz., that the surveyor general's certificate did not show that he ever entered any order of reference in a record-book in his office, as required by section 3414 of the Political Code, is untenable, under the rule laid down in Eads v. Clarke, 68 Cal. 481, 9 Pac. Rep. 666.

The complaint stated facts showing a cause of action, and the judgment should be reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer, with leave to the defendant to file an answer within a reasonable time.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer, with leave to the defendant to file an answer within a reasonable time.

ROBINETT v. CONNOLLY, Sheriff. (No. 11,372.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1888.)

ATTACHMENT—RIGHT OF SHERIFF TO FEES AND EXPENSES.

Under St. Cal. 1871-72, p. 778, which provides that a sheriff shall not be required to release attached property until his expenses for keeper's fees are refunded, a defendant in attachment, who settles the suit after a keeper has been put in charge of the attached property, and receives from the plaintiff an order directing the sheriff to release the levy upon payment of his fees, cannot obtain the property until he has paid the sheriff his keeper's fees.

Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

This is an action of claim and delivery, brought by Thomas Robinett against Patrick Connolly, to recover certain chattels which the latter, as sheriff, had seized under a writ of attachment, brought by one Shain, against Robinett. After the levy, and while the attached property was in possession of a keeper appointed by the sheriff, Robinett settled the claim of his attaching creditor, and received from him an order directing the sheriff to release the attached property upon payment of his fees. Robinett presented this order to the sheriff, and demanded the property, which the sheriff refused to deliver until his keeper's fees were paid; whereupon, without paying such fees, Robinett began this action, in which judgment was rendered against him, and he appeals.

John J. Coffey, (W. H. Tompkins, of counsel,) for appellant. Matt. I. Sullivan, (D. McClure, of counsel,) for respondent.

McKINSTRY, J. The plaintiff in the action Shain v. Robinett could not require of the sheriff (defendant herein) to release the property by that officer attached therein, except upon payment of his keeper's fees. St. 1871-72, p. 778. Shain did not pretend to direct the sheriff to release the attachment except on the condition which the law attaches to every direction to release an attachment. Robinett would have acquired no right to demand possession of the property from the sheriff by virtue of his settlement with Shain had that settlement not provided for the payment of the keeper's fees; but it was part of the agreement of settlement that Robinett should pay the sheriff's fees. The sheriff may refuse to perform official work in advance unless his fees are paid, but, though he has not demanded them in advance, the statute continues his lien for keeper's fees until they are paid. Judgment and order affirmed.

TUGGLE v. MINOR. (No. 11,210.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 7, 1888.)

1. ACCOUNT STATED—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Defendant signed the following memorandum: "On my return from * * * I will settle the above account. * * *" The last item in the account was indorsed, "This last item to be investigated as to amount." It appeared that defendant agreed as to the amount, excluding the last item. No subsequent investigation of this item was shown. Held, that the account became stated as to the admitted amount, and plaintiff could recover, on an account stated, only that amount.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Where a debtor signs the following memorandum on account stated: "This last item to be investigated as to amount. On my return * * * I will settle the above account with * * * personally,"—the subsequent indorsement, "This agreement renewed this day," is sufficient to take the case out of the statute of limitations, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 360, providing that no promise is sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract by which to take the case out of the operation of the statute of limitations unless contained in some writing signed by the party.

"October 6, 1879.

"October 4, 1881: This agreement renewed this day. B. B. MINOR."

The court found that the account as presented was, on the 6th of October, examined by the plaintiff and defendant, and thereafter, and before the commencement of this action, the account, as stated, was accepted and agreed to by both parties; that on the same day, by an indorsement on the account, the defendant agreed to pay said account as so stated, and renewed the agreement on the 4th of October, 1881, in writing. The account and the indorsement thereon show quite clearly that the items were all agreed to as correct, excepting the last item, and the testimony makes it clear that such is the fact. The plaintiff testified that on the 3d of October, 1881, he went to the defendant's office and asked him what he was going to do about paying; that he, defendant, spoke of his prospects and said he would pay in a very short time, within a month, he thought, the whole of it; that on the 4th of October, 1881, he carried the account back to the defendant, and requested him, for fear that it might be barred by the statute of limitations, to renew it; that thereupon the defendant wrote the second indorsement found upon the statement; and that when the account was presented, plaintiff and defendant looked over it, and agreed upon the amount, $13,012.70, as being correct. The defendant testified that he gave the plaintiff the paper referred to; that he told plaintiff he would settle with him personally on his return from New York, the understanding being that the settlement was contingent upon the success of the defendant in the east; that the payment was to be made only if he (defendant) made any money out of the Bodie lawsuit; that the suit was decided adversely to defendant in November, 1881; that the plaintiff kept calling upon him for the money, and defendant told him he must wait till "this Bodie business was wound up;" and nothing was said to him about the correction of this last item when the agreement was renewed on the 4th of October, because the settlement was understood to be conditioned upon success in the litigation referred to. J. P. Meux testified on behalf of the plaintiff that he called upon the defendant in New York on the 27th of March, 1880; that the defendant stated he had a settlement with the plaintiff of their accounts; took the account in his hands, looked at it, and stated that it showed what he owed the plaintiff; that he hoped to consummate the sale of a mine within a day or so and pay up.

It is claimed on behalf of the appellant that the account was stated on the 6th day of October, 1879, for the whole amount alleged in the complaint to be due, and "if any one of the claims of undefined amount is to be omitted, the statement of the account is disproved, and the action founded upon such statement of account fails." But it has been held that when all of the items of an account are admitted to be correct except particular ones which are left by the parties for future adjustment, the account becomes stated as to those items which are admitted to be correct. Wiggins v. Burkham, 10 Wall. 129; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 126, approved in Terry v. Sickles, 13 Cal. 430. Of course an account cannot be stated with reference to a debt payable on a contingency. 2 Chit. Pl. (11th Amer. Ed.) 962. The court, however, found that there was no contingency, but an absolute promise to pay. It was for the court, upon all the evidence in the case, to determine the meaning of the word "settle." It is a word which may mean one thing under certain circumstances and another under other circumstances. Auzerais v. Naglee, 15 Pac. Rep. 371. These matters were determined in favor of the plaintiff by the court below. It is further claimed that there is no evidence of a written promise sufficient to take the case out of the statute of limitations; that the account was stated, if at all, on October 6, 1879, and the complaint was not filed till November 28, 1881, more than two years thereafter. Section 360, Code Civil Proc., provides:

"No acknowledgment or promise is sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract by which to take the case out of the operation of this title, unless the same is contained in some writing, signed by the party to be charged thereby." It has been held that an acknowledgment need not be made in express words, but may be implied from any act or statement which necessarily and directly admits or presupposes the existence of the debt, and the obligation to pay it, (1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 6th Amer. Ed. 877;) and that "the purpose of section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to establish a rule, not with respect to the character of the promise or acknowledgment from which a promise may be inferred, but with respect to the kind of evidence by which the promise or acknowledgment shall be proved." Biddel v. Brizzolara, 56 Cal. 374. In all cases the question is to be determined from the evidence, and upon all the circumstances surrounding the transaction. But we think there can be no doubt that by the use of the word "settle," in the first indorsement upon the account, the defendant meant that he would pay the account subject to an investigation as to the last item named. It was an absolute agreement to pay at least all of the items except the last. By the second indorsement this agreement to pay was renewed in express terms.

The court found upon all the material issues. It was unnecessary for the court to find further facts upon the defendant's counter-claim, because it is stated in said counter-claim "that the foregoing mutual dealings and accounts are those out of which the alleged account stated, set forth in the complaint, arose." We see no error in the rulings of the court at the trial.

The last item named in the account is indorsed in writing: "This last item to be investigated as to amount." As stated above, plaintiff testified that defendant agreed upon the amount of $13,012.70. It does not appear that any investigation was afterwards had in relation to the last item, and we think the evidence insufficient to show any absolute promise on the part of the defendant to pay that portion of the account. The plaintiff is entitled to recover the sum of $13,012.70, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 6th day of October, 1879, and costs of suit.

The cause is remanded to the court below, with directions to modify the judgment accordingly.

DAVIS v. BUTTON. (No. 12,564.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 7, 1888.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE OF MASTER—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for killing plaintiff's intestate, it appeared that deceased, being a competent engineer, with the knowledge and consent of one J. B., entered a locomotive engine for the purpose of assisting in the running; that, crossing a bridge, the same gave way, precipitating the locomotive, and killing deceased. Evidence showed that defendant was aware of the defective state of the bridge, and did not prevent the running; that J. B. was foreman, conductor, and assistant superintendent of the line, and started trains; that he alone organized the trip; that defendant knew the train would be moved under J. B.'s general supervision; and that, there being no regular engineer on the line, he believed J. B. would secure the services of one. Held, that there was sufficient evidence of J. B.'s authority to employ an engineer, and there being no contributory negligence on the part of deceased, and conflicting evidence as to deceased's knowledge of the defective state of the bridge, the plaintiff could recover.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; JAMES A. GIBSON, Judge.

Martha Davis, administratrix of the estate of Harrison Davis, deceased, brought an action against R. W. Button, the owner of a motor railway line, to recover damages for the killing of her intestate. Verdict for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

H. C. Rolfe, (Chas. R. Redrick, of counsel,) for appellant. Frank F. Oster, Harris & Gregg, and Byron Waters, (William G. Webb, of counsel,) for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. There was sufficient evidence that, on the day mentioned in the complaint, when a train upon the railroad of defendant "was about to make a trip from said Colton to said city of San Bernardino, over said motor road," Harrison Davis, the deceased, entered the engine of said train for the purpose of running the engine, or of assisting the engineer in the management and control of the engine, with the knowledge and consent of John Button; further, that the deceased was a competent engineer. The evidence clearly showed that the bridge that gave way was weak, and inadequate to support the locomotive and car attached to it. There was a substantial conflict in the evidence as to whether Harrison Davis knew or had reasonable notice of the weakness of the bridge or its inadequacy. When the bridge and locomotive fell Harrison Davis was killed. Spring was asked to run the engine by John Button on the occasion referred to. John Button himself "fired up" the engine. Spring could not start the engine, and requested Davis to do it, John Button being present. Spring and Davis had previously run the engine with the knowledge of John Button and of defendant. Did John Button have power to authorize the deceased to manage the engine, or to assist Spring in managing it? John Davis testified that he was "foreman, conductor, and assistant superintendent" of the line. He gave the signal for the train to start, went with it, and collected money of the passengers to pay for the cost of the coal and oil consumed on the trip. John Button also testified that he was the mover in getting up the trip that night. "It was got up by nobody's authority except my own." But there was testimony of a statement of defendant, made after the accident, that he was told "they were going to run up that night, and that he made no reply; he did not tell them to run it or not to run." The day before the accident the defendant told a witness that the train would probably not run to San Bernardino the next night; that he had a gang of men at work on the bridge. The witness thought the defendant said the trip would depend upon the completion of the work. Another witness testified that, the day before the accident, he heard John Button ask defendant if the train should run that evening; to which defendant replied: "John, I think it better not run this evening; I think it not advisable,"—or something to that effect. On the day of the accident, and previous to it, the defendant had taken iron rods to the bridge, and given them to workmen there, with directions to insert them in the bridge, and tighten them by means of bolts. After leaving them, the workmen inserted the rods, but did not "tighten" the rods, as they might have been, because they had no wrench to force down the bolts upon the nuts. The defendant did not forbid the running of the train on the evening when the deceased was injured, although he knew it was contemplated. There can be no doubt that John Button was employed in some capacity, and the defendant knew the train would be moved under John's general supervision. As yet, no engineer had been regularly employed, and defendant had every reason to believe that John Button would secure the services of one. In view of the circumstances, the evidence shows that John Button had power to authorize the deceased to run the engine. We cannot say, upon the evidence, that the jury erred in finding that Davis was not guilty of contributory negligence.

Counsel for appellant contends that the court below erred in giving certain instructions to the jury. We cannot consider the argument in support of this point. It does not appear that exceptions were taken to any portions of the instructions of the court. Judgment and order affirmed.

SWINNERTON v. MONTEREY COUNTY. (No. 11,136.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 10, 1888.)

TAXATION—RIGHT OF COLLECTORS TO COMMISSIONS.

St. Cal. 1871-72, p. 178, enacts that tax collectors of M. county shall receive a certain commission for collecting taxes, and St. Cal. 1871-72, p. 419, enacts that the sheriff of the said county should receive for collecting them a commission at a higher rate than that allowed by the previous act. It appeared that, at the time of the passing of the acts, the sheriff was ex officio the tax collector; that subsequently the offices were separated, and regular tax collectors appointed. Held, that such subsequently appointed tax collectors were entitled to retain the greater commission.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; JAMES F. BREEN, Acting Judge.

S. M. Swinnerton brought an action against Monterey county for damages for breach of contract. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

S. M. Swinnerton, pro se. R. M. F. Soto and Hermann & Soto, for respondent.

McKINSTRY, J. W. V. McGarvey was tax collector of Monterey county for two years from the first Monday in March, 1878, and U. Hartnell held the same office from the first Monday of March, 1880, to the first Monday of January, 1883. The plaintiff herein, an attorney at law, claims to have entered into a contract with the defendant whereby he was employed to collect commissions unlawfully retained by the tax collectors of the county,—the county agreeing to pay him for such service 30 per cent. of the amount he should recover and collect; that, under such employment, he commenced actions against tax collectors McGarvey and Hartnell, and their respective bondsmen, to recover commissions illegally retained by them; but that, after the commencement of said actions, the board of supervisors (by order in regular form) directed the district attorney to dismiss the actions, which was done, and that the county thereby prevented him from earning the 30 per cent. he would have recovered had he been permitted to prosecute the suits. Passing all other questions, the plaintiff ought not to recover in this action if he could have recovered nothing for the county in case he had prosecuted to judgment the actions against McGarvey and Hartnell. He could have recovered nothing unless the commissions sued for were illegally retained or paid to the tax collectors named. There is no dispute here as to the amounts retained by the two tax collectors; and it must be conceded that if the act of March 16, 1872, (St. 1871-72, p. 419,) fixed the compensation of the tax collector when McGarvey and Hartnell were in office, each of them was entitled to retain or to receive the sum by each retained. The act of March 1, 1872, (St. 1871-72, p. 178,) provided that the tax collector of Monterey should receive for collections of state and county taxes 4 per cent. on the first $10,000; 2 per cent. on all amounts over $10,000, and less than $20,000; and 1½ per cent; on all moneys over $20,000. By the act of March 16, 1872, it was enacted that the sheriff of Monterey should receive 6 per cent. on the first $10,000 collected for state and county taxes; 4 per cent. on all over $10,000, and less than $20,000; and 2 per cent. on any amounts more than $20,000. The last act repealed all acts in conflict therewith. When the acts mentioned were passed, the sheriff of Monterey county was ex officio the tax collector. Subsequently, and before the incumbency of McGarvey or Hartnell, the offices were made separate. It was urged by appellant that the percentages to be received by McGarvey and Hartnell, as tax collectors, were determined by the act of March 1, 1872. The contention is based on the proposition that in the act of March 16, 1872, the "sheriff" is named as the recipient of the percentages; but the sheriff was the tax collector. The offices of sheriff and tax collector, though held by the same person, were separate and distinct offices. People v. Ross, 38 Cal. 76; Peo- ple v. Kelsey, 34 Cal. 470; Lathrop v. Brittain, 30 Cal. 680. The act of March 16th fixed the percentages to be allowed the tax collector for collecting the taxes,—fixed them no less because it called the tax collector “sheriff.” The title of an act does not control the plain meaning of the body of the act. A statute must be construed with reference to the objects to be accomplished by it. A thing clearly within the intention of a statute is within the statute. Pierpont v. Crouch, 10 Cal. 315; Emery v. Reed, 65 Cal. 351, 4 Pac. Rep. 200; Burr v. Dana, 22 Cal. 20; Kinsey v. Kellogg, 65 Cal. 114, 115, 3 Pac. Rep. 405. Judgment affirmed.

HOOKER v. BANNER et al. (No. 9,886.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 10, 1888.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—LEASES—STIPULATIONS—EFFECT OF REMOVALS.

A lessee was permitted to make changes in the premises leased, on condition that he would restore them, and afterwards his lease was twice renewed, with stipulations that any changes made by the tenant should be replaced, and the premises left in their original condition. Held, that such stipulations included the changes made under the first lease, and the lessor, being obliged to make the restoration, may recover therefor.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. K. WILSON, Judge.

Action by C. G. Hooker against Pincus Banner and Samuel Banner, composing the firm of Banner Bros. Plaintiff recovered judgment, and defendants appeal.

Naphtaly, Freidenrich & Ackerman, for appellants. John H. Dickinson, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. The appellants were lessees of the respondent under a lease which contained a stipulation that they should not make any alteration in the premises without the consent of the lessor. During the continuance of the lease the lessor gave the lessees permission to make some alterations, on condition that the lessees, upon leaving the premises, would restore them to their original condition. Pursuant to said permission the lessees did make such alterations as they had obtained permission to make upon the aforesaid condition. Before the expiration of said lease, appellants procured another lease, to take effect on the expiration of the former. The second lease contained the following clause: “And any alteration or changes made in the property by the parties of the second part shall be replaced, and the property left in its original condition.” At the expiration of the last-mentioned lease another was executed between the parties, containing the clause last above quoted. Appellants continued to occupy the premises until the expiration of the last-mentioned lease, and for one month thereafter, when they abandoned the premises without restoring them to the condition they were in at the date of the first lease, and refused so to restore them, although requested by respondent to do so, whereupon plaintiff restored them to their original condition himself, and brings this action to recover the sum expended in doing so, and the damages sustained by the loss of the use of the premises while the same were being so restored. Judgment was entered in favor of respondent, and from that, and an order denying appellants’ motion for a new trial, they have appealed to this court. Their contention here is that, if they made the alterations upon the condition that they would restore the premises to their original condition, such alterations being made before the expiration of the first lease, they took the premises under the second and subsequent lease in the condition in which they were at the dates of said leases, respectively, and were only bound to leave them in the condition in which they were at said respective dates; and that the clause in the later leases, which provided that any alterations or changes made in the property by them, should be replaced, and the property left in its original condition, does not relate back to the date of the first lease. In view of the fact that the alteration and changes were made under an agreement by appellants that they would restore the premises to their original condition, we think the clause in the leases which succeeded the first had reference to alterations and changes made while appellants were holding under the first lease, and that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

BAGNALL v. ROACH. (No. 9,889.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 7, 1888.)

1. NEW TRIAL—SURPRISE—REJECTION OF EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff has no right to a new trial on the ground of surprise, where, relying on his supposed right to testify, and making no provision to sustain his case by other evidence, his testimony is rejected under a statutory prohibition.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—CLAIM FOR MONEY IN DECEDENT'S HANDS—EVIDENCE.

In an action against an administrator for money alleged to have been received for plaintiff's use by defendant's intestate, and deposited by her with other moneys in her own name in a savings bank, where plaintiff fails to show when such deposit was made, or how much of the money deposited remained in the bank at the time of intestate's death, though it appears that intestate had, prior to her death, received money to plaintiff's use, he is not entitled to recover.

3. SAME.

In such case, where there was no direct proof that any of plaintiff's money was ever deposited in intestate's name, the court properly excluded intestate's bank-book, where such book would merely have shown that deceased at some time made a deposit in her own name.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

Joseph Bagnall brought an action against Philip A. Roach, as administrator, to recover a sum of money alleged to have been received by defendant's intestate, and deposited by her in her own name in a savings bank. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

Jos. Rothschild and Cobb & Moore, for appellant. Wright & Cormac and H. D. Talbot, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. Julia King died in the city and county of San Francisco on the 8th of April, 1883. The defendant, Roach, public administrator, obtained letters of administration on her estate. The deceased left some money deposited in the Hibernia Savings Bank in her own name. The amount does not appear. The plaintiff claims that at least a thousand dollars of this money belongs to him. On the 18th of May, 1883, he presented his claim in due form, and duly verified, to the defendant, as administrator, for allowance; but the defendant refused to allow the same, or any part thereof. At the trial, plaintiff expected to be a witness, and was called by his counsel to testify to the material facts going to establish his claim. Under the provision of section 1880, Code Civil Proc., his proposed testimony was rejected. This ruling of the court is not assigned in the statement as error, and cannot be considered.

Appellant now claims that, "having relied on his right to testify in the cause, he made no provision to sustain his case by other evidence. The fault, he claims, was that of his attorney in not advising him of the statute prohibiting him from testifying; and he did not know of this prohibition till too late to find other testimony. The attorney believed that in such a cause of action he could testify. Having been denied this privilege, he was thrown, as it were, hors de combat, and the newly-discovered evidence entitled the plaintiff to a new trial." The discovery which plaintiff and his counsel made seems to have been one of law, rather than one of fact or evidence. It is sufficient to say, furthermore, that there is nothing in the record to identify any affidavits used on motion for a new trial.

The findings of the court, attacked by the appellant, are fully warranted by the evidence. Assuming it to be true, as stated by appellant, that "the evidence shows that the defendant's intestate received from the plaintiff, or for his use, or on his account, at least $250, and which sum the decedent deposited in her own name in the Hibernia Savings Society," there is nothing to show when such deposit was made, or at least nothing to show how much, if any portion, of the money which was deposited remained in the bank at the time of her death. It devolved upon the plaintiff to prove to the satisfaction of the court, not only that money had been deposited in her name which belonged to him, but that it remained on deposit, and how much remained on deposit. This he failed to do, evidently through mistake of law respecting his right to testify in the case.

It was not error to exclude the bank-book offered in evidence. This book, if admitted, would have shown simply that the deceased had deposited money at some time in her own name. This proposition was not controverted, in fact was not denied in the answer. There is no direct proof that any money of the plaintiff was ever deposited in the name of Julia King; but the fact, if it be a fact, that Julia King deposited in her own name, and mingled with her own money, the money of plaintiff several years or months, or even several weeks, before her death, raises no presumption that the money on deposit, or any part of it, at the time of her death, is the money of the plaintiff. At least, the court below was not bound to infer or presume one fact from the existence of the other. The court was not satisfied. "That evidence is deemed satisfactory which ordinarily produces moral certainty or conviction in an unprejudiced mind. Such evidence alone will justify a verdict." Section 1835, Code Civil Proc. Judgment and order affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1883.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT—ASSIGNMENT OF LEASE—LIABILITY OF ASSIGNEE FOR RENT. The assignees of a lease are not liable to the lessor for rent where he had failed to deliver possession of the property for 20 days after the lease began to run, though requested to do so, and they had notified him that they abandoned the contract, and when they had never in fact occupied the premises.
2. SAME—RENT—LIABILITY OF ASSIGNEE OF LEASE—REASSIGNMENT. The assignee of a lease discharges himself from subsequent liability for rent, by a reassignment to the original lessee.

Department 2. Appeal from circuit court, city and county of San Francisco; JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

Action by P. Dengler and Frank Breiling against Edward Michelssen, Benjamin W. Brown, and Daniel Roth, composing the firm of Michelssen, Brown & Co., to recover rent on certain premises. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal.

L. H. Van Schaick, (Justin Jacobs, of counsel,) for appellants. O'Brien & Morrison, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to recover money averred to be due on a certain lease. Judgment went for defendants in the court below, and plaintiffs appealed. The facts found by the court are substantially these: About August 31, 1878, plaintiffs leased (by written indenture) to one E. B. Burdick a certain piece of land and premises in San Francisco, known as "lot 31 in block 58," for the term of one year from September 1, 1878. Burdick was to pay as rent $110 per month, payable every six months in advance. Defendants furnished to Burdick $660, with which Burdick, at the time of the execution of the lease, paid the rent to plaintiffs for the first six months; and on September 3, 1878, Burdick made and delivered to defendants an instrument in writing as follows: "In consideration of fifty dollars received from Michelssen, Brown & Co., I hereby transfer lease from P. Dengler and Frank Breiling of lot 31, block 58, bounded by * * *. Further, said Michelssen, Brown & Co. agree to lease to me the above-mentioned property, or as much of said building as the undersigned requires for the manufacture of artificial butter." But other parties were in possession of the leased premises as tenants of plaintiffs, from whom plaintiffs had received rents to at least September 20, 1878; and plaintiffs failed and refused to deliver possession of said premises to either Burdick or defendants, during said the first 20 days of September, although requested so to do, and failed and refused to put defendants into possession for two months after said September 1st. Whereupon defendants declined to have anything further to do with said premises, and so notified plaintiffs; and within the first six months for which the rent had been paid they reassigned said lease to said Burdick. Neither Burdick nor defendants were ever in possession; and defendants have lost the $660 which they advanced to Burdick for the first six months' rent. Immediately after the expiration of the first six months, on the — day of March, 1879, plaintiffs commenced an action against Burdick for the amount of rent named in the lease for the next six months; but in January, 1882, they, for some reason, dismissed that action, and commenced this present action against defendants for said amount. And the evidence being substantially conflicting as to the facts found, we would not be justified in disturbing the findings. It is evident that the judgment in favor of defendants is right. Assuming that the instrument above copied was such an assignment of the lease as would establish a privity between plaintiffs and defendants, (which is doubtful, because it was not a transfer of the whole estate,) still, it is clear that defendants discharged themselves from liability from any subsequent laches by assigning over to Burdick. Johnson v. Sherman, 15 Cal. 290; 1 Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 452. Moreover, the failure of plaintiffs to put defendants, or their assignor, in possession of the leased land, justified the defendants in abandoning the premises. Skaggs v. Emerson, 50 Cal. 6; Camarillo v. Fenton, 49 Cal. 207; and this would be an answer to appellants' contention that the court erred in its refusal to allow plaintiffs to amend their complaint at the trial so as to charge defendants as original lessees, instead of assignees, upon the theory that Burdick procured the lease for them, even if such refusal could be considered as error. Judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed.

PEOPLE ex rel. DUNN, Comptroller, v. VAN NESS. (No. 9,707.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1888.)

1. IMMIGRATION—FEES OF COMMISSIONER.

Pol. Code Cal. § 2955, which provides that the commissioner of immigration shall collect a certain sum for every person examined in reference to leprosy, "which sum, except $4,000 a year and expenses of office, shall, when required for such purpose, be paid by the commissioner into the state treasury, to be used in the maintenance, when necessary, of such lazarettos or lepers' quarters as shall be constructed under this law," requires the commissioner to pay into the treasury all the fees collected, less $4,000 and office expenses, which the state should use for the maintenance of lepers' quarters when required for that purpose.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—WHEN RUNS AGAINST THE STATE—DEMANDS AGAINST PUBLIC OFFICERS.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 338, prescribing three years as the limit within which actions on liabilities created by statute must be brought, applies to actions brought by the state for sums collected and held by a public officer, which the statute required him to pay into the public treasury.

2. SAME—WHEN BEGINS TO RUN—DEMANDS IN FAVOR OF THE STATE AGAINST PUBLIC OFFICERS.

Where a public officer is required by statute to collect and pay into the public treasury certain sums, but no particular time is mentioned in the statute for turning over such sums, the statute of limitations in reference to an action against such officer to compel him to pay over these funds begins to run at the expiration of his term of office, and a subsequent demand for them creates no new cause of action so as to interrupt the statute.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

John C. Roche, (T. C. Van Ness, in pro. per.,) for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., and Laughorne & Miller, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The sections of the Political Code from 2949 to 2969 provide in detail for the examination of immigrants coming to this state by sea, to discover if any of them are afflicted with the disease of leprosy. The office of commissioner of immigration is created. Such commissioner is authorized to examine all vessels arriving at any port of the state, and to take charge of all persons found to have said disease, and place them in suitable lazarettos or lepers' quarters, to be provided by the board of supervisors "when-ever necessary for that purpose." That part of said sections which particularly affects the decision of the case at bar is contained in section 2955, and is as follows: "For his services in making such examination and inspection the commissioner of immigration shall demand and collect from the master, owner, or consignee of such vessel the sum of 70 cents in United States gold or silver coin for each and every person so examined or inspected, which sum, except $4,000 a year and expenses of office, shall, when required for such purpose, be paid by the commissioner into the state treasury, to be used in the maintenance, when necessary, of such lazarettos or lepers' quarters as shall be constructed under this law." Defendant was commissioner of immigration from March 25, 1876, to January 20, 1880. During the early part of his term he paid some fees into the state treasury; but in 1878 he notified the offices of the attorney general, state treasurer, and state comptroller that, upon examination of the law, he had concluded that the fees belonged to him, that those already paid into the state treasury should be refunded to him; and that he would not pay to the state any more of such fees. After that he ceased to pay any of said fees into the state treasury: and nothing more was done about the matter until more than three years after he had gone out of office, when the comptroller made a demand upon him for the fees, and stated an account of his alleged indebtedness therefor, under section 437, Pol. Code, and on April 10, 1883, had this present action, in form an action of debt, instituted to recover them. Defendant answered, denying the indebtedness, and pleading the statute of limitations. The court found that the excess of fees received by defendant during his said term of office, over his salary and office expenses, was $2,382.87, for which sum, together with statutory damages, judgment was entered. It was not proven or found that any lepers' quarters were ever constructed or maintained, or that any money was "required for such purpose." Appellant contends that, upon any view of the law, the judgment should not have been for a greater amount than $371.86; but we do not consider it necessary to examine the various points made under that contention.

That part of section 2955, Pol. Code, above quoted, is, no doubt, somewhat cloudy. It would be an absurdity to hold it to mean, either that the commissioner was to have as his own all fees collected before the state required them to construct and maintain lepers' quarters, or that he should retain them indefinitely until the state should so want them, (which might not be for a quarter of a century after the expiration of his term of office,) and that then he or his heirs should pay them all over. The only rational construction is that the intent of the legislature was that the commissioner should pay into the state treasury all the fees collected, less $4,000 a year and office expenses, which should be used by the state for the maintenance of lepers' quarters when required for that purpose; and this construction we take to have been established by the case of People v. Bunker, 70 Cal. 212, 11 Pac. Rep. 703.

Whether or not there was any general law requiring the appellant to pay over the fees collected by him monthly, or at other stated times, he could have been compelled to do so at reasonable periods during his incumbency of the office. At all events, "there can be no doubt that he was legally bound to pay them over upon the expiration of his term of office. In such a case no necessity for any demand existed. The party was in default by his own act, and a debtor" to the state for the amount due. San Francisco v. Heynemann, 71 Cal. 153, 11 Pac. Rep. 870. A cause of action therefore existed in favor of the people against appellant at the time of the expiration of his term of office; and this action, having been commenced more than three years thereafter, is barred under subdivision 1, § 338, Code Civil Proc. The demand made by the comptroller did not create any new cause of action. People v. Melone, 15 Pac. Rep. 294. The statute of limitations is as applicable to actions like the one at bar, brought by the state, as to those brought by private persons; and public officers and their bondsmen cannot be harassed by suits brought after the statutory periods of limitation have expired. (It may be noted that section 2969, Pol. Code, which now provides that the commissioner shall make payments of fees into the state treasury monthly, was not passed until March, 1883.)

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and the court below is directed to give judgment for defendant.

PEOPLE ex rel. BRITTON v. PARK & O. R. Co. et al. (No. 9,733.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 16, 1888.)

NUISANCE—INJUNCTION TO RESTRAIN—MAINTAINABLE BY INDIVIDUAL, WHEN.

Where the title to a certain park was vested in the city of San Francisco, for the use and benefit of the public, and the city granted to the defendant a right of way for its track over a remote portion of the park, which did not interfere with the free passage or use thereof in the customary manner, the right of way and track were not such a nuisance as would enable an individual to maintain an action in behalf of the public to abate and enjoin the same.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINER, Judge.

George A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., (Taylor & Haight and P. F. C. Sander, of counsel,) for the People. McAllister & Bergin, for respondents. Wm. Craig, for intervenor.

SEARLS, C. J. This action was brought to abate an alleged nuisance, and to procure an injunction. Defendants had judgment in the court below, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. The action was instituted by the attorney general, in the name of the people of the state of California, on the relation of J. Britton, a citizen of the state, and a resident and tax-payer of the city and county of San Francisco, against the Park & Ocean Railroad Company and the Pacific Improvement Company. The latter defendant was, at the commencement of the action, engaged for the other defendant in the construction of the railroad sought to be condemned as a nuisance, and abated as such. The city and county of San Francisco was permitted to intervene in the cause, and filed its complaint of intervention, in which it substantially joined with the defendants in its statement of facts and in resisting the relief sought by the plaintiff. Golden Gate park is one of the public parks within the limits of the city and county of San Francisco. It extends from Stanyan street on the east to the Pacific ocean on the west, and is bounded on the south by H street. The railroad in question commences on Stanyan street, runs south along the same a short distance, curves to the west across the south-east corner of the park to H street; thence west along said last-named street to a point near the ocean; thence north across the park; thence across private property to its terminus on the ocean beach, near the Cliff House, a distance in all of four miles. The city of San Francisco, under the act of congress of March 3, 1851, presented its claim for confirmation of its title to the pueblo lands to the commissioners, and in due course of proceedings a decree was entered in the circuit court of the United States for the district of California, confirming the claim of the pueblo. From this decree an appeal was taken to the supreme court of the United States, pending which two acts of congress were passed relinquishing the title of the United States to the lands described in the decree of confirmation, namely, the act of July 1, 1864, (13 U. S. St. at Large, p. 333, § 5,) Act March 8, 1866, (14 U. S. St. at Large, p. 4.) Under the provisions of this last act of congress the city authorities adopted what is known as "Order No. 800," providing for the disposition of the lands not theretofore disposed of, the title to which was confirmed under these several acts of congress; and this order was approved and confirmed by the act of the legislature of March 27, 1868, (St. 1867-68, p. 379.) Under the provisions of this order, No. 800, Golden Gate park was laid out and established. Under an act of the legislature approved April 4, 1870, to provide for the improvement of public parks in the city of San Francisco, a board of park commissioners is provided for specially to take charge of Golden Gate park and other parks in the act designated. Under the provisions of this act, park commissioners were appointed, and from time to time the office has been filled by the respective appointees of the governor, as provided for in the act of the legislature. Thus the title to the property, originally in the pueblo of San Francisco, stands confirmed by the decree of the United States circuit court, the acts of congress above referred to, and the act of the legislature of this state already mentioned. The expense of maintaining and improving the park is borne by the tax-payers of the city and county of San Francisco. The Park & Ocean Railroad Company is a corporation organized under the laws of this state, and the road in question was constructed on the streets mentioned by and with the consent and authority of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, and, so far as it runs through the park, by leave, consent, and authority of the park commissioners. The authority from the former is to be found in an order or ordinance, and that from the latter is contained in what purports to be a lease for a term of three years, which is in consideration of an annual rental of $100, and which binds the company to erect and maintain, at its own expense, and at such points as the commissioners shall designate, waiting-rooms of such form and dimensions as may be specified by the latter; and to do various other things therein mentioned.

The facts are found at considerable length, and negative the theory that the railroad, as constructed, interferes with the use or enjoyment of the park by the public. The complaint prays "that the embankments of earth, road-beds, railroads, and walls of masonry hereinbefore described be, by the judgment and decree of this honorable court, determined to be nuisances." Section 3479 of the Civil Code defines a nuisance as follows: "Anything which is injurious to the health, or is indecent or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property, or unlawfully obstructs the free passage or use, in the customary manner, of any navigable lake, or river, bay, stream, canal, or basin, or any public park, square, street, or highway, is a nuisance." A purpresture exists where one incloses or makes several to himself that which ought to be common to many. The title to the Golden Gate park, under the several acts cited, is in the city and county of San Francisco. But it is dedicated to the use of the public. The city holds it in trust for the public use. The right of the public is to have the free use and enjoyment of the park as such. Whatever materially interferes with and unlawfully abridges this right of the public it is their right to have corrected. The unlawful construction of a railroad, a statue, or any building upon the park is a purpresture. But every purpresture is not a nuisance. It may, or may not, be a nuisance. In the case of a park, if it unlawfully obstructs the free passage or use, in the customary manner, of such park by the public, it is a nuisance and may be abated as such by a court of equity. If it falls short of this, the remedy is not by the people, who are not injured, but by the holder of the legal title. People v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 333. Whether or not an encroachment upon a public or private right is a nuisance, is a question of fact to be determined by a jury, or by a court sitting as such. People v. Davidson, supra; Requena v. Los Angeles, 45 Cal. 55; Blanc v. Klumpke, 29 Cal. 156. As a matter of fact, then, did the railroad of the defendant "unlawfully obstruct the free passage or use, in the customary manner," by the public of the park? The findings upon this point clearly negative this question. They are as follows: "The defendant railroad company operates its said railroad by means of steam dummies; and where the said railroad crosses the roadway which leads from said park to the ocean beach, the same crosses beneath said roadway by means of and through a tunnel or covered way, which is constructed in such a manner as in nowise to impede, obstruct, or affect the free, comfortable, and safe use of said roadway going from said park to said ocean beach. The road-bed of the defendant railroad company, where the same passes through said park, passes through a portion thereof that always has been and is now unused, with the exception of about one-half acre at the south-east corner of said park, which said half-acre was, until the construction of said road, used for the purposes of a temporary nursery, which portion so covered by the road-bed of the defendant the said railroad company, does not exceed an acre and one-half of an acre. That all the lands within said park occupied by said defendant railroad company have always been and now are generally unfrequented by visitors to the park, except at one portion thereof, where the road leading out of said park at the north-west corner thereof goes to the ocean beach; and all of the same, except said excepted portion thereof, always has been and is in a state of nature, that where said railroad traverses the westerly portion of said park, the surface of the park is composed of sands, there being in some places great depressions, and in other places elevations of the same, and the same cannot now be comfortably or freely or easily used or enjoyed by reason of its sandy nature and its natural conformation; and the construction, maintenance, and operation of said railroad, as the same is constructed, operated, and maintained in, upon, and over the same, in nowise affects or obstructs the free and comfortable use and enjoyment, in the customary manner, of said park, or any portion thereof, by all persons frequenting the same. That the people of the state of California have not been and are not prevented from going in safety or comfort from one part of said park to another part thereof." A railroad in a public park, constructed and managed as in the case at bar, may be a nuisance, calling for the intervention of the supreme power of the state to conserve the rights of the general public; or it may be a medium of ingress, egress, and transportation essential to the full enjoyment by the people of the privileges and blessings accorded them in the creation and dedication of such park. We deem the findings conclusive of the case, and are of opinion they are supported by the evidence. We say they are conclusive for the reason that, if the erections complained of do not amount to a nuisance, the people cannot maintain this action; and whether or not defendant was authorized to construct and maintain its road does not concern plaintiff. For any and all intrusions upon the park which work no injury to the public, the city and county of San Francisco, as the trustee holding the legal title, can alone maintain an action. It may well be that, if the railroad has been constructed upon its property without authority, it will elect to recover it in ejectment and hold it, as in case of a mere purpresture it may do. At any rate, plaintiff, not being vested with the title, and having no rights in the premises beyond that of seeing to it that the people are not wronged by being deprived of their rights in and to the park as such, is not in a position to obtain relief.

A number of minor points are made by appellant, but which, upon examination, we do not deem sufficient to warrant a reversal. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

TIVNEN v. MONAHAN. (No. 11,303.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 14, 1888.)

1. FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER—WHEN CAUSE OF ACTION ACCRUES—DEMAND OF POSSESSION.

A notice to remove from and deliver up possession of a building on the premises in question is not a sufficient demand under Code Civil Proc. § 1160, subd. 2, which provides that every person is guilty of a forcible detainer "who in the night-time, or during the absence of the occupant of any lands, unlawfully enters upon real property, and who, after demand made for the surrender thereof, for the period of five days refuses to surrender the same to such former occupant;" and until such demand no right of action accrues.

2. SAME—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for forcible entry, it appearing that plaintiff had purchased a building on leased premises from the tenant without the knowledge of the owner, placing his buggy in the same, and allowing goods of the tenant to remain, and that, after the expiration of the lease, the owner of the premises, in plaintiff's absence, entered upon the same, opened the doors of the building, threw out the goods therein, and threw down a fence erected after the expiration of the lease, a finding "that plaintiff was never in the peaceable possession of the premises," and "that defendant did not, with force or violence or with strong hand, enter upon or break into said building or premises," is justified by the evidence.

3. SAME—TRIAL—EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action for forcible entry, it appearing that plaintiff has never made demand for possession, as required by Code Civil Proc. § 1160, subd. 2, and the court having rightly found "that plaintiff was never in the peaceable possession of the premises," and "that defendant did not, with force or violence or with strong hand, enter upon or break into said building or premises," the admission in evidence of a deed of the premises in question from defendant to another, made prior to the commission of the alleged wrong, if error, is harmless, and no ground for reversal of judgment.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; J. TEMPLE, Judge.

Action for forcible entry and unlawful detainer, brought by John Tivnen against Patrick Monahan. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Wm. E. McConnell, for appellant. G. A. Johnson, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. Action for forcible entry and detainer. The complaint contains two counts. In the first, it is alleged that the plaintiff was in the actual possession of a certain building, and that on or about the 16th day of February, 1884, the defendant, with force and violence and with strong hand, broke and entered into the building, and took, and has ever since held, possession thereof. In the second, it is alleged that the plaintiff was, and, for more than five days had been, in the peaceable and actual possession of the lot on which the building before mentioned stood, and that during his temporary absence therefrom the defendant unlawfully entered upon and took possession of the premises, and, after demand made by plaintiff for the surrender thereof, refused, for the period of more than five days, and still refuses, to surrender the same. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and, among other things, the court found that for more than five years the defendant had claimed in good faith to be the owner of the premises in controversy, and for himself, and as the duly-appointed guardian of his minor daughter, to whom he conveyed the property in March, 1882, had exercised acts of dominion over the same; that plaintiff was never in the peaceable possession of the premises; that plaintiff claimed to be the owner of the premises, but had never been in possession or occupation of any portion thereof, except a building which a tenant of defendant erected thereon, and sold to plaintiff in December, 1883, without the knowledge of defendant, and into which plaintiff placed his buggy, and then caused the same to be locked up; that defendant did not, with force or violence or with strong hand, or unlawfully, enter upon or break into the building or premises; that defendant did not at any time receive any written or other notice or demand from plaintiff to deliver up to him the possession of the said premises, but did receive a notice to remove from and deliver up to plaintiff the possession of the said building, which he refused to do; and that plaintiff had sustained no damage. Upon the findings, judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, and the appeal is from that judgment, and an order denying a new trial.

It will be observed that the first cause of action set out in the complaint is for a forcible entry into a house under subdivision 1 of section 1159 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the second cause of action is for a forcible detainer of real property under subdivision 2 of section 1160 of the same Code. The last-named section provides that every person is guilty of a forcible detainer "(2) who, in the night-time or during the absence of the occupant of any lands, unlawfully enters upon real property, and who, after demand made for the surrender thereof, for the period of five days refuses to surrender the same to such former occupant." The finding that plaintiff did not at any time make demand that defendant surrender up to him possession of the real property involved in the second count is not assailable; but such a demand was necessary in order to constitute a cause of action. We may therefore omit any further consideration of this part of the plaintiff's case.

It is claimed that the findings "that plaintiff was never in the peaceable possession of the premises," and "that defendant did not, with force or violence or with strong hand, enter upon or break into said building or premises," were not justified by the evidence. We think the evidence quite sufficient to justify these findings. At most, the plaintiff's possession was a scrambling one. He had no actual peaceable possession of the building or lot; and the testimony wholly failed to show that defendant broke or entered into the property with force, violence, or strong hands.

In the progress of the trial the defendant offered in evidence a deed from himself to his daughter, dated March 8, 1882, conveying the lot in controversy. The plaintiff objected to the deed being received in evidence, on the ground that it was irrelevant and immaterial. The court overruled the objection, and the plaintiff reserved an exception. If we admit that the ruling was erroneous, the appellant will in no way be aided. In view of the findings, the error was entirely harmless; and the rule is that for harmless and immaterial errors judgments are never reversed. There are no other points requiring consideration, and we therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

OGLESBY et al. v. HOLLISTER et al. (No. 12,447.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 14, 1888.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—ADVERSE POSSESSION—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

O. and R. purchased a tract of land as tenants in common, O. paying the entire purchase price under an agreement allowing R. to pay his proportion within a stated time, and providing that, out of any sales made, O. should be first reimbursed. No sales were made, and R. never paid his part of the purchase price. Thereafter R. executed to H. a mortgage on the undivided one-half of said tract. Pending foreclosure of the mortgage a tax deed of such undivided one-half was made to O., above named, and recorded the same day. It appearing that O. had remained in open, peaceable, and exclusive possession of the entire tract since receiving the tax deed, a period of nine years, fencing the same, paying taxes, receiving rents, and accounting to no one therefor; that the tract was popularly known as O.'s blocks; and that he had repeatedly entertained propositions to purchase, and attempted to sell, the entire tract,—held, that such facts were notice that O. was in possession, claiming title to the whole, and that, although the tax deed was void on its face, the claim of H. was barred.¹

2. SAME—ADVERSE POSSESSION—EVIDENCE.

Though a tax deed void on its face does not affect the title, and its record gives no notice to any one; receiving such deed is an act which may be considered in determining whether one taking thereunder meant to claim adversely.

3. TENANCY IN COMMON AND JOINT TENANCY—OBLIGATION OF TENANT IN COMMON TO PAY TAXES ASSESSED TO CO-TENANT.

A tenant in common who has paid the entire purchase price, and is in possession, collecting the rents and profits and not accounting therefor, is under no obligations to pay the taxes assessed to his co-tenant.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; R. M. DILLARD, Judge.

This is an action to quiet title brought by D. F. Oglesby and F. W. Oglesby, assignees of the heirs at law of A. A. Oglesby, against Hannah A. Hollister and others, executors and heirs at law of W. W. Hollister. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal.

E. B. Hall, J. W. Taggart, and R. B. Canfield, for appellants.

The possession of one co-tenant is presumed to be the possession of all until actual ouster; and the onus of proving such ouster is on the party alleging it. Ord v. De la Guerra, 18 Cal. 75; Müller v. Myles, 46 Cal. 539; Packard v. Johnson, 57 Cal. 180; Trenouth v. Gilbert, 63 Cal. 407; Mauldin v. Cox, 67 Cal. 387, 7 Pac. Rep. 804; Wilson v. Atkinson, 68 Cal. 590, 10 Pac. Rep. 203. In an alleged ouster of his co-tenant, the acts and declarations of a party in possession are to be construed more strongly against him than where there is no priority of title. Freem. Co-tenancy, §§ 221–229; Ord v. De la Guerra, 18 Cal. 75; 6 Wait, Act. & Def. 458. A conveyance alone, without possession taken under it, can never amount to an ouster. Freem. Co-tenancy, § 226. The so-called tax deed, being void on its face, constituted no color of title, and its admission was error. Sedg. & W. Tr. Title, Land, § 762; Bernal v. Gleim, 33 Cal. 676; Packard v. Moss, 68 Cal. 126, 8 Pac. Rep. 818; Mulcahy v. Florer, 8 N. W. Rep. 166.

W. C. Stratton, for respondents.

Color of title is any writing which purports to convey title to land by apt words of transfer clearly defining the extent of the same. Wood, Lim. § 259; Hall v. Law, 102 U. S. 461. Color of title, even under a void and worthless deed, is evidence of adverse possession against all the world. Tyler, Ej. pp. 870-874; Tryon v. Huntoon, 67 Cal. 325, 7 Pac. Rep. 741; *Swift v. McKINSTRY, J. An action to quiet the title to block of land No. 56½ in the city of Santa Barbara. It was commenced February 16, 1887. On the 8th day of April, 1873, A. A. Oglesby and W. F. Russell became the owners at law, as tenants in common, of blocks Nos. 56½ and 70½ by virtue of a deed of conveyance thereof executed by Frissius and Hernster. Russell paid no part of the purchase money, and on the same day he and A. A. Oglesby entered into the agreement and executed the instrument following: "Whereas, A. A. Oglesby and W. F. Russell have purchased blocks Nos. 56½ and 70½ in the town of Santa Barbara for their joint and equal benefit, and said A. A. Oglesby furnished all the purchase money: now it is hereby understood and agreed that they, each of them, withhold the property from sale for the period of one year from date, unless sooner sold by mutual agreement; and out of any sale the said Oglesby shall first receive $1,600 in United States gold coin, with interest thereon at the rate of 1 per cent. per month, and then the balance of property be equally divided between them; but, notwithstanding, the said W. F. Russell may, at any time within the year, afterwards pay his share of the purchase money, with the interest thereon, without agreeing to a sale." No part of W. F. Russell's share of the purchase money has ever been paid, nor has any portion of the property been sold or conveyed except as herein stated. Prior to the conveyance from W. F. to D. H. Russell, hereinafter mentioned, W. F. Russell mortgaged the undivided one-half of the lands described to W. W. Hollister. On the 20th of September, 1875, W. F. Russell conveyed his right, title and interest in the lands to D. H. Russell. W. F. Russell died March 26, 1877, and D. H. Russell, named as grantee in the deed aforesaid, was appointed administrator of his estate. On the 13th day of July, 1877, W. W. Hollister commenced an action to foreclose his mortgage, wherein D. H. Russell, as owner of the equity of redemption, and D. H. Russell, as administrator, were made parties defendant. While said action was pending, and on the 13th day of May, 1878, the tax collector of Santa Barbara county made and delivered to A. A. Oglesby a tax deed purporting to convey an undivided one-half of said block of land, No. 56½, which deed was acknowledged and recorded on the same day. In the suit brought by W. W. Hollister, a decree foreclosing his mortgage and the rights of defendant in the mortgaged premises was entered, and thereunder the premises mortgaged were duly sold. Said Hollister became the purchaser at such sale, and, no redemption being had, received a sheriff's deed, conveying all the interest of the estate and heirs of W. F. Russell, and the interest of D. H. Russell, in the mortgaged premises; which deed was made, executed, and recorded March 28, 1879. A. A. Oglesby died July 14, 1884; W. W. Hollister died August 8, 1886. The plaintiffs acquired the title of which A. A. Oglesby died seized in the two blocks of land, by deeds from all his heirs, made and recorded January 24, 1887. The defendants are the heirs of W. W. Hollister and the executors of his estate.

Plaintiffs claim that the ancestor of their grantors disseized his co-tenant of block 56½, and remained in adverse possession of the same, asserting title to the whole thereof, until the date of his death, and that their grantors and they have been in adverse possession since that date. They aver that D. H. Russell was ousted from the possession on the 13th of May, 1878, the date of the tax deed. The court below found: "(6) That when said tax deed was issued to said A. A. Oglesby, and recorded, he ousted said D. H. Russell and W. W. Hollister and the whole world from the said real property, and thereafter was in the exclusive possession of the same under a claim of title to the whole thereof exclusive of other right; and, ever since said tax deed was issued to said Oglesby, the whole of said block has been assessed to him and his successors, and he and they have claimed title to the whole of said block No. 56 $\frac{1}{2}$, and held possession adverse to said D. H. Russell and W. W. Hollister and to the defendants and the whole world; and, ever since the 13th day of May, 1878, and for more than five years before the commencement of this action, said A. A. Oglesby and his successors and the plaintiffs have been, and plaintiffs now are, in the actual, open, notorious, peaceable, quiet, and exclusive possession of the whole of said block No. 56 $\frac{1}{2}$; and during all of that time they have paid all assessments and taxes of every kind which have been levied, assessed, or taxed against said block or any part thereof or interest therein. (7) That said W. W. Hollister, at the time said mortgage was made to him by said W. F. Russell, had notice, by reason of the records in the office of the county recorder of the county of Santa Barbara, of the equities of said W. F. Russell and said A. A. Oglesby."

Appellants contend the findings are not sustained by the evidence. If there is evidence to sustain the finding that A. A. Oglesby and his successors were in adverse possession of lot 56 $\frac{1}{2}$ for more than five years prior to the commencement of this action, such adverse possession conclusively establishes a previous ouster the precise date whereof is immaterial. It is said by respondent that the record of the tax deed gave constructive notice to W. W. Hollister of its contents and of the fact that A. A. Oglesby was claiming title thereunder to the undivided half of the block No. 56 $\frac{1}{2}$, which had belonged to D. H. Russell. But the tax deed was void on its face, and did not affect the title. Civil Code, § 1158. Its registration gave no notice to any person. Sawyer v. Adams, 8 Vt. 172; Mesick v. Sunderland, 6 Cal. 315. Nevertheless, the attempted assessment under which the sale for taxes was made was an attempted assessment of D. H. Russell's undivided one-half interest in block 56 $\frac{1}{2}$. No duty was imposed upon A. A. Oglesby to pay the taxes on that half. We may assume that a tax deed, void on its face, constitutes no color of title in such sense that it extends an actual possession of part of the land described in it to the limits of such description. Here A. A. Oglesby had and continued in the actual possession of the whole of block 56 $\frac{1}{2}$; whether for himself alone, or for himself and D. H. Russell, is a different question. His attempted purchase of his co-tenant's title, and the taking of a deed purporting to convey the same were acts indicating his purpose to claim the whole title adversely to his co-tenant. Pillow v. Roberts, 13 How. 472, 477. One tenant in common can disseize another. But, prima facie, the possession of one is also that of the other. An ouster or disseizin is not to be presumed from the mere fact of sole possession; but it may be proved by such possession, accompanied by a notorious claim of exclusive right. Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 121. The difference between that and other cases is that acts which, if done by a stranger, would per se be a disseizin, are, in cases of tenancies in common, susceptible of explanation consistently with the real title. Acts of ownership are not, in tenancies in common, necessarily acts of disseizin. It depends upon the intent with which they are done, and their notoriety. Prescott v. Nevers, 4 Mason, 326. Where a possession commences with the consent of the owner,—which is the presumption when one tenant in common is in sole possession,—there can be no disseizin or adverse possession until there has been a disclaimer by the assertion of an adverse title, and notice thereof to the owner, either direct or to be inferred from notorious acts. Wood, Lim. 507. Nevertheless, the real question, was there an ouster and consequent disseizin of the co-tenant? depends upon the circumstances of each case. It is a question of fact to be submitted to the jury wherever there is any substantial evidence of an ouster. Id. 507, 509, 510. It has very frequently been held that the exclusive possession by one tenant in common for a great number of years, without any accounting to or recognition of right in his fellow-commoner, or any evidence explaining why the co-tenant neglected to assert his right, is evidence from which the jury may infer actual ouster and adverse possession. Lefavour v. Homan, 3 Allen, 355; Freem. Co-tenancy, § 442, and cases there cited. It may be conceded, however, for the purposes of this decision, that in this state the fact of exclusive possession or pernaney of the profits by one tenant, however long continued, and although there has been no assertion of right by the co-tenant, and there is no explanation of his silence, is not of itself sufficient proof of ouster or disseizin. Miller v. Myles, 46 Cal. 535. Yet the fact is not immaterial, and if possession has been accompanied by acts indicating an adverse claim of title of so notorious a character as to satisfy a jury that a person, ordinarily attentive to his interests, in the position of the co-tenant, would have notice of the adverse claim, a finding of adverse possession will be sustained. While the exclusive and uninterrupted possession and reception of the profits for a long period may not be sufficient evidence of adverse holding, it is some evidence, because it accords with ordinary experience that men do not sleep on their rights, and property-owners usually manifest some regard for their property rights. Nor should the circumstance that neither D. H. Russell nor his grantor or successor ever paid or offered to pay the purchase money for one-half of the blocks be entirely ignored in considering the question of adverse possession. There enters into the notion of a title acquired by adverse possession the element of acquiescence or abandonment of his title by the party who fails to assert it for the statutory period. The jury may have believed that D. H. Russell and his successors intended to abandon a legal right to possession which, upon every equitable consideration, ought not to have been insisted upon; that they did not intend to assert a title to one-half of the land after a failure to pay Oglesby for it within the time limited by the agreement between him and W. F. Russell. The intent of A. A. Oglesby and his successors to claim adversely being shown, would not less evidence suffice to establish notice of such adverse intent to persons in the position of defendants and their predecessors than is necessary in ordinary cases of tenancies in common? Even if W. F. Russell obligated himself to pay to Oglesby one-half the purchase price, it was never paid; Oglesby did not attempt to enforce its payment by legal process. Under such circumstances Russell and his successors would naturally have regarded acts of ownership by Oglesby, otherwise susceptible of explanation as in accord with the relation of tenants in common, as evidence that Oglesby intended to claim the whole title against the tenant in common who had paid nothing. At the trial below there was evidence that A. A. Oglesby was, as found by the court, "in the open, notorious, peaceable, quiet, and exclusive possession of the whole of block 56½." There was evidence that in the year 1874 or 1875 he fenced each of the blocks separately; that from 1882 the block 56½ was exclusively in the occupation of said Oglesby and his tenants up to his death, he receiving the whole of the rents, accounting to no person for any part thereof, and not being called on to account therefor; evidence that he had repeatedly entertained propositions for the purchase of the whole of the land, and attempted to sell the whole, as owner of the whole; evidence that the blocks were generally known as "Oglesby's blocks," and that, since his attempted purchase of the co-tenants' interest at the tax sale, he and his successors have paid all taxes and public charges assessed against block 56½. Taking the evidence as a whole, we cannot say that the court below was not justified in deciding that the acts and conduct of Oglesby and his successors with respect to the property were of so open and notorious a character as that their co-tenants should be held to have had notice that he and his successors were in possession claiming the entire title. But W. F. Russell did not absolutely obligate himself to pay one-half of the purchase money. In a certain event he had the privilege to do so within a definite period, and, from the nature of the transaction, time was of the essence of the contract. Russell risked nothing by the arrangement. If the price of the blocks went up, and he and Oglesby agreed upon sales during the first year, he would get one-half of the excess beyond the price paid by Oglesby, or, if he did not agree, he could at his option secure the equitable title by paying one-half of such price. The written contract contains a declaration of an express trust on his part. He received the legal title to one-half in trust that he would convey in case of sales by mutual assent, as therein provided for, or that, within a year "afterwards," he would, at his option, take the beneficial interest himself on paying to Oglesby one-half of the purchase price advanced by him. Civil Code, § 857. As the legal title was already in him, there would be no transfer of it in case he paid the money; but, upon such payment, he would become vested with the entire ownership, legal and equitable. As the lands were not sold to third persons, and Russell did not purchase himself, the purposes of the trust failed. At the most there remained in Russell and his successors the bare legal title to an undivided one-half of block 56½, Oglesby, who was entitled to the entire beneficial use of the property, being in possession. This right, which would constitute a defense to an action of ejectment by defendants, and the possession under it, the successors of the latter had the right to have quieted in the present action. Even if it could be held that time was not of the essence of the contract of 1873, the result would be the same, since the money which W. F. Russell had the option to pay was not paid when this action was commenced—14 years after the contract was made. After this great lapse of time defendants could not secure the equitable rights of plaintiffs by paying the money. And they do not offer to pay it. Judgment and order affirmed.

LATHAM v. BLAKE et al. (No. 9,912.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 14, 1888.)

EXECUTION—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO—JUDGMENTS.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 542, subd. 5, providing that debts and property incapable of manual delivery may be attached, by leaving with the person owing the debt a copy of the writ, and a notice that the property is attached; and section 688, providing that such property may be taken on execution the same as upon writs of attachment,—a judgment, being the mere evidence of debt, and not the debt itself, cannot be levied on as such, and sold under execution.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. M. ALLEN, Judge.

Action on a note by William B. Latham, Jr., against P. H. Blake and others. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. Subsequently one Page recovered a judgment against the plaintiff, Latham, and levied upon and sold the latter's judgment against Blake. The purchaser at such sale was one George W. Osborn. After Osborn had made his purchase, the court directed a sale to issue in favor of Thomas B. Rowe, assignee of the plaintiff, Latham, to satisfy the judgment of Latham against Blake and others. From the court's order of sale, Osborn, the purchaser of the judgment, appeals.

W. H. Fifield, for appellant. Lewis & Dibble and Hanes & Mitchell, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. This is an appeal from an order of the court below, directing an order of sale to issue, in favor of Thomas B. Rowe, assignee of plaintiff, upon a decree rendered in said court on December 31, 1879, in favor of William B. Latham, Jr., plaintiff, against P. H. Blake et al., defendants. The decree was for the payment of a large sum of money, which was adjudged to be due from Blake to Latham, and which was declared to be a lien upon certain premises described in said decree. It was further decreed therein that the premises be sold to satisfy said indebtedness, and that the defendants be barred and foreclosed of all right, estate, and interest in the premises. After the rendition of said decree, to-wit, on May 6, 1881, one E. A. S. Page recovered, in another department of said court, a judgment for money against the said William B. Latham, Jr. An execution was issued upon said last-mentioned judgment, which was afterwards returned partly satisfied. An alias execution was issued March 8, 1882, for the unpaid balance on said judgment. This alias execution was, on March 9, 1882, levied upon the before-mentioned judgment and decree in favor of Latham against Blake and others, by delivering to and leaving with the said Blake personally a copy of the writ, together with a notice in writing "that all moneys, goods, credits, effects, debts due or owing, or any other personal property in possession or under control of" said Blake, belonging to the defendants in the writ, or either of them, were attached, and not to pay over or to transfer the same to any one but the sheriff. Pursuant to notice duly given, the said judgment and decree was sold at public auction on March 15, 1882, to George W. Osborn, for the sum of $603.05, and the execution in the case of Page against Latham was returned satisfied. A certificate of sale was issued to Osborn, March 16, 1882. On May 25, 1882, on motion of said Osborn's attorney, an order was granted by the judge of the department in which the said judgment and decree in favor of Latham against Blake and others was recovered, reciting that it appeared to the court that the said Osborn had "succeeded to the ownership of the judgment" in the cause, and directing that an order of sale be issued by the clerk for the use of said Osborn. An order of sale was thereupon issued May 26, 1882, directing a sale of the premises described in said decree to satisfy the adjudged indebtedness. The premises were sold, under said order, June 22, 1882, and were purchased in parcels by the said Osborn for the aggregate sum of $1,630. The sheriff issued a certificate of sale to the purchaser in due form; and afterwards, on December 28, 1882, a sheriff's deed was executed, which was recorded September 14, 1883. Latham executed an assignment, in due form, of the judgment and decree against Blake, to Thomas B. Rowe, on October 13, 1884. On November 11, 1884, Rowe filed in the superior court a petition entitled in the action of Latham v. Blake, setting forth in brief the facts as to the levy and sale of the judgment therein under the execution in Page v. Latham, alleging that the order of sale was issued without "authority from this plaintiff or any one authorized by him;" that he was the absolute owner of the judgment; that the order of sale was recited therein to have been made for the benefit of Osborn, and at his instance; and that the said Latham on October 13, 1884, "assigned and transferred all his right, title, and interest in and to the said decree to the petitioner, who was averred to be the lawful owner thereof;" and praying that the proceedings taken by said Osborn under said decree be vacated and set aside, and that an order of sale issue in favor of the petitioner. Notice was served upon Osborn that a motion would be made for the issuance of such order of sale to Rowe, and to set aside the sale and return made upon Osborn's application, upon the ground that such prior order was unauthorized by the judgment creditor or his assignee, or any person interested in the decree, and was issued and executed against the objection of the judgment creditor, and that Osborn had no interest in the decree. No notice was served on Blake, or any other of the defendants in Latham v. Blake, nor did any of them appear in the proceedings. The application was heard on the records, minutes, and papers in Latham v. Blake and Page v. Latham, showing the above-recited facts, and upon certain affidavits of Osborn and Latham. Osborn's first affidavit set forth his purchase of the judgment in Latham v.

Blake under execution in Page v. Latham, and alleged that the price paid was a fair price therefor, on account of certain alleged supposed defects; that, at the sale under the order of sale issued upon said judgment and decree, Latham was present, and asserted his right to the same; that the affiant was compelled to buy in the property; that he had received his certificate of sale and deed with the knowledge of Latham, who had never offered to repay to the affiant any part of the sum paid by him for said judgment and decree, and that under his deed the affiant entered into possession and made certain improvements with Latham's knowledge, and had ever since remained in possession, and paid the taxes on the land. Latham, in his affidavit, averred, "on information and belief," that in purchasing said judgment and decree, and in his subsequent proceedings, Osborn was acting at the instigation and for the benefit of Blake, and was using his money, and that the price paid for the judgment and decree was not a fair price, but that the same was fully worth $5,000. In a second affidavit, Osborn denied that he was acting, in these transactions, at the instigation or for the benefit of Blake, or with his money, but averred that he was acting for himself, and was using his own money. Upon the hearing of Rowe's application, the court simply made an order that "an order of sale issue herein in favor of Thomas B. Rowe," saying nothing of the previous order of sale, and sale thereunder. It is from this order that the present appeal was taken.

The important question involved in the appeal is this: Did the sale of the judgment and decree against Blake to Osborn, under the execution against Latham, the judgment creditor, operate as an assignment so as to vest in Osborn such right or title to the judgment as to entitle him to enforce it? If not, the order of the court below should be affirmed; for, although the order under which the execution issued in favor of Osborn recited that he "had succeeded to the ownership of the judgment" in Latham v. Blake, it is apparent from the record that he only became such owner by virtue of his purchase thereof on an execution sale against Latham. He counted upon his ownership of the judgment, thus acquired, in opposing the motion and order from which he appeals. We need not pause to give expression to such views as we might entertain were the question an open one. The former decisions of this court have eliminated from it so many of the considerations which address themselves to the mind that the whole subject is embraced within very narrow limits. In McBride v. Fallon, 65 Cal. 301, 4 Pac. Rep. 17, it was held, in substance, (1) that a judgment is but the evidence of a debt; (2) that it is the debt itself, and not the judgment, which may be taken under a writ of attachment or upon execution; (3) that a judgment cannot be levied upon as such, and sold under execution. The decision does not expressly declare that the debt, of which the judgment is the evidence, may not be reached by execution, but plainly indicates that, if it can be so reached, it is only by the modes provided for reaching debts and credits, and other property not capable of manual delivery, which may be attached on execution in like manner as upon writs of attachment. Code Civil Proc. § 688. This character of property can only be attached as provided by subdivision 5, § 542, Code Civil Proc.; that is, by leaving with the person owing such debts, etc., a copy of the writ, and a notice that the debts owing by him to the defendant are attached in pursuance of such writ.

The court further holds that, the Code having thus provided a mode of procedure in such cases, it is exclusive. We suppose this last conclusion is based upon the theory that as the statute gives a right unknown to the common law, and prescribes the method for its enforcement, no other can be followed. In the later case of Dore v. Dougherty, 72 Cal. 232, 13 Pac. Rep. 621, in which the levy upon the judgment was made precisely as in the present case, and the judgment was sold there as here, the court held that the judgment was not, under the statute, subject to levy and sale. We need not repeat the reasoning of the court in this last case. As we understand them, the two cases cited cover and are conclusive of the subject of the contention in the case at bar. Whatever right Osborn obtained by virtue of his garnishment of the debt due from Blake to Latham, he may perhaps enforce by the appropriate method. To sell the judgment was not the method under our statute, as interpreted by this court. The order appealed from is affirmed.

BLAIR et al. v. LUNING. (No. 11,154.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 14, 1888.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—VALIDITY OF ASSESSMENT.

Under act Cal. April 1, 1872, § 9, providing that after a contractor has fulfilled his contract the street superintendent shall make an assessment to cover the amount due on work performed, an assessment by a street superintendent, which was partly for work done and partly for work on a sidewalk which had never been performed is not void, as in excess of the superintendent's power.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. M. CLOUGH, Judge.

Action by M. Blair and William W. Chase, partners, against Nicholas Luning to foreclose an alleged lien for street work performed. Defendant claimed that the assessment for the work, by reason of act Cal. April 1, 1872, § 9, providing that after a contractor has fulfilled his contract the street superintendent shall make an assessment to cover the amount due on work performed, was void, in that it included in its terms work upon a sidewalk which had never been performed. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

Langhorne & Miller, for appellant. Chas. H. Parker, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to foreclose a lien for certain street work in the city and county of San Francisco, viz.: "Reconstructing the sidewalks on Hyde street, from Broadway to Pacific street, and for planking the roadway thereof." Judgment went for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

The only point made by appellant is that the assessment was absolutely void because no work was done on the sidewalks. It appears from the findings that the specifications in the sealed proposals required certain work to be done on the sidewalks "where not already constructed;" but it turned out that all the sidewalks had already been constructed, and therefore no work was done on them. The authorities cited by appellant are mostly cases where the board of supervisors or street superintendent failed to give the notices, or to comply with other conditions precedent, which were necessary to confer the power to make contracts and assessments for street work. In these and some other cases cited the objections went to the jurisdiction, and the assessments were held to be void. But in the case at bar the thing complained of (if, indeed, it furnished any just cause of complaint at all) was a mere error, and the remedy was an appeal to the board of supervisors under section 12 of the act of April 1, 1872, (St. 1871-72, p. 815.) The assessment was not void for want of jurisdiction. Himmelmänn v. Hoadley, 44 Cal. 276, and cases there cited; Hewes v. Reis, 40 Cal. 264; Boyle v. Hitchcock, 66 Cal. 129, 4 Pac. Rep. 1143. THOMPSON et al. v. WILLIAMS et al. (No. 9,980.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 15, 1888.)

CORPORATIONS—SPECIAL MEETINGS OF DIRECTORS—NOTICE.

Civil Code Cal. § 320, relating to corporations, provides that "when no provision is made in the by-laws for regular meetings of the directors, and the mode of calling special meetings, all meetings must be called by special notice in writing, to be given to each director by the secretary, on the order of the president, or, if there be none, on the order of two directors." The by-laws of a corporation contained a provision for regular meetings, and at such a meeting, certain directors being absent, the board adjourned until the next day without fixing an hour, nor was notice of the adjourned meeting given the absent directors. Held, that the adjourned meeting was a special meeting, and that its action in levying an assessment was null for want of notice to all the directors.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

Action by I. H. Thompson, G. G. Allen, Sarah Giles, E. B. Pond, and Fanny Hutchinson, against Frank Williams, Frank P. Stevens, A. G. Bell, and People's Ice Company, to restrain defendants from selling plaintiffs' shares in said corporation, under a levy of assessment alleged to be illegal. The People's Ice Company is a California corporation, and the plaintiff Allen, together with one J. S. Thompson, and defendants Williams, Stevens, and Bell, constituted its board of directors. Its by-laws provided, among other things, that regular meetings of the directors (of whom there were five) should be held on the second Monday of October each year, without notice; that on and for a long time previous to the second Monday (8th) of October, 1883, the office of the company was at No. 414 O'Farrell street, in San Francisco. On October 8, 1883, three of the directors (the defendants) met at the office of the company and resolved the removal of the company's office from 414 O'Farrell street to 314 Mission street, in said city, and adjourned the meeting to October 9, 1883, at that place. They then met at that place, and levied the assessment in question. The injunction was issued as prayed for, from which the defendants appeal. Civil Code Cal. § 320, relating to corporations, provides that "when no provision is made in the by-laws for regular meetings of the directors and the mode of calling special meetings, all meetings must be called by special notice in writing, to be given to each director by the secretary, on the order of the president, or, if there be none, on the order of two directors."

Estee & Wilson, for appellants. Cowdery & McCutchen, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. Each director must have special notice of the regular meetings of the board of directors of the corporation defendant, unless provision is made in the by-laws for such meetings. Civil Code, § 320. Conceding that the provision in the by-laws was sufficient to give notice to the director of the regular meeting of the 8th of October at 414 O'Farrell street, and that the removal of the office, resolved at that meeting, to 314 Mission street, was valid, still, as it does not appear that the hour of the day on the 9th of October on which the adjourned meeting was to be held on the last-named day was fixed at the meeting of the 8th, and no notice of such adjourned meeting was given the directors Allen and Thompson, who were not at the meeting on the 8th, we must hold the assessment levied at the meeting on the 9th was levied substantially without notice, and without authority. To hold that the adjourned meeting of the 9th, the hour of which was not fixed or declared by the meeting of the 8th of October, was a part of the meeting of the board of the 8th, and therefore no further notice of it was required, would be to sanction an evasion of the law in regard to notice to the directors of the meeting of the board. An inspection of the minutes of the meeting of the 8th would give no information to the directors not attending that meeting of the time to which that meeting had been adjourned. In fact, it does not appear that the board as a board ever did fix the hour on the 9th at which the adjourned meeting was to be held; and, as it does not so appear, we must, in construing the facts as found, hold that the board, on the 8th, did not fix the hour at all. Under these circumstances we cannot hold that the meeting on the 9th, at which the assessment was levied, was anything more than a special meeting, of the calling of which the non-attending directors, Allen and Thompson, had no notice or knowledge of any kind. The assessment was therefore levied without authority and was a nullity. See Manufacturing Co. v. Vassault, 50 Cal. 534. The judgment must be affirmed. So ordered.

MILLER v. CALIFORNIA INS. CO. (No. 11,280.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 15, 1888.)

1. MARINE INSURANCE—PERILS OF THE SEA—EXPLOSION OF BOILER.

Where a vessel becomes unmanageable by reason of the explosion of her boiler, and within a few minutes thereafter sinks, such loss is not within the meaning of "perils of the sea" as defined in Civil Code Cal. § 2199, which declares that "perils of the sea are from storms and waves; rocks, shoals, and rapids; other obstacles, though of human origin; changes of climate; the confinement necessary at sea; animals peculiar to the sea; and all other dangers peculiar to the sea;" nor as understood in the law of marine insurance generally.

2. SAME—ACTIONS ON POLICIES—PLEADING—COMPLAINT.

In an action on a marine insurance policy, which covered "all other losses," not excluded by the policy to which insurers are liable by the rules and customs of insurance in San Francisco, the complaint failed to allege that by such custom of San Francisco insurers were liable for losses caused as was the loss sued for. Held, that the plaintiff cannot, on that clause in the policy, recover.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

Action on a policy of insurance, brought by M. J. Miller against the California Insurance Company, for the loss of the steamer Pilot. A general demurrer was entered and sustained, and judgment rendered for defendant, from which plaintiff appealed.

A. E. Bolton and Barham, Halstead & Bolton, for appellant. E. W. McGraw, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. 1. This is an action brought on a policy of marine insurance issued by the respondent on the steamer Pilot. The risks insured against were as follows: "Touching the adventures and perils which this insurance company is content to bear and take upon itself in this policy, they are of seas, fires, pirates, assailing thieves, jettison, barratry of the master or mariners, (unless the assured be owner or part owner of the vessel,) embezzlement and illicit trade excepted in all cases, and all other losses and misfortunes that shall come to the hurt, damage, or detriment of the said vessel, or any part thereof, to which insurers are liable by the rules and customs of insurance in San Francisco, excepting such losses and misfortunes as are excluded by this policy. * * * It is also agreed that in case of insurance on a steamer this company is not liable for any injury, derangement, or breakage of the machinery or bursting of the boilers unless occasioned by stranding." The complaint alleges that on May 25, 1883, "the boiler on said vessel exploded, and said vessel became then and there unmanageable, and swung around on the water, and within a few minutes thereafter sank and became a total wreck, and was wholly and totally lost to the owner thereof, and was abandoned by the owner to defendant. There is no allegation in the complaint that under the customs of insurance in San Francisco insurers are liable for explosions of boilers, or damages resulting therefrom. A demurrer to the complaint was filed on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained, and, plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was entered for defendant.

Passing over the question as to the sufficiency of the allegation in the complaint to show that the destruction of the vessel was caused by the bursting of the boiler, or by any other means admitted to be such as would make the company liable, and conceding that the complaint shows the loss to have occurring by reason of the bursting of the boiler without any fault of the plaintiff, these inquiries remain: First, is the explosion of the boiler a peril of the sea within the first clause above quoted? and, second, if it be a peril of the sea, are not the damages resulting therefrom excepted under the special provision of the policy which is quoted above, and which relates to the bursting of the boilers? Perils of the sea are defined by our Civil Code to be "storms and waves; rocks, shoals, and rapids; other obstacles, though of human origin; changes of climate; the confinement necessary at sea; animals peculiar to the sea; and all other dangers peculiar to the sea." Civil Code, § 2199. The bursting of a boiler is not within any of the first six causes named. Is it a danger peculiar to the sea? Perils of the sea have been defined to be "all perils, losses, and misfortunes of a marine character, or of a character incident to a ship as such." T. & M. I. Co. v. H. F. & Co., House of Lords, July 14, 1887. In that case it was said: "The damage to the donkey-engine was not through its being in a ship at sea. The same thing would have happened had the boiler and engines been on land, if the same mismanagement had taken place. The sea, waves, and wind had nothing to do with it. * * * It is, I think, impossible to say that this is damage occasioned by a cause similar to perils of the sea on any interpretation which has ever been applied to that term. It will be observed that Lord ELLENBOROUGH limits the operation of the clause to marine damage. By this I do not understand him to mean only damage which has been caused by the sea, but damage of a character to which a marine adventure is subject. Such an adventure has its own perils, to which either it is exclusively subject, or which possess, in relation to it, a special or peculiar character. To secure an indemnity against these is the purpose and object of a policy of marine insurance. * * * But the explosion of the boiler on board the Panama had no marine character at all. It might have happened in precisely the same way, and done the same kind of damage, if a similar engine had been in use for the purpose of moving manufacturing machinery on shore." These views seem to express very clearly the proper meaning of the seventh clause of section 2199, supra. In support of the contention that an explosion of the boiler is a peril embraced within the list of perils insured against by this policy, appellant cites Administrators of Perrin v. Insurance Co., 11 Ohio, 169, and Insurance Co. v. Glasgow, 9 Mo. 413. In the Ohio case the risks insured against were described in the policy as follows: "Of the seas, rivers, fires, enemies, pirates of the rivers, assailing thieves, and all other losses and misfortunes which shall come to the damage of said steam-boat according to the true intent and meaning of said policy." It was there held that the loss occasioned by the bursting of a boiler was a loss within the policy, but we do not understand the court to have held in that case that such a loss was a loss by peril of the seas. In Telegraph Co. v. Insurance Co., 6 Q. B. Div. 57, the Ohio case was quoted approvingly, yet it was there held that the bursting of a boiler was a peril not within the general term "perils of the sea." In Insurance Co. v. Glasgow, supra, it seems that the policy was the same as in the Ohio case. In all the cases cited it was held simply that the loss was one which came within the insurance clause providing against "all other perils, losses," etc. In the case before us the general clause is, "and all other losses and misfortunes that shall come to the hurt, damage, or detriment of the said vessel, or any part thereof, to which insurers are liable by the rules and customs of insurance in San Francisco, excepting such losses and misfortunes as are excluded by this policy." Our conclusion is that the loss complained of herein is not within either the meaning of the term "perils of the sea" as defined in our Civil Code, or as understood in the law of marine insurance generally; and, of course, if the loss be one which falls under the general clause of the policy, it is sufficient to say that there is no allegation that by the customs of insurance in San Francisco insurers are liable for explosions of boilers, or damages resulting therefrom.

2. The construction we place upon the clause of the policy above quoted renders it unnecessary to consider whether the damages are not in any event excepted under that provision of the policy relating to the bursting of boilers. It is proper to say, however, that a clause precisely the same in language was considered by the court of appeals in Strong v. Insurance Co., 31 N. Y. 103. It was there held that the language is to be understood to mean that the company is not to be liable for damage resulting to the vessel or otherwise on account of the bursting of the boilers, unless occasioned by stranding. Judgment affirmed.

STEWART et al. v. ROBINSON. (No. 11,061.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 16, 1888.)

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—ACTION FOR FEES—EVIDENCE.

In an action for attorney's fees, which defendant had agreed to pay provided plaintiff procured from the secretary of the interior a rehearing in a land case, telegrams and a letter from the secretary to the plaintiff, stating that such rehearing would be granted on a certain day, are admissible to prove that the hearing was granted.

2. SAME—ACTION FOR FEES—PRACTICE IN INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

In such case, plaintiff adduced in evidence, to prove that a rehearing was granted, telegrams and letters from the secretary of the interior to plaintiff, appointing a day for the rehearing, and announcing the final decision in the case. Held, plaintiff was properly allowed to show that the proceedings of the department were all conducted by communications.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

Action by William M. Stewart and William F. Herrin, law partners, against Alfred Robinson, for attorney's fees. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

Wm. Matthews, for appellant. Wm. F. Herrin, for respondents.

SHARPSTEIN, J. The parties entered into an agreement in writing, in which, among other things, it was stipulated that the plaintiffs should make a proper application to the secretary of the interior to obtain a rehearing of a matter which had been heard and decided adversely to the interest of the defendant by said secretary, and that, in the event of such rehearing being granted, the defendant should pay to plaintiffs $1,500. The plaintiffs brought this action to recover said sum, for which a judgment was entered in their favor against the defendant, who appeals therefrom, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The record states that "it was admitted by the defendant that the plaintiffs had used their best efforts, and with legal skill, to obtain the rehearing mentioned in the said contract; that proper application was made by the plaintiffs, accompanied with a brief presenting all that could be presented to obtain a rehearing from the secretary of the interior; and, if said rehearing was in fact granted by the secretary of the interior, they were entitled to recover; and it was admitted by plaintiff that, unless such rehearing was granted by said secretary, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover." The evidence admitted to prove that a rehearing was granted, was objected to, and it is upon the exceptions of the defendant to rulings of the court upon said objections that we now have to pass. To prove that a rehearing was granted, the plaintiffs introduced in evidence two telegrams and a letter from the secretary, notifying the plaintiff Stewart that oral argument would be heard in the case on certain stated days. Stewart further testified that on the 21st or 22d of October, 1883, he made an oral argument in the case before the secretary, after which he addressed the following communication to the commissioner of the general land-office:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

"WASHINGTON, Dec. 13, 1883.

"The Commissioner of the General Land-Office—SIR: I have considered a motion for review of the decision rendered by me on the 14th day of April, 1883, in the matter of the survey of the Rancho Santiago de Santa Ana. Upon the hearing of the motion in October last, the whole case was fully presented and submitted upon oral and written arguments. I have attentively considered such arguments, and have examined with care my decision of April last, and am of the opinion that I should adhere to such decision. If I am in error, the parties claiming the disputed territory are not without remedy in the court. The matter of the survey has been pending many years, and the rights of a large number of persons, settlers upon the lands, are involved in the contest. I therefore desire you to proceed with the matter, under my former decision, as speedily as possible. The papers submitted upon the motion for review are herewith transmitted.

"Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary."

The record states that the communication was read in evidence without objection, and it seems to show that a rehearing had been granted, and that the first decision was adhered to. There was evidence tending to prove that the proceedings of the land department, from the secretary of the interior down to the register and receiver, are all conducted by communications, and that all the communications relating to the rehearing of this matter were introduced in evidence on the trial of the case. We think that evidence to prove the practice of the department was properly admitted, and that the evidence admitted justified the finding that a rehearing was granted. Judgment and order affirmed.

FANNING v. BOHME et al. (No. 9,864.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 15, 1888.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ACTION FOR STREET ASSESSMENTS—EVIDENCE.

In an action to foreclose a street assessment where the warrant, assessment, etc., have been introduced in evidence under St. Cal. 1871-72, p. 815, § 12, providing that the same shall be prima facie evidence of the regularity and correctness of the assessment and all prior proceedings, it appeared that a certain street had been graded about 20 years before; and that the difference between the official grade and the existing grade nowhere exceeded 1½ feet. Held, that this was not sufficient to overcome the presumption under Code Civil Proc. § 1963, subd. 15, that official duty has been regularly performed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

J. M. Wood, (J. C. Bates, of counsel,) for appellant. Frank & Eyre, (Milton S. Eisner and Mark J. Platshak, of counsel,) for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. This is an action to foreclose a street assessment for grading Vallejo street, from Montgomery to Kearny street, in the city and county of San Francisco. Under the provisions of an act of the legislature approved April 1, 1872, (St. 1871-72, p. 806,) it is provided that "where any public street shall have been graded, or graded and macadamized, or graded and paved, for the distance of two or more blocks on each side of any one or more blocks or crossings of a street which is not improved," then and in such cases the board of supervisors were authorized, upon the recommendation of the superintendent of public streets, to order such unimproved block to be graded. Under these circumstances the board ordered the block in question graded, without a petition therefor, as is required where the adjacent blocks are not graded. The main question at the trial turned upon the fact as to whether that portion of Vallejo street between Sansome and Battery, one of the two blocks next east of the block in question, had or had not been graded before the date of the recommendation of said superintendent. The court below found in favor of plaintiff upon all the facts essential to a recovery, except upon this one, as to which the finding was, that the block of Vallejo street between Sansome and Battery, had not been graded. This finding is assailed by appellant, as being unwarranted by the evidence.

At the trial plaintiff introduced in evidence the assessment, diagram, warrant, and affidavit of demand, with proof of recordation of such documents, being in form and substance sufficient, prima facie, as is admitted, to entitle plaintiff to recover. Section 12, St. 1871-72, p. 815, (street law of San Francisco,) prescribes the rule of evidence as follows: "The said warrant, assessment, and diagram shall be held prima facie evidence of the regularity and correctness of the assessments, and of the prior proceedings and acts of the said superintendent of public streets, highways, and squares, and of the regularity of all the acts and proceedings of the board of supervisors upon which said warrant, assessment, and diagram are based." It must be conceded that, if the evidence adduced by defendant was sufficient to overcome the prima facie case founded upon the performance of the acts specified by statute, then the board of supervisors had no jurisdiction to order the work done. That portion of Vallejo street involving the block in question, and being between Sansome and Battery streets, runs along the base of Telegraph Hill, and the original surface was about 60 feet above the grade of the street at Sansome, and about 14 feet above at Battery street. The official grade of this portion of the street, prior to 1868, was 30 feet above base at Sansome and 10 feet above at Battery street. In the last-named year the official grade was reduced to 28 feet above base at Sansome. The evidence on the part of defendant tended to show that in 1865, 1866, or 1867 the property owners on the block in question graded it by excavating and removing the hill so as to make the street passable for teams, and apparently supposed they had brought the street to the official grade. There cannot be said to be any substantial conflict in the testimony. It shows that the block of Vallejo street between Battery and Sansome varies in places from the official grade; that it is generally upon or very near such grade, but that, at one point, it is one foot nine inches above grade, at sundry points a few inches above, and at one or two points a trifle below, grade. The highest point above grade, judging from its position on the diagram presented, must be under or at the edge of the sidewalk, if such there be. When we take into account that this street was graded some 20 years since; that, so far as appears, it has never been paved; that at the date of the trial it had been in use as a public street more than 15 years; that the rock cutting was in some places hard, and at others soft; that it had been worn out in places and filled in by the deposit of material for that purpose, and that most of the inequalities may be accounted for from this cause, coupled with the fact that it is so nearly accurate,—we are of opinion the street was substantially graded, and that the court below should have so found. A moment's reflection must teach us two things: First, that, were it so graded, the use in a great city for a number of years, without being paved, must inevitably produce inequalities of surface. This result is as certain as the laws of nature, of which it is a sequence. There is a presumption "that official duty has been regularly performed." Code Civil Proc. § 1963, subd. 15. The proper officers, in the discharge of their official duty, decided that this portion of Vallejo street had been graded. This presumption is open to rebuttal; but when the witnesses who were expressly employed to find departures from the official grade find no wider departure than that described in the evidence, we are of opinion the presumption should still remain, and that the finding of fact should have been that Vallejo street, for the block from Sansome to Battery street, had been graded prior to October 16, 1876.

We entertain some doubt as to the correctness of the ruling of the court below in excluding the testimony of the witness Fanning. His opinion as an expert was not admissible, but it may well be that he possessed knowledge of facts which were proper, and within the purview of the questions propounded. If so, he should have been heard. We should not reverse the judgment for this cause alone, for the reason that counsel for defendant should have so narrowed his question as to eliminate from it the idea that he was calling for the mere opinion of the witness. Upon the whole record we think the order appealed from should be reversed, and a new trial had. Ordered accordingly.

ORO M. & M. CO. v. STARR. (No. 11,099.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 16, 1888.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—WHO MAY ATTACK—PURCHASERS.

Plaintiff purchased personal property, paid for it, but left it with the vendors who afterwards, being insolvent, assigned all their "assets and property" to defendant, one of their creditors, in consideration of his canceling his claim and assuming their other liabilities, and defendant took possession, the schedule accompanying his bill of sale not mentioning the property in question. Held, under Civil Code Cal. § 3440, providing that "every transfer of personal property is conclusively presumed, * * * if not accompanied by an immediate delivery, * * * to be fraudulent and void" against purchasers, that, as defendant was not a purchaser, the sale was valid as to him.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. LAWLER, Judge.

Action by the Oro Mining & Milling Company against L. M. Starr. Section 3440 of the Civil Code, referred to in the opinion, is as follows: "Every transfer of personal property, other than a thing in action, or a ship or cargo at sea or in a foreign port, and every lien thereon other than a mortgage, when allowed by law, and a contract of bottomry or respondentia, is conclusively presumed, if made by a person having at the time the possession or control of the property, and not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the things transferred, to be fraudulent, and therefore void, against those who are his creditors while he remains in possession, and the successors in interest of such creditors, and against any persons on whom his estate devolves in trust for the benefit of others than himself, and against purchasers or incumbrancers in good faith subsequent to the transfer."

E. W. McGraw, for appellant. T. Z. Blakeman and R. B. Saffold, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This action is for the value of certain personal property. Judgment went for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. The material facts are substantially these: The plaintiff, a mining corporation, contracted, in 1881, with Pendergast, Smith & Co., who owned and conducted the Ætna Iron Works, in San Francisco, for the construction by the latter for the former of a five-stamp battery, complete. When the work was done, plaintiff was not ready to use the battery, and it was agreed that plaintiff should pay for the property, and that Pendergast, Smith & Co. should keep it on storage for plaintiff until the latter should call for it. Thereupon plaintiff paid the full price, which had been agreed upon for the battery, and left it in possession of Pendergast, Smith & Co. Plaintiff also furnished some lumber which was used in covering some part of the property. Afterwards, in 1882, Pendergast, Smith & Co. incorporated under the corporate name of the Ætna Iron Works Company, and continued the business, the battery remaining on storage as before. In 1883 this company became financially embarrassed. Its principal creditor was the defendant, L. M. Starr; and, in consideration that he would cancel the indebtedness to him, and would settle with the other creditors, the said Ætna Iron Works Company, on June 12, 1883, by a written instrument, sold, assigned, and transferred all its property to said defendant, Starr, who immediately went into possession. The instrument or bill of sale described the property as follows: "All assets, credits, book-accounts, books, papers, property, and leasehold interest of said corporation." There was also a schedule of the property sold which did not mention the said five-stamp battery, or any part of it. The battery remained on the premises, and went into the possession of defendant, Starr. In the early part of 1884 the plaintiff, desiring to use the battery, demanded it of the defendant Starr, who refused to deliver it, saying that he had bought and claimed everything about the Ætna Iron Works. The court found the value of the property to be $1,050. The points made by appellant that various findings of fact are not justified by the evidence cannot be maintained. There was considerable evidence to justify each finding.

The main point made by appellant is that, as against him, the sale by Pendergast, Smith & Co. to plaintiff was void, under section 3440, Civil Code, because it was not accompanied by an immediate delivery of the property, or followed by actual and continued change of possession. It is clear, however, that appellant cannot invoke this rule as a creditor. He can do so only as a purchaser under his bill of sale. But he was not a purchaser of the property in litigation. The sale of the battery in 1881 was, as between Pendergast, Smith & Co. and plaintiff, complete; and the title passed absolutely to the latter. When, therefore, they (or their successor, the Ætna Iron Works Company) afterwards sold and assigned to appellant their "assets" and "property" they did not sell, nor by any proper construction can they be held to have undertaken to sell this battery, which was no part of their assets or property. And this is made still more clear by the fact that it was not included in the schedule. If their creditors had attached the property in their possession, or they had sold it to an innocent purchaser, then the rule of section 3440 might have been applicable. But appellant is here claiming as a purchaser property which he never purchased, and under a written transfer by which it was not transferred. There are no other points necessary to be particularly noticed.

Judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed.

MCDONALD v. HUFF. (No. 11,064.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1888.)

1. VENDOR AND VENDEE—CONTRACT—DELIVERY OF DEED.

A mortgagor agreed in writing to execute a deed to the mortgagee, and leave it in escrow, to be delivered upon default by him in paying an agreed sum less than the amount due, provided the mortgagee gave a receipt in full. The deed was accordingly left as an escrow. Default was made, but, before the mortgagee accepted the deed, the mortgagor demanded it back, and conveyed to another. Held that, as the mortgagee had not signed the agreement, and therefore could never have been compelled to accept the deed, the mortgagor was at liberty to withdraw it at any time before it was accepted; nor did the contract become an executed one from the mere fact that the mortgagee forbore suit upon the mortgage until it was barred by the statute of limitations.

2. MORTGAGE—WHAT CONSTITUTES—ESCROW.

A deed left by a mortgagor as an escrow, to be delivered upon default in payment by him of a sum fixed upon in satisfaction of all indebtedness, does not become operative until default, and creates no lien on the land.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; J. P. HAYNES, Judge.

Action to quiet title, brought by John E. McDonald against John Huff and R. F. Herrick. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

S. O. Houghton, (Archer & Bowden, of counsel,) for appellants. S. M. Buck, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. In 1882, plaintiff had a judgment against the defendant Huff, and also held a note given by him, secured by a mortgage. He threatened to foreclose the mortgage, and finally agreed with Huff that Huff should convey to plaintiff the mortgaged premises, in consideration whereof the plaintiff would release Huff from all the indebtedness. The agreement was reduced to writing, and is signed by Huff only. In it Huff recites his indebtedness of $3,500 on the mortgage and $600 on the judgment, and then proceeds as follows: "And whereas, I am at present unable to pay said sums at present, in full, in cash, but am desirous to satisfy said demands; and whereas, the said John E. McDonald is willing that I should make to him a conveyance of the land described in said deed, and in consideration of said conveyance release and discharge me from all of said indebtedness, and from all indebtedness due and owing from me to him; and whereas, the said John E. McDonald is also willing that I should retain said land, and that said deed of conveyance be held in escrow by R. H. McDonald, of the Pacific Bank, of San Francisco, Cal., until November 21, 1882, and that in case I pay to said John E. McDonald on or before said November 21, 1882, the sum of three thousand and eighty ($3,080) dollars, then the said deed is to be redelivered to me, and the said John E. McDonald give me a receipt in full of all demands against me, and said deed to be of no force or effect, and convey no title to said John E. McDonald. Now, then, I direct that said R. H. McDonald, with whom said deed is deposited, hold the same in escrow until the 21st of November, 1882, and in case I pay to said John E. McDonald or any agent or assign of him, said sum of $3,080 on or before said November 21, 1882, then the said R. H. McDonald redeliver and return to me said deed. And in case I fail to make payment to said John E. McDonald, or his agents or assigns, of said sum of $3,080 on or before November 21, 1882, then the said R. H. McDonald is hereby authorized to deliver to said John E. McDonald the said deed of conveyance on the said John E. McDonald executing to me a receipt in full of all demands against me by him and depositing the same with the said R. H. McDonald to be delivered to me by the said R. H. McDonald." On the same day Huff executed the deed and deposited it with R. H. McDonald. McDonald executed no instrument in writing obligatory in himself to accept the deed and release the debt, nor did he bind himself not to bring suit to foreclose. In fact, however, he did not foreclose, but acquiesced in the agreement. Huff did not pay the $3,080, or any portion of it, on the 21st of November, or at any time, nor did McDonald execute the receipt or demand his deed. The deed still remained with R. H. McDonald until the 16th day of March, 1883, when it was delivered to plaintiff's attorney for plaintiff, the attorney executing a receipt in full of all demands against said Huff, which was left with R. H. McDonald for Huff. It is not found that the attorney had any authority from John E. McDonald to give the receipt or to accept the deed. Prior to the delivery of the deed, however, to-wit, on the 21st of February, 1883, Huff demanded of R. H. McDonald that he surrender and deliver up to him, Huff, the deed that had been left in escrow, and the agreement or instructions accompanying it, which demand not being complied with, Huff gave notice in writing to R. H. McDonald, February 28th, of his withdrawal of said instrument and conveyance. Huff also conveyed the land to defendant Herrick for an expressed consideration of $5,000, which deed was duly recorded before R. H. McDonald delivered the first deed. Herrick, it is found, however, took with full knowledge of all the facts.

This action is brought to have the deed to Herrick canceled, and to quiet plaintiff's title. By the terms of the contract of escrow the deed was not to become operative until Huff had made default in paying the $3,080 and Mc-Donald had executed a receipt in full of all demands against Huff. And if no such default were made, the deed was not to become operative at all. This is the rule generally in regard to instruments placed in escrow. It could not operate then to create a lien upon the land, and we do not see how any question can arise upon the claim that as a mortgage it is void because providing for a forfeiture without foreclosure. Nor can it be held, as respondent claims, that when Huff failed to pay, R. H. McDonald held the deed as agent for plaintiff. Plaintiff had not bound himself to forbear suit, to remit a portion of the debt, or to accept the deed in payment. Until he did the latter by executing a release and delivering it he was not entitled to the deed. The contract was a conditional sale of land in consideration of an existing indebtedness, with the privilege on the part of the vendor to satisfy the indebtedness within a stated period, in which event the contract of sale would be void. There is no question of the statute of frauds as to the vendor, as his contract was in writing. But it is a serious question as to whether the purchaser was bound. He verbally agreed to give further time on his indebtedness, and to accept a sum less than the amount due, in full satisfaction of his debt. This undertaking was not in writing, and not a contract which varied the terms of his written agreement. Evidently he was not bound by it, but might have brought suit to foreclose at any time, notwithstanding the agreement. Nor do we think it can be held that it became an executed contract, from the mere fact that the plaintiff did forbear to bring suit until the lien of the mortgage was lost by reason of the statute of limitations. The indebtedness was not barred. The contract signed by Huff was a new promise. The plaintiff, even after the 21st of November, when the privilege of the vendor to pay had expired could not have been compelled to accept the deed and release all the indebtedness of Huff to him. That being the case, we think Huff was at liberty to withdraw his deed from escrow at any time before it had been accepted by the plaintiff.

It follows that the judgment must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

SPARROW v. RHOADES. (No. 11,331.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1888.)

EJECTMENT—DEFENSES—ILLEGAL CONSIDERATION.

Under a general denial, in an action of ejectment, it is competent for defendant to show that the deed from him to plaintiff, upon which the latter rests his title, was founded on a consideration illegal by statute, and therefore void, as such evidence tends to show that the title was still in defendant, and that plaintiff was not entitled to possession.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; JOHN G. PRESSLY, Judge.

This is an action in ejectment, brought by E. D. Sparrow against A. A. H. Rhoades to recover possession of two tracts of land. Plaintiff bases his claim upon two deeds executed by defendant, under the following circumstances: To one of these tracts defendant had a perfect title; to the other he had no title, having simply settled upon it with a view to its pre-emption, it being public land of the United States. The plaintiff desired to purchase the tract to which defendant had title, and the sum of $1,000 was agreed upon as the purchase price. Of this only $300 were to be paid in cash, and the balance to be paid as follows: The defendant was to convey or sell to plaintiff the public land to which defendant had merely a right of pre-emption; and after the conveyance the plaintiff was to go into possession of the land, settle upon it, in the course of time acquire a patent, and then transfer it to defendant as, and for the sum of $700, the balance of the consideration. The agreement was but partially executed, although the defendant conveyed the property, and thereupon the plaintiff brought this action. The court below held, that inasmuch as the consideration of the deeds was entire, and in part illegal, the deeds were void ab initio, and transferred nothing to the plaintiff, and thereupon rendered judgment in favor of the defendant. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

Henley & Cates, (R. M. Swain, of counsel,) for appellant. Geo. D. Collins, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action of ejectment. The court below, sitting without a jury, gave judgment in favor of the defendant, from which, upon the judgment roll only, the plaintiff appeals. The points made for the reversal of the judgment are that under the general denial of the answer to the allegations of the complaint it was inadmissible to introduce any evidence to show that the consideration of the deed upon which the plaintiff based his title and right of entry was illegal, and the deed void; and that the finding of the court upon such evidence was outside of the issues made by the pleadings, and should be disregarded, in which event judgment would necessarily have been given for the plaintiff. The finding complained of, which is conceded to have been supported by sufficient evidence, is to the effect that the real consideration of the deed under which plaintiff claimed was $300, and an agreement by the plaintiff that he would as a pre-emptor procure a title from the United States to a part of the land embraced in the deed, and reconvey the same to the defendant, who was in possession of it. This, of course, involved the taking of an oath, required by section 2262 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, with a present intention to violate it. Under a general denial in an action of ejectment the defendant has a right to introduce in evidence any fact which might show or tend to show that the plaintiff had no right of entry when the suit was brought. Kimball v. Gearhart, 12 Cal. 50; Bell v. Brown, 22 Cal. 672; Willson v. Cleaveland, 30 Cal. 201; Bell v. M—— Co., 36 Cal. 219; Semple v. Cook, 50 Cal. 29. "In an action to recover possession of land, if the complaint is in the usual form, merely averring that the plaintiff is the owner in fee of the premises described and entitled to their possession, and that the defendant unlawfully withholds the same, the general denial admits proof of anything that tends to defeat the title which the plaintiff attempts to establish on the trial." Pom. Rem. & Rem. Rights, § 679. The deed which the plaintiff introduced as the evidence of his title and right of entry to the premises of which he sought possession was void, because the statute expressly declares it to be so. Section 2262 Rev. St., supra. Under the general denial of the answer evidence was admissible to show that the title, which on the face of the deed appeared to have passed to the plaintiff, could not have done so, and that the deed was worthless as a muniment of title, or, as that under which a right of entry accrued to the plaintiff, even although the fact that the deed was void by reason of an illegal consideration was not set up by special plea in confession and avoidance. The general denial of the defendant was, in effect, that he denied the plaintiff's title and right of entry, the proof to sustain which, was that the deed under which the plaintiff claimed was, in fact, no deed at all, of no more value to convey title than a piece of blank paper, and utterly valueless as evidence of title. The result of showing that the plaintiff's deed from the defendant was void, was to prove title in the defendant, and this has been held to be admissible under the general denial in Marshall v. Shafter, 32 Cal. 177. The proof went to show directly that the plaintiff's claim of title to and right of entry upon the land in the possession of the defendant was, and is, without merit. It is not evidence merely to support a special plea of confession and avoidance; it is evidence which tends absolutely to contradict the fact that the plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the premises. It is not an effort to show that, notwithstanding the plaintiff may have had the right of entry under that deed, he has by some other independent and separate line of inequitable conduct lost it; it is an effort to show that he never had any right of possession at all. If the evidence was admissible, the court did right in making a finding thereon, and the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; BELCHER, C. C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the forgoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

TAPPENDORF v. DOWNING. (No. 11,388.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1883.)

1. BOUNDARIES—ACCRETION—RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

A deed conveying land formerly fronting on a river by its section number, passes title to land added thereto by accretion.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—ADVERSE POSSESSION—EVIDENCE.

In ejectment to recover land formed by accretion, evidence that plaintiff has been in possession under color of title, and occasionally cultivated the land, for 11 years, does not show adverse possession within the meaning of the statute of limitations.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; JOHN J. DE HAVEN, Judge.

Action of ejectment by Frederick Tappendorf against William Downing to recover land formed by accretion. In 1859, G. G. Dudley conveyed to R. N. Dungan S. E. fraction of N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 25, fronting on Eel river, a navigable stream in Humboldt county. Dungan conveyed to plaintiff, and in 1874 plaintiff conveyed to Caleb Merritt, who conveyed to Shallard, and by divers mesne conveyances the land passed to defendant, who took possession of the land formed by accretion in front of and attached to the original tract. Plaintiff claimed the accretion by quitclaim deed from Dungan, and by occupancy and occasional cultivation for 11 years. There was judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

J. D. H. Chamberlin, for appellant. S. M. Buck, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. In this case, we think that the land formed by accretion was part of the adjoining fractional quarter section, and that therefore the accretion passed by the deeds conveying the fractional quarter by its number. The statement of the quantity of land conveyed by a deed is not controlling.

With reference to the statute of limitations, if we assume that the appellant's specification is sufficient to raise the question, which is doubtful, see Barstow v. Newman, 34 Cal. 91; Goodrich v. Van Landingham, 46 Cal. 603. We do not think the evidence shows a case of adverse possession by the plaintiff for the requisite period. It may be that there was such possession; but the fact does not appear from the record. Since the appellant has no title to the fractional quarter section as it originally stood, or to the accretion, there can be no question as to a boundary line between the two. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

MORGANS v. ADEL. (No. 11,155.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1883.)

1. EVIDENCE—ACCOUNT BOOKS—PARTNERSHIP.

In an action to recover money due on contract, where one furnishes material and another does work under an agreement to divide the profits, the original books of entry of the parties are proper evidence to show the amount of work done.

B. APPEAL—REVIEW—FINDING BY COURT.

On a trial to the court the finding will not be disturbed where the evidence is conflicting.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; F. E. SPENCER, Judge.

Action by C. H. Morgans against William T. Adel to recover money due on contract, under the following state of facts. Defendant, being engaged in the business of carriage making, in all its branches, and having a paint-shop in connection with said business, employed plaintiff to paint vehicles upon mutual agreement between them that defendant build, furnish all the materials, shop utensils, and appliances, and collect all sums due for painting from customers, and the plaintiff should perform all the labors in and about painting all the vehicles and usual work that would be brought into a carriage shop; that, as compensation for his labor, and that of any and all employees in and about such painting, it was agreed that the plaintiff should receive from the defendant from time to time a share or portion of sums charged by defendant to customers for said work sent them, to be thereafter agreed upon, and to be a just proportion of the whole price charged.

J. B. Lamar and W. B. Hardy, for appellant. C. D. Wright and John Reynolds, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action for work and labor performed by the plaintiff as a painter for the defendant. Upon a cross-complaint the court below rendered judgment for the defendant, which, upon motion being made for a new trial, was modified in favor of the plaintiff to the extent of lessening the sum of money for which the original judgment was given, and, the defendant agreeing to the reduction thus made, the motion for new trial was refused. From the judgment and order this appeal is prosecuted.

It is claimed that the court erred in finding that there was a special agreement between the parties as to the manner and amount of plaintiff's compensation. There was a very decided conflict of evidence upon the point, and it is evident from the record that the very experienced judge who tried the cause had a better opportunity than we can have to determine upon which side preponderated the weight of testimony; hence his findings should not be disturbed. The objections to the introduction in evidence of the two books, entitled "Paint-Shop Book, 1882," and "Paint-Shop, 1883," and of Exhibit A of the defendant, at folio 104 of the transcript, are untenable. They were original books of entry of the parties, and shed light upon the question as to what charges were made, the work performed by plaintiff, and the amount thereof, so that there might be ascertained what was his fair proportion or percentage for his labor. We perceive no error in the record, and advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

BLACKWOOD v. CUTTING PACKING CO. (No. 11,111.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1888.)

1. SALE—OF FUTURE CROP—IMPLIED WARRANTY.

Future crops of fruits are "merchandise not then in existence," within the meaning of Civil Code Cal. § 1768, which provides that "one who agrees to sell merchandise not then in existence thereby warrants that it shall be sound and merchantable at the place of production, contemplated by the parties."

2. SAME—WHEN TITLE PASSES.

A contract of sale of future crops of fruit produced in certain seasons from a specified orchard, not to be less than a minimum or greater than a maximum quantity per annum, at an agreed price per pound, to be delivered by producer at a stipulated place, does not pass title to such fruit under Civil Code Cal. § 1140, which provides that "the title to personal property, sold or exchanged, passes to the buyer whenever the parties agree upon a present transfer, and the thing itself is identified, whether it is separated from other things or not," the goods not being identified by said contract within the meaning of said section, and although the written contract makes use of the terms "bought and sold," the transaction is construed to be an agreement to sell, and not a sale.

3. SAME—ACTION FOR PRICE—EVIDENCE.

Upon the trial of an action by the vendor against the vendee upon an agreement to sell future crops of fruit, produced in certain seasons, from a specified orchard, where the defense is failure of implied warranty as to quality, the facts that the orchard was properly cared for, and the trees open to the inspection of defendant, who knew the climatic conditions influencing the crop, etc., are irrelevant.

4. SAME—ACCEPTANCE—WAIVER.

Upon the trial of an action by vendor against vendee for the breach of contract to sell fruit not then in existence, the defense was failure of warranty as to quality. It was proved that when the first shipment reached defendant it wrote plaintiff that the goods did not come up to contract, but as they had reached the city without their condition being discovered, and could only be returned to plaintiff a total loss, defendant had disposed of them to the best advantage. By a subsequent agreement defendant was to send an agent to select of the residue such as was considered fit for use, and the balance was to be prepared for use, and handled by plaintiff at his cost, subject to such rights and obligations with reference thereto as either party might have by the first contract; and it was stipulated that neither the receipt of the first shipment nor the execution of the subsequent agreement was to be construed as acceptance of the goods, or a change of the rights, duties, or obligations of either party under the first contract. Held, defendant did not waive its right to refuse to accept such part of the goods as did not comply with the terms of the contract first mentioned, either by receiving the first shipment or by the subsequent agreement.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

Action by William C. Blackwood against the Cutting Packing Company for breach of contract in refusing to accept goods purchased by defendant of plaintiff. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

A. A. Moore, Geo. W. Reed, and Arthur Rodgers, for appellant. A. N. Drown, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action for the price of apricots alleged to have been sold to defendant. Defense, the breach of an implied warranty as to quality. The contract was in two parts. The part signed by the defendant was as follows: "SAN FRANCISCO, September 17, 1881. Bought of W. C. Blackwood his crop of apricots, at Haywards, for the seasons of 1882-83-84-85-86, not less than 75 tons, and not exceeding 200 tons, per annum, at 3 cents per pound, f. o. b. [free on board cars at] Haywards. CUTTING PACKING COMPANY, By A. D. CUTLER." The part signed by the plaintiff was similar to the above, except that it said, "Sold my crop of apricots," and "Sold Cutting Packing Company." The court below gave judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

1. The first question is whether there was any warranty. The defendant relies upon section 1768 of the Civil Code, which is as follows: Sec. 1768. "One who agrees to sell merchandise not then in existence thereby warrants that it shall be sound and merchantable at the place of production contemplated by the parties, and as nearly so at the place of delivery as can be secured by reasonable care." The plaintiff contends in the first place that apricots are not "merchandise." A walk through the markets would probably convince him that he is mistaken. It is said, however, that such fruit comes under the head of "produce." Very likely it does. But we think the word "merchandise" is used in the above section in a large sense, and covers all kinds of personal property which is ordinarily bought and sold in the market. Whether it covers more than that need not be decided in this case. This point of plaintiff is not unlike saying that a promissory note between farmers is not a negotiable instrument, because such an instrument is a creation of the law between "merchants." And we think also that the future crops of fruit come under the head of merchandise "not then in existence." Section 1770 covers the case of an article manufactured to order; and section 1771, the case of merchandise "inaccessible to the examination of the buyer," which probably refers to merchandise in existence. Taking the three sections together, we think that the one above quoted applies to a case like the present. It is argued for the plaintiff, however, that the transaction was a sale, and not an agreement to sell, and that therefore the section does not apply. The fundamental difference between a sale, properly so-called, and an agreement to sell is that in the former case the title passes, and in the latter case it does not. The inquiry in this regard, therefore, must be as to whether the title passed. And it is to be observed that the point of time to which the inquiry must relate in the present case is the time the contract was entered into. Some question is made by counsel as to whether the title to a thing which is not in existence can pass. But we shall assume in favor of the plaintiff that the fruit to be produced from trees already grown and the property of the plaintiff has such a potential existence as to be the subject of sale. It seems well settled that the question as to whether the title has passed is one as to the intention of the parties. And such intention is, as a matter of course, to be gathered from the language of the parties, considered in the light of all the circumstances of the case. But, in the absence of anything showing a contrary intent, there are certain circumstances which have a controlling force, and these exist in the present case. (a) There was at the time to which the inquiry relates neither delivery of the goods nor payment of the price. The contract says that the fruit was bought "at three cents per pound, f. o. b. [free on board cars at] Haywards." This, as we construe it, is an expression of intention that the price was to be paid or to become due when the fruit was delivered to the carrier at Haywards. But the result would be the same if the words quoted do not express such an intention. For if the time of payment be left indefinite, the law implies that it is to be on the delivery of the goods. Civil Code, § 1784; Dwyer v. Duquid, 70 Ill. 307; Case v. Dewey, 55 Mich. 118, 20 N. W. Rep. 817, and 21 N. W. Rep. 911. In common phrase the terms were cash on delivery. And where such is the case the delivery of the goods and the payment of the price are conditions concurrent. And if the condition of payment is not waived the title does not pass until the price is paid. Peabody v. Maguire, 79 Me. 585, 12 Atl. Rep. 630; Railroad Co. v. Erwin, 84 Ind. 464, 465; Turner v. Moore, 58 Vt. 456, 3 Atl. Rep. 467; Adams v. O'Connor, 100 Mass. 515; Hoffman v. Culver, 7 Bradw. 454. It frequently happens that the seller will deliver the goods notwithstanding the failure to fulfill the condition of payment; and in such cases the question arises as to whether such delivery is not to be considered a waiver of the condition. Some courts hold that, in the absence of circumstances showing a contrary intention, the condition is waived, and that the title passes. But where, as here, there was neither delivery nor payment, there can be no doubt but that the title does not pass. Dixon v. Duke, 85 Ind. 435, 436. (b) There are other circumstances which constitute more specific criteria than the above. The goods were not in a condition in which the buyer could be called upon to accept them. Benjamin gives the following rule in this regard: "Where, by the agreement, the vendor is to do anything to the goods for the purpose of putting them into that state into which the purchaser is to be bound to accept them, or, as it is sometimes worded, into a deliverable state, the performance of those things shall, in the absence of circumstances indicating a contrary intention, be taken to be a condition precedent to the vesting of the property." Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 3. In this case the seller was to give the necessary cultivation to the orchard, pick the fruit, pack it in suitable boxes or baskets, and deliver it to the carrier at Haywards. (c) There is yet another circumstance. The portion of the crop to be delivered had not been identified. What was contracted for was to be "not less than 75 tons, and not exceeding 200 tons per annum." Possibly it might be argued that, if any crop should turn out to be less than 75 tons, the buyer would not be bound to accept any portion of it. It is not necessary to consider that question. It certainly cannot be maintained that the same result would follow if the crop of any year should turn out to be more than 200 tons. At the time of the formation of the contract (to which the inquiry must relate) it could not be known what number of tons would be produced. Even if the fruit had been then ripe, and hanging upon the trees, it could not be known what portion was to go to the defendant until it was weighed. In this regard Benjamin gives the following rule: "Where anything remains to be done to the goods for the purpose of ascertaining the price, as by weighing, measuring, or testing the goods, where the price is to depend on the quantity or quality of the goods, the performance of these things also shall be a condition precedent to the transfer of the property, although the individual goods are ascertained, and they are in the state in which they ought to be accepted." Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 3. So far as concerns the proposition that, where weighing or measuring is necessary to the identification of the goods, the title does not pass until they have been weighed or measured, the American cases are generally in accord with the above rule. See Hires v. Hurff, 39 N. J. Law, 10; Galloway v. Week, 54 Wis. 608, 12 N. W. Rep. 10; Bank v. Gillette, 90 Ind. 268; Hutchinson v. Railway, 59 N. H. 489; Fry v. Bank, 75 Ala. 474; Allen v. Melton, 64 Tex. 218; Hubler v. Gaston, 42 Amer. Rep. 794; Elgee Cotton Cases, 22 Wall. 180. In California the cases are to the same effect. See Horr v. Barker, 8 Cal. 608; McLaughlin v. Piatti, 27 Cal. 463; Caruthers v. McGarvey, 41 Cal. 15. Some of the American cases are not in accord with the rule laid down by Mr. Benjamin, in this: that if the goods are identified it does not matter that weighing or measuring is necessary to ascertain the price or the quantity. And this seems to be the law in California. For the Civil Code contains the following: Sec. 1140. "The title to personal property, sold or exchanged, passes to the buyer whenever the parties agree upon a present transfer, and the thing itself is identified, whether it is separated from other things or not." This section does not dispense with identification. On the contrary, it requires it. It only dispenses with segregation when the property is otherwise identified. Therefore, where the identification consists in the segregation, weighing or measuring, they are still necessary. And the present case was of the latter character. As against these controlling features of the transaction, the plaintiff has only the language of the instrument. The term "sold," it is said, indicates a consummated sale. But this word is not conclusive. Anderson v. Read, 106 N. Y. 344, 345, 13 N. E. Rep. 292. In McLaughlin v. Piatti, 27 Cal. 458, the agreement was that in consideration of a certain sum, the receipt of which was recited, the owner "granted, bargained, and sold" the property to the buyer, yet it was held to be a mere agreement to sell. And in the Elgee Cotton Cases, 22 Wall. 180, the language was even stronger. We think, therefore, that the title did not pass, and that consequently there was no sale, but a mere agreement to sell. Hence the case falls within section 1768, and a warranty that the goods should be sound and merchantable was implied.

2. The court below found that the goods were not sound or merchantable at the place of production, etc. It is contended that this finding is not sustained by the evidence. But we think the evidence is amply sufficient. S. Roper, who had been in the fruit business for 12 or 14 years, and who was shown a sample, testified: "They are not really good for anything. They would not pay to dry. I suppose that animals would eat them." John A. Emerson, who had been in the fruit and produce business for 20 years, and who had seen a portion of the crop, and was shown a sample while on the stand, testified: "A very few boxes were very good apricots, but the majority of them were very small, very inferior; something that I could not sell unless at a very low figure. * * * I should not consider those in Exhibit H as merchantable." William Jacobs, who was in the fruit business, and who had seen a portion of the fruit, testified: "They were not even fit for pie-fruit. I would not consider them fit for pulp that we squeeze into jelly. * * * I say that those apricots that I saw of the crop of 1882 would not be salable to canners in this market, or anybody else." And to the same effect was the testimony of other witnesses who were competent to give an opinion on the subject, and who had either seen portions of the crop, or were shown samples of it. The fact that most of the witnesses testified that the fruit might have been used for pie-fruit, or for pulp, does not help the plaintiff's case. Very inferior fruit may be used for pulp. And it was in evidence that "there is only a small quantity used by canners for pulp. Fifty tons would be enough for the whole city," and that "pie-fruit" is merely the inferior fruit which is found in most crops. It is not sold as such. Upon the same principle it might be contended that, if the fruit could have been fed to hogs, it had a value, and was therefore not within the warranty. Undoubtedly, the testimony of some of the witnesses was toned down on cross-examination, and some of them seemed to have had an indirect interest in the question. But the question of credibility was, under our decisions, for the court below. At the very least, there was a substantial conflict in the evidence. The fact that the orchard was properly cared for, that the trees were open to the inspection of the defendant, and that it was acquainted with the climatic conditions, etc., seem to us to be entirely irrelevant.

3. It seems to be contended, though not very strenuously, that the defendant accepted a portion of the crop, and that thereby it waived its rights in the premises. The facts in this regard are as follows: When the first shipment reached the defendant it wrote to the plaintiff that the fruit was "by no means of proper quality, nor sound, nor merchantable. Yet as these had been allowed to come to the city before we discovered their inferiority and unfitness and unmerchantable condition, and could not have been returned to you except at an entire loss to yourself, we made such disposition of them as we were able to make." Subsequently the parties entered into a written contract whereby it was agreed that the defendant should send an agent to pick out such portions of the crop as was considered fit to be used. This contract provided that the receipt of the first shipment referred to in its letter above quoted, "shall not be regarded as an acceptance, and shall not in any manner operate to waive any of the rights of said company;" and, further, that the picking out and taking of such portion of the crop as should be picked out by the agent "shall not, nor shall any action hereunder, be deemed or taken to be an acceptance by said company, or a waiver, or to operate in any manner so as to affect, change, or impair the rights, duties, or obligations of either of the parties under said first-mentioned agreement." With reference to the remainder of the crop the contract contained the following: "The remainder of said crop shall be forthwith picked, pitted, and dried in the sun on said premises by said Blackwood, on his own account, and at his own cost and expense, subject to such rights or obligations with reference thereto as either party may have under said first-mentioned agreement." The defendant sent its agent to the orchard, and he picked out all of the crop which was considered fit for use. This, together with the first shipment, amounted to 89,000 pounds, for which the defendant paid at the rate provided for by the first contract. The remainder was dried by the plaintiff as provided by the second agreement, and the suit is for the price of such remainder at the contract rate, less what the dried fruit was sold for. We are unable to see that there was any waiver of defendant's rights under the first agreement. It was expressly agreed that the receipt and disposal of the first shipment should not be considered an acceptance; and had it not been for the second contract the defendant would doubtless not have taken any more of the apricots. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

76 Cal. 222

CITY OF NAPA v. EASTERBY et al. (No. 11,017.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1888.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—GRADE OF STREETS.

The charter of the city of Napa (Laws Cal. 1875-76, pp. 556, 557; Laws Cal. 1877-78, pp. 1013-1017) provides in section 11 that the board of trustees shall have power to establish the grade of all streets and enforce conformity thereto; section 13, that the city shall not pay therefor, but the expense shall be assessed on the property holder fronting said streets; section 19, that when owners of more than one-half of property fronting on a street desire the grade thereof established, they shall petition the board, which the board may order done at the expense of the property holders on said street; section 30, that the board, without petition, may, by order entered on their journal, provide for grading, etc., of streets, and assess the expense thereof on the property chargeable, in like manner as if petition had been filed. Held, under the foregoing provisions, that the board, without such petition being filed, had power to establish by one general ordinance the official grade of all streets in the city.

2. SAME—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY—PUBLICATION.

Under a law requiring the publication of the ordinances of a city as an essential of their validity, maps and books referred to in such ordinances need not be published.

3. SAME—ORDINANCES—AUTHENTICATION.

An ordinance of a city, published in a newspaper, was authenticated thus: "In board of trustees finally passed this 23d day of January, 1879. J. H., president of the board of trustees of the city of N. Attest: J. N. W., clerk."—and the copy as published contained the following addition: "Published by order of the board, J. N. W., clerk." Held, sufficiently authenticated.

4. SAME—ORDINANCES—WHAT ARE.

The board of trustees of the city of Napa made an order directing certain work to be done on one of the streets; the language used being, "The board order," etc. Held, under the charter of said city, (section 34,) which provides that the enacting clause of ordinances shall be, "The board of trustees of the city of N. do hereby ordain as follows," and section 11, (Laws Cal. 1877, p. 1013,) which provides that the board may pass "by-laws, resolutions, and ordinances,"—the order referred to was valid, not being an ordinance, and said charter provision concerning the enacting clause being merely directory.

5. SAME—ORDERS—PUBLICATION.

Under section 22, charter city of Napa, (Laws Cal. 1873-74, p. 149,) and section 30, (Laws 1877-78, p. 1017,) relating to the publication of ordinances of the city, mere orders or resolutions need not be published.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Napa county; WILLIAM C. WALLACE, Judge.

Action for street assessment by the city of Napa against A. Y. Easterby and certain real estate in the city of Napa. Plaintiff had judgment for $305.25. Defendant appealed.

Wm. & Geo. Leviston, for appellant. Estee, Wilson & McCutchen, Oscar Coglan and W. F. Henning, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action upon a street assessment. Judgment was given for the plaintiff, and the defendants appeal. As is usual in such cases, every point with the least semblance of merit is made. We deem it sufficient to notice the following:

1. It is said that the official grade was not established. Upon the former appeal (61 Cal. 509,) the judgment in favor of plaintiff was reversed, because it did not appear that the ordinance purporting to establish the grades had been published by order of the board. This decision necessarily affirms that, unless it appears that the ordinance was published by order of the board, the official grades were not established; and that the consequence is that subsequent proceedings for grading, etc., are void. This has become the law of the case. Upon the trial two attempts to prove that the official grade was established were made. The first proposition was that the grade was established by ordinance 42. With reference to this, we are inclined to think that the position of the appellants is correct, and that there was no sufficient proof of the publication by order of the board, within the rule laid down by the former decision. Assuming this to be so, then the subsequent proceedings taken upon the idea that the grade was established, were void. If such subsequent proceedings were void, there can be no reason why the board should not disregard them entirely, and commence fresh proceedings. This was what it would seem they did do by their second attempt to establish the grade. The second attempt was by ordinance 77. This ordinance (which, though somewhat meager, we think, was sufficient) was duly ordered to be published, and was published for the requisite period; and at the expiration of the period of publication the proceedings upon which the assessment rests were commenced. The only objections which are taken to this ordinance are the following: (a) It is urged that the board had no power to establish the official grade except upon petition of the property owners, and that the grades of the streets must be established separately, and not all together, as was done here. This view was set forth in the opinion of three of the justices upon the former appeal. But a majority of the court did not concur in this portion of the opinion, and it is obvious that it did not become the law of the case, but was merely the individual opinion of three members of the court. The argument in favor of the position is forcible. But the inconvenience resulting from such a construction is so great that we think if any other construction is fairly open it should be adopted. And we think there is room for another construction. The provisions of the charter in relation to the subject are as follows: Sec. 11. " * * * The board of trustees shall have power; * * * Third, to establish the grade of all streets, avenues, and alleys, and to require and enforce conformity thereto." Laws 1877-78, p. 1013. Sec. 18. "The city of Napa shall not pay for establishing the grade, grading, working, improving, or repairing streets, avenues, or alleys, laying down or constructing sewers therein, or sidewalks or crosswalks thereon; but all such expenses shall be assessed upon the property fronting on such streets, avenues, and alleys as hereinafter provided." * * * Laws 1877-78, p. 1017. Sec. 19. "When the owners of more than one-half in frontage of the property fronting on any street, etc., * * * shall desire to have the grade established, or to grade, fill, plank, pave, macadamize, or gravel the same, construct sidewalks along, or sewers therein, or otherwise improve or repair the same, and shall petition the board of trustees in writing, asking that the same may be done, the board may order said work to be performed as requested, at the expense of the property fronting on said street." Laws 1875-76, p. 556. Sec. 30. "The board of trustees may at any time, without petition, by an order entered in the journal of their proceedings, provide for grading, filling, planking, paving, macadamizing, or graveling streets, avenues, alleys, or portions thereof, constructing sidewalks along, or sewers therein, or otherwise improving or repairing the same, and shall proceed in letting contracts, and in assessing the expense of said work upon the property chargeable therewith, and enforcing the same, in the same manner as in cases of assessments made upon petition." Laws 1877-78, p. 1017; and see Laws 1875-76, p. 557. The argument against the validity of the ordinance is, in substance, that the city had no power to pay for establishing the grades; that the expense thereof must be charged upon the property owners according to frontage, and that they could only be so charged where there had been a petition that the grade be established. Now, it is perfectly true that the city had no power to pay for establishing the grades, and that the property owners could not be compelled to pay for it in the absence of a petition. But is the power to establish the grade commensurate with the power to pay, or to compel payment therefor? Suppose that some public-spirited surveyor had offered to do the work for nothing; would the board have been powerless to accept the offer? Or suppose that a portion of the citizens, chafed at what they might consider undue conservatism on the part of the property owners of the locality, should subscribe the amount necessary to pay for the expense of the work, would the board have no power to order the work to be done at their expense? Or suppose that the actual work of surveying had been done long before, and the maps and plans made, would it be necessary that the property owners should petition to have such work done a second time, and subject themselves to a useless expense, when the maps, etc., lay ready to their hands? We cannot think that there would be a want of power in such cases. And, if not, then the power to establish the grades is not absolutely commensurate with the power to pay, or to compel payment therefor. But if this be granted, the foundation for the argument against the validity of the grades is gone. If the power to adopt any particular grade is not commensurate with the power to pay or to compel payment therefor, then the former power may exist, although the latter does not; and the result of its exercises may be valid, although nothing can be collected from the property owners, or, notwithstanding the fact that former trustees may have unlawfully appropriated the city's money to pay for it.

There is nothing in the nature of the proceedings which makes against this construction. It does not take away from the property owners all right to determine what work shall be done. For although, when the grade is established, the board may order certain work to be done without petition, yet the property owners of the locality may put a veto on it by filing a protest. Section 30. Nor is there anything in the language of the charter which negatives the construction. The charter expressly provides that the board shall have power, "to establish the grade of all streets," etc. Section 11. This grant of power is unlimited by anything, unless it be the provision in a subsequent place with reference to the petition of the property owners. But this latter provision is not inconsistent with an unconditional grant of the power. It is simply that when the property owners of a locality "shall petition the board of trustees in writing, asking that the same may be done, the board may order said work to be performed as requested, at the expense of the property owners." Section 19. If there is no petition, it cannot be done at the expense of the property owners. But this is a different thing from saying that it cannot be done at all. We think, therefore, that the board had the power to pass the ordinance establishing the official grades. (b) It is contended that the maps and bench books to which the ordinance refers were not published. The argument is that the reference to the maps, etc., makes them a part of the ordinance, and that the requirement as to publication means that the whole ordinance be published. When an ordinance or a deed refers to a separate document, it is not true, as a matter of fact, that the two are one and the same. The law, for some purposes considers one a part of the other. But this fiction will not be extended to any such absurd consequences as is contended for here. Where, for example, a deed refers for a description to a map in the office of some city official, it can hardly be supposed that the map must be carried to the recorder's office, and filed there as a part of the deed. And so here, all that is required to be published is the ordinance itself—the thing which is entered in the ordinance book. (c) It is said that the ordinance as published was not properly certified. The authentication was as follows: "In board of trustees, finally passed this 23d day of January, A. D. 1879. JOSEPH HENRY, President of the board of trustees of the city of Napa. Attest: J. N. WALLINGFORD, Clerk." And the copy as published contained the following addition: "Published by order of the board. J. N. WALLINGFORD, Clerk." This, we think, was sufficient authentication.

2. It is next objected that there was no order that the work be done. The record shows the following order: "Resolved, that the board deem the proposed work on Randolph street expedient, and that there is no valid objection thereto. The board order that said work be done," etc. The point seems to be that the above order is not "in the form of an ordinance;" that is to say, that it did not comply with section 34 of the charter, which provides that "the style of all city ordinances shall be as follows: 'The Board of Trustees of the city of Napa do hereby ordain as follows.'" In the first place, we think this provision is merely directory. There is nothing in the case of Creighton v. Manson, 27 Cal. 629, which is contrary to this view. In the second place, the provision applies only to ordinances, and not to mere resolutions or orders. The charter provides that the board may pass "by-laws, resolutions, and ordinances." Section 11, Laws 1877-78, p. 1013. There is evidently a difference between these modes of action. See, 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. (3d Ed.) § 307, and notes. It is unnecessary to consider what is the precise difference. It is sufficient to say that in our opinion the order was not an "ordinance," and that the provision does not apply. It is further objected that this order was not published. But being a mere resolution it does not come under the general provision requiring "ordinances" to be published; and there is no specific requirement that it be published. See section 22, Laws 1873-74, p. 149, and section 30, Laws 1877-78, p. 1017. Therefore no publication was necessary.

3. It is contended that there was a protest of two-thirds of the property owners, under section 30 of the charter. But the court finds that there was no such protest; and we think the evidence is sufficient to justify the finding.

4. Finally it is said that "the proceeding was an unmitigated fraud." The finding is that there was no fraud; and we think the evidence sustains the finding. We, therefore, advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

COPERTINI v. OPPERMAN et al. (No. 11,144)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1888)

COURTS—JURISDICTION—TITLE TO LAND.

Plaintiff brought an action in a superior court for $200, paid as a deposit on an agreement to purchase land, in which agreement defendants stipulated to return the deposit should their title prove defective. Held, under Const. Cal. art. 6, § 5, which enacts that in all cases at law which involve the title or possession to real property the superior courts have original jurisdiction, and Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 838, which provides that parties to an action in a justice's court cannot give evidence upon any question involving the title or possession to real property, that, as the right to recover the deposit in question primarily depended on the title of defendants, the superior court had original jurisdiction.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

Gaetano Copertini brought an action in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco against Richard and Richard H. Oppermann for the return of a deposit of $200 paid by him to them on agreeing to purchase certain real property. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal.

A. D. Splivalo, for appellants. G. H. Rixford, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was commenced in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. The complaint alleges "that at said city and county of San Francisco, on the 5th day of May, 1884, said defendants, claiming to be the owners of a certain piece or parcel of land situate on Maiden lane, in said city and county, (describing the land by metes and bounds,) in writing agreed to sell and convey the same to said plaintiff for the price of $2,400; that then and there plaintiff paid to them on account of such purchase price the sum of $200, and then and there defendants agreed, among other things, to return said sum of $200 to plaintiff, if the title to said real property should be defective; that on examination, the title of said defendants to said real property proved defective, and plaintiff alleges that the defendants have not, nor has either of them, a good title to said lands; that plaintiff has notified said defendants of the failure of their title as aforesaid, and demanded of them the said sum of $200, and that they have refused and still refuse to repay the same to the plaintiff." And the prayer is for judgment against the defendants for the sum of $200, with interest and costs. The defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the person of defendants or the subject of the action. The demurrer was overruled, and thereupon defendants answered, denying that their title to the premises was defective, and alleging that it was altogether good and sufficient. Defendants also, by way of cross-complaint, set up their contract to sell to plaintiff the lot in question for $2,400, the payment thereon by him of $200, and an agreement on his part to pay the remaining $2,200 within 30 days from the date of the contract; and they alleged that after the expiration of the 30 days they tendered to plaintiff a good and sufficient conveyance of the said property, and demanded payment of the said sum of $2,200, but plaintiff had refused to pay the same or any part thereof, and that they were still ready and willing to perform the contract on their part. Wherefore they prayed that the relief asked for by plaintiff be denied; that the contract made between the plaintiff and defendants be specifically performed; and that plaintiff be adjudged to pay defendants the sum of $2,200 on the execution by them to him of a good and sufficient deed of the premises. The plaintiff answered to the cross-complaint. In this condition of the pleadings the case was tried, and the court found that the defendants' title to the lot, which they had contracted to sell to plaintiff, was defective and not good, and that before the commencement of the action plaintiff notified defendants that their title had been found defective, and demanded from them the repayment of the $200 which he had advanced on account of the purchase price. Judgment was accordingly entered that plaintiff recover from defendants the $200, with interest and costs. The defendants appealed from the judgment, and have brought the case here on the judgment roll. They now insist (and this is the only point made) that the subject of the action was within the jurisdiction of a justice's court, and not within the jurisdiction of the superior court; and in support of their contention they cite Schroeder v. Wittram, 66 Cal. 636, 6 Pac. Rep. 737. The case cited does not decide the point. That was an action brought in a justice's court to recover back an advance payment made upon a contract similar to the one involved here. The case was tried in the justice's court upon an unverified answer, and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff. From that judgment an appeal was taken to the superior court, where a trial de novo was had, and a like judgment entered. An appeal was then taken to the supreme court, and the question was whether that court had jurisdiction of the case, the judgment being for less than $300. It was held that the court did not have jurisdiction, and the appeal was dismissed. The principal opinion favors the theory of appellants here, but it was concurred in by only one justice beside its author. Of the other three justices who took part in the decision two seem to have held that the case was one which, under section 838, Code Civil Proc., might have been transferred to the superior court, so as to give that court original jurisdiction to try it; but in the absence of such an application for transfer the justice could exercise jurisdiction. The third, the chief justice, thought the case, as presented, involved a question of title to land, and the justice of the peace had no jurisdiction. From this statement it is apparent that the case did not decide the question presented here by appellants. Of course, the superior courts have original jurisdiction "in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real property." The constitution so provides, (article 6, § 5.) and the Code declares that "the parties to an action in a justice's court cannot give evidence upon any question which involves the title or possession of real property." Code Civil Proc. § 838. But when is the title or possession of real property so involved as to vest original jurisdiction in the superior courts? In Holman v. Taylor, 31 Cal. 338, the court, speaking by RHODES, J., of the same language found in the constitution then in force, said: "It is difficult to define with precision the word 'involve,' as it is employed in that section. Its primary signification is to 'roll up or develop,' and it also means 'to comprise, to contain, to include, by rational or logical construction;' but none of these express the precise idea, and its exact synonym may not be found in a single word. The idea intended to be embodied in the phrase, 'cases at law, which involve the title or possession of real property,' may be expressed by the paraphrase: 'Cases at law in which the title or possession of real property is a material fact in the case, upon which the plaintiff relies for a recovery or the defendant for a defense.' When the title, or claim of title, the possession, or right of possession, of real property, or any right growing out of or dependent upon either, is alleged in the pleadings as an issuable fact, the case is within the meaning of the constitutional provision." The court further adds: "Where the title or possession of real property is merely a fact in controversy, where it is incidentally brought into the action, or is only collaterally in question, it cannot be said that the case involves the title or possession, within the meaning of that clause of the constitution." That was an action brought in the district court to recover the sum of $200, one-half of the value of a partition fence built by plaintiff on the alleged line between the lands of plaintiff and defendant. Defendant demurred on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject of the action, and the demurrer was overruled. The supreme court held that, under the statute, plaintiff's right of recovery depended primarily upon his title to the land on which the fence was erected, and the defendant's liability depended upon his title to the adjoining land, and that therefore title to real property was involved, and the district court had jurisdiction. In this case plaintiff sued for $200, and his right to recover depended primarily upon whether defendants had a defective or good title to the lot of land which they had contracted to sell. If the title was defective, he had a clear right to recover, and if good, no cause of action whatever. The words "good title" import that the owner has the title, legal and equitable, to all the land, and the words "defective title" mean that the party claiming to own has not the whole title, but some other person has title to a part or portion of the land. Now, as plaintiff could not recover if defendants had title to the property, and could recover if they had not, it would seem that the title of real property was a material fact in the case and was directly involved. In our opinion the court below had jurisdiction of the case, and the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

76 Cal. 187

McENTEE v. COOK et al. (No. 9,905.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1888.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—PURCHASE FROM STATE—APPLICATION.

Where, in an action to determine the right to purchase certain state land, it appeared that plaintiff's affidavit was in due conformity with the requirements of

Pol. Code Cal. § 3495, relating to the purchase of any portion of a sixteenth or thirty-sixth section of a township, but not with those of Pol. Code Cal. § 3500, providing the form of affidavit necessary on the purchase of other state lands, and that the land applied for was not any portion of a sixteenth or thirty-sixth section, held, that such affidavit was insufficient.

2. PLEADING—COMPLAINT—CONCLUSION OF LAW.

In an action to determine the right to purchase certain state lands, a statement in the complaint that on a certain day plaintiff filed in the surveyor general's office "his affidavit and application in due form," is not sufficient, being the statement of a mere conclusion of law.

3. APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—WHEN UNNECESSARY.

No bill of exceptions or statement is necessary on an appeal to set aside the overruling of defendants' demurrer where the transcript contains the demurrer, the order of court overruling the same, and the judgment in which is recited the demurrer, the ruling thereon, and the exceptions taken by defendants' counsel to that ruling.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; ROBERT MCGARVEY, Judge.

John McEntee brought this action against Hiram B. Cook and Willard B. Brown to determine the right to purchase certain state lands. Defendants demurred to complaint. Demurrer overruled. Defendants appeal.

T. L. Carothers, (E. D. Sawyer, of counsel,) for appellants. J. A. Cooper, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained. The action was commenced to determine a contest between the parties as to their rights to purchase from the state certain parts of sections 20 and 29, in township 18 N., range 17 W., Mount Diablo meridian. The plaintiff's application to purchase the land was made in May, 1884, and the defendants' applications were made in May, 1877.

Section 3495 of the Political Code, as it was framed in 1884, provided for the form of affidavit to be made by a person desiring to purchase any portion of a sixteenth or a thirty-sixth section of any township which had been surveyed by the United States, and section 3500 provided for the form to be used by any one desiring to purchase any part of the unsold portion of the 500,000 acres granted to the state for school purposes, or of the lands selected in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections. The complaint shows that plaintiff's affidavit was made under and in strict conformity to the requirements of section 3495, and not under and in conformity to the requirements of section 3500. But the land applied for by plaintiff was not any portion of a sixteenth or thirty-sixth section, and his affidavit was therefore not the one required in such a case. It is well settled that where one seeks to purchase land from the state he must state in his affidavit all the facts which the law makes requisite for such a purchase, and, failing to do that, his application must fail. Woods v. Sawtelle, 46 Cal. 389; Millidge v. Hyde, 67 Cal. 5, 6 Pac. Rep. 852; McKenzie v. Brandon, 71 Cal. 209, 12 Pac. Rep. 428. The statement in the complaint "that on the 26th day of May, 1884, plaintiff filed in the office of the surveyor general of the state of California his affidavit and application in due form," is the statement of a mere conclusion. The law requires the facts to be stated so that the court may see whether the application was made in due form or not. The record is sufficient. No bill of exceptions or statement was necessary. The transcript contains the demurrer, the order of the court overruling the same, and the judgment, in which is recited the demurrer, the ruling thereon, and the exception taken to that ruling by counsel for defendants. The judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to sustain the demurrer, giving leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint if he is so advised.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to sustain the demurrer, giving leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint if he is so advised.

SMITH v. MOTT. (No. 11,041.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1883.)

1. PLEDGE—OF HUSBAND'S PROPERTY FOR WIFE'S DEBT—RATIFICATION.

Where a wife pledges personal property belonging to her husband to secure a loan to herself of $200, and the husband, upon learning of the matter, promises by parol to pay the debt if the pledgee will wait, which the latter agrees to do and does, these acts constitute an agreement, binding upon the husband, that the property shall remain in pledge for the wife's debt.

2. SAME—STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

An agreement that personal property given to secure $200 shall remain in pledge for the debt of another need not be in writing.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco. T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

Replevin by George G. Smith to recover a piano pledged by his wife for a loan to her of $200 from defendant, J. H. Mott. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Royce & Cummins, for appellant. Van Schaick & Jacobs, and A. D. Splivalo, (F. A. Berlin, of counsel,) for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Replevin for a piano. The plaintiff was the owner of the piano. His wife pledged it without his knowledge or consent, to secure a loan to her from the defendant. When the plaintiff learned of the whereabouts of the piano, he went to the defendant, and, after being informed of the position of affairs, made a parol promise to pay the interest and storage within a few days and the principal in three or four months, if the defendant would wait that time, which the defendant agreed to do and did do. The court below sustained the validity of the pledge on the theory that there was a ratification. It is probably not technically correct to speak of a "ratification" where the transaction was by one who neither was nor assumed to be an agent, but who acted on her own account. And it may be conceded that the parol promise of the plaintiff to pay the debt was within the statute of frauds, and void, so far as his personal liability to pay was concerned. See Crooks v. Tully, 50 Cal. 255. But we think that what occurred amounted to an agreement between the parties that the property should remain in pledge for the wife's debt. This agreement was collateral to, and distinct from, the contract to pay, and was not required to be in writing. Jones, Pledges, § 5; Civil Code, § 2986. The property being already in possession of the defendant, no redelivery to him was necessary. Jones, Pledges, § 36. And the agreement for forbearance of the wife's debt was sufficient consideration. 1 Pars. Cont. *443 We therefore advise that the order denying the motion for new trial be affirmed.

We concur. BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

SIEBER v. BLANC. (No. 11,332.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1883.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT—DUTY OF LANDLORD TO REPAIR—NOTICE.

In an action by a tenant against his landlord for injuries resulting from the defective condition of the leased building, which the landlord had covenanted to repair, a finding for plaintiff is not warranted by the evidence where it appears that no notice to repair was given by the tenant.

2. SAME—STATUTORY LIABILITY TO REPAIR.

Under Civ. Code Cal. § 1941, which provides that the lessor of a building constructed for the occupation of human beings, must put it in a condition fit for such occupation, such lessor is not liable to a tenant for injuries resulting from the defective condition of the leased building, it not having been alleged or found that the building was intended for the occupation of human beings, and the only statutory consequence of a breach of the lessor's obligation being that the tenant may either vacate the premises, or, after notice to the landlord, expend one month's rent towards the repairs.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

Action by Mathilde Sieber against Alexander Blanc, her landlord, to recover damages for injuries received by plaintiff by reason of the faulty condition of the building leased by defendant to the plaintiff. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

L. Quint and Cary, Sullivan & Sullivan, for appellant. Wm. H. Mott, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action by a tenant against her landlord for injuries received by reason of the condition of the building. The court found that "the floor of the back room of the second story of said premises was defectively and insufficiently supported, and the lumber in the flooring thereof worn and rotten." It does not appear that the landlord himself constructed the building, but at the time of the lease he "then and there covenanted and agreed with the plaintiff to repair said premises." Judgment passed for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals. At common law there was no duty resting upon the lessor of real property (except, perhaps, where furnished houses were let for lodgings,) to put or keep the property in any particular condition or fit for any particular purpose. Brewster v. De Fremery, 33 Cal. 341; Loupe v. Wood, 51 Cal. 586; Jaffe v. Harteau, 56 N. Y. 398. And where, as here, the lessor made an express covenant to repair, such covenant was construed to mean, in a reasonable time after notice from the tenant. 1 Tayl. Landl. & Ten. (8th Ed.) § 330; Wood, Landl. & Ten. (Ed. 1881) 610; Spellman v. Bannigan, 36 Hun, 174. There was no such notice in this case; and hence, so far as the action rests upon the covenant, the evidence is insufficient to support the somewhat general finding of the court. Nor was there any liability arising from section 1941 of the Civil Code, which provides that the lessor of a building intended for the occupation of human beings, must put it in a condition fit for such occupation. In the first place it is not alleged or found that the building was intended for the occupation of human beings. And in the second place it was held, in Van Every v. Ogg, 59 Cal. 566, as we understand the decision, that the obligation imposed upon the landlord by section 1941 "should be limited by the extent of the privilege conferred upon the tenant" by section 1942; and that therefore the only consequence of a breach of the landlord's obligation is that the tenant may either vacate the premises, or expend one month's rent towards the repairs after notice, etc. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Proc. § 1465," a mortgagee of an insolvent's homestead need not prove his claim in the insolvency proceedings, and the fact that he might have realized part of his claim in such proceedings does not prevent him foreclosing for the amount of his mortgage.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. GREENE, Judge.

Action against J. A. Robinson and Sarah, his wife, to foreclose a mortgage given by defendants on their homestead. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

R. Thompson, for appellants. W. F. Goad, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action to foreclose a mortgage. The defendants, who were husband and wife, declared a homestead upon the property, and afterwards mortgaged it to the plaintiff. Subsequently, the husband was adjudged to be an insolvent, his estate being sufficient to pay something towards his debts. The only point made upon the appeal is that the plaintiff should have proved his claim in the insolvency proceedings. The idea of counsel, so far as we understand him, is that the plaintiff should have got what he could from the estate, and then proceeded to foreclose for the balance. This idea is based upon the analogy to probate proceedings and upon section 60 of the insolvent act, which provides that the insolvency court shall set apart a homestead "in the same manner as provided in section 1465 of the Code of Civil Procedure." Whatever may be the law with regard to mortgages upon probate homesteads, we can see no ground for the position of the appellants. The provision above quoted from section 60 does not refer to all the provisions of the probate law as to homesteads and claims. It refers only to a specified section, which relates merely to the manner of setting apart homesteads. In addition to this, section 44 of the insolvent act seems to negative the theory of the appellants. We think the appeal is without merit, and we therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed, with 5 per cent. damages.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed, with 5 per cent. damages.

TURNER v. McDONALD. (No. 11,181.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1888.)

VENDOR AND VENDEE—GOOD TITLE.

In an action brought for the return of a deposit paid on entering into an agreement for the purchase of certain land in California, the vendor stipulating that the deposit would be returned if the title proved defective, it appeared that one S., who owned the property in 1853, mortgaged the same by a deed absolute in form to one T.; that T., by power of attorney, gave one A. power to sell any land which he then owned or was interested in, in the state; that T. afterwards foreclosed his mortgage, and bought the property under his foreclosure decree; that then T., by A., his attorney, made a quitclaim deed of the property to defendant's grantor; subsequently T. received his sheriff's deed, and died in the state of Michigan, leaving all his property to his wife; that the will was proved in Michigan, but not in California, and there was nothing to show whether there were any debts in California against the estate or not. Held, as a good title is one free from grave doubts, and fairly deducible of record, that the title was defective, as a deed absolute, if intended as a mortgage, cannot transfer the title between the parties, and therefore A. had no power to convey to H.; and, as the will was not probated in California, it could not be said that T.'s wife had beyond doubt a good title.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco. JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

R. B. Turner, assignee of one Woodworth, brought an action against Mark L. McDonald to recover back a deposit paid by Woodworth on entering into an agreement to purchase certain property. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

James A. Waymire, for appellant. Edward P. Cole, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. On the 19th day of February, 1879, the defendant contracted to sell to one Woodworth a lot in the city of San Francisco for $20,500, and received from him on account, and as a deposit to secure the sale, the sum of $500. The contract was made "upon the following terms, to which both parties are mutually bound: Ten days are to be allowed for legal search of title. If it is not found to be perfect, the deposit, for which this is a receipt, is to be returned. If the title is found perfect, and the sale is not consummated in accordance with the above terms, the deposit is to be forfeited." Within the 10 days allowed, Woodworth submitted an abstract of title to John R. Jarboe, an attorney at law, for examination, and was ready and willing to complete the purchase, if Jarboe pronounced the title good. After examination, Jarboe decided that the title was not perfect, and he informed defendant of his decision about the time it was made. Woodworth then demanded from the defendant a return of his deposit, and the defendant refused and neglected to pay back the money, but did not, so far as appears, offer or tender to him any deed of the property. Woodworth assigned his claim to the plaintiff, and this action was brought to recover back the $500, with interest. The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

In support of the appeal it is urged that the defendant's title was, in fact, perfect, and the court should have so found from the evidence. A perfect title must be one that is good and valid beyond all reasonable doubt. Whether the title in particular cases is good or not is a question which it is often difficult to determine, and one upon which lawyers and judges sometimes disagree. "Though the court," it has been said, "may entertain an opinion in favor of the title, yet if it be satisfied that that opinion may fairly and reasonably be questioned by other competent persons, it will refuse specific performance. Thus, in a case before Sir JOHN LEACH, he expressed the strong inclination of his opinion to be in favor of the title, and yet refused the relief sought by the plaintiff; and in the recent case of Pyrke v. Waddingham, 10 Hare, 1, in which the vice-chancellor, TURNER, discussed the subject now before us, he expressed an opinion in favor of the title, but nevertheless dismissed the vendor's bill with costs. Still less, of course, will the court force a title on a purchaser in opposition to the decision of another court, though it may think that decision to be wrong." Fry, Spec. Perf. § 579. See, also, Richmond v. Gray, 3 Allen, 25; Sturtevant v. Jaques, 14 Allen, 523. It was shown on the trial that the title to the lot in controversy here was, in January, 1855, in one Stevens, and that on the 8th day of that month he mortgaged the lot to one Charles S. Tripler. The mortgage was by a deed absolute in form. On the 3d day of December, 1862, Tripler executed a power of attorney to one Abell, giving him power to sell any real property which he (Tripler) then owned, or was interested in, in the state of California. On the 20th of December, 1862, Tripler commenced suit to foreclose his mortgage, and on the 10th of July, 1863, he bought in the property under his decree of foreclosure. On the 8th of October, 1863, Tripler, by Abell, his attorney, made a quitclaim deed of the lot to Hutchinson, defendant's grantor. On the 13th of January, 1864, Tripler received his sheriff's deed. Some time in 1866, Tripler died in the state of Michigan, leaving a last will, by which he gave all his property to his surviving wife, Eunice Tripler, "in confident expectation that the same will be expended in her own comfortable support, and in the education and maintenance of our children, leaving it entirely discretionary with her to make such provision for our children as she, in the exercise of her judgment, may deem best." While the will speaks of the children, it nowhere gives the names, ages, or number of them. The will was admitted to probate in Michigan, but was never probated in this state, and there was no proof as to whether there were any debts against the estate here or not. In March, 1869, Eunice Tripler executed a quitclaim deed of the lot to defendant's grantor. It is admitted that a title to be good "should be free from litigation, palpable defects, and grave doubts; should consist of both legal and equitable titles, and should be fairly deducible of record." Upon the showing made, it seem to us that defendant's title was not free from grave doubts as to its sufficiency. When Tripler made his power of attorney to Abell he did not own, and had no legal interest in, the lot. It is settled law in this state that a deed absolute, if intended as a mortgage, does not transfer title between the parties to it. Cunningham v. Hawkins, 27 Cal. 606; Taylor v. McLain, 64 Cal. 514, 2 Pac. Rep. 399; Healy v. O'Brien, 66 Cal. 519, 6 Pac. Rep. 386; section 744, Code Civil Proc., which is the same as section 260 of the old practice act. But if Tripler had no interest in the lot when he made his power of attorney to Abell, can it be said, beyond doubt, that the deed afterwards made by the attorney conveyed any interest therein? Again, when one dies leaving property in this state, that property must be disposed of according to the laws of this state; and if he left a will, that will must be proved here, before it can affect property situated here. Now, can it be said, beyond doubt, that Mrs. Tripler could convey by quitclaim deed a good title to the lot in question before the will under which she claimed it was produced and proved here? It seems to us that these questions must be answered in the negative, and that it must follow, therefore, that defendant's title was not "fairly deducible of record." There is no other question requiring special notice. We find no error in the record, and therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

EMERSON v. BERGIN et ux. (No. 11,120.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1888.)

EASEMENT—WATER-COURSE—PLEADING—STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

In an action to restrain defendants from diverting the waters of a stream from plaintiff's land, an averment in the complaint of an agreement with defendants' grantor, under which plaintiff long enjoyed and now claims a right to receive upon his land water from said stream by means of an aqueduct constructed over defendants' land, which defendants have destroyed, is a sufficient allegation of a right to an easement over defendants' land, although not alleging such agreement to have been in writing.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; BELDEN, Judge.

Suit by Silas B. Emerson against John Bergin and Francisca Bergin for injunction and damages for diverting a water-course. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

G. A. Heinlen, for appellant.

It is not necessary, in actions of this character, to allege that the agreement under which plaintiff built these water-works was in writing. The statute of frauds has changed the rule of evidence, but not the rule of pleadings. Tucker v. Edwards, 3 Pac. Rep. 233; Goulds Pl. c. 4, § 43, and cases; Marshall v. Water Co., 5 Pac. Rep. 101; Vassault v. Edwards, 43 Cal. 458; Wakefield v. Greenhood, 29 Cal. 598; Hayt v. Hunt, 15 Pac. Rep. 410; Bliss, Code Pl. 312; 1 Chit. Pl. 270; *Miller v. S. O. Houghton, for respondents.

The matter stricken out did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 414. There was no allegation that the easement claimed to convey water across lands of defendant was acquired by grant or by adverse user. Easements are created by grant. Duinneen v. Rich, 22 Wis. 550; Cook v. Pridgen, 45 Ga. 331; Adams v. Andrews, 15 Q. B. 284; 1 Washb. Real Prop. p. 552. To acquire rights to real estate by prescription, the use for five years must be exclusive, open, and notorious, under a claim of right hostile in its inception, and with the knowledge of the owner, and it must affirmatively appear that the claim was hostile. Miller v. Garlock, 8 Barb. 153; Parker v. Foot, 19 Wend. 313. A license creates no estate in land, and may be revoked at any time. Cronkhite v. Cronkhite, 94 N. Y. 323; Johnson v. Skillman, 29 Minn. 95, 12 N. W. Rep. 149; Wiseman v. Lucksinger, 84 N. Y. 31. The matter stricken out was redundant, and was properly stricken out. Code Civil Proc. § 453.

BELCHER, C. C. The court below, on motion of defendants' attorney, struck out a part of the complaint. The defendants then answered, and upon the issues raised by them the case was tried and judgment entered in their favor. The plaintiff appealed, and in support of his appeal insists that the court erred in striking out a portion of his complaint. The action was brought to obtain an injunction restraining defendants from diverting from the land of plaintiff the waters of a small stream called "Arroyo Permanente," and for damages. The complaint alleged that for more than 20 years plaintiff had owned and occupied a farm in Santa Clara county containing about 1,100 acres, through which a running stream of water called "Arroyo Permanente," had its natural course or bed; that plaintiff had kept a large number of cattle, horses, and sheep on his farm, and had obtained water for them, and for domestic purposes, at his house from the stream referred to until the waters thereof were diverted by defendants; that in 1865 one Robert McKubin owned and occupied a tract of land bordering on the Arroyo Permanente above the plaintiff's farm; and that in that year plaintiff and McKubin jointly constructed a wooden flume from a point on the stream above the latter's land to a point selected by him on his land, and through and by means of this flume they diverted and appropriated so much of the water of the stream as would flow through the same; that at the time of constructing the flume it was understood and expressly agreed by and between the parties that the water so appropriated, diverted, and conveyed through the flume should be equally used by them upon their respective tracts of land, and the flume was constructed and the water diverted through the same, under and with this understanding and agreement; that at the time of constructing the flume plaintiff, with the consent of McKubin and by agreement with him, constructed a tank at the foot of the flume into which the waters flowing through the same were discharged, and also laid a pipe, connecting with the tank, across a portion of McKubin's land and his own, to his buildings, through which pipe he drew from the tank his moiety of the water conveyed through the flume; and at the same time McKubin laid down a pipe of the same capacity, leading to the buildings on his land, through which he also diverted and conveyed to its place of use his moiety of the water, and that so long as McKubin continued to own and occupy his tract of land he and plaintiff continued to equally divide and use the water conveyed through the flume, upon their respective tracts of land; that afterwards, about the year 1873, and while the flume, tank, and pipes were so laid and in use, the defendant Francesca Bergin, then Francesca Price, became the owner of the McKubin tract of land, and succeeded to all his rights therein, and ever since has been and still is the owner thereof; that in the year 1876 defendant Francesca and plaintiff constructed a new flume in place of the one originally built, and through this new flume continued to divert and convey water from the Arroyo Permanente, and to use the same, dividing it equally, on the lands owned by them respectively; that shortly after the construction of this new flume defendants intermarried, and have ever since been and are now husband and wife; that in the year 1879 plaintiff, with the knowledge and consent of defendants, at large expense, laid down and substituted for the wooden pipe, through which he had previously drawn his proportion of the water brought through the flume, a cement pipe of the same capacity, through which he continued to convey to his buildings his proportion of the water, until the same was disconnected by defendants; that in the year 1881 plaintiff, at his own expense, and with the knowledge and consent of defendants, substituted for the wooden flume three pipes, through which plaintiff and defendants continued to divert and convey the water of the Arroyo Permanente, for use on their respective lands, until some time in the fall of the year 1882, when defendants broke and destroyed the connection of the cement pipe through which plaintiff took water from the tank, as aforesaid, and they thus prevented, and have ever since continued to prevent, plaintiff from conveying any water from the tank to his land and the buildings thereon. It is then further alleged that defendants have built a dam across the stream on the land of defendant Francesca, and have placed in position a hydraulic ram below the dam, and by means thereof they force water from the creek through a pipe upon the land of defendant, and use the same for irrigation and other purposes; that by means of the dam and ram they divert and cause to be absorbed so much of the water of the stream that the same has ceased to flow to and upon the land of plaintiff, and threaten and will continue so to do unless restrained, and that plaintiff has sustained damages in the sum of $5,500. The part of the complaint stricken out was that commencing with the averments about the construction of the flume and pipes by plaintiff and McKubin in 1865, and ending with the disconnecting of plaintiff's cement pipe and stopping the flow of water through the same by defendants in 1882. The respondents justify the action of the court upon the ground that the part stricken out showed only a parol license, which was subject to be and was revoked by them. The appellant, on the other hand, insists that under his averments he could have proved that he had acquired an easement over respondents' land, which was not subject to their revocation.

A license in respect to real estate is defined to be "an authority to do a particular act, or series of acts, on another's land, without possessing any estate therein." 1 Washb. Real Prop. side page 398, and authorities cited. And the general rule is that a mere license may be revoked at any time at the pleasure of the licensor. Potter v. Mercer, 53 Cal. 667; Cronkhite v. Cronkhite, 94 N. Y. 323; Wiseman v. Lucksinger, 84 N. Y. 31. "An easement is said to be a permanent interest in another's land, with a right at all times to enter and enjoy it, and must therefore be founded upon a grant by deed or writing, or upon prescription." 2 Hil. Real Prop. (3d Ed.) 5; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 398. And the owner of an easement has the right at all reasonable times to enter on the servient premises and make any necessary repairs. 2 Wait Act. & Def. 743, and cases cited. It will be observed that, according to plaintiff's averments, the flume, tank, and pipes were constructed, and the water was diverted and distributed, under and in accordance with an agreement made between plaintiff and McKubin, but whether that agreement was in writing or not, so as to take the case out of the statute of frauds, does not appear. It is settled law that where one has agreed to sell a piece of real property, and an action is brought to enforce the agreement, the plaintiff is not required to allege that the agreement was in writing. "The averment that the agreement was made is sufficient, without alleging that it was reduced to writing, and signed; but if the statute requires the agreement to be in writing, the party alleging the agreement must, if the allegation be denied, prove it by the production of the writing or other competent evidence." Vassault v. Edwards, 43 Cal. 458; Coles v. Bowne, 10 Paige, 526; Champlin v. Parish, 11 Paige, 405; Hayt v. Hunt, 15 Pac. Rep. 410. Now, if this be the rule where one agrees to transfer to another his whole interest in real property, why should it not be the rule when he agrees only to transfer some smaller interest or create an easement? We are unable to perceive any distinction between the two supposed cases. We think the complaint was sufficient, and under it the plaintiff should have been permitted to prove, if he could, that he acquired an easement to conduct water across defendants' land to his own land, which is still a subsisting right. The court erred in striking out a part of the complaint, and for this error the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

SIERRA M., S. & M. CO. v. HARTFORD FIRE INS. CO. et al. (No. 11,050.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 21, 1888.)

1. INSURANCE—CONDITIONS OF POLICY—WATCHMAN.

In an action on a policy, one condition of which required the assured during all the time the mill, which was part of the insured premises, was idle to employ a watchman to be in and upon the premises insured, day and night, it appeared that the required watchman was employed, but that when the fire occurred he was about 65 feet from the insured premises, though engaged in watching the same, and was upon higher ground than that on which the mill stood, from which he had a better view of the insured premises than if he had been in the mill. Held that, the assured having employed a proper watchman, had complied with the requirement of the policy, although the watchman was not actually upon the insured premises at the time of the fire.

2. SAME—WATER SUPPLY.

In an action on a policy, one condition of which required the assured to keep a supply of water constantly on top of the mill, which was part of the insured premises, in readiness for immediate use, it appeared that a tank about two feet deep and three feet square was located on the roof, but below the apex thereof, and that it was fed by a small flume. Held, that the jury were justified in believing that the tank was sufficiently supplied with water.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

Action on a fire insurance policy brought by the Sierra Milling, Smelting & Mining Company against the Hartford Fire Insurance Company and R. Hewson. Judgment for plaintiff, and Hartford Fire Insurance Company appeals.

Gray & Haven, for appellant. H. A. Powell and Arthur Rodgers, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action to recover a loss upon a fire insurance policy. Judgment was given for the plaintiff, and from that and an order denying a new trial defendant appeals. It is contended by the appellant that the jury found contrary to the instructions of the court, and that the evidence before them went, without contradiction, to show that the plaintiff had violated at least two of the warranties by which it was bound by the terms of the policy, and that the verdict was, therefore, against the evidence. The obligations thus imposed are to this effect: That during all the time the mill, which was part of the insured premises, remained idle the plaintiff should employ a watchman to be in and upon the premises insured, day and night; that the plaintiff should keep a supply of water to be constantly on top of the mill and in readiness for immediate use whenever required. It is alleged in the answer "that no watchman was employed at or in charge of the premises at the time of said fire;" and that "no water whatever was on top of the said mill at the time of said fire." The evidence is to the effect that a watchman was employed, whose duty it was to be at the premises insured and to be a sentinel in looking after them at all times when the mill was idle, but when the fire took place he was in front of a blacksmith shop belonging to the mill property, but not insured, which was about 65 feet from the mill, and that he was engaged at that time in watching over the insured premises, and was upon higher ground than that on which the mill stood, where he could have a better opportunity of seeing the mill, the outside machinery, and the tramway, which were all insured, than if he had been in the mill. So far as any negligence of the watchman is concerned in fulfilling his duty, it is clear that he was diligent in watching, and the only doubt which can be said to rest upon the plaintiff's compliance with the warranty, is whether by its terms it was bound to see that the watchman which it employed, was either in the mill or immediately at it, or the tramway or some other part of the property actually insured, or whether the warranty only bound the corporation to employ a proper watchman to be at and upon the premises whenever the mill was idle. To us it seems as if the corporation was only bound to employ a proper watchman to be in and upon the premises when the mill was idle. And when the watchman of a proper kind was employed to perform this duty, the plaintiff could not be held responsible for his not being, at the time of the fire, actually in the mill, or beside it, or the tramway or other insured property. Although the blacksmith shop was not insured, it was, in point of fact, upon the premises to which the insured property belonged, and the watchman, posted where he was, was just as much in, upon, and in charge of the insured premises as if he had been in the mill. As we understand the issues raised by the pleadings, as to the warranties, the fact that the watchman was not in the mill or at the tramway when the fire occurred, is not alleged to be a breach of the warranty, but this is claimed in the argument, and the fact that he was 65 feet from the mill, in front of a blacksmith shop in full view of the insured property, is urged as proof that he was not on the insured premises when they burned, and therefore the contract of warranty was violated. We do not see any element in the acts of the corporation or the watchman which show any violation of the warranty, either through failure to employ the watchman, as required, or in his or the corporation's negligence in the performance of his duty as a sentinel. In this case, under the issues made by the pleadings, the inquiry addressed to the jury was, did or did not the plaintiff have a watchman employed upon the premises insured at the time of the fire? It is not apparently questioned now by the appellant but what the watchman was so employed by the plaintiff, but the contention appears to be that the warranty consisted in something else besides that which was claimed in the answer, viz., that the watchman, although employed to be in and upon the premises, was not there, and that therefore a breach of the warranty is asserted. To us this seems to be nothing more than an allegation of negligence upon the part of the watchman, and for this the plaintiff was not responsible under section 2629 of the Civil Code. The case of Mining Co. v. Insurance Co., 67 Cal. 28, 7 Pac. Rep. 4, is cited in support of the defendant's contention that the fact of the watchman not being in the mill, or at it, or the tramway, or, as is expressed by the learned counsel, "on the premises insured," was a breach of the warranty. But an examination of that case discloses the fact that there the issue upon which the case was tried was whether or not the watchman was in fact in and upon the premises; here the issue as made by the pleadings is, was he employed at or in charge of the premises at the time of the fire? In Wenzel v. Insurance Co., 67 Cal. 440, 7 Pac. Rep. 817, it was held upon the facts found that no one was in fact employed as a watchman of the premises, because the individual, whom it was claimed filled that position, worked in the day-time 2,100 feet from the insured premises, and at night slept 900 feet from them. Here it is clear that the watchman was employed to do what the policy required, and that at the time of the fire he was at the premises, being in front of the blacksmith shop that belonged to and was substantially a part of the premises including the mill and tramway, which two last were insured, on duty as a sentinel, and in a more favorable situation to keep guard and watch over the premises insured than if he had been in the mill or on or near the tramway. We do not see, under the defendant's contention, how being in the mill would have satisfied the conditions of the policy any more than being a hundred feet off on the tramway, which was insured, or close up to the mill, where he would have been less likely to have seen the fire at its inception, than where he was, 65 feet off, in front of the blacksmith shop, and on higher ground than the mill itself. We think that upon this state of facts the warranty is shown to have been fully complied with.

As to the question made upon the matter of inadequate water supply kept on the top of the mill, it is evident that no place on the roof was prescribed under the contract as being the particular place where the supply was to be located, and no specific amount of water was mentioned as being necessary to be so kept. Both these questions, therefore, were matters of fact to be ascertained by the jury upon the evidence before them; which has been done. The evidence was that a tank about two feet deep and three feet square was located on the roof, but below the apex thereof, that it was fed by a small flume carrying water, and the jury was justified in believing that the tank was sufficiently supplied with water. At any rate, upon the testimony before them, we are not disposed to say that their verdict upon the question submitted to them was manifestly wrong, and against all the evidence.

As to the instructions given and excepted to, we must say that we had some difficulty in determining which of them precisely were excepted to, but finally after much labor and consideration, we were enabled to identify them, and taking them and all the others together, although some of them perhaps, were subject to the objections made, yet we think the law was fairly put before the jury, and they could not have been misled to the defendant's prejudice, and that was sufficient, and has been so held in numerous cases. People v. Tomlinson, 66 Cal. 344, 5 Pac. Rep. 509.

We perceive nothing in the record which shows a misrepresentation of the value of the property insured which should entitle the defendant to defeat the plaintiff's recovery. No prejudicial error appearing, we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

CLEARY v. CITY R. CO. (No. 9,794.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1888.)

DAMAGES—MEASURE OF—PARENT AND CHILD.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 376, 377, providing that a father may maintain an action for the death of his minor child, when the same is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, and that such damages may be given in such action as, under all the circumstances of the case, may seem just, an instruction limiting the measure of damages to such sum as would fully and fairly compensate the father for the loss of his child's services during her minority, in addition to medical and funeral expenses, is erroneous; the mental anguish and suffering of the parents being also an element proper to be considered in determining the amount of the recovery.¹

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

Action for damages for death of minor child, by Patrick Cleary against the City Railroad Company. Verdict for plaintiff. Damages, $1,000. New trial granted, on motion of plaintiff, for errors in law. Defendant appeals. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 376, provides that a father may maintain an action for injury or death of minor child when the same is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another. Section 377 provides that in every such action such damages may be given as, under all the circumstances of the case, may seem just.

Wilson & Wilson, for appellant. P. Reddy and F. R. Whitcomb, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was brought to recover damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff's minor daughter, Julia Cleary, which resulted in her death, and are alleged to have been caused by the negligence of an employe of defendant, a street railway company in the city of San Francisco. The case was tried before a jury, and the verdict was for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,000. The plaintiff moved for a new trial on the ground of errors in law occurring at the trial and excepted to by him, and the court granted the motion. The appeal is by defendant from that order. At the request of the plaintiff the court instructed the jury in reference to the measure of damages as follows: "You are instructed that you have the right to award or give to the plaintiff, if you find in his favor, such damages as may, under all the circumstances of the case, be just and reasonable." Afterwards the court, of its own motion, gave to the jury another instruction upon the measure of damages, in these words: "Should you find for the plaintiff, the damages recoverable by the plaintiff, in addition to the medical and funeral expenses, would be such a sum as would fully and fairly compensate the father for the loss of the service of his daughter during her minority, and you should not, in considering the matter, take into account the personal wrongs done to the deceased, nor the pain and suffering inflicted on her, nor on the father or mother. In other words, the measure of plaintiff's damages, in case he recovers, should be such sum, and such sum only, as would fully and fairly compensate the father for the loss of his child's services during her minority, in addition to the expenses of medical attendance and funeral expenses."

The first instruction was proper, (Code Civil Proc. § 377,) and the second was erroneous, (Beeson v. Mining Co., 57 Cal. 20; Cook v. Railroad Co., 60 Cal. 604; Nehrbas v. Railroad Co., 62 Cal. 320.) It is true, the damages awarded to the parent in such cases are not for the pain and suffering inflicted on the infant; but the loss of the child's services during minority, the mental anguish and suffering of the parents, in addition to the medical attendance and funeral expenses, are elements which, under our peculiar statute, (Code Civil Proc. §§ 376, 377,) are proper to be considered in determining the amount of the recovery. Every error is presumed to work injury to the party against whom it is committed, unless it affirmatively appears from the record that no injury did or could result. Rice v. Heath, 39 Cal. 609. The instruction complained of improperly limited and controlled the jury in determining what amount of damages plaintiff was entitled to recover, and we are unable to say that it did not operate to his prejudice. Other instructions were given to the jury, which were excepted to by the respondent, and are claimed to have been erroneous; but they need not be considered here. LLEWELLYN STEAM-CONDENSER MANUF'G CO. v. MALTER et al. (No. 9,762.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1888.)

1. SALE—ACTION FOR PRICE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action to recover the purchase price of steam-heaters, the evidence for plaintiff showed that the heaters were scheduled at certain prices, and that defendants, when purchasing, knew of the schedule, and that it was agreed between plaintiff's agent and defendants that the latter should receive a certain per cent. on such prices, if they took the heaters. Defendant denied ever having purchased or negotiated with plaintiff or its agent for the heaters. Held, that the question whether defendants purchased the heaters, and for the scheduled prices, is for the jury.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE.

Where there is no direct evidence showing the price defendants were to pay for certain steam-heaters sold them by plaintiff, but it appears that there was a schedule of prices, and there is testimony to show that defendants purchased under an agreement that if they took the heaters they were to have a certain commission to be computed on the schedule prices, and no other prices were mentioned, it cannot be said that there is no evidence of the price to be paid.

3. SAME—PRICE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where persons enter into an agreement that, if they buy certain property at a price stated, they shall be entitled to a certain commission thereon, it is error for the court not to instruct the jury to deduct such commission from the contract price in case they find that the plaintiff is entitled to recover in his action on the contract.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

Action for goods sold and delivered by the Llewellyn Steam-Condenser Manufacturing Company against George H. Malter and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

R. Percy Wright and W. C. Flint, for appellants. J. H. B. Wilkins, C. A. Webb, and Page & Eels, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. This is an action for goods sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendants. The goods were two steam-condensers or heaters. The original claim was for three condensers, but on the trial the claim for one of them was abandoned by plaintiff. The trial was by jury, who found a verdict for plaintiff for $1,100.

It is contended by appellants that there was no evidence respecting the price to be paid for either of the heaters, nor any evidence respecting their value. We think there was some evidence of the price to be paid for the heaters. The plaintiffs had a list or schedule of prices for these heaters,—$625 for one, and $475 for the other,—and there was testimony tending to show that the contract was made with reference to those schedule prices. The defendants were to be allowed by plaintiff a commission of 20 per cent. on taking and using these heaters, and this commission was to be computed on the schedule prices. No other prices were mentioned in the negotiation between the parties, and the commission could be computed alone on the prices set down in the schedule. A like contention is made as to the evidence in regard to the receipt and acceptance of the heaters. An examination of the record shows that there was evidence tending to show such receipt and acceptance. It is contended that the court erred in its charge to the jury in regard to the value of the heaters. On this point the court, in its charge, used this language: "It is claimed by the plaintiff that one of these heaters—the 48-inch heater—was worth $475, and a 60-inch heater was worth $625. If you should conclude that the plaintiff is entitled to recover for both of these, the result would be that he would be entitled to a verdict for $1,100. If you should conclude that he was entitled to recover for only one, then your verdict would depend upon which you think they are entitled to,—if the 48-inch heater, your verdict should be for $475; if the 60-inch, $625." There was really no direct evidence of the value of the heaters; that is to say, no witness was asked or testified what the heaters, or either of them, was worth. The evidence tended to show that the defendants contracted with plaintiff with reference to a schedule in which the prices were set down as $475 for one heater, and $625 for the other. But the evidence whether defendants agreed to pay these schedule prices was circumstantial. Such agreement was to be inferred from circumstances stated by a witness. With regard to the 60-inch heater, Jones, who acted as an agent for plaintiff in making the contract, answered to the following questions as stated below: "Question. What was the price agreed upon between yourself and Mr. Malter at that time? Answer. Twenty per cent. Q. What was the price of the heater? A. It was $625; that is the schedule price." The witness further says that he agreed to pay them (the defendants) 20 per cent. on the schedule prices of the heaters if they took them. As to the 48-inch heater, the following was the evidence as to the price: The witness Jones was asked: "Was any price agreed upon between yourself and Malter, Lind & Co. at the time of the sale of this heater?" To which he answered: "Of course, they all knew the price of the heater was $475,—the 48-inch one. That is the schedule price." Now, in regard to both heaters, and clearly in regard to the 48-inch heater, it may be mentioned that the question whether plaintiffs and defendants contracted with regard to the prices named on the schedule, or did not contract with regard to such prices, was to be determined, and to be determined by the jury. We do not regard this case as one where the evidence as to the price of the articles purchased is all one way; for Malter, the defendant, with whom Jones negotiated, states in his testimony that he never ordered or purchased a heater from Jones or the company he represented. This testimony should be regarded as a denial of the purchase and all its incidents. We think that the court, in that portion of the charge above quoted, invaded the province of the jury, and took from it a question which, under the law, the jurors were to determine. We are also of opinion that the court erred in ignoring in his charge the 20 per cent. commission to which defendants were entitled on purchasing the heaters. This percentage should have been deducted from the price or value of the heaters, and the jury should have been directed to make this deduction in fixing the amount of their verdict. The other portions of the charge excepted to are without error. As the cause has to be reversed and sent to the court below for a new trial, we think it proper to say that on the new trial it will be the better course to admit the evidence which counsel for defendants proposed to offer on the cross-examination of the witness Jones, and which will be found stated on page 11 of the transcript. Such a course will conduce to a fair trial of the cause. For the error above noted, the judgment and order must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. So ordered.

PEOPLE ex rel. REDEMEYER v. ANDERSON & U. V. R. Co. (No. 9,961.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1888.)

1. TUNPIKES AND TOLL-ROADS—EXPLANATION OF FRANCHISE.

A toll company which has acquired its right to construct and maintain its toll-road under an order of a county board of supervisors made in pursuance of a special act of the legislature providing that the board may grant a franchise "for any term not more than fifteen years from the date of said charter" has no right to collect tolls on its road after the expiration of such 15 years.

2. SAME—RIGHT TO ENJOIN COLLECTION OF TOLL—FINDINGS.

In a proceeding by the people to restrain a toll company from collecting toll on a wagon road, its franchise having expired, a finding that at the expiration of such franchise said road "became and ever since has been a public highway" is not inconsistent with a finding that defendant's grantor "procured the right of way," but that no proceedings to condemn the land were taken, and that "no owner of said land or of any part thereof has ever heretofore conveyed the same to the public, or granted the right of way across the same," as such right of way may have been acquired by prescription; and the latter finding does not affect the right of the people to maintain the proceeding.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; ROBERT MCGARVEY, Judge.

Action by the people upon the relation of A. F. Redemeyer to enjoin the Anderson & Ukiah Valley Road Company from collecting tolls upon a designated road, and to declare such road a public highway. Defendant's franchise, under which it had collected tolls on the road in question, expired on or about May 19, 1883. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

T. L. Carothers, for appellant. J. A. Cooper, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. This is a proceeding in the nature of an information to restrain the defendant from collecting tolls on a wagon road. The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals; the case coming up on the judgment roll. The findings show that the defendant acquired its right from one John Gschwend, who acquired the right to construct and maintain a toll-road under an order of the board of supervisors on May 19, 1868. This order was made in pursuance of a special act of the legislature, which provided that the board could grant a franchise "for any term not more than fifteen years from the date of said charter." Laws 1867-68, p. 350. The 15 years having expired, it is perfectly clear that neither Gschwend nor his assignee has any further right to collect tolls. The defendant makes a point which can only go to the right of the people to maintain the proceeding. It is said that there is a contradiction in the findings upon the question whether Gschwend or his assignee ever acquired the right of way over the lands across which the road runs. But we do not think there is any material contradiction. The complaint alleges that the road was a public highway, etc. There was no special demurrer to this, and in the absence of such a demurrer the allegation must be considered as of an ultimate fact. The complaint being good, the findings which follow its language are sufficient. Hence the finding that on the 19th day of May, 1883, the said road "became and ever since has been a public highway" must be considered to be of an ultimate fact. The findings that Gschwend "procured the right of way," but that no proceedings to condemn the land were taken, and that "no owner of said land or of any part thereof has ever heretofore conveyed the same to the public or granted the right of way across the same," are not inconsistent with the ultimate fact. It may be that the right of way was acquired by prescription. The material points are that the road is a public highway, and that the defendant has no right to collect tolls upon it. And these sufficiently appear from the findings. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE ex rel. ATTORNEY GENERAL v. REIS, County Treasurer, et al., (SAN FRANCISCO GAS-LIGHT CO., Intervenor.) (Nos. 9,973 and 11,079.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1888.)

1. TAXATION—INTEREST—PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES.

Interest required by Pol. Code Cal. § 3803, to be collected upon delinquent taxes, is not a penalty or forfeiture which is to go to the county under section 3886, providing that "fines, forfeitures, and penalties incurred by a violation of any of the provisions of this title must be paid into the treasury for the use of the county where the person against whom the recovery is had resides," and that portion of the interest collected which accrues on the state tax should be paid to the state.

2. SAME—INTEREST ON DELINQUENT TAXES—POWER OF LEGISLATURE TO IMPOSE.

It is within the power of the legislature to impose payment of interest upon delinquent taxes, to regulate the rate thereof, and to require such interest upon the state's portion of the tax to be paid to the state.

3. SAME—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES—RECOVERY OF DELINQUENT TAXES.

The word "recovery," used in said section, is to be construed in its popular sense of recovery had by process and course of law, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1861, providing: "The terms of a writing are presumed to have been used in their primary and general acceptance," etc.

4. COUNTY OFFICES—STATE TAXES—MANDAMUS.

On application for mandate to compel a county auditor to report and the treasurer to pay over an amount claimed to be due the state as interest on delinquent taxes, provided for by Pol. Code Cal. § 3803, where it appears that at the time of the application the fund derived under said section of the Code, except a certain sum thereof, had been paid out for regularly audited claims, mandate will not lie for more than such sum remaining.

5. SAME.

In an action by the state for writ of mandate to compel a county auditor to make report and the treasurer to pay over an amount claimed to be due the state, under Pol. Code Cal. § 3803, as interest on delinquent taxes, upon appeal by the state, the judgment as to an intervenor directing mandate to issue for payment to intervenor, a gas company, of its duly-presented claim out of the revenue applicable to the payment of expenses, will be affirmed.

6. APPEAL—REVIEW—OBJECTIONS NOT RAISED BELOW.

Objection that a complaint in intervention does not state facts constituting a cause of intervention comes too late when first raised upon appeal.

7. SAME.

Where objection is first made on appeal to the sufficiency of a complaint, and no defect appears which affects the substantial rights of the parties, judgment should not be reversed under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 475, requiring defects to be disregarded unless they affect substantial rights.

8. MANDAMUS—PROCEDURE—WAIVER.

Writ of mandate, which, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1086, "must be issued upon affidavit," may be allowed upon an unverified complaint when the parties go to trial without first making objection on that ground.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. M. LAWLER, Judge.

Action by the people of the state of California ex rel. the attorney general against Christian Reis, treasurer, and William M. Edgar, auditor, of the city and county of San Francisco, and the San Francisco Gas-Light Company, intervenor, to obtain a writ of mandate. The plaintiff and the defendant both appeal from the judgment rendered. Sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, referred to in the opinion, are as follows: "Sec. 475. The court must, in every stage of an action, disregard any error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties, and no judgment shall be reversed or affected by reason of such error or defect." "Sec. 1861. The terms of a writing are presumed to have been used in their primary and general acceptance, but evidence is nevertheless admissible that they have a local, technical, or otherwise peculiar signification, and were so used and understood in the particular instance, in which case the agreement must be construed accordingly."

George Flournoy, Jr., City and County Atty., Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., and Langhorne & Miller, for the State. Garber & Bishop, for intervenor and defendants.

THORNTON, J. This action was brought by the people of the state for a writ of mandate to compel defendant Edgar, as auditor of the city and county aforesaid, to make his official statement and certificate that certain sums of money, consisting of interest on the state's portion of delinquent taxes collected by the said city and county for the fiscal year commencing with 1872-73, and ending with 1882-83, are in the hands of defendant Reis, the above-named treasurer, and to command Reis, as treasurer, to settle with the controller of the state for said sums, and to pay the same over to the treasurer of the state. The claim of the state for the sums of money above mentioned is based on section 3803 of the Political Code, which is as follows: "Interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per month must be collected on such delinquent taxes from the time they were first delinquent until paid." This provision applies to all delinquent taxes, to such as are due to the state as well as those due to the counties or to the city and county of San Francisco. The defendants Edgar and Reis answered the petition or complaint. The San Francisco Gas-Light Company, by leave of the court, filed a complaint in intervention, claiming the moneys then in the city and county treasury, as applicable to the payment of their demands for gas furnished the city and county, which demands had been regularly passed, allowed, and audited by the auditor of the city and county, and that the sums of money herein claimed by the state, as being then in the treasury, constituted a portion of the income and revenue of the fiscal year for which their demands for gas had been incurred. The plaintiff, (we so style the applicant herein for the writ,) without making any objection in any way to the filing of the complaint in intervention, either by demurrer or by motion to strike it out, answered it. Judgment passed for the plaintiff for the sum of $5,184.99, and for the intervenor for $39,515.27, and it was ordered in it that writs of mandate issue to the parties respectively for the sums above mentioned.

There are two appeals herein: one by the plaintiff from the entire judgment, and the other by the defendants Reis and Edgar, from the judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The first appeal above mentioned is numbered 9,973, and the second 11,079. It is argued on behalf of plaintiff that the complaint in intervention does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of intervention. This objection, which is, in effect, that the intervenor had no right to intervene herein by reason of the insufficiency of the facts stated in the complaint, is raised for the first time in this court, and according to the well-settled rule here the objection urged comes too late. McKenty v. Gladwin, 10 Cal. 228; Smith v. Penny, 44 Cal. 161; Bangs v. Dunn, 66 Cal. 72, 4 Pac. Rep. 963. The plaintiff took issue on the complaint of the intervenor in the court below, without objection to it or exception of any kind, and the trial proceeded between the plaintiff and intervenor on the issues joined. The objection, then, cannot be made for the first time on this appeal. We cannot see how this court can avoid affirming that part of the judgment in favor of the intervenor, on the facts appearing to be true, as shown by plaintiff's bill of exceptions. In the bill it is stated that it was made to appear to the court below "that the intervenor, the San Francisco Gas-Light Company, furnished gas to said city and county, as alleged in their petition, for intervention herein, and that they presented their claims therefor, as therein alleged, and that the said moneys which, by the judgment herein, the said treasurer is commanded to pay the intervenor, to-wit, the sum of $39,515.27, is a part of the income and money provided to pay the indebtedness and liabilities for the year at which the said several items of indebtedness to said intervenor were incurred; and that said moneys were properly applicable to the payment of said claims, and none other." And it was also made to appear to the court below "that the said sums mentioned in the complaint, for the various fiscal years therein specified, were collected by the city and county officers as interest upon the state's portion of delinquent taxes, under section 3803 of the Political Code, and paid over to the treasurer of and into the treasury of the said city and county, and the general fund thereof; and was all paid out again by the treasurer of said city and county in the fiscal years when collected to satisfy regularly audited demands upon said treasury, except the sum of $5,184.99, mentioned in the judgment herein, and that at the time of the various demands and requests alleged in the plaintiff's petition, and each of them, and at the time of the commencement of this action, no part of said moneys so alleged to have been collected for interest was in the hands of said treasurer, or in the said treasury, except the said sum of $5,184.99." If the several sums claimed by the state had been paid out when demand was made for them, as stated in the complaint or petition of plaintiff, (conceding the request in the complaint to be a demand,) no mandate can go from this court to compel either the auditor to make a report as asked for or the treasurer to pay them. It would be useless to compel either of these officers to do what is asked on behalf of the state. As to the auditor, because the treasurer would not be charged with any duty to pay again what has already been regularly paid away, and as to the treasurer, because he could not be compelled to pay the money from the treasury, which he had already regularly disbursed, and he certainly should not be compelled to pay it out of his own funds. It is well settled that an officer cannot be compelled to pay a sum of money by mandate unless the money is in his official custody, legally subject to the payment of the demand made when the steps are initiated to enforce the payment of such demand by writ of mandate. See Redding v. Bell, 4 Cal. 333; Bates v. Porter, 15 Pac. Rep. 732. As it appears conclusively from the bill of exceptions that the money received for the interest claimed, except the amount of $5,184.99, for which the state recovered judgment, had been regularly paid out by the treasurer before any steps were taken by mandate to collect it, we cannot see that the state has any interest in the question whether there was money in the treasury of the income and revenue of the city and county of San Francisco properly applicable to the payment of the demands of the gas-light company, and for which the gas-light company had judgment. Conceding that the judgment was erroneous, for the reason that the money was not of such income and revenue, and would be reversed on appeal of the defendants Edgar and Reis, still the state was not aggrieved by it, and it would not be reversed on its appeal, for the reason that the money was not of such income and revenue. For the foregoing reasons we are of opinion that that portion of the judgment in favor of the gas-light company is without error, and must be affirmed.

We pass to the consideration of that portion of the judgment in favor of the state, the amount of which is $5,184.99, from which the appeal is prosecuted by the defendants Edgar and Reis. On this appeal it is argued on behalf of appellants that the complaint (referring to the petition) is fatally defective as a basis for a writ of mandate because not verified or accompanied by an affidavit. It is said in support of this point that the statute provides that the writ of mandate "must be issued on affidavit." Code Civil Proc. § 1086. This is so. But the parties went to trial in the court below on the complaint without objection to the lack of an affidavit, and on this account we do not think such objection should be regarded here. It comes too late when made for the first time on appeal. We do not see why the defendant may not waive the affidavit, and we must consider it waived when the objection is made for the first time in this court. In McCullough v. Clark, 41 Cal. 293, it was held that if plaintiff goes to trial on the merits, without objection to the non-verification of an answer, he will not be allowed to raise the point in the appellate court. We think the same rule should be applied in this case. We therefore rule this point against the appellants, and hold that the complaint should be considered as free from the objection urged. The appellants further contend that the complaint states no cause of action because the state is not entitled to the 2 per cent. charged on delinquent taxes; but the same is a penalty or forfeiture to the city and county. The general revenue system provided in the Political Code, (see title 9 of part 3 of that Code,) which went into effect in 1872, applies to the city and county of San Francisco. Society v. Austin, 46 Cal. 415. By that system it is enacted that the "fines, forfeitures, and penalties incurred by a violation of any of the provisions of this title must be paid into the treasury for the use of the county where the person against whom the recovery is had resides." Pol. Code, § 3886. And it is contended on behalf of the appellants that the interest of 2 per cent. per month, directed to be collected on delinquent taxes, (Pol. Code, § 3803,) is a penalty or forfeiture, and must be paid as above for the use of the county. It may be granted that the 2 per cent. is a penalty for non-payment of delinquent taxes. It may be granted also to be a forfeiture, but only in the sense of a penalty. The two words seem to mean the same thing, when said of money, in which sense it imports a requirement to pay the sum mentioned, as a mulct for a default or wrong. See Abb. Law Dict. word "forfeit," and cases there cited. When used in the section above quoted of a payment of a sum of money, it is difficult to distinguish the one from the other. We think they mean here the same.

If it be conceded, then, that the payment of interest above mentioned is a penalty or forfeiture, the two words being used in the sense stated above, does it follow that the payment is required to be made for the use of the county? The tax collector of the city and county, as well as of each county, collects both the state and county taxes of the character involved herein. The unpaid taxes become delinquent on the last Monday in December, at 6 o'clock P. M., and unless paid prior thereto, 5 per cent. must be added to the amount thereof, and this 5 per cent. must thereafter be collected by the collector for the use of the county. Pol. Code, § 3756. The tax collector must afterwards, on a day mentioned in the statute, publish the delinquent list. Pol. Code, § 3764. The expense of this publication is a charge against the county. Id. The tax collector must also append and publish with this list a notice that unless the delinquent taxes, together with the costs and percentage, are paid the real property upon which such taxes are a lien will be sold at public auc tion. Pol. Code, § 3765. These taxes become a lien on such property on the first Monday in March of each year. Pol. Code, §§ 3717, 3718. If these taxes are not paid or collected by sale of the property of the delinquent, by the third Monday of March following the notice of sale, interest on them must be collected at the rate of 2 per cent. per month from the time of the delinquency in December until paid. This interest is not to be charged on the delinquency in December, unless the taxes remain unpaid on the third Monday in March following. This was so held in Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 233, where it was said of this section, that it "has no application to a sale made by a tax collector to collect a delinquent tax in the first instance. If the tax remains finally delinquent, after the tax collector has exhausted all means for its collection, it may possibly be subsequently collected in some other method provided by law, in which event the interest is to be added to compensate for the long delay, and as an incentive to the tax-payer to make a voluntary payment, and thus stop the interest." Harper v. Rowe, has been followed by this court in Lake Co. v. Mining Co., 66 Cal. 17, 4 Pac. Rep. 876, 68 Cal. 14, and 8 Pac. Rep. 593; People v. Railroad Co., 68 Cal. 553, 10 Pac. Rep. 45. It will be observed that in the foregoing sections, which lead up to the collection of the 2 per cent. per month interest on delinquent taxes under section 3803, requiring it to be collected, nothing is said definitely for whom it is to be collected. The 5 per cent. to be added on the delinquency in December is required to be collected for the use of the county. This is distinctly and clearly provided for in section 3756. Conceding, then, as above pointed out, that such interest is required to be paid by the delinquent as a penalty or forfeiture, it must be determined to whom such money goes when paid under section 3886, Pol. Code, above quoted, and by that section let it be noted that it must be paid "into the treasury for the use of the county where the person against whom the recovery is had resides." It is material to be determined what is the meaning of the word "recovery" in the above section. Does it signify a collection without suit, or a payment compelled by action? In its general use it means a recovery had by process and course of law. It was so held in Jones v. Walker, 2 Paine, 688. In a special case it may mean collected or obtained without a suit. It was so held in Douglass v. Reynolds, 7 Pet. 113, 126. We think the word is here used in its general sense, which is its ordinary and popular meaning, and when there is nothing in the statute to indicate that it is used in a peculiar sense, we must attribute to it its ordinary and popular signification. This is the rule to be adopted in the construction of a statute or any writing. Section 1861, Code Civil Proc. We find nothing in the title establishing the revenue system of the state which indicates that this word is used in any other than its ordinary and popular meaning. On the contrary, we find much to indicate that it is so used. The words "collect" and "collection" are used in the title, but nowhere signifying recovery by action or judicial process except where such meaning is manifested by the context. Unless so manifested, the word "collect" and its cognates or derivatives are clearly used to signify the obtainment of the money without suit. See chapter 7, tit. 9, Pol. Code. Further, there are penalties or forfeitures (using the word "forfeiture" in the sense set forth above) prescribed in the title, which are to be recovered by action. Sections 3656, 3697, 3737, Pol. Code. There are other penalties or forfeitures which require no action to be brought. They are directed to be withheld or deducted by an officer of state designated, viz., the controller. Sections 3867, 3870. The amount withheld under section 3867 "to be paid into the treasury for the use and benefit of the state." The above considerations lead to and fortify the conclusion that the penalties and forfeitures spoken of in section 3886 refer only to those to be recovered by action under the statute, and not to the interest of 2 per cent. per month on delinquent taxes, which is obtained by the ordinary method of collection without a suit. And, as this interest is not required by the statute to be collected for the use of the county, or city and county, it is reasonable to hold that that portion of the interest accrued and collected on the state tax should be paid to the state, and go into its treasury. In regard to the argument that delinquent taxes do not bear interest as a debt, we cannot see much force in it, for certainly it is within the power of the legislature to enact that they shall bear interest in the same manner as a debt, regulate the rate, and require such interest on the state's portion of delinquent taxes to be paid to the state, and go into its treasury; and this is true under the statute, conceding that such interest may be regarded as a penalty or forfeiture.

We have examined the other points made by appellants, which refer to the sufficiency of the complaint, and we are of the opinion that, as there was no demurrer, either general or special, to the complaint, and no objection made to it in the court below, we ought not to reverse the judgment. The cause appears to have been tried as if the complaint was in all respects sufficient. On an examination of the record we find no error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which affects the substantial rights of the parties, and in such a case the judgment should not be reversed. Code Civil Proc. § 475. It is doubtful whether the express or distinct demand upon the defendant to perform the acts required prior to the application for the writ of mandate is necessary in this case, which relates to the performance of a public duty, and in which the relator has no private interest, and claims no benefit of the acts to be done. See Railroad Co. v. Plumas Co., 37 Cal. 362, 363. But we think it was substantially averred to have been made by the general words often requested and refused to be done, and the bill of exceptions refers to the demand as having been made.

Both of the judgments appealed from must be affirmed. So ordered.

LEWIS v. RIVERSIDE WATER CO. (No. 12,403.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1888.)

NEGLIGENCE—DANGEROUS PREMISES—INSTRUCTION.

Upon the trial of an action for injuries received from the overturning of plaintiff's wagon from a bridge, caused by a ditch wrongfully made in the highway by defendant, the complaint and answer alleging that plaintiff was thrown from the wagon, of which there was also evidence, an instruction that "if plaintiff, without negligence, drove off the bridge, and was thereby thrown from the wagon, and bruised or wounded, the defendant was liable," is proper, although plaintiff testified that he leaped from the wagon as it overturned.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; HENRY M. WILLIS, Judge.

Action by Perry D. Lewis, a minor, by Perry D. Cover, his next friend, against the Riverside Water Company, for damages occasioned by plaintiffs overturning in a wagon, caused by a ditch kept by defendant. On the trial it appeared that the ditch was wrongfully and negligently made and allowed to remain in the highway by defendant. There was a trial by a jury, verdict for plaintiff for $1,500, and judgment thereon, from which defendant appealed.

Curtis & Otis, for appellants. H. C. Rolfe, for appellee.

McKINSTRY, J. There was ample evidence to justify a finding that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence. Appellant asserts error in that the court instructed the jury that if plaintiff, without negligence, drove off the bridge, "and was thereby thrown from the wagon, and bruised or wounded," the defendant was liable. The point of the objection is that the instruction, abstractly correct, was misleading, because there was no evidence that plaintiff was thrown from the wagon. The witness Kleinfelter testified that the plaintiff was thrown from the wagon. True, the plaintiff testified: "I made a spring when the wagon went down." But the impelling force of the overturn did not necessarily deprive the plaintiff of all voluntary action, even while the overturn was in progress. If there had been evidence that the wagon was not overturned, or that he leaped from it unnecessarily, when a person of ordinary prudence would not have leaped, and that he would not have been injured had he retained his seat, different questions might have been presented. Lawrence v. Green, 70 Cal. 417, 11 Pac. Rep. 750. But here both the complaint and the answer allege that the plaintiff was thrown from the wagon, and if the matter had been in dispute, as there was evidence of the fact that he was thrown, the instruction was as favorable as defendant was entitled to have, accompanied, as it was, by full instructions upon the subject of contributory negligence. Judgment and order affirmed.

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO v. McALLISTER et al.
(No. 11,118.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1888.)

JUDGMENT—ASSIGNMENT—SHERIFF—GARNISHMENT.

Where a sheriff has given bond for the faithful performance of his duties, and has taken a like bond from his deputy, who afterwards misappropriates fees which should have been paid to the county, and the sheriff brings suit on such deputy's bond and recovers judgment, which judgment he assigns to his creditors prior to serving notice by the county on the deputy's sureties that the money in their hands belonging to the sheriff was attached, such county cannot, in the absence of any evidence of fraud in the assignment, restrain the assignees from collecting of the deputy's sureties the money due on the assigned judgment.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

Action by the city and county of San Francisco against Hall McAllister, Thomas J. Bergin, Matthew Nunan, Peter Hopkins, James Adams, and Samuel Platshek, to restrain the collection of money due on a judgment. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

George Flounoy, Jr., for appellant. McAllister & Bergin, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. Defendant Matthew Nunan was for two terms, covering a period extending from the first Monday in December, 1875, to the first Monday in December, 1879, the sheriff of the city and county aforesaid. He executed for this period the usual official bonds with sureties. During the same period Gideon M. Berry was a deputy of said Nunan, sheriff, appointed by him to act as book-keeper, and was charged inter alia with the receipt of certain moneys for his principal. He became a defaulter with regard to these moneys. Nunan had required of him a bond, with sureties, for the faithful discharge of his duties of deputy and book-keeper. The sureties to this bond are defendants James Adams and Samuel Platshek. Berry's default was covered by this bond, and suit was brought on it by Nunan, and judgment recovered by him against the sureties for the sum of $13,108.32. This judgment was, on the 3d of March, 1883, assigned by Nunan to the defendants McAllister & Bergin, for a sum of money due them by him for services rendered him as attorneys and counselors at law. It appears that a portion of the moneys for which Berry defaulted was for commissions and fees, collected by him for his principal, and which it was the duty of Nunan, as sheriff, to pay into the treasury of the city and county above named. McAllister & Bergin notified Adams and Platshek of the assignment by Nunan of the above-mentioned judgment to them, and filed it with the papers in the action of Nunan against Adams and Platshek. The plaintiff herein, on the 21st of July, 1881, commenced an action on his official bonds against Nunan and the sureties thereon, in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, to recover a portion of the commissions and fees above mentioned, and on the 9th of February, 1885, commenced another action on his official bonds against Nunan and the sureties thereon to recover another portion of the commissions and fees above mentioned. On the 9th of February, 1885, the plaintiff caused writs of attachment to be issued in the actions just mentioned, which were, by Peter Hopkins, sheriff of the city and county aforesaid, duly served on Adams and Platshek, the judgment debtors above mentioned, with a notice that the moneys in their hands belonging to Nunan, and debts due by them to the same, were attached in pursuance of the writs so served. Adams and Platshek refused to pay the sheriff the moneys due upon the said judgment, and informed him of the notice to them of the assignment of the judgment to McAllister & Bergin. McAllister & Bergin, on the 11th day of February, caused a writ of execution to be duly issued on the judgment to them, and are about to collect the moneys due on the judgment. Plaintiff asks for an injunction to restrain the collection of the money due on this judgment, and that Adams and Platshek be required to pay it into court. The court refused the injunction, and rendered judgment in favor of defendants. McAllister & Bergin were the assignees of the judgment against Adams and Platshek prior to the issuance and levy of the writs of attachment sued out by the plaintiff. The bond on which suit was brought by Nunan against the sureties of Berry was the property of Nunan, and the recovery belonged to him. He could use it to pay his creditor. In the absence of any intent to hinder, delay, or defraud the plaintiff herein, by Nunan and his assignees, the assignment was good against the city and county. We find no fraud either charged or found in this case. The court finds that the assignment to McAllister & Bergin was made in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, and the finding is sustained by the evidence. There was no privity between Berry and the plaintiff herein which would give the plaintiff any property in the bond executed by Berry and his sureties to Nunan to indemnify him against Berry's defaults, or any interest in the moneys recovered on the judgment. There was no relation existing between Nunan and the plaintiff which would subrogate plaintiff to the rights of Nunan in the bond given him by Berry, or in the recovery on it. The plaintiff was protected against the defaults of Nunan by his official bonds, on which, if aggrieved, it had its remedy. We do not see that plaintiff occupies a position different from that of any creditor. This is a case of a contest between two creditors, in which that one prior in point of time is superior in right, and McAllister & Bergin hold the vantage ground of priority in time and superiority in right. The argument for plaintiff proceeds on the ground that Adams and Platshek hold the very moneys collected by Nunan through Berry for the city and county. In this there is a mistake. These moneys were appropriated by Berry. Damages arising out of this appropriation by Berry were recovered of his sureties as indemnity for the moneys so appropriated. The principle on which this case is decided is illustrated in the case of Carrington v. Insurance Co., 1 Bosw. 152, and Herckenrath v. Insurance Co., 3 Barb. Ch. 63. The contract on which Nunan recovered is distinct and different from that which he made with the city and county, as evidenced by his official bonds. We find no error in the case and the judgment is affirmed.

RANDALL v. HUNTER et al. (No. 11,237.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 23, 1888.)

PARTNERSHIP—POWER OF PARTNERS TO BIND FIRM.

Where one person bought a stock of goods, agreeing in consideration thereof to pay the seller's note to a third person, and thereafter entered into a partnership with another, which partnership assumed to pay the indebtedness incurred in purchasing such goods, and while the partnership still existed, one member of the firm executed to the holder of the aforesaid note, as security for the payment thereof, and in the name of the firm, the note sued on, held, that the firm was liable on such note, the indebtedness being one for which the firm was liable, and one for which a member of the firm had authority to execute a note of the firm. Following Randall v. Hunter, 6 Pac. Rep. 331.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; N. HAMILTON, Judge.

Action by A. W. Randall on a promissory note alleged to have been made by defendants W. S. Hunter and C. W. Gill, in their firm capacity, for the sum of $1,000. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant W. S. Hunter appeals. For a former opinion, see Randall v. Hunter, 6 Pac. Rep. 331.

J. D. H. Chamberlin and G. W. Hunter, for appellant. J. J. De Haven and S. M. Buck, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. The appellant W. S. Hunter and C. W. Gill were partners, doing a general merchandising business in Petrolia, Humboldt county, under the firm name of Gill & Hunter. While they were thus partners Gill, on May 25, 1881, made and delivered to the plaintiff Randall, a partnership promissory note for $1,000, signing to it the firm name, "Gill & Hunter;" and to recover the balance due upon said note this action was brought. Gill made default, and Hunter answered, setting up the defense that Gill, to plaintiff's knowledge, made the note without Hunter's knowledge or consent, for Gill's individual use and benefit, and not in the business, or for the use of the firm, etc. The jury rendered a verdict for the amount of the balance due on the note, and judgment was entered for that amount. From this judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, Hunter appeals.

Gill was originally the sole owner of the business, stock of goods, etc., and had sold an undivided one-half to one C. W. Long. Long had paid Gill for the one-half interest, some $1,500 in cash, and had given him his two promissory notes for $1,000 each. One of these notes Gill had given to plaintiff Randall as security for money furnished by Randall to Gill. A short time after Long had bought into the business, he resold to Gill upon the same terms as those upon which he had bought. The $1,500 was repaid to him, and one of the promissory notes redelivered; but the other, being held by Randall, could not be, at that time, redelivered to Long; and Gill agreed to take care of said note, and to protect Long from any liability on it. About the time Long resold to Gill the defendant Hunter purchased from Gill the one-half interest which Long had held; and, within two months afterwards Gill took up the note made by Long and held by plaintiff Randall by giving to the latter the firm note of Gill & Hunter upon which this suit was brought. Now, it was claimed at the trial that it was part of the transaction of the sale from Gill to Hunter; that the firm of Gill & Hunter should pay the indebtedness of Gill to Randall; and that the said firm note sued on was made with the knowledge and consent of Hunter; and that the latter acquiesced in, and ratified it. This appellant denied; and the issue thus made was passed upon by the jury adversely to appellant. The case comes here upon exceptions to rulings of the court upon the admissibility of evidence, and to instructions to the jury, given and refused. These exceptions are numerous; and no one is more entitled to special notice than either of the others. They involve no particular principle of law, or rule of practice, and are of no general importance. We think, therefore, that no useful purpose would be served by noticing in detail each individual exception; and it is sufficient to say that, in our opinion, no material error can be found in the rulings of the court, and that the instructions fairly presented the issue to the jury. When the case was here before, this court held that "where a partnership agreement provides that an existing individual debt of one of the partners shall be assumed and paid by the firm, either of the partners has authority to execute the note of the firm to secure the payment of such indebtedness." 66 Cal. 512, 6 Pac. Rep. 331. Judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed.

COCKRILL v. HALL. (No. 9,946.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—OBJECTIONS WAIVED.

Where respondent's attorney signed the settled statement on motion for new trial, it will be presumed that he waived all objections to the hearing of the motion on the ground that notice thereof had not been given.

2. SAME.

When the record does not show when an oral charge was made, an exception "to each and every part and to the whole of said instructions" is insufficient, and will not be considered.

3. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—NOTICE OF APPEAL.

Where a party has two attorneys of record, the signature of any one of them to a notice of appeal is sufficient.

4. TRIAL—CONDUCT OF—DEPOSITIONS.

Where notes are not glued to the deposition in which they are referred to, and one is offered in evidence separately from the deposition, they are not parts of the deposition, within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 612, excepting depositions from the papers in evidence which may be taken out by the jury, and such notes may be detached from the deposition, and taken out by the jury while making up their verdict.

5. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

When, upon the request of the jury to be informed as to the law on a certain point, the court informed them that, if they desired, he would read to them again all the instructions, and the foreman stated that such was not their desire, the refusal to read again that portion of the instructions touching the point presented by the jury is not error.

6. WITNESS—CREDIBILITY—IMPEACHMENT.

A witness cannot be asked whether he was not impeached as a witness upon the trial of another cause.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; JOHN G. PRESSLY, Judge.

Action by Damie Cockrill against Henry Hall. Upon the trial, the jury, after deliberating about two hours, returned into court. On being asked by the court what they desired, their foreman answered: "What are we to do with the four old notes?" To which the court replied: "They are in evidence. You are to determine that, under the instructions which I have given you." Plaintiff's attorney then moved the court to read to the jury that portion of the instruction touching that point, on the ground that it would explain the purpose for which the four old notes were admitted in evidence, which the court refused to do, and plaintiff excepted; but the court informed the jury that, if they wished all the instructions read again, he would read them. The foreman said that was not desired. The jury then retired, and brought into court a verdict for the defendant, upon which judgment was rendered. Plaintiff appeals.

Henley & Oates, for appellant. G. A. Johnson, for respondent. McGee & Burnham, for estate of Henry Hall, deceased.

FOOTE, C. This is an action based upon alleged deceit practiced upon the plaintiff, to her damage, by the defendant, and is brought under the provisions of sections 1709 and 1710 of the Civil Code. It is alleged in the complaint that the defendant had executed, for value received, a promissory note to the plaintiff in renewal of another note, and that it was about to become barred by the statute of limitations; that pretending he wanted to have a calculation made, and renew the note, with security thereon, for the sum of money due, the defendant got possession of it from the plaintiff, not intending to renew it; and that, while in his possession under the false promise thus made, the note became barred by the statute of limitations, and the defendant refused, upon demand made, to pay it, although solvent at that time. The defendant denied that he practiced any deceit, claimed that the note was already barred by the statute of limitations when he obtained possession of it, and that it was not valid against him, as he had already overpaid what he owed the plaintiff before he made and executed it, which he claimed to have done under a misapprehension of his rights. The case was tried before a jury, who returned a verdict for the defendant. From the judgment thereupon given and made, and an order denying a new trial, the plaintiff has appealed.

The record contains no notice of intention to move for a new trial, nor does the statement on that motion recite that any such notice was given. But the defendant's attorney not only accepted the draught of the statement without any opposition, and at no time objected in the court below to the consideration or settlement of the statement on the ground that proper notice of intention to move for a new trial had not been given, but also signed the statement, stipulating, in the same manner as did the attorneys for the plaintiff, that it was "a full and correct statement in said cause." The court who heard the motion does not appear to have proceeded upon the idea that there was any supposed absence of a proper notice of intention, but seems to have determined the motion upon the questions presented by it. Under all these circumstances, it is hardly possible but that there was either a proper notice of intention given, or that the defendant or his attorney had waived it, and agreed to the hearing of the motion upon its merits. Girdner v. Beswick, 69 Cal. 119, 10 Pac. Rep. 278. The notice of motion must be made to appear as part of the record by a statement or bill of exceptions, "or in some appropriate mode." "If it had appeared that the respondent had proposed amendments to the proposed statement without reserving proper objection, the notice of motion would have been waived." Dominguez v. Mascotti, 15 Pac. Rep. 773. Here no amendments were proposed by the respondent without reserving proper objections, but he stipulated that the statement was full and correct, and made no sign of objection to it. It must be presumed, therefore, that he had no objection and urged none to the motion being heard upon the questions raised by it, irrespective as to whether the notice of intention therefor had been properly given or the contrary.

It is objected to the consideration of this appeal that the attorneys of record in the court below were Whipple & Oates, and that the attorneys who gave the notice of appeal were Henley & Oates, and that the transcript does not show any substitution of the latter. But we think that where a party has two attorneys of record in the court below, or a firm of attorneys, either one of the two, or either of the firm, may sign the notice of appeal. The records of the court show that such is the practice; and, while there may be technical objections that can be made to it, a contrary rule would upset numerous appeals that have been taken in good faith.

The exception taken to the oral charge of the court to the jury, given of its own motion, is in this language: "To each and every part, and to the whole of said instructions, the plaintiff duly excepted." This was nothing more than an exception taken to the whole charge of the court, without bringing to its attention any special point where error was claimed to have been committed. Nor does it appear at what time during the course of the trial the oral charge was given to the jury. It has been said heretofore by this court: "Excepttions to the oral charge ought to point out the specific portions excepted to and be made at the time, in order that the judge may have an opportunity, before the jury retires, to correct any error he may have inadvertently fallen into in the hurry and perplexities of the trial." Robinson v. Railroad Co., 48 Cal. 425; Rider v. Edgar, 54 Cal. 130. "The exception should be sufficiently specific to call the attention of the court to the alleged error." Rogers v. Mahoney, 62 Cal. 613. Tested by the rules thus laid down, the exception was insufficient, and should not be considered here. Nor do we perceive wherein the court erred in giving, refusing, or modifying any of the instructions asked for by either side to the controversy. The law as given to the jury seems fully and fairly to present for their consideration the material issues made by the pleadings, based upon the evidence before them.

It is further contended that the court below erred, to the prejudice of the plaintiff, in permitting certain promissory notes, which were alleged to be attached to a deposition, to be detached therefrom, and taken out by the jury while making up their verdict. The notes referred to were all before the jury as evidence, and one of them was offered separately from the deposition, by the plaintiff, as proof of certain matters, and the other notes seem not to have been glued to the deposition. We think that the notes were not parts of the deposition within the meaning of section 612 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If the witness had been produced, and had identified the notes, and proved their execution, and given their history, and they were thereupon admitted in evidence, it could not be contended that they were part of the testimony of the witness. They could in such case be taken by the jury upon retiring. And, similarly, we think that they are not parts of the deposition, although it proved certain matters concerning them.

The effort to discredit Stewart by asking him if he had not been impeached as a witness upon a trial of a cause other than the one in which he was then testifying, was properly checked by the court upon the defendant's objection. A witness cannot be called upon thus to discredit himself except in the mode prescribed by the statute. Code Civil Proc. §§ 2051, 2052, 2061, 2066.

The point is made that the court erred in not acceding to the plaintiff's request to have re-read to the jury a portion of the instructions touching a special point. The court informed the jury that, if desired, he would read to them all the instructions. On their part, the foreman stated that such was not their desire. In this we perceive no ground for complaint against the court.

No prejudicial error appearing in the record, we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

HOBSON v. HASSETT. (No. 11,296.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1888.)

1. NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT—PARTIES—DESCRIPTIO PERSONÆ.

A promissory note which says, "We promise to pay," without further naming the maker, and which is signed, "A. HASSETT, President," binds him personally; the word "President" being merely descriptio personæ.

2. SAME—CONSIDERATION.

When part payment is made upon the note of a corporation, the personal note of the president given for the balance due is upon a good consideration; it being presumed that the note of the corporation was given up.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; JACKSON TEMPLE, Judge.

Action by A. D. Hobson against A. Hassett. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Wm. E. McConnell, for appellant. Vaughn & Cradlebaugh and G. A. Johnson, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was brought to recover the amount due on a promissory note, which reads as follows: "SEPTEMBER 7, 1881. $1,135. One day after date, without grace, we promise to pay A. D. Hobson, or order, the sum of eleven hundred and thirty-five dollars, payable only in gold coin of the government of the United States, for value received, with interest thereon, in like gold coin, at the rate of 10 per cent. per year from date until paid. A. HASSETT, President." The court below found that, prior to the year 1878, the Grangers' Business Association of Healdsburg was duly organized as a corporation, and has existed as such ever since; that on the 8th day of January, 1878, the said corporation became indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $2,000, and on that day made and delivered its promissory note to plaintiff for that amount; that on the 7th day of September, 1881, plaintiff presented this note to one Bagge, who was the book-keeper and accountant of the corporation, for payment, and requested that the corporation pay him $900 in cash, and give him a new note for the balance; that defendant, Hassett, was president of the corporation at that time; that Bagge paid the $900, and drew a new note for the balance, and requested defendant, as president of the corporation, to sign it, which defendant intended to do, but signed only his own name, adding thereto the word "President;" that the note so executed is the note set out in the complaint; that defendant and Bagge only intended to make and deliver the note of the corporation, and did not then or at any other time say or do anything to lead plaintiff to believe that defendant intended to make or deliver his own note, and not the note of the corporation; that plaintiff could not read writing, and did not at the time know in what manner the note was executed, but at the end of every month, for 18 months thereafter, he presented it, and received from the corporation the interest due thereon, and never claimed or demanded from defendant the payment thereof prior to the bringing of this action. Upon these facts the court found, as a conclusion of law, that the note was the note of defendant, and not of the corporation, and thereupon judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant appealed, and the case comes here on the judgment roll.

The principal contention of the appellant is that the note was the note of the corporation, and not of the defendant, and that the court erred in its conclusions of law to the contrary. In view of the large number of adjudicated cases, it is sometimes difficult to determine whether a note or bill of exchange drawn by an agent, but for the use and benefit of his principal, binds the agent personally or not. There are, however, some general rules upon the subject which seem to be well settled. Judge Story says: "Where, upon the face of the instrument, the agent signs his own name only, without referring to any principal, then he will be held personally bound, although he is known to be or avowedly acts as agent." Story, Prom. Notes, § 68. But "if it can, upon the whole instrument, be collected that the true object and intent of it are to bind the principal, and not to bind the agent, courts of justice will adopt that construction of it, however informally it may be expressed." Id. § 69. Prof. Parsons says: "If an agent make a note in his own name, and add to his signature the word 'Agent,' but there is nothing on the note to indicate who is principal, the agent will be personally liable, just as if the word 'Agent' were not added." 1 Pars. Notes & B. 95. And "one who puts his name on negotiable paper will be liable personally, as we have seen, although he acts as agent, unless he says so, and says also who his principal is; that is, unless he uses some expression equivalent, to use Lord ELLENBOROUGH'S language, to, 'I am the mere scribe.' For if the construction may fairly be that while he acts officially, or at the request of others, yet what he does is still his own act, it will be so interpreted." Id. 102. And see, also, Sayre v. Nichols, 5 Cal. 487; Stackpole v. Arnold, 11 Mass. 27; Williams v. Robbins, 16 Gray, 77; Manufacturing Co. v. Fairbanks, 98 Mass. 101; Sturdivant v. Hull, 59 Me. 172; Pentz v. Stanton, 10 Wend. 271; Powers v. Briggs, 79 Ill. 493. The cases cited by appellant are not in conflict with the rules above stated. In Bank v. Colby, 64 Cal. 352, the note was signed by "G. A. COLBY, Prest. Pac. Peat Coal Co., D. K. TRIPP, Sec. pro tem." It was indorsed by Colby and four others. The action was against Colby and Tripp as makers, and the other defendants as indorsers. The court said: "Read as a whole, we think it apparent from its face that it is the note of the company indorsed by the individuals." In Bean v. Mining Co., 66 Cal. 451, 6 Pac. Rep. 86, the note was signed, "PIONEER MINING COMPANY, JOHN E. MASON, Supt." The plaintiff sought to hold Mason personally responsible on the note, but the court considered him not bound. The court said: "The signature is not, 'JOHN E. MASON, Superintendent of the Pioneer Mining Company;' the last portion of which, in the absence of any words in the body of the note indicating an intention that it should be an obligation of the company, might, it is claimed, be held to be merely descriptio personæ. But here the words 'Pioneer Mining Company' precede the name 'John E. Mason.'" In Bank v. Bank, 5 Wheat. 326, the question was whether a certain act done by the cashier of a bank was done in his official or individual capacity. The action was based upon a check, and the court said: "But the fact that this appeared on its face to be a private check is by no means to be conceded. On the contrary, the appearance of the corporate name of the institution on the face of the paper at once leads to the belief that it is a corporate, and not an individual, transaction; to which must be added the circumstance that the cashier is the drawer, and the teller the payee; and the form of ordinary checks deviated from by the substitution of to order, or to bearer. The evidence, therefore, on the face of the bill, predominates in favor of its being a bank transaction." In Carpenter v. Farnsworth, 106 Mass. 561, the action was on a check, having the words "Ætna Mills" printed in the margin, and signed, "J. D. FARNSWORTH, Treasurer." The court said: "that this check manifests upon its face that the writing is the act of the principal, though done by the hand of an agent; or, in other words, that it is the check of the Ætna Mills, executed by Farnsworth as their treasurer and in their behalf." The other cases cited do not need special notice. In the light of the rules of law above announced, the question, then, is, did the defendant, by signing the note as he did, make himself personally responsible for its payment? It seems to us that there can be but one answer to this question, and that is that he did. There is nothing on the face of the note to show that there was any principal back of the defendant. He signed his own name, and wholly failed to indicate, if he had a principal, who or what the principal was. The word "President," which he added to his name, must therefore be regarded as a mere descriptio personæ.

It is further contended that as the promissory note of the defendant it was without consideration. We do not think this position can be maintained. The note imports a consideration, and it must be presumed that when the old note was paid it was given up, and the new one taken in its place. The old note was a sufficient consideration for the new one.

We think the court drew correct conclusions from the facts before it, and therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

DODGE v. YATES. (No. 11,208.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 23, 1888.)

1. EJECTMENT—POSSESSION—WHAT SUFFICIENT.

Where plaintiff's grantor had actual possession of the land, and inclosed it with a substantial fence, and by a valid deed conveyed it to plaintiff, the latter, though he himself never took actual possession of the land, but cultivated a portion of it through his employes, has constructive possession of the whole, and may maintain ejectment against an intruder on any part thereof.

2. SAME—INSTRUCTION.

Personal residence on land is not essential to ejectment, and the court does not err in charging that "a person may be in possession of land without a personal residence thereon, and without having personally cultivated it."

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; JOHN K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

Ellen A. Dodge brought this action of ejectment against Abram Yates. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

Geil & Morehouse, for appellant. Walter & Wm. M. Van Dyke, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The plaintiff bases his right of recovery upon the ground of prior possession. It was admitted that the land in controversy was public land, within the limits of the grant to the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company, and had been withdrawn from sale, pre-emption, or homestead entry. The evidence introduced by plaintiff tended to show that H. C. Dodge and George Dutton took possession of the land and other lands adjoining, and inclosed the same, in 1872-73, with a fence,—the fence being made of a ditch, and oak pickets set in the ground, fastened together at the top by nailing a pine strip or board thereon; that the fence inclosed the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$, the N. $\frac{3}{8}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$, of section 5, and the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$, and the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$, of section 6, township 23 S., range 8 E.; that the fence, when built, was substantial, and sufficient to turn stock, and cost about \$1,500; that a house was built and a well was dug on the 40 acres in section 6, within the common inclosure; that the barn was built upon the land in dispute, but a year later was removed to section 6, (no part of which is in controversy;) that the claimants lived upon the land for nearly two years, and plowed and cultivated a portion thereof; that in 1881 the land was leased to one Gillet for the term of one year; that, after the making of the lease to Gillet, Dutton sold and conveyed the land to J. W. Dodge, and thereafter took charge of the place for Dodge, and employed one Nance, who plowed and sowed a portion of the land in dispute in the fall of 1882; that a portion of the land thus plowed was put in grain, and the balance of it reserved as summer fallow; that, in 1883, Nance was again engaged to plow and sow the land, and was about to go to work, when he was forbidden to do so by the defendant, Yates, who had entered upon the land in August, 1883, put up a house, and dug a well thereon,—these improvements being made upon the land which had been summer-fallowed by the agent of the plaintiff; that the place was leased by plaintiff to one Pigott in 1883, who had cut the crop grown on the land for hay, and had his hogs feeding on the volunteer crop when the defendant, Yates, went into possession. Neither the plaintiff nor any one in his employ has ever actually resided on the land. There is no question, however, that the land was originally inclosed with a substantial fence. This fence has since been considerably broken down, and parts of it removed.

Upon all the evidence in the case, it was for the jury to determine whether or not the artificial barriers and the acts of dominion were sufficient to notify the public that the land was appropriated, and to impart to the claim of appropriation the characteristic notoriety and indicia of ownership. Brumagin v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 25. It was not error, under the evidence in the case.

to instruct the jury that "a party may be in possession of land without a personal residence thereon, or without having personally cultivated it." This instruction does not assume, as we read it, that "if the plaintiff had no agent or employe in possession of the land, and was not living on it himself, and did not cultivate it, he might still recover in this case on the bare fact that the land was once inclosed and claimed by plaintiff," as claimed by appellant. Personal residence on the land was not essential. Barstow v. Newman, 34 Cal. 90. The plaintiff's grantors had actual possession of the land, and inclosed the same with a substantial fence, and erected valuable improvements within the inclosure; and, while claiming and using the land as their own, they conveyed the same to plaintiff by a good and sufficient deed. The good faith of the plaintiff in taking possession under said deed, through his employes and tenant, does not seem to be questioned; but it is claimed that, inasmuch as the plaintiff himself never took actual possession of the lands, the deed did not give him constructive possession of all the land named therein, and that, at most, the plaintiff can claim only about 10 acres, the portion which was actually cultivated. But the land was inclosed when plaintiff purchased, and by his agents took possession; and it has been held here that "a party who enters into actual possession of a portion of a tract of land, claiming the whole under a deed in which the entire tract is described by metes and bounds, is not limited in his possession to his actual inclosure or possession, but acquires constructive possession of the entire tract, if it is not in the adverse possession of any other person at the time of his entry; and that such person, in an action to recover possession of the land, will prevail against one who enters subsequently upon the uninclosed part as a mere intruder, or showing color of title only. * * * The fact that Crowell had neither title nor actual possession puts the case within, instead of without, the rule. It is the want of title and actual possession in the grantor that renders the rule necessary to the grantee. If the grantor has title, there can be no question, between his grantee and a subsequent intruder, either as to actual or constructive possession. And so, if he has actual possession, and his grantee succeeds to it, there can be no question between the latter and an intruder as to constructive possession." Walsh v. Hill, 38 Cal. 482. While the preponderance of evidence appears from the record to be on the side of the defendant, there is a substantial conflict therein as to the material issues. Therefore the verdict of the jury cannot be disturbed. Judgment and order affirmed.

MCDONALD v. SWETT. (No. 11,270.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 23, 1888.)

1. PRACTICE—DISMISSAL FOR WANT OF PROSECUTION—DISCRETION.

One of the defendants served notice of motion on plaintiff to dismiss the action, as to him, for want of prosecution; he not having been served with summons until about two years after the summons was issued. At request of plaintiff's attorney the hearing of the motion was continued to a certain date. A few days before the hearing, plaintiff's attorney entered judgment by default against said defendant, and on the hearing the motion to dismiss was denied. Held, that there was no abuse of the discretion of the court in denying the motion.

2. JUDGMENT—BY DEFAULT—PENDING MOTION TO DISMISS THE ACTION.

A judgment by default against one of the defendants cannot be set aside on the ground that it was entered pending a motion by him to dismiss the action for want of prosecution, a motion to dismiss not extending the time to answer.

3. SAME—AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT.

On a motion to vacate a judgment obtained by default, the court may allow plaintiff to amend the complaint by changing the name of defendant, and enter judgment against him in his correct name.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; A. M. CRANE, Judge.

George E. Lawrence, for appellant. J. E. McElrath, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This is an appeal from the final judgment entered against Daniel Swett, the appellant. The facts are as follows: Plaintiff filed her complaint to quiet title to certain property in Oakland against Walter S. Hobbs, Daniel Swett, John Doe, and Richard Roe, on the 4th of September, 1882, and on the same day summons issued, and on the 21st day of July, 1884, they were served on Daniel Swett. On the 13th of August, 1884, appellant served a notice of motion to dismiss the action, as to him, for want of prosecution, for the 19th. At plaintiff's attorney's request the motion was continued by stipulation until the 28th of August, 1884. On the 23d day of August, 1884, plaintiff's attorney had the clerk enter the default of Daniel Swett. On the 28th day of August, 1884, appellant's motion to dismiss the action as to him was heard and denied, and appellant excepted. A stay of 10 days was granted; and on the 28th day of August, 1884, appellant served a notice of motion, for September 3, 1884, to vacate the default entered against him. The same was heard on the 3d of September, and denied, and an exception was taken. Plaintiff's counsel then asked the court to amend the complaint by changing the name of Daniel Sweet into Daniel Swett, and to enter judgment against Daniel Swett. Appellant's attorneys objected. The court granted the motion, and appellant excepted. Appellant prepared bills of exceptions to the several matters, and they were duly certified and filed.

1. We cannot hold that the court abused its discretion in overruling the motion to dismiss the action for want of prosecution, and therefore cannot reverse the judgment on that ground. Grigsby v. Napa Co., 36 Cal. 585.

2. It was not sufficient ground for setting aside the default that it was entered pending the hearing of the motion to dismiss, and we cannot hold that the facts presented to the court below were of such a character as to make the denial of the motion to set it aside an abuse of discretion. The motion to dismiss the action did not extend the time to answer. Shinn v. Cummins, 65 Cal. 97, 3 Pac. Rep. 133.

3. It was not error to allow the name of the defendant to be corrected. Brook v. Martinovich, 55 Cal. 516.

The appeal herein was taken more than 60 days after the entry of the judgment, and we held in Society v. Meeks, 66 Cal. 371, 5 Pac. Rep. 624, that nothing could be reviewed on an appeal from a judgment by default, not taken within 60 days after the entry thereof, except what appeared on the judgment roll. We have, however, in this case reviewed the orders excepted to, and fail to find that any error was committed for which the judgment should be disturbed. Judgment affirmed.

MORTGAGES—PAYMENT OF TAXES—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

A mortgage which secured a note stipulating for interest at 9 per cent., payable monthly in advance, and upon default thereof the unpaid principal and interest to become due, provided that the mortgagee might pay taxes accruing on the mortgaged property; such payments, with interest thereon, to become part of the mortgage debt. Const. Cal. art. 13, § 4, provides that a mortgage or other security on property shall be a taxable interest therein, and that the property shall be taxed against the owner, less the value of such security; and that, in case the mortgagee pay the taxes thereon, the amount thereof shall become part of the mortgage debt. Section 5 enacts that a contract whereby a debtor is obligated to pay taxes on money loaned, or on any mortgage, shall, as to any interest specified therein, and as to such taxes, be null and void. Held, that the clause in said mortgage did not, under said sections, render the agreement in said note to pay interest monthly, at 9 per cent., in advance, null and void; and, default in the payment of interest being made, the right to foreclose accrued before the time at which the note was made payable.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. LAWLER, Judge.

Action by George T. Marye, Jr., administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo, of the estate of Emeline L. Haslam, deceased, against John B. Hart and Sallie C. Hart and others, unknown parties, having liens against the real estate in question, to foreclose a mortgage executed by said Hart and wife to said Emeline L. Haslam. Decree for plaintiff. Defendants appealed.

Wm. Matthews, for appellants. A. N. Drown, for appellee.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of foreclosure of mortgage, executed by the defendants to Emeline L. Haslam, deceased. The mortgage was made to secure the principal and interest specified in a certain promissory note executed by the defendants to said Haslam of even date with the mortgage. The note was for $770, payable on or before June 10, 1887, with interest at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum, payable monthly in advance, and, in case of default in the payment of any installment of interest, the entire unpaid balance of principal and interest to become due and payable at the option of the holder of the note. This action was commenced February 6, 1887. The plaintiff alleges, and the defendants do not deny, that no part of the interest or principal had then been paid. A right of action accrued before this action was commenced, unless by reason of a clause in the mortgage the agreement to pay interest was void. The following is a copy of the clause which appellant's counsel contends renders the agreement to pay interest void: "And it is hereby agreed that it shall be lawful for the party of the second part, her heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, to pay and discharge at maturity all taxes or assessments, liens, or other incumbrances, now subsisting, or hereafter to be laid or imposed, upon said lot of land or premises, and which may be in effect a charge thereupon; and also to pay (upon failure by said first parties so to do) the amount necessary to keep said premises insured as hereinafter stated, and such payment or payments shall be allowed, with interest thereon at the rate of two (2) per cent. per month from the date of such payments; and such payments and interest shall be considered as secured by these presents, and a charge upon said premises, shall be repayable in the same kind of money or currency in which the same may have been paid, and may be deducted from the proceeds of the sale above authorized." To support this contention section 5 of article 13 of the constitution is cited. The section reads as follows: "Every contract hereafter made by which a debtor is obligated to pay any tax or assessment on money loaned or on any mortgage, deed of trust, or other lien, shall, as to any interest specified therein, and as to such tax or assessment, be null and void." Section 4, which immediately precedes the section above quoted, provides that "a mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, shall, for the purposes of assessment and taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the property affected thereby, * * * and the value of the property affected by such mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or obligation, less the value of said security, shall be assessed and taxed to the owner thereof. * * * The tax so levied shall be a lien upon the property and security, and may be paid by either party to such security. If paid by the owner of the security, the tax so levied upon the property affected thereby shall become a part of the debt so secured. If the owner of the property shall pay the tax so levied on such security, it shall constitute a payment in full discharge thereof." This section certainly does provide that taxes levied upon the property and security may be paid by either party to the security; and, if paid by the owner of the security, the tax so levied upon the property affected thereby shall become a part of the debt so secured. The contract attacked in this case provides for the same thing in somewhat different language. It provides that the owner of the security may pay and discharge at maturity all taxes, etc., now or hereafter to be laid or imposed upon said lot of land and premises, and which may be in effect a charge thereupon, "and such payments and interest shall be considered as secured by these presents." We must so construe the various clauses of the constitution as to make them harmonize, if it can be done without distorting the meaning of any of them. This would not be accomplished by holding that section 5 prohibits what section 4 expressly permits. There is no occasion, in this case, to construe section 5 beyond holding that it does or does not render the agreement to pay interest at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum monthly in advance null and void. We think it does not. As to the contract which it is claimed effects that result, nothing is claimed under it, and it is unnecessary to indicate what we would do if there was. We think the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and it follows that the judgment must be affirmed.

JOSHUA HENDY MACH. WORKS v. CONNOLLY. (No. 11,345.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1888.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—DELIVERY—EVIDENCE.

In an action by the purchaser of a boiler against a sheriff seizing the same under an attachment against the vendor, plaintiff's evidence tended to show that he paid value for the property, and that at the time of the sale the vendor delivered the keys of the building, of which he was lessee, containing the boiler, pointed out the same, and turned over possession. Defendant's evidence tended to show that the vendee, under whom plaintiff claimed, had the keys of and full access to such building, as an employe of his vendor, at and prior to the sale to him, and that he had never removed the boiler, or exercised any act of ownership over it except to make the sale to plaintiff. Held, that a finding that there was not such an "immediate delivery, followed by an actual and continued change of possession," as is required by Civil Code Cal. § 3440, was not contrary to the evidence.

2. WRONGFUL ATTACHMENT—ACTION AGAINST SHERIFF—FINDINGS.

In an action by the vendee of a chattel against a sheriff seizing the same under an attachment against the vendor, a finding that plaintiff was not and never has been the owner warrants a judgment for defendant; it being unnecessary to find whether such vendor was the owner when the chattel was seized under the attachment.

3. SAME—EVIDENCE.

In an action by the purchaser of a chattel against a sheriff seizing the same under an attachment against the vendor, the judgment roll in the attachment suit, showing a judgment for the plaintiff therein, sufficiently shows that such vendor was indebted to such plaintiff; the admission of such judgment roll in evidence not having been objected to as not showing such indebtedness.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

Action by Joshua Hendy Machine-Works against Patrick Connolly, sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, for the conversion of a steam-boiler of which plaintiff claimed to be the owner. Plaintiff's evidence tended to show that it paid value for the property, and that at the time of the sale the vendor delivered the keys of the building, of which he was lessee, containing the boiler, to Alexander McDaid, under whom plaintiff claims, pointed out the boiler to him, and turned over the possession. Defendant's evidence tended to show that said McDaid was an employe of the vendor at and prior to the time of the sale; that he had the keys of and full access to the building containing the boiler, as such employe; and that he never removed the boiler, or exercised any act of ownership over it other than making the sale to plaintiff. Civil Code, § 3440, declares "every transfer of personal property * * * not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued charge of possession, * * * void as to creditors," etc. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

W. H. H. Hart, for appellant. Royce & Cummins, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action to recover the possession or value of a steam-boiler. The plaintiff asserts title to the boiler under a bill of sale made to it by one Alexander McDaid on the 14th day of August, 1883, and under a bill of sale made to McDaid by one John Mason on the 8th day of the same month. It is alleged in the complaint that on the 14th day of August, 1883, the plaintiff was, and every since has been, the owner of the boiler, and that on the 18th day of that month the defendant wrongfully took the same from the possession of plaintiff. The answer denies that the plaintiff was, at the time named in the complaint, or ever at any time, the owner of the boiler, or that defendant wrongfully, or at all, took it from the possession of plaintiff; and alleges that it was the property and in the possession of John Mason, and that defendant, as sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, under a writ of attachment duly issued against Mason, seized and took it from the possession of Mason on the 17th day of August, 1883. The answer further alleges that the plaintiff's claim of title to the boiler was under a sham, fictitious, fraudulent, and void transfer from Mason, made for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding his creditors. The court below found that the plaintiff was not the owner of the boiler on the 14th day of August, 1883, nor at any time prior to the commencement of the action, and that defendant did not, on the 18th day of that month, or at any other time, take the boiler from the possession of plaintiff; and it further found that the defendant was the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco at all the times mentioned in the complaint, and that on the 17th day of August, 1883, as such sheriff, he seized and took into his possession the property in question by virtue of a writ of attachment regularly issued out of the superior court of the said city and county in an action brought therein by one Joseph Schweitzer against John Mason to recover the sum of $800, which action was afterwards regularly brought to trial, and judgment was entered therein for the plaintiff in the sum of $854.50. Upon the findings the court gave judgment for the defendant, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, the plaintiff has appealed.

It is now claimed by the appellant that the findings that the plaintiff was not the owner of the boiler, and that defendant did not take it from plaintiff's possession, were not justified by the evidence. After carefully reading all of the evidence presented in the transcript, we cannot say that the findings complained of were not justified. The principal question at the trial was as to whether or not the alleged transfers of the boiler were accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession; and upon this question there was a conflict, if not a decided preponderance of the evidence that no such delivery and change of possession were had as is required to pass the title as against an attaching creditor. Civil Code, § 3440.

It is also claimed that the court should have found as to whether or not Mason was the owner of the boiler when it was taken under the writ of attachment, and as to whether or not the sales under which the plaintiff claimed title were made for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding the creditors of Mason, and that for the want of these findings the judgment should be reversed. It seems to us that the findings, as made, were sufficient. The plaintiff was not the owner of the boiler, as against an attaching creditor, if the sales were not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession, nor if the sales were made with intent to delay or defraud the creditors of Mason. The findings covered all the ultimate facts, and it was not necessary to find the probative facts.

It is said that there was no proof that Mason was indebted to Schweitzer, at the time of the sale to McDaid. But the judgment roll in the suit in which the attachment was issued, was offered and admitted in evidence, and there was no objection to it on this ground. It must be presumed, therefore, that it showed an indebtedness which antedated the sale, and justified the issuance of the writ and seizure of the property. Several exceptions were taken by the plaintiff at the trial to orders of the court refusing to permit certain questions to be answered by witnesses, but they need not be specially considered. We see no error in the rulings.

We find nothing in the transcript calling for a reversal of the judgment, and therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

BUTE v. POTTS. (No. 11,273.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1888.)

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In an action against a physician for negligence and incompetency in the treatment of plaintiff, evidence that defendant procured his certificate of proficiency from the state board of examiners without examination, by means of diplomas irregularly obtained from medical schools, is irrelevant, as are also defendant's statements concerning such diplomas; the only question being as to the degree of care and skill used in the particular case.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; D. BELDEN, Judge.

Action by B. F. Butte against J. S. Potts, a physician and surgeon, for negligence and incompetency in the treatment of plaintiff. Verdict and judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

Burt & Pfister, for appellant. C. D. Wright and T. H. Laine, for appellee.

FOOTE, C. This was an action for damages against a physician and surgeon for alleged incompetency and negligence. Judgment passed for the defendant, and from that the plaintiff appeals. Upon the trial the plaintiff offered as evidence to support his contention that the defendant was an incompetent physician and surgeon, that the latter had obtained a certificate from the state board of examiners without an examination as to his qualifications, and that his certificate was issued "upon the presentation of two diplomas" from certain medical schools, which were irregularly obtained. He also desired to show by a witness what the defendant said about his diploma. The court excluded the evidence. The plaintiff excepted, and now claims that the action of the court was erroneous. The case was presented upon the theory that the party sued had been guilty of negligence, and lacked skill as a physician and surgeon. The fact that he had or had not certificates and diplomas as a physician and surgeon is no proof either that he had skill as such or lacked it. A certificate or diploma could be no proof that he acted with skill in attending a given patient, or that he did not so act. His services as to skill or the contrary must be determined by his acts and conduct in attending the patient. It is the manner in which the services are performed that is the test of their character. The evidence was immaterial and irrelevant, and the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

PARDY v. MONTGOMERY et al. (No. 11,204.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 25, 1888.)

PRACTICE—DISMISSAL FOR WANT OF PROSECUTION.

A case was tried before the court, who announced that his opinion was for defendants, but notice of decision was not given, or finding of facts filed or waived. After some delay, plaintiff applied to the clerk to enter judgment, that he might appeal, and, being refused, moved for a new trial, which motion was dismissed, whereupon he moved to place the case on the calendar for trial, pending which defendants moved to dismiss the case for want of prosecution. Held, not a proper case for dismissal.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

Action by George Pardy against Charles Montgomery, George S. Montgomery, John F. Geary, and Isaac Barker. On motion of defendants the action was dismissed for want of prosecution, and plaintiff appealed.

W. T. Baggett and Saml. T. Birdsall, for appellant. W. S. Goodfellow, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. This is an appeal from a judgment dismissing a cause for the want of prosecution. From the affidavits in the transcript, which are mutually agreed, by the joint certificate of counsel on both sides, to have been those used on the hearing of the notice, it is apparent that the cause was tried before Judge ALLEN, but that no findings were ever waived or filed; that after some delay the plaintiff, against whom the judge announced that he should give judgment, endeavored to have the judgment entered, that an appeal might be taken; that the clerk of the court very properly refused to do so; that afterwards, upon the substitution of an attorney for the defendant, a motion for a new trial which had been made was dismissed, which was followed by a motion to reinstate the case upon the calendar for trial, to which the defendant responded by a counter-motion to dismiss for the want of prosecution,—no notice of decision ever having been given. This last motion was granted. As it seems to us, the failure of the defendants to file findings or have them waived, or to give any notice of decision, does not place them in a position to have dismissed, for the want of prosecution, a case which the plaintiff is clamorous to try. The fact that defendants, by neglect to take care of their rights, have occasioned the loss of important testimony, is not chargeable to the plaintiff, and there is nothing to show that the plaintiff or his several attorneys have purposely misled the defendants or their attorneys to their prejudice. There is nothing in the record which shows any merit in the defendant's contention that the action was properly dismissed for the want of prosecution, and we advise that the judgment be reversed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed.

LAUGHLIN v. THOMPSON. (No. 12,457.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 25, 1888.)

SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES—UNLAWFUL SEIZURE—ACTION FOR—WHEN LIES.

Where property in possession is taken by an officer under attachment issued by competent authority, and regular on its face, the writ protects such officer; but, in cases of "claim and delivery," an action will lie to recover property taken from defendant by a constable, without any right but by virtue of an affidavit with the order indorsed thereon, and an undertaking,—the mere direction to the constable conferring no color of authority upon him.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; H. K. S. O'MELVENY, Judge.

James Laughlin brought an action of trover against S. G. Thompson to recover possession of property taken from him by the latter as constable under process in an action of claim and demand in which said James Laughlin was defendant. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

P. W. Dooner, for appellant. S. M. Payton, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. The action is to recover certain lumber or its value. The court below did not err in overruling the plaintiff's general demurrer to the second amended answer. The answer denies that the plaintiff is or was the owner of the property described in the complaint, and denies that the property is of greater value than $300. The answer admits the defendant to be in possession of the property, and admits the demand of plaintiff for a delivery of the property, and defendant's refusal. The narrative of the wreck of the vessel San Luis, and the rescue of a portion of her cargo by Frederick Wilson and other persons, however impertinent to a determination of the rights of the parties herein, cannot be said to make the answer "ambiguous, unintelligible, or uncertain." And so of the insufficiency of the defendant's averment of facts which would constitute a justification of his seizure of the property as constable. If they are insufficient, they do not render the answer ambiguous. Most of the testimony of Frederick Wilson, as set forth in the bill of exceptions, was totally irrelevant; but the plaintiff did not object to it on that ground, but only objected to its being admitted previous to evidence upon another point.

The appeal is from the judgment alone, and the court below failed to find upon the material issues made, or attempted to be made, by the answer. There is no finding, upon the averments, of the facts which would alone justify the defendant in taking the property out of the possession of the plaintiff. At the trial, evidence was or was not given of the institution and pendency of the alleged action brought by Wilson against the present plaintiff in the justice's court; that defendant was constable; and that, as such, he received from the plaintiff in that action an affidavit, order, and written undertaking, substantially complying with sections 510, 511, and 512 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If the evidence was given, the court should have found in favor of the defendant upon his plea purporting to justify a taking otherwise wrongful. If the evidence was not given, the court should have found against the defendant upon that plea. The foregoing assumes the justification to have been sufficiently pleaded, in the absence of a specific demurrer, or of a general demurrer addressed to the particular defense. The admitted case is that plaintiff was in possession, and that the property was taken out of his possession by the defendant. The plaintiff's possession gave him a right of action against a mere trespasser. Such the defendant was, unless he was a constable, who could justify the taking by the affidavit, indorsed order, and undertaking above mentioned. But the court did not find upon the facts pleaded by the defendant to justify his taking, and the plaintiff's implied denial thereof. There is no averment in the answer that the property was delivered to the plaintiffs in the action brought in the justice's court. On the contrary, it would appear from the answer that defendant holds the property subject to the further order of that court, or of the court to which the former action has been appealed. He did not take the property as agent of the plaintiffs in the justice's court, but as an officer claiming the right to take it by virtue of appropriate power or authority. Wilson and others are not parties to this action, and their right to salvage, if any they have, and to the possession of the property to secure their lien for salvage, constitutes no defense for the defendant in the present action. When property is in the possession of the defendant to an action, the writ of attachment alone, if issued by competent authority and regular on its face, protects the sheriff or constable. Pol. Code, § 4187. But in case of "claim and delivery" the affidavit, order indorsed thereon, and undertaking, all go into the hands of the officer, and constitute the process. He must determine whether they are regular and sufficient. Moreover, a defendant can have an attachment issued by the court set aside when it has been improperly issued. Code Civil Proc. § 556. There is no such provision with respect to property taken under the chapter as to claim and delivery. Even if a defendant in an action cannot sue an officer who attaches his property while the attachment suit is pending, it does not follow that a defendant in an action for the recovery of specific personal property cannot sue for the recovery of the possession of property wrongfully taken by a constable, without any right. The mere direction to a sheriff or constable, by a plaintiff in an action of "claim and delivery," to take property from the defendant, confers no color of authority upon the officer. The cause was determined in the court below as if it had been an action against the alleged salvors; the court holding that the plaintiff could not maintain an action for the recovery of the property, without a tender [to them?] of the amount of the lien. The judgment dismissed the action, and gives the "defendants" their costs. On the return of the cause to the court below, it will be for the parties to apply to the court to amend their pleadings as they shall be advised. The answer should clearly show that, when the defendant took the property from the plaintiff, he was armed with an affidavit, containing substantially the matters required by law to be stated in it, and with a sufficient order and undertaking. Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

PEOPLE v. COX. (No. 20,410.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 25, 1888.)

1. HOMICIDE—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

On a trial for murder, it appeared that part of the judge's charge was addressed orally to the jury, and not taken down by the reporter, though he was present at the time; but the certified bill of exceptions showed that the language used did not affect or in any way qualify the charge as taken down by the reporter. Held, there was no error, notwithstanding Pen. Code Cal. § 1093, enacts that, "if the charge be not given in writing, it must be taken down by the phonographic reporter."

2. SAME.

On a trial for murder, where there is proof of deliberation and premeditation on the part of the prisoner, it is proper to charge that "where a person deliberately, premeditatedly, and unlawfully kills another, he is presumed to do so with express malice," and such a charge cannot be said to lead the jury to believe that a person can be guilty of murder in the first degree without proof of express malice.

3. SAME—CONDUCT OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

On a trial for murder, the prosecuting attorney placed upon the table a bowie-knife, pistol, and a coat of mail, which had no bearing on the case, and were not offered in evidence, nor was the attention of the court called to them, nor requested to rule or charge with reference to them. Held, not sufficient ground for reversing the judgment.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Calaveras county; C. V. GOTTSCHALK, Judge.

George W. Cox was convicted of murder in the first degree. He appeals. Conviction affirmed.

Ira Hill Reed, (H. P. Bowie, of counsel,) for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. The defendant was found guilty of murder in the first degree. It is contended the court below erred, in that the judge gave to the jury an oral instruction, not taken down by the phonographic reporter, as required by section 1093 of the Penal Code. The bill of exceptions shows that after the judge below had read written instructions, and prior to an oral instruction (which was taken down) explanatory of the difference between the degrees of murder, he addressed to the jury a few words "leading up to and in no way touching upon" the oral instruction, which were not taken down. When, by the statute in force, it was required that the charge of the court to the jury must be reduced to writing before its delivery, it was repeatedly decided that to charge the jury orally was to commit an error; and since the statute which provides for the charge being taken down by the reporter, it has been said the giving of an oral charge in the absence of the reporter, within call, was error. People v. Hersey, 53 Cal. 574. In the case at bar, the reporter was present, and was engaged in the task of taking down the charge while it was being delivered. If the bill of exceptions showed that an oral charge was given, not contained in the report of the short-hand reporter, while it neither showed what the charge was, nor the character or effect of it, the order denying a new trial would be reversed. It must be presumed, however, that if the judge of the superior court had been requested to do so, he would have inserted the language used by him which was not taken down by the reporter. If it appeared on appeal that such language could not have influenced the jury adversely to the defendant, the judgment would not have been reversed, either because the language was used or because it was not taken down by the reporter. Here the bill of exceptions does not contain the language of the judge not phonographically reported, but the certified bill of exceptions shows that the language did not affect nor in any way qualify the charge which was taken down by the reporter. The point of appellant is that, if any words were said by the judge to the jury which were not written down by the reporter, this is error, demanding a reversal of the judgment. It may be said it was intended the settlement of the bill of exceptions should not depend upon the fallible memory of the judge; but the alternative is that there can be no contradiction or modification of the account of the short-hand reporter. The notes of the reporter, and his transcription of them in long-hand, are but prima facie evidence of the charge. Code Civil Proc. § 273. It is plain that, in settling a bill of exceptions, the judge should insert what he actually said to the jury, as a substitute for what the reporter has erroneously stated was said to the jury. Shall it be held that, if the reporter omits to take down a portion of the oral charge, the judge has no power, in settling the bill, to supply the portion omitted? So to hold would be to transfer the judicial function of charging the jury to the phonographic reporter. The settled and certified bill of exceptions, the settlement never having been attacked in the manner provided by statute, imports absolute verity. The words of the judge not taken down by the reporter were therefore unimportant, and could not have injured the defendant. There is no pretense that the defendant sought to have included in the bill of exceptions the language actually used by the judge, not taken down by the reporter; or relied on the proposition that the language expressed an erroneous proposition as to the law, or that it was misleading. The defendant's counsel would have had the right to insist upon the insertion; and, had the judge below refused the demand, the judge would have refused to settle an exception according to the facts, within the meaning of section 1174 of the Penal Code. But such a refusal can never be assumed. When the judge refuses, on request, to settle an exception according to the fact, the remedy of the party desiring the bill settled is to apply to this court for leave to prove the exception under the section of the Code last mentioned.

A recital in the bill of exceptions shows that, during the trial and in sight of the jury, a sheriff's officer brought into the court-room, and the district attorney placed upon the table, a bowie-knife, pistol, and coat of mail, which, as stated by counsel for appellant in this court, "had no bearing on the case." Whatever may have been the intention of the district attorney, the articles mentioned were not in fact offered in evidence. We are not called on to commend such an exhibition, but we find in it no sufficient reason for reversing the judgment. The attention of the court was not called to the presence of the articles, nor was the court requested to rule or charge with respect to them. No objection was made to the action of the sheriff or district attorney. The statement in the bill of exceptions as to the knife, pistol, and coat of mail, has no appropriate place in the bill. A bill of exceptions must contain so much of the evidence, or of facts occurring at the trial, only as is necessary to present the questions of law upon which the exceptions are taken. Pen. Code, § 1175. But we may safely say the jury was not influenced by the sight of the articles placed upon the table. They were very distinctly told that in finding their verdict they must be governed alone by the evidence admitted, and it must be presumed they were men of ordinary intelligence.

Appellant also contends: "The instruction in chief by which the jury may have understood that proof of the killing, without proof of express malice, was sufficient to establish the homicide to be murder in the first degree, was error." We have found no such instruction in the record. Malice is express when there is manifested a deliberate intention to take away the life of a fellow-creature. Pen. Code, § 188. Murder which is perpetrated by any kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, is murder of the first degree, (Pen. Code, § 189;) that is, the killing must be willful, deliberate, and premeditated. If the evidence manifestly proves beyond a reasonable doubt that the "killing" was premeditated, etc., the "express malice" is proved. The court charged: "When a person deliberately, premeditatedly, and unlawfully kills another, he is presumed to do so with express malice." This was at least as favorable to the defendant as it should have been. The court also gave the statutory definition of murder, totidem verbis. And, again: "The unlawful killing must be accompanied with a deliberate and manifest intent to take life in order to constitute murder of the first degree. The intent to kill must be the result of deliberate premeditation. It must be formed upon a pre-existing reflection, and not upon a sudden heat of passion sufficient to preclude the idea of deliberation." Further, the court charged: "Any unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought is murder; but, if nothing further characterizes the offense, it is murder in the second degree. To constitute the higher offense, there must be willfulness, deliberation, premeditation. By willfulness is meant that it was of purpose, with the intent that, by the given act, the life of the party should be taken." And afterwards, the court, speaking of murder of the first degree, said: "It is sufficient if a man conceives the intention to kill another one, and carries it into execution." The general idea of the charge is that if it is clearly proved the defendant killed the deceased, and the evidence does not show (it is unnecessary here to speak of the quantum of evidence necessary to show it) either that the killing was justifiable or excusable, or that the offense was manslaughter, the crime is murder of the second degree, unless the evidence manifests beyond reasonable doubt that the defendant deliberately and premeditatedly formed the intent to kill the deceased, and killed him to carry out that intent, in which case it is murder of the first degree. People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 96, 97. We find nothing in it which could have induced the jury to believe that a homicide could be murder of the first degree without express malice on the part of the slayer. Judgment and order affirmed.

KELLY v. LUNING. (No. 9,920.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 23, 1888.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREET ASSESSMENT—POWER OF SUPERVISORS OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Acts Cal. 1877-78, c. 282, providing for the ratification of certain orders of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, concerning street work on Montgomery avenue, and providing how assessments should be made for work already done, does not authorize said board to order property assessed for work ordered and completed before the passage of said act, when such property was not liable therefor under the law as it existed when the work was ordered; the legislature having no right to impose such liability.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. M. CLOUGH, Judge.

Action by M. J. Kelly against Nicholas Luning to foreclose the lien of a street assessment levied, under the act of 1872, (St. 1871-72, § 8, p. 911,) upon certain lots on Montgomery avenue, in the city and county of San Francisco. Montgomery avenue runs diagonally across the other streets in its vicinity, dividing the blocks in its course into fractional parts of blocks, one of which was owned by defendant, and is the property in question; and crosses Stockton and Green streets (which cross each other at right angles) squarely at their intersection, the only case of the kind in the city except on Market street. The act of 1872 (Acts Cal. 1871-72, § 8, p. 911) provides for assessments for street improvement generally, with special provisions for the crossings of Market street by name, but for no other cases of like kind; Montgomery avenue not then being in existence. The legislature, after the work in question was ordered and completed, passed an act which is relied on by the city as curative of the want of power in the board of supervisors to provide for such work. Acts Cal. 1877-78, c. 282, pp. 342, 343. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

Langhorne & Miller, for appellant. J. M. Wood, for appellee.

FOOTE, C. This action was brought to foreclose the lien of a street assessment levied, under the act of 1872, upon certain lots on Montgomery avenue, in the city and county of San Francisco. At the time when the notice of intention on the part of the board of supervisors was given, no valid assessment could have been made, as the act of 1872 did not provide for any mode of assessment, for work such as was done in the present instance. By a curative act approved March 19, 1878, (St. 1877-78, pp. 342, 343,) it was attempted to validate former assessments, and also to provide a mode of assessment for the work which has already been done. But the property involved here, upon which the burden of paying for the work was attempted to be imposed, was not liable when the work was ordered. At that time the proceedings of the board of supervisors had no relation to it. That being the case, the legislature, by the act of 1878, supra, had no more power to order it to be assessed for that work than it had the power to order lots lying on the other side of the city of San Francisco to be assessed for such work. We are of opinion that this case falls within the doctrine announced in People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 23; Brady v. King, 53 Cal. 45. It follows that the judgment and order should be reversed, and the action dismissed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and action dismissed.

PHILLIPS et al. v. DECK. (No. 12,444.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1888.)

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—ACCEPTANCE OF OFFER OF SALE BY VENDEE—REASONABLE TIME.

A contract for the sale of land in California, where the vendor lived, was, by an agent of both parties, thirteen days after its execution by the vendor, mailed to vendees, who lived in Missouri, but who, as was known by all parties, would not be at home for four days. Seventeen days after writing, the agent received an acceptance of the offer from vendees, with money, notes, and mortgage, in accordance with the agreement. Six days afterwards, it being discovered that the mortgage was not properly acknowledged, at the instance of vendor's wife, in whose charge the matter was during his absence, it was returned to Missouri for correction, and twenty-one days thereafter was, with notes and money, tendered to vendor and his wife, and a deed demanded; vendees having been given possession of the premises in the mean time by the wife. Held, in a suit for specific performance by the vendees, that the acceptance of and compliance with the contract by the vendees was within a reasonable time after the date thereof.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; HENRY M. WILLIS, Judge.

Action by E. A. Phillips and C. Newkirk against L. Deck for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate. The defense was that the plaintiffs had not accepted the offer of sale within a reasonable time, and that it was therefore not binding. Defendant had signed a written contract or offer which gave a reasonable time to confer with plaintiffs, who lived in Missouri, while defendant lived at San Bernardino, Cal., to be sent to them for their acceptance by one Condee, who acted in the transaction as agent for both parties. The offer was dated and signed February 21st, when defendant left for Mexico, where he remained until April 19th, leaving a deed with his wife, whom he placed in full charge of the negotiation, to be delivered in the event of the acceptance of the option by plaintiffs, who, as was known by all parties, would not be at home for about four days. On the 6th of March, Condee sent the offer to plaintiffs, who accepted the same, and mailed back the cash payment, notes, and mortgage, as agreed upon, which Condee received on the 23d, and of which defendant's wife was notified on the 29th; but, the mortgage not being acknowledged, at the instance of defendant's wife and her attorney it was returned for correction. On the 15th of April the mortgage was returned corrected, and on the 19th Condee tendered to defendant and his wife the money, notes, and mortgage, which they refused to receive, and also refused to execute the deed as agreed upon. The court found the acceptance by plaintiffs to have been in a reasonable time. Defendant appealed.

C. J. Perkins and Wicks & Ward, for appellant. Rowell & Rowell, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. We find no error in the rulings upon the evidence. We are of opinion that the communication to and acceptance by plaintiffs of the proposal of defendant to sell the land in controversy were all within a reasonable time, and that the same is true of the compliance of plaintiffs with the proposal so accepted by them. Judgment and order affirmed.

GRIFFETH et al. v. BROWN. (No. 11,100.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 25, 1888.)

ESTOPPEL—WHAT REPRESENTATIONS AMOUNT TO—INTENT TO DECEIVE.

A charge that if defendant made certain misrepresentations concerning his claim to the property in dispute, which misled plaintiffs, he is estopped to set up any claim to such property, but fails to state that such representations must have been made with the express intention to deceive, or with such culpable negligence as to amount to constructive fraud, is erroneous; and such error is not cured by another distinct charge which states the rule more accurately.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Benito county; JAMES F. BREEN, Judge.

Action by Griffith & Dalzel against Henderson Brown for the recovery of certain wheat. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

McCroskey & Hudner, for appellant. Montgomery & Scott and N. C. Briggs, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to recover 500 sacks of wheat, or the value thereof. The verdict and judgment were for plaintiffs, and defendant appealed. The action arose out of those prolific sources of litigation, leases of agricultural land, cropping contracts, and mortgages of growing crops. About the 1st of November, 1883, the defendant, Brown, being the owner of a certain tract of land, made a verbal contract, the terms of which are in dispute, about said land, with one Manuel Smith. Under this contract, whatever it was, Smith cultivated the land, and put in a crop of wheat. On February 19, 1884, Smith mortgaged his growing crop to plaintiffs to secure future advances. Under the terms of the mortgage, plaintiffs were authorized to take possession of the grain, and harvest, thresh, and sack it, which they did. They gave defendant one-fourth of the grain, and piled the other three-fourths in one corner of the premises, from which defendant took the 500 sacks sued for, claiming it to be his property. Plaintiffs' theory (supported by some evidence) was that the verbal contract between Brown and Smith, made in November, 1883, was simply a lease; Smith to pay as rent one-fourth of the crop, and the stubble and straw to go, also, to Brown. But Brown introduced a written instrument signed by himself and Smith, dated November 3, 1883, but shown to have been executed after plaintiffs' mortgage, which was a cropping contract, by the terms of which Brown was to be and remain the owner of all the wheat raised, not only until Smith should have delivered him one-fourth of the wheat raised, but until he should have delivered to him, also, an additional amount of the wheat sufficient to pay, at market price, the sum of $576.22, and interest, which Smith owed him for certain horses and farming implements; and defendant's theory (supported, also, by some evidence) was that the written cropping contract was the same as the original verbal contract made in November, 1883, and was a mere reduction of the latter to writing. So that the jury may have found in favor of either party as to the real character of the original verbal contract. But the plaintiffs also introduced evidence tending to show that, when Smith came to them for advances, they went to defendant, Brown, and inquired of him what the contract was between him and Smith, and told him that Smith wanted them to make him advances; and that Brown said, as Smith had before told them, that he (Brown) was to receive one-fourth of the wheat, and the straw and stubble; and encouraged them to make the advances, and said nothing about any other lien on or interest in the wheat; and that by Brown's statements and representations they were induced to take the mortgage and make the advances. And for these reasons they claimed that Brown was estopped from setting up any claim under such cropping contract. The evidence as to what Brown said to plaintiff about the contracts was conflicting; and it is evident that the instructions of the court about the issue of estoppel thus raised were important and material. The court instructed the jury, among other things, as follows: "If you find from the evidence that plaintiffs herein, Griffith and Dalzel, before receiving the mortgage from Smith, or before making advances on said mortgage, applied to Brown, lessor to Smith, to ascertain Smith's liability to him (Brown) under the said lease or contract, and that defendant, Brown, by his declarations or conduct, misled said Griffith and Dalzel, to their prejudice, as to the material terms of said contract or lease, he (Brown) is estopped from setting up the alleged lien, and shielding himself behind the stipulation that the grain was subject to a lien for the payment of claims other than rental, and which were not communicated to plaintiff." The court also gave another and longer instruction, substantially to the same effect as the one just quoted, and with no other important qualification.

It is quite evident that these instructions were erroneous. They lack the most important element of estoppel, namely, that the party against whom it is invoked made the declaration or did the act upon which the estoppel is sought to be based, either with the express intention to deceive, or with such careless and culpable negligence as to amount to constructive fraud. Boggs v. Mining Co., 14 Cal. 368; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 38. And the error is not remedied by the fact that in another and distinct instruction the rule was stated with more accuracy. The jury were at liberty to follow either instruction. We are aware that a judgment should not be reversed for every abstract error occurring in the preliminary steps which led to it. But the doctrine of estoppel in pais would be very harsh and unjust if allowed to go beyond its legitimate limits. Its practical meaning, generally, is that a man must lose property actually and legally his, on account of something which he has said about it. Brown was not under obligation to tell plaintiffs anything about his property or his business. Still if, with intent, either express or fairly to be implied, he did make false representations to plaintiffs for the purpose of deceiving them, or was guilty of fraudulent carelessness in his representations, and plaintiffs had not other reasonable means of knowing the truth, and relied on such representations, then he should suffer for his conduct. But these characteristics of the rule of estoppel should have been fairly and clearly given to the jury; and it is quite probable that this was the very point which determined the verdict. For this reason, therefore, we are of the opinion that the judgment should be reversed. Judgment and order denying a new trial reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

DIGGINS v. BROWN et al. (No. 11, 115.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1888.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREET ASSESSMENTS—WHAT PROPERTY SUBJECT TO—PARTIAL IMPROVEMENTS.

Under Acts Cal. 1871-72, c. 562, pp. 809-811, relating to improvement of streets in the city of San Francisco, which provides that the expenses incurred for any work authorized thereby shall be assessed on the lots and lands fronting thereon, and that, when such work is done on one side of the center line of the street, the lots or portions of lots fronting on that side only in front of which such work is done, shall be assessed to cover the expenses thereof, etc., where work is done on portions only of each side of the center line of a street, all the property on each side, for the whole length of the district ordered to be improved, should be assessed with the whole expense incurred on the side on which the property fronts, and not simply such property as fronts the portions of the street where such work is done.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

Action by A. C. Diggins against Morris Brown, T. W. Fenn, E. O'Neil, Cal. Rep. 16-19 P.—41

and D. C. Sullivan, to foreclose the lien of a street assessment on lot No. 3, (in diagram,) fronting on Olive avenue, between Buchanan and Laguna streets, in the city of San Francisco. The defendants insisted that the assessment was not levied as prescribed by law. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed.

J. C. Bates, for appellants. J. M. Wood, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action to foreclose the lien of a street assessment. The only point made is that the assessment shows upon its face that it was not made in accordance with the statute. The order under which the work was done, provides "that plank sidewalks be constructed on Olive avenue, between Laguna and Buchanan streets, where not already constructed; and that the roadway thereof be macadamized where not already done." The diagram attached to the assessment is as follows:

The items of the work, as shown by the assessment, are as follows:

3,937 5-10 square feet of macadam, at $0.10,	-	-	-	$393 75
375 front feet of sidewalks, at $1.15,	-	-	-	431 25
Printing, $18.90; engineering, $33,	-	-	-	51 90

Total, - - - - - $876 90

Number of front feet assessed, 375; rate per front foot, $2.3384.

The distribution of the burden was as follows:

Nos.	Names of Owners.	Front Feet.	Amount.
1.....	Unknown	137 6-12	$321 53
2.....	Unknown	137 6-12	321 53
3.....	Unknown	100	233 84
Total.....			$876 90

It thus appears that the lots designated as a and b upon the above diagram were not assessed at all, although they fronted on Olive avenue between the streets mentioned. In making the assessment in this way the officer doubtless acted under what we conceive to be a mistaken construction of the provisions of the act of 1871-72, under which the proceedings were had. There are two provisions of that act which are relied upon by respondent as justifying the assessment, viz.: subdivisions 10 and 1 of section 8. The former is as follows: "Subd. 10. When any work mentioned in section 3 of this act * * * is done on one side of the center line of said street, * * * the lots or portions of lots fronting on that side only in front of which said work is done shall be assessed to cover the expenses of said work," etc. Laws 1871-72, p. 811. In view of this provision, the officer was justified in assessing the lots on one side of the street for the work done on that half of the street, and the lots on the other side for the work done on the other half. But this does not meet the difficulty, even if we assume, in favor of the assessment, (as we think should be done,) that no work was in fact done on the half of the street in front of lots a and b. That is simply saying that they should not be assessed (and were not assessed) for work done on the opposite side of the street; but this is a different thing from saying that they should not be assessed for work done on their own side of the street. And the difficulty here is that the work done on one side of the street was not apportioned to all the lots on that side. It appears from the assessment itself that this is the case; for it is certain that work was done on the side of the street upon which lot b is situated, because lot No. 3, on that side, was assessed, and under subdivision 10 it could only have been assessed for work done on its side of the street; and it is equally certain that lot b, on the same side, was not assessed at all. And the same applies, mutatis mutandis, to lot a on the other side of the street. The practical result of the course which the officer pursued is that lot No. 3, which is the one involved in this suit, was assessed for the work done in front of it, and that this burden was not shared by the adjoining lot on the same side, (lot b,) nor by the lot opposite, (lot a.) This can only be justified upon the theory that the act requires each lot to be assessed for the portion of the work which was done upon the part of the street in front of it, and for no other work; and, although the statement of respondent's position in this regard is somewhat vague, we understand him to go to this extent. In support of his position, the counsel refers us to subdivision 1, of section 8 of the act of 1871-72, (Laws 1871-72, pp. 809, 810,) which is as follows: "Subdivision 1. The expenses incurred for any work authorized by section 3 of this act shall be assessed upon the lots and lands fronting thereon." The words "fronting thereon," says the counsel, "refer to the work done. It requires the assessment to be imposed upon the lands fronting on the work." It is not clear in what sense the counsel uses the word "work;" but, as above mentioned, the argument would not justify the assessment unless it goes to the extent stated. In order to save the assessment, it is necessary to construe the provision so as to read substantially as follows: "Subdivision 1. The expenses incurred for any portion of the work authorized by section 3 of this act shall be assessed upon the lots and lands fronting on such portion of the work." There is nothing in the language of the provision to indicate that such was the meaning of the legislature. The word "thereon" must refer to the phrase "any work authorized by section 3 of this act." And the natural meaning of the words used is that the expense of the whole work shall be assessed ratably upon all the lands fronting on the work. Nor is there anything in the nature of the proceedings to indicate a different construction. On the contrary, the method of assessing each lot for the work done in front of it has been condemned by high authority. See Cooley, Tax'n, (2d Ed.) 646, 647. It results that the assessment was improperly made, that it omits a lot which should have shared the burden with the one sought to be charged. Such being the case, the assessment is void. People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 19, 20. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be reversed, with directions to dismiss the action.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, with directions to dismiss the action.

ARENDT v. MACE et ux. (No. 11,281.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1888.)

1. HOMESTEAD—ESTABLISHMENT OF CLAIM—EVIDENCE.

In ejectment, plaintiff claiming under an execution sale, uncontradicted evidence that the lot in question was inclosed by one fence with defendant's house lot when he filed a homestead; that the lot was used for a garden; and that a pump was upon it, from which water was taken for house purposes, — is sufficient to show that the lot was part of defendant's homestead, though the lot was not used for garden purposes in the year in which the execution was levied.

2. SAME—SELECTION FROM WIFE'S PROPERTY—CONSENT OF WIFE.

Under the California statute providing that a homestead may be selected from the community property of a husband and wife, or the separate property of the husband, or, with the consent of the wife, from her separate property, a homestead may be created on land consisting in part of separate and in part of common property, and a filing of such homestead by the wife is a sufficient consent to the filing on her separate property.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. GREENE, Judge.

Action of ejectment by Harris Arendt against John M. Mace and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

G. W. Langan, for appellants. J. R. Palmer, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. Ejectment. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. The action was brought to recover possession of lot 14, in block A, Pleasanton. The plaintiff claims under a sale by the sheriff by authority of an execution issued upon a judgment recovered against John M. Mace, one of the defendants herein, and on a deed executed by the sheriff thereon. The defense interposed was that, at the time of the levy and sale by the sheriff, lot 14 was the homestead of defendants, who were then husband and wife. The court found against this defense, and defendants here contend that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the decision, and that the lot in controversy was the homestead of the defendants at the time above stated. Lots 14 and 15 adjoined. A witness testifies "that, when he was on the lots with the sheriff, (which was when the levy was made,) there was a fence all around the two lots, except around the front of lot 15." This witness also says: "When I was there with the sheriff, I should judge that the house [the reference here is to the dwelling-house of defendants] was two or three feet from the fence between 14 and 15. * * * Previous to that time there was a fence between 14 and 15, but Mr. Mace had taken away a section of it, when he was going to move the house right on it." He says also that the lot was used as a garden lot by Mace; that he raised potatoes, a few trees, and garden vegetables on it. Mace testifies that, when the homestead was filed, he and his wife were residing on lots 14 and 15; that part of the house was on lot 14; that lot 14 was used for garden purposes, for the purposes of the family; that he had a pump standing right in the center of lot 14. This pump was used to pump water on lot 14 from a well on lot 15. In 1881, he put a fence all around lot 14, and raised potatoes and all kind of vegetables on it for their own use. Mrs. Mace testified that lot 14 was used for a garden "for vegetables, potatoes, and fruit." She also testifies to the pump on lot 14, put there for the purpose of irrigating. The well was on lot 15, and there were pipes from the well on 15 to the pump on 14; that the pump was put on 14 for the purpose of watering the garden, and for the convenience of the house and kitchen; that they got the water from this pump to use in the house in which they lived. She further states that when the homestead was filed by her, on the 10th of March, 1882, there was a fence all around lots 15 and 14. "They were both inclosed in one fence."

We think the above uncontradicted evidence shows that lot 14 was a part of the homestead of defendants when the levy and sale above mentioned were made by the sheriff. Plaintiff's counsel lays much stress on the circumstance that no vegetables were raised on lot 14 in the year 1882, in which the levy and sale were made. We think this immaterial, in view of the fact of the use of the lot for other purposes. The pump from which water was procured for use by the family was on the lot, and there were trees growing on it, fruit trees, we infer, from the testimony of Mrs Mace. It is clear that this lot was used with lot 15 by the family. If a lot had been used, as this one had been, for a year or two just prior to the filing of the homestead for a garden, the circumstances that vegetables were not grown on it during the year in which the filing was made would, in our judgment, be entitled to but little weight on the question whether such lot, after the filing, constituted a part of the homestead, especially where other uses of the lot are shown. When the homestead filing was made, lot 15 was the separate property of the wife, and lot 14 was common property; and it is argued by plaintiff that a valid homestead could not be created on land, a part of which was the separate property of the wife, and the other part common property. The statute provides that "if the claimant be married, the homestead may be selected from the community property, or the separate property of the husband, or with the consent of the wife from her separate property." In this case the filing was by the wife, and such filing by her must be regarded as a consent to the filing on her separate property. Under the statute she can certainly create a homestead on her own or separate property. We see no valid reason why a homestead cannot be created on a lot of land consisting in part of separate and in part of common property, as was done in this case. We do not intend by what is said above to hold that a husband can, by adopting the course pursued in this case, create a homestead on the separate property of the wife. In accordance with the foregoing, the judgment and order must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. So ordered.

HAMIL v. McILROY. (No. 11,340.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1888.)

1. ASSIGNMENT—CONSIDERATION—PROOF OF—FINDINGS OF COURT.

In an action to compel a reassignment of a judgment alleged to have been assigned by plaintiff to defendant without consideration, findings that at the time of said assignment there were unsettled demands existing between plaintiff and defendant, and that said demands were the only consideration for said assignment; that thereafter plaintiff commenced an action against defendant, and recovered judgment therein; that in said action defendant filed a counter-claim, which was allowed, but no credit was given plaintiff for the judgment in question, or the assignment thereof, nor was the same in any manner litigated or alleged in said action; and that defendant has never paid plaintiff anything for or on account of said judgment, or the assignment thereof,—show that such assignment was made without consideration.

2. SET-OFF AND COUNTER-CLAIM—REJECTION BY THE COURT—RES ADJUDICATA, WHEN.

In an action to compel a reassignment of a judgment, a finding that one D. had previously recovered a judgment against plaintiff and assigned it to B., who had filed a petition joining D. with him, plaintiff appearing and joining in the petition, praying that the judgment in question be set off against his own judgment because D. was the real though not the nominal defendant in the action in which the judgment in question was recovered, and that such petition was refused on the ground that plaintiff had made a valid assignment of the judgment in question, does not show that the issue involved is res adjudicata.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Benito county; JAMES F. BREEN, Judge.

Action by T. Hamil against R. H. McIlroy to compel a reassignment of a judgment alleged to have been assigned to defendant as trustee without consideration. It appeared that the assignment was made to secure an indebtedness from plaintiff to defendant on an open account, the balance of which was subsequently found to be in plaintiff's favor. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

N. C. Briggs, for appellant. Montgomery & Scott and B. B. McCroskey, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. On May 12, 1884, appellant recovered a judgment against one Watson for $111.30, and on the same day assigned it to respondent. Afterwards appellant demanded a reassignment of said judgment by respondent to him, (appellant,) which respondent refused to make. Appellant brought this action to compel respondent to assign said judgment to him, (appellant,) and, among other things, alleges that said assignment from him to respondent was made without consideration, and that respondent holds the same merely as trustee for appellant. Respondent in his answer denied that allegation, and alleged that there was a full and valuable consideration for said assignment; and for a further defense alleged that the same matter was adjudged between the same parties in an action in the superior court of San Benito county. The court found that appellant recovered judgment as alleged in his complaint, and that he assigned it to respondent; "that at the time of said assignment there were unsettled demands existing between appellant and respondent, and among them advances made by respondent to and for appellant's benefit in prosecuting said action above named; that these advances and said unsettled demands were the only consideration for said assignment." The next finding is that, after said assignment was made, appellant commenced an action against respondent, and recovered a judgment against him for the sum of $28, and that in said action respondent filed a counter-claim for his said demands against appellant, which were allowed by the court; "that in said action no credit was given to Hamil, plaintiff, for said judgment, or the assignment thereof; nor was the same in any manner litigated or alleged in said action, and said defendant, McLroy, has never paid to plaintiff, Hamil, anything for or on account of said judgment, or the assignment thereof." These findings show that the assignment was made without any consideration, and appellant is entitled to a reassignment, unless the defense of res adjudicata is sustained by the facts found. On that issue the finding is that on March 20, 1883, one Dufresnoy recovered a judgment against Hamil, and assigned it to one N. C. Briggs, who filed a petition in the superior court of San Benito county, joining Dufresnoy with him, asking that the judgment against Watson be set off by the judgment against the judgment in favor of Dufresnoy to the amount of $87, because Watson was the nominal and Dufresnoy the real party in the action of Hamil v. Watson. Hamil appeared in the proceeding and joined in the petition of Briggs and Dufresnoy in asking that the judgment be set off. The court denied the prayer of the petitioner, finding, as the record shows, that the judgment in favor of Hamil was by him in due form assigned to one R. H. McLroy, whether for the purpose of collection or control did not appear on the hearing of the motion; but the assignment will be by the court, as it was by counsel, treated as for a valuable consideration. The record further shows that the court then proceeded to find, and based its decision on the fact, that the judgment rendered against Watson was for the value of property which was exempt from execution in favor of Hamil, and the judgment therefor was also exempt in the hands of Hamil's assignee, and could not be offset. We think the refusal of the court to allow Hamil's judgment against Watson to be set off against Dufresnoy's judgment against Hamil did not involve the issue in this case; and, as it did not, the other facts found entitle appellant to the relief prayed in his complaint.

Judgment reversed, and the court below is directed to enter judgment upon the findings in favor of the plaintiff as prayed in his complaint

TURLOCK IRRIGATION DIST. v. WILLIAMS. (No. 12,426.)*(Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1888.)CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—IRRIGATION DISTRICT—BONDS—VALIDITY—MANDATE TO COMPEL SIGNING.

The "act to provide for organization and government of irrigation districts," etc., (Sess. Laws Cal. 1887, p. 29,) authorizing such a district to issue bonds signed by its president and secretary for raising money to conduct necessary irrigating canals, etc., and levy assessments for the payment thereof upon the real estate of the district, is not unconstitutional as contemplating unequal taxation, or taxation for other than a public purpose; and the secretary of an irrigation district may be compelled by writ of mandate to sign bonds issued for such purpose.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. On application for writ of mandate.

Petition for writ of mandate to compel R. M. Williams, secretary of Turlock irrigation district, to sign bonds of the district. The "Act to provide for organization and government of irrigation districts," etc., (Sess. Laws Cal. 1887, p. 29,) under authority of which the bonds are sought to be issued, provides that such a district may issue bonds, signed by its president and secretary, for raising money to conduct necessary irrigating canals, etc., and levy assessments for the payment thereof upon the real estate of the district.

P. J. Hazen, Hatton & Fulkerth, and W. H. Beatty, for petitioner. Louttit, Woods & Levinsky, W. L. Dudley, and A. L. Hart, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the defendant, as the secretary of an irrigation district, under the "Act to provide for organization and government of irrigation districts," etc., approved March 7, 1887, (Sess. Laws, p. 29,) to sign certain bonds which the applicant proposes to issue under section 15 of that act. The refusal of the defendant to sign those instruments is based upon the ground that the statute is unconstitutional and void. One of the distinguished counsel for the defendant contends that the districts contemplated by the act are private corporations, formed for a private purpose; to use his own language, "Such an organization has none of the elements of a public municipal body." While another able attorney on the same side contends that "all the constituents of a public corporation are present, and to that class of corporations a district of the statute must be assigned;" and claims that the money sought to be raised under the act is a general tax, and that the system of organization of the corporations prescribed in the act is in conflict with the general plan of constitutional political organizations, and that the mode of taxation provided is different from that made necessary by the constitution for general governmental purposes, and therefore the act is void. We are inclined to agree with the last-mentioned advocate of the defendant's cause, but to the extent only that the districts, when organized as provided in the act under discussion, have all the elements of corporations formed to accomplish a public use and purpose, according to the rules of law laid down in Hagar v. Supervisors, 47 Cal. 223; Dean v. Davis, 51 Cal. 406; People v. Williams, 56 Cal. 647; People v. La Rue, 67 Cal. 526, 8 Pac. Rep. 84; Reclamation Dist. v. Hagar, 66 Cal. 54, 4 Pac. Rep. 915. The results to be derived from a drainage law, and one which has for its purpose the irrigation of immense bodies of arid lands, must necessarily be the same, as respects the public good. The one is intended to bring into cultivation and make productive a large acreage of land which would otherwise remain uncultivated, and unproductive of any advantage to the state, being useless, incapable of yielding any revenue of importance towards the support of the general purposes of state government, by reason of too much water flowing over or standing upon or percolating through them. The other has for its main object the utilizing and improvement of vast tracts of arid and unfruitful soil,—desert-like in character, much of it,—which, if water in sufficient quantity can be conducted upon and applied to it, may be made to produce the same results as flow from the drainage of large bodies of swamp and overflowed lands. Such a general scheme, by which immigration may be stimulated, the taxable property of the state increased, the relative burdens of taxation upon the whole people decreased, and the comfort and advantage of many thriving communities subserved, would seem to redound to the common advantage of all the people of the state, to a greater or less extent. It is true that incidentally private persons and private property may be benefited, but the main plan of the legislature, viz., the general welfare of the whole people, inseparably bound up with the interests of those living in sections which are dry and unproductive without irrigation, is plain to be seen pervading the whole of the act in question. This is not a law passed to accomplish exclusive and selfish private gain. It is an extensive and far-reaching plan, by which the general public may be vastly benefited; and the legislature acted with good judgment in enacting it. "If the use for which property is taken be to satisfy a great public want or public exigency, it is a public use within the meaning of the constitution, and the state is not limited to any given mode of applying that property to satisfy the want or meet the exigency." Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 252. "For the most part, the term 'public purposes' is employed in the same sense in the law of taxation and in the law of eminent domain." Cooley, Tax'n, (2d Ed.) 113. So that a law which is for a public purpose, and which mainly concerns the public welfare, which lays an assessment upon property according to approximate equality of benefits, is not unconstitutional because of that feature. Perhaps to a greater extent than any of the other states, California, speaking through the acts of her legislature, her court of last resort and constitution, seems to have considered the irrigation of lands, and the supplying of mines with water, as of great public concern. Code Civil Proc. § 1238; Cummings v. Peters, 56 Cal. 596; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 302, 305, 10 Pac. Rep. 674, Const. Cal. art. 16, § 1. And in no sense can it be said that under the act in question the assessment to pay the bonds is to be levied or collected in order that one man may take another's property for his own exclusive use. Therefore it is evident that the districts in question, as organized under the act, are not private corporations organized exclusively for the purposes of private gain. They are at least quasi public corporations, in the sense that the purpose for which they are to be organized is for the general public benefit. Nor does it follow that the method of assessments, and their collection, adopted, must be assimilated to and follow exactly the mode provided in the constitution for the assessment and collection of taxes for general state purposes. The nature of the assessment is one for local improvements, which, however, eventuate in the advancement of the public good, and such assessments and collections can be lawfully made. It is "clear that those clauses of the constitution which provide that taxation shall be equal and uniform, and which prescribe the mode of assessment, and the persons by whom it shall be made, and that all property shall be taxed, have no application to assessments levied for local improvements." Hagar v. Supervisors, 47 Cal. 222. And as was said of the drainage act, so it may be said of the one in hand relative to irrigation, that a system which has for its object the reclaiming from the desert of vast bodies of land "may justly be regarded as a public improvement of great magnitude, and of the utmost importance to the community." It has been planned by the legislature on the basis of "dividing the territory to be reclaimed into districts, and assessing the cost of the improvements on the lands to be benefited." In none of the states where such a course has been pursued, "has the power of the legislature to cause such improvements to be made in this method ever been denied; nor do we see any tenable ground upon which it can be questioned." Hagar v. Supervisors, supra. "The fact that the lands are situated in more than one county cannot affect the power of the state to delegate authority for the establishment of a reclamation district [or an irrigating district] to the supervisors of the county containing the greater part of the lands. Such authority may be lodged in any board or tribunal which the legislature may designate. * * * The expense of such works may be charged against parties specially benefited, and be made a lien upon their property. All that is required in such cases is that the charges shall be apportioned in some just and reasonable mode, according to the benefit received. Absolute equality in imposing them may not be reached; only an approximation to it may be attainable. If no direct or invidious discrimination in favor of certain persons, to the prejudice of others, is made, it is not an objection to the mode pursued that to some extent inequalities may arise. It may possibly be that in some portions of the country there are overflowed lands of so large an extent [or arid lands requiring irrigation] that the expense of their reclamation should properly be borne by the state. But this is a matter of purely legislative discretion. Whenever a local improvement is authorized, it is for the legislature to prescribe the way in which the means to meet its cost shall be raised, whether by general taxation or by laying the burden upon the district especially benefited by the expenditure." Hagar v. Reclamation Dist., 111 U. S. 705, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663; citing Mobile Co. v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691-704. The provisions of the act relative to the condemnation of private property, land, water, etc., for the uses prescribed therein, are in harmony with the constitution and state laws, and in strict consonance with the views of the supreme court in the case of Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal., supra.

There are many other points made by the various counsel for the appellant, which are some of them at war with others; but time and space do not suffice to advert to them all in detail. It seems plain that none of the objections raised to the signing of the bonds by the respondent are tenable. The act under discussion in all respects complies with the various provisions of the state constitution. We therefore advise that the demurrer to the answer be sustained, and the defendant commanded to sign the bonds by a peremptory writ of mandate.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the demurrer to the answer is sustained, and it is ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate issue commanding the defendant to sign the bonds.

KNOX et al. v. HIGBY. (No. 9,726.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 25, 1888.)

1. TAXATION—SALE—ASSESSMENT—MINES.

A sale of a mine for a tax assessed upon such mine and upon improvements not situated upon the land including the mine, such sale being for a sum largely in excess of what either the mine or improvements were singly liable for, is invalid.

2. SAME—ACTION TO SET ASIDE TAX SALE—EVIDENCE.

In an action to set aside a certificate of purchase at a tax sale, a certified copy of the assessment roll, although it varies in some immaterial respects from the description thereof in the complaint, is nevertheless admissible in evidence, when objected to only as being incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and not on the ground of a variance.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Calaveras county; C. V. GOTTSCHALK, Judge.

Suit in equity brought by R. J. Knox and others against Charles B. Higby to quiet their title to a certain quartz claim known as the "Boston Quartz Mine." Defendant claimed title under a certificate of purchase issued on a tax sale. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appeals. Exhibit F, referred to in the opinion, is as follows:

FOOTE, C. This action was brought to quiet the plaintiffs' title to property which the defendant had bought at a certain tax sale, and for which he held a certificate of purchase. The plaintiffs had judgment, from which and an order refusing a new trial the defendant appeals.

From the findings, which are we think supported by sufficient evidence, it appears that the assessment under which the sale took place was upon a certain quartz mine described by metes and bounds, and upon a mill and other improvements which were not situated upon the land which included the mine. In other words, that all the improvements which were assessed stood upon a different parcel or parcels or tracts of land from that which contained the mine assessed. The sale was made at one time of all the property assessed, both the mine and the improvements which stood upon different tracts of land, for the tax assessed upon the whole property. Thus it happened that the mine was sold for a sum of money assessed as a tax upon improvements which were situated on different tracts of land from that of the mine, and the improvements, which were not located on the same tract of land with the mine as assessed, were sold to pay an amount of money assessed as a tax upon the mine. It has been repeatedly held in this state that property cannot be sold for a sum of money in excess of the tax legally due and costs. Bucknall v. Story, 36 Cal. 67; Treadwell v. Patterson, 51 Cal. 637; Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 236; Axtell v. Gerlach, 67 Cal. 483, 8 Pac. Rep. 34; Tunnel Co. v. McKenzie, 67 Cal. 485, 8 Pac. Rep. 22. Section 3718 of the Political Code provides: " * * * Every tax due upon improvements upon real estate assessed to others than the owner of the real estate is a lien upon the land and improvements." Of course a tax assessed and due upon improvements on the land of the owner is a lien upon both improvements and land. It therefore appears in this case when the sale took place it was for a sum of money many dollars in excess of what the improvements were bound for, and also in excess of what the mine was obliged to pay. And this is true whether it be assumed that the owners of the land on which the improvements stood were the same or different from those who owned the mine. Suppose that a tax is assessed upon improvements situated in one part of San Francisco on a certain lot of land, and a tax is assessed upon a certain lot in another part of the city, and both lots belong to the same person, can it be true that it is admissible to sell both the improvements and the second lot of land at the same time for the total amount of both assessments? It would seem that each tract of land must be sold for the exact amount of taxes which are a lien upon and assessed on that land, and cannot be sold for taxes which are a lien upon and assessed upon some other property.

The defendant contends that Exhibit F to the plaintiffs' complaint, which was a certified copy of the assessment roll affecting the property in dispute, was not admissible in evidence, and that if admissible, it did not show that the assessment was made to the Boston Quartz Mine as well as Osborne & Knox as the owners. The ground of the exception taken on the trial to the introduction of this exhibit in evidence was not the one set out as an error of law in the statement on motion for a new trial. The exception taken on the trial was that the exhibit was immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent, in that it did not support the allegations of the complaint. The assignment of error is that the evidence varied from the allegations of the complaint. It is clear from an inspection of the complaint that the exhibit was in support thereof, and the defendant, if he had intended to rely on any variance between the allegations and the proof offered, should have made the point then and there, so that if it were well taken the court might have allowed an amendment of the complaint. Besides, the variance, if it existed at all, is immaterial, and did not mislead the defendant to his prejudice. It is unnecessary to discuss other points made in the case, and we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

COON v. GRAND LODGE UNITED ORDER OF HONOR OF CALIFORNIA. (No. 11,377.)

(Supreme Court of California. May. 31, 1888.)

APPEAL—REQUISITES—TIME OF TAKING—NUNC PRO TUNC ENTRY OF JUDGMENT.

Rights of parties in respect of an appeal are determined by the date of the actual entry of the judgment, and cannot be affected by entry of judgment nunc pro tunc as of prior date.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. LAWLER, Judge.

J. G. Severance, for appellant. R. Percy Wright, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. Judgment was entered for defendant on demurrer. The motion to dismiss the appeal herein, on the ground that it was prematurely taken, must be granted. The notice of appeal was filed and served on November 2, 1885. The judgment was not entered until December 10, 1885. It is not dated, but it is indorsed, "Judgment recorded December 10, 1885, nunc pro tunc as of October 30, 1885." The judgment is not signed by the judge, and there is no order directing the entry thereof as of October 30, 1885; but, if it be presumed that such an order was made, it would not avail the appellant. The rights of the parties in respect to an appeal are determined by the date of the actual entry of the judgment, and they cannot be affected by the entry of the judgment nunc pro tunc as of prior date. The time to appeal begins to run from the time of the actual entry. Section 939, Code Civil Proc.; In re Fifteenth-Avenue Extension, 54 Cal. 179; Rubber Co. v. Goodyear, 6 Wall. 155; Hayne, New Trials & App. § 204. The appeal is dismissed.

PRACTICE IN CIVIL CASES—DISMISSAL—WHEN COMPLETE—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. §§ 581, 668.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 581, 668, requiring, in the dismissal of certain actions, an entry of such dismissal in the clerk's register, and also an entry of the judgment in the judgment book, an action is not dismissed until the judgment is entered as required, though the dismissal be properly entered in the register.

In bank. Application for writ of review of proceedings in superior court, Alameda county; W. E. GREENE, Judge.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 581, provides that actions may be dismissed or judgments of nonsuit entered in certain cases, and that the dismissal in some cases shall be made by entry in the clerk's register, and judgment may be entered accordingly. Section 668 provides that the clerk must keep a judgment book in which judgments must be entered.

S. B. McKee, Jr., (Flournoy & Mhoon, of counsel,) for petitioner. Henry P. Bowie and James L. Crittenden, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The record of the action for divorce wherein the petitioner is the plaintiff, and Emily C. Page is the defendant, having been brought here by certiorari, the petitioner prays that certain orders of the superior court (relating to alimony and counsel fee) be declared null, because they were made after an entry in the clerk's "Register of Actions" dismissing the action for divorce. The Register of Actions is a book in the possession and under the control of the clerk, and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, all entries in the book are presumed to have been made by the clerk. For aught that appears, the entry of the dismissal of Page v. Page is in the handwriting of the clerk. On the face of the record the dismissal is attested by a deputy-clerk. The entry is regular in form. Code Civil Proc. § 581. But no judgment was "entered accordingly." Code Civil Proc. §§ 581, 668. The direction to enter a judgment in the judgment book is mandatory, because it imposes a public duty upon a ministerial officer. In a proper case, if the clerk's fee is paid, he will, on motion either of the plaintiff or defendant, be compelled by the superior court to enter a judgment of dismissal or nonsuit. The court will not require of the party interested to resort to mandamus; but until the judgment is entered the action is not dismissed. It is very commonly said that, where no answer or demurrer is filed in an action for money only, the plaintiff may take a default and judgment. The clerk must, on application of the plaintiff, enter the default, and immediately thereafter a judgment. When it is said that an action may be dismissed or a judgment of nonsuit entered by the plaintiff himself, no more is meant than that he may apply to the clerk for the entry of dismissal in the clerk's register, and a judgment accordingly. It would not be contended that the plaintiff dismisses an action by requesting the clerk to enter a dismissal in the register of actions, even though the action be one which the plaintiff has clearly the right to have dismissed. It was for the legislature to declare what should constitute the evidence of dismissal, and the statute requires both the entry in the register and the entry of a judgment. The power of the clerk to enter a judgment depends upon his power to make an entry of dismissal in the register. He has no power to enter a dismissal in the register if a counterclaim has been made by the defendant. True, in determining in a particular case whether he shall make the register entry, the clerk enters into an inquiry quasi judicial, but this does not make him a judicial officer. A ministerial officer is frequently required to make such an inquiry antecedently to official action. When the validity of the entry in the register, or of a judgment therein, is attacked, either directly or collaterally, the validity of the entry or judgment, and the power of the clerk to make it, must be decided by reference to the pleadings in the action. In an appropriate case the plaintiff may demand of the clerk to make record evidence of the dismissal of the action. If the demand is complied with, and the register order is made, and a judgment entered in the judgment book, the clerk having power to enter the order, a subsequent order of the superior court vacating the judgment is erroneous, and will be reversed on appeal. James v. Center, 53 Cal. 31. But such an order, however erroneous, is not void. It is an order after judgment is made in the exercise of the general jurisdiction of the court, and, if not appealed from, the order operates permanently to vacate and annul the entry in the clerk's register as well as the judgment. On the other hand, if the case be one in which the clerk has no power to make the entries because of a counter-claim or cross-complaint, the clerk's judgment may be set aside by the court, or may be appealed from. A void judgment is appealable, and it may be set aside as cumbering the records. After making the entry in his register, the clerk may justify a refusal to enter a judgment if he had no power to enter the dismissal in his register, or if, on demand, his fee for entering the judgment has not been paid. A judgment of nonsuit at common law was where the plaintiff, after giving his evidence, found that it would not sustain his case, and voluntarily made default by absenting himself when called on to hear the verdict. The court gave judgment against him for this default; but the proceeding was really for his benefit, because after nonsuit he could institute another action for the same cause, which was not the case (except in ejectment) after a verdict and judgment against him. The proceeding where a plaintiff seeks, under the Code, to dismiss the action before trial, is so far analogous; and it is no hardship to require of the plaintiff to see to it that all those things are done which are by the Code made necessary to complete the dismissal. When a formal entry of a judgment is made, the judgment and registry order are void if a counter-claim is set up in the answer. It is possible that under some circumstances a defendant might be estopped from asserting the invalidity, as by himself applying for the judgment of nonsuit, or perhaps by some other act or omission. But that is a question we need not consider here. If, as we hold, the action, Page v. Page, has never been dismissed, the orders sought to be annulled are not void.

The prayer of the petition is denied, and the proceeding is dismissed.

HUGHES v. WHEELER. (No. 12,236.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1888.)

1. JUDGMENT—EFFECT—FOR DEFENDANT IN EJECTMENT.

In ejectment, a judgment for defendant for costs, based on findings that plaintiff is owner and entitled to possession of the land described in his complaint, and that defendant has at no time withheld possession of such land from him, is not conclusive as to plaintiff's title to the land.

2. APPEAL—REVIEW—OBJECTIONS WAIVED.

Where an amendment to the answer is treated at the trial as properly made, and as sufficient, and evidence is introduced in support of it without objection, the admissibility of such evidence cannot be questioned on appeal, on the ground that no such plea as that set up in the amendment had been filed.

3. BOUNDARIES—GOVERNMENT SURVEY—EJECTMENT.

In ejectment, it appeared that the line claimed by defendant to have been established by the parties to the action coincided with the one established by the government. The case was defended on the theory that plaintiff was estopped from claiming that the line was elsewhere. Held, that the verdict for defendant was proper, though the defense of estoppel may not have been made out.

4. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where a jury, while deliberating on their verdict, return to the court-room, and asks for further instructions upon a matter which, whether it existed as a fact in the case or not, could have made no difference in their verdict, which instructions were given in the absence of plaintiff's counsel, there is no error prejudicing plaintiff.

5. SAME—READING EVIDENCE TO JURY.

Where a jury, while deliberating on their verdict, returned to the court-room, and a portion of the evidence was read to them from the reporter's minutes, the court will not consider objections thereto, where the record does not disclose what testimony was read.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; J. B. CAMPBELL, Judge.

Ejectment by J. E. Hughes against C. C. Wheeler for the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 19, township 14 S., range 21 E., Mt. Diablo meridian. Defendant at first put in a general denial; but on motion amended his answer at the trial, by pleading adverse possession, and that the plaintiff was estopped from claiming the land in dispute because he had recognized and acquiesced in the boundary line between the land claimed by him and that claimed by defendant; said boundary line being marked by a canal made by plaintiff, and a roadway reserved by him, which said boundary line was plainly marked by stakes and monuments well known to plaintiff. Under this plea, evidence of estoppel was introduced without objection. On trial, it appeared that the land actually in controversy was a strip about 130 feet wide on the east side of plaintiff's land. The undisputed evidence showed that the line established by the government was where defendant claimed it to be, but subsequent surveys threw it 130 feet further east. The defense was based on the theory that plaintiff and defendant had established the line as claimed by defendant, and that the latter, relying thereon, had made valuable improvements with the knowledge of plaintiff. While the jury were deliberating on their verdict, they returned to the court-room, and, in the absence of plaintiff's counsel, received certain instructions from the court. There was a verdict and judgment for costs for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The instructions complained of by the appellant are as follows: "If you believe from the evidence that plaintiff, before this action was brought, by unequivocal acts and declarations, showed an intention to act upon the line claimed by defendant as the dividing line between the lands, and silently stood by and saw defendant expend money in improving his land, such acts upon the part of plaintiff estop him from claiming that defendant does not own the land upon which he has expended money and made his improvements. Where a proprietor points out to a neighbor, on land adjoining his own, a line as the true boundary, acquiescing and assisting in a settlement and improvements thereon, he is thereby estopped from afterwards asserting claim to the lands covered by the improvements, though a subsequent survey prove it to be his own land. In a dispute between adjoining proprietors of land, it may be settled between them by a location made by both, or made by one and acquiesced in by the other for so long a time as to be evidence of an agreement as to the line."

W. D. Grady, for appellant. S. J. Hinds, (Shaw & Dameron, of counsel,) for respondent.

FOOTE, C. Action in ejectment. The jury found, upon particular questions of fact submitted to them—First, that the plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of the quarter section of land described in the complaint; second, that the defendant at no time prior to the commencement of the action withheld any portion of that quarter section of land from the plaintiff; and returned a general verdict for the defendant. Thereupon a judgment for costs was rendered in favor of the defendant. From that and an order refusing a new trial the plaintiff appeals. The plaintiff contends that the judgment for costs is conclusive against him as to his title to the land described in the complaint, and, being opposed to the admissions of the defendant on the trial, cannot stand. In this he is mistaken. The judgment itself is one for costs, and by reference to the record and special verdicts of the jury it is made evident that the only matter which is made conclusive by the judgment against the plaintiff is that the defendant is not in possession of, and does not withhold possession of, any of the land for which the plaintiff brought his action.

Some of the evidence to sustain the special verdict of the non-withholding by the defendant of the plaintiff's land is to the effect that, some years prior to the institution of this suit, the parties thereto, owning adjoining parcels of land, established, by agreement or acquiescence, the division or boundary line between them, and that the strip of land which the plaintiff sought to recover was upon the defendant's side of that line, and therefore not within the description of the land for which the action was begun. The plaintiff contends that no such evidence was admissible under the pleadings, because, as he alleges, no proper plea of estoppel was filed by the defendant. But we think that a plea was set up by the papers filed on suggestion of diminution of record. The amendment by which this plea was set up was treated at the trial as properly made, and as sufficient; and it is now too late to question its sufficiency. Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23. If the evidence was admissible under the issues, it was proper for the jury to render a verdict thereon, and for the court to give them proper instructions for their guidance.

All the evidence in this case upon the point tended to show that the corner post upon the dividing section line between the tracts of land of the parties, as fixed by the United States survey, was the corner upon the dividing line which was claimed to have been established by agreement or acquiescence. The stake put into the ground by the United States surveyor marked this corner, and it became the true corner of the section line. Rev. St. U. S. § 2396. According to the provisions contained in the section supra, it appears that the lines of subdivisions as well as sections are thus established by law. Chapman v. Polack, 70 Cal. 494, 11 Pac. Rep. 764. It is said that a section line of United States government land is not ascertained by the survey, but is created. Robinson v. Forrest, 29 Cal. 325. The line about which the dispute arose in this case was one which had been created by the original survey under authority of the government, and hence no agreement or acquiescence between the parties, as shown in this case, could have made any difference as to the fact of where the true dividing line ran between their respective tracts of land. Therefore the verdict of the jury must have been in favor of the defendant, according to the showing of all parties. If this be so, it would seem to be unnecessary to determine whether the instructions of the court were right or wrong as to the existence of an agreement to fix the line made by the parties or their long acquiescence in its establishment. Enright v. Railroad Co., 33 Cal. 233. Where the court lays down an erroneous principle of law, but it appears that nevertheless the verdict of the jury is necessarily correct upon the evidence before them, or where, as in this case, a new trial should have been granted if the jury had not returned the special verdicts, the error is harmless. Robinson v. Railroad Co., 48 Cal. 424, 425.

The other instructions complained of are correct. Sneed v. Osborn, 25 Cal. 619; Columbet v. Pacheco, 48 Cal. 395; Biggins v. Champlin, 59 Cal. 116, 117; Truett v. Adams, 66 Cal. 223, 5 Pac. Rep. 96; Johnson v. Brown, 63 Cal. 393; 2 Herm. Estop. §§ 1129-1136. The evidence fully sustains the verdict of the jury, notwithstanding the plaintiff's contention to the contrary.

The objection made to the instruction given the jury, on their return into court for further enlightenment on a point of law, is untenable, the instruction being, as we have before shown, upon a matter which, whether it existed as a fact in the case or not, could have made no difference in their verdict. It is also assigned for error that, at the time when the jury were thus re-instructed upon a given point by the court, a portion of certain testimony was read to them from the short-hand reporter's notes which had been delivered by a witness on the trial, Mr. Choice. It does not appear what portion of the testimony was thus read; hence it is impossible to ascertain that it had any prejudicial effect on the jury. And, in the absence of anything going to show to the contrary, it must be presumed that the action of the court in the premises was unobjectionable. Error must be affirmatively shown by the record. Hayne, New Trials & App. § 285, p. 843.

It is further contended that the court erred in allowing a certain question to be propounded by the defendant's counsel to Mr. Tielman. It is sufficient to say that, the ground of the objection not having been made known to the court, the objector cannot be heard to complain that the question was allowed to be put. The record disclosing no prejudicial error, we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

GREGORY v. KEATING et al. (No. 12,472.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—DISMISSAL—WHEN GRANTED.

From a decree of foreclosure defendants appealed. Respondent moved to dismiss the appeal, and in support thereof filed affidavits as follows: That appellants had threatened, in case of foreclosure sale, to resist the issuing of a writ of assistance to place the purchaser in possession thereof; that the property was insufficient security for the debt, its value decreasing, with danger, by reason of non-insurance, of further loss; that appellants were insolvent, and had stated their appeal to be for purposes of delay and vexation; that the amount of the undertaking on the appeal was insufficient to cover the probable deficiency that would arise from the foreclosure sale, and was fixed by a judge other than that of the trial court, in chambers, without notice to or knowledge of respondents; that the trial court refused to set aside said undertaking, or increase the amount thereof, because the supreme court alone had jurisdiction after the appeal was taken; and that appellants had deposited no money in court to perfect their appeal. Held, that this showing was insufficient to support such motion.

2. SAME—ISSUE OF EXECUTION PENDING APPEAL—WHEN ALLOWED.

In such case the facts alleged are insufficient to support a motion to issue an execution or grant an order of sale pending the appeal.

3. SAME—HEARING—MOTION TO ADVANCE.

In such case a motion to advance the hearing of the cause will be denied.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; E. B. MAHON, Judge.

Motions by respondents to dismiss appeal, advance cause for hearing, and to direct court below to issue execution or to order a sale of the property in controversy. In support of the motions respondents filed two affidavits, which were as follows:

"James B. Gregory, being duly sworn, deposes as follows: I am the plaintiff and respondent in the above-entitled action. I reside in Scotland, and was residing there at the time of the commencement of the said action. By advice of my counsel, I came to San Francisco in December, 1886, to attend as a witness on the trial of said action. I am advised by my said counsel that it would not be prudent for me to be absent from the state of California in case the mortgaged property described in my complaint in said action should be sold to me under foreclosure, for the reason that the defendant Mary Jane Keating has threatened that she will resist any application that shall be made for a writ of assistance to place the purchaser into possession, and that in such case my presence and testimony would be necessary for the protection of my rights or the rights of any such purchaser against such opposition on the part of said Mary Jane Keating. There is now due to me on the judgment of foreclosure in said action the sum of $12,822, with interest thereon from February 21, 1887, besides $107, costs, and $500, allowed for counsel fees. The only security which I have for the payment of said debt consists of a lease-hold interest in the land described in said complaint, and of the buildings thereon. The value of said security does not now exceed $12,000, and the value thereof diminishes from day to day as the lease under which the same are held will expire on the 1st day of June, 1893, and for the further reason that the said defendants neglect to keep the said buildings in repair, and refuse to insure the same for my benefit against loss by fire. The defendant Denis Keating has threatened and declared that he will hold possession of the said leasehold premises until the expiration of the term of the said lease, and, for the purpose of such delay and vexatious hinderance, he has taken an appeal from the said judgment, the transcript on said appeal being filed with the clerk of this honorable court on the — day of December, 1887, to which reference is hereby made. The defendants have no property, and neither of them has any property other than the leasehold interest aforesaid. The sum of $3,300, specified in the undertaking on appeal set forth in said transcript, is totally inadequate to secure the payment of the deficiency arising, or that may arise, upon the sale under the said judgment. The said cause was tried by the Honorable James G. Maguire, judge of the superior court of the state of California, in and for said city and county, and the said amount was fixed for the stay of execution on said judgment by order of the Honorable E. B. Mahon, judge of the superior court of Marin county, made by him at chambers, and not in open court; that the said order was made without notice to me or to my attorney. After the notice of appeal was given, and undertaking on appeal was filed, in said action in the court below, I made a motion for an order to set aside the said order, and to set aside the undertaking given in pursuance thereof, and for the issuance of an order of sale pursuant to said judgment, on the ground that the said undertaking is insufficient for stay of execution on said judgment; that the amount fixed as aforesaid for such stay was inadequate, and on the ground that the said judge who made the said order fixing the said amount had no jurisdiction, and on the ground that the said order was made without notice to me or to my attorney. The said motion was heard in open court by the said Hon. James G. Maguire, the judge thereof, after due notice given to the attorney for the defendants, but was denied upon the sole ground that the said superior court had no jurisdiction of the matter after an appeal had been taken to the supreme court, and that my only remedy would be recourse to the supreme court.

"JAMES B. GREGORY.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me, January 6, 1888.

"CHAS. T. STANLEY, Notary Public."

"Alexander H. Loughborough, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is the attorney for the respondent in the above-entitled action; that the said respondent has never waived the undertaking required for the perfection of the appeals, or any of them, in said action; that the appellants have not, and that neither of them has, made any deposit of money in court for the perfection of the appeals, or either of them, in said action; and that the said appellants have not, and that neither of them has, given or filed any undertaking or appeal further or other than appears in the transcript of appeal in said action filed in this court. And this deponent further says that the order fixing the amount of the undertaking set forth at folios 393 and 394 of the said transcript was made without notice to this affiant, and that the same was not made by the judge of the court which rendered the final judgment in that action, but was made at chambers by Hon. E. B. Mahon, who was then judge of the superior court of Marin county; that this affiant, upon behalf of the respondent, and upon due notice to the appellants, and upon affidavits showing the inadequacy of the amount fixed by the said order, moved the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, department four, the Honorable James G. Maguire presiding, on the 30th day of November, 1887, for an order setting aside the aforesaid order made at chambers by the said Judge

Mahon, and to increase the amount required for the stay of execution; but the said motion was denied solely upon the ground that the superior court had no jurisdiction to grant such motion, and that such relief could be granted only by the honorable the supreme court of the state of California.

"A. H. LOUGHBOROUGH.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 27th day of January, A. D. 1888.

"CHAS. T. STANLEY, Notary Public."

Mich. Mullany, for appellants. A. H. Loughborough, (Carter P. Pomeroy, of counsel,) for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The motions of respondent herein to dismiss the appeals of the appellants, and to advance the hearing of the cause, and to direct the court below to issue an execution, or order of sale are hereby denied.

CONTRACT—VALIDITY—RESTRAINT OF TRADE—WHAT IS.

For the sole purpose of forming a combination among all the manufacturers of lumber at a certain point, increasing the price, limiting the amount, and giving plaintiff the control of the supply in four counties for a year, plaintiff, by contracts with the other manufacturers, either by lease of their mills or by purchase of their product for the year, secured control of the amount produced, among which contracts, and similar to the others, was one with defendants, whereby they agreed to sell plaintiff, during the year, a specified amount of lumber at a given price; and, further, to manufacture no lumber for sale in said counties during said year, except under the contract, and to pay plaintiff $20 per M. for any lumber sold to others in that period. Held, that this contract was void as against public policy, being in restraint of trade, and could not be enforced as to any part thereof.¹

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; T. K. WILSON, Judge.

Action for breach of contract by the Santa Clara Valley Mill & Lumber Company against Isaac N. Hayes and Thomas B. Hubbard. Finding and judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

T. H. Laine and Charles B. Younger, for appellant. A. E. Bolton, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. This is an action to recover $10,000 for a breach of a contract entered into between plaintiff, a corporation, and defendants, who were engaged in the manufacture of lumber near Felton, in the county of Santa Cruz, whereby the latter agreed to make and deliver to the former, during the lumber year of 1881, 2,000,000 feet of lumber, at $11 per thousand feet. Defendants agreed not to manufacture any lumber to be sold, during said period, in the counties of Monterey, San Benito, Santa Cruz, or Santa Clara, except under the contract, and to pay plaintiff $20 per thousand feet for any lumber manufactured and sold to parties other than plaintiffs. Defendants failed to comply with the contract; hence this action. The court finds that plaintiff was the owner of three saw-mills near Felton, and that various other parties were likewise owners of similar mills in the same vicinity; that for the purpose of limiting the supply of lumber, and increasing the price thereof, a plan was devised by which plaintiff was to lease all the mills for the year 1881, ¹Contracts in restraint of trade are valid when the restriction is reasonable, Mandeville v. Harman, (N. J.) 7 Atl. Rep. 37; and whether the restraint is reasonable or not depends upon its being such only as to afford a fair protection to the interest of the party in favor of whom it is imposed, and not so large as to interfere with the interest of the public, Id. Concerning the question of the validity of contracts as affected by their being in partial or general restraint of trade, see Dolph v. Machinery Co., 28 Fed. Rep. 553, and note; Roller Co. v. Cushman, (Mass.) 9 N. E. Rep. 629; Smith's Appeal, (Pa.) 6 Atl. Rep. 251; Finger v. Hahn, (N. J.) 8 Atl. Rep. 654; Match Co. v. Roeber, (N. Y.) 13 N. E. Rep. 419; Bishop v. Palmer, (Mass.) 16 N. E. Rep. 299.

where such leases could be obtained, and, where that could not be done, to contract with the parties owning mills, and not willing to lease, by contracts similar to the one entered into with defendants; that, during the year 1881, plaintiff should shut down two of its own mills, and also as many of the mills by it leased as might seem necessary, in order to limit the supply of lumber in the four counties hereinbefore named; that this contemplated scheme was carried out, including the contract with defendants as a part thereof; that the sole and only object, purpose, and consideration upon the part of plaintiff in entering into these contracts was to form a combination among all the manufacturers of lumber at or near Felton for the sole purpose of increasing the price of lumber, limiting the amount to be manufactured, and giving plaintiff the control of all lumber manufactured near Felton for the year 1881, and control of the supply of lumber for that year in the counties mentioned; that the direct effect of this was no wholesale market for lumber at Felton, and dealers could not purchase in any considerable quantity during 1881. The court further found that the contract was against public policy, and that plaintiff was not damaged, etc.

1. Was the contract with defendant in contravention of public policy? The general rule is that an illegal contract is absolutely void, and cannot form the basis of judicial proceedings. This is equally so in law and equity. The illegality vitiates the contract between the immediate parties, as well as in respect to third parties. A contract tainted with the vice of illegality creates no obligation, not because of the rights of the parties to it, but because the public is interested. In case of fraud or mistake, the wrong is usually personal to the injured party, and may be waived. In cases of illegality the wrong is far-reaching, is done to society. This illegality may be in the consideration or in the promises and stipulations of the agreement. Among the contracts illegal under the common law, because opposed to public policy, were contracts in general restraint of trade,—contracts between individuals to prevent competition, and keep up the price of articles of utility. Pom. Const. § 283; Jones v. Caswell, 3 Johns. Cas. 29; Doolin v. Ward, 6 Johns. 194; Wilbur v. How, 8 Johns. 346. The case of Arnot v. Coal Co., 68 N. Y. 559, is in most respects similar to the case at bar. Arnot, the plaintiff, brought the suit as the assignee of the Butler Colliery Company, which company and defendants were corporations engaged in the business of mining and vending coal at or near Pittston, Pa. Defendant also had a depot for coal at Elmira, N. Y., and was there engaged in vending coal, the product of the Pittston mines, to a large extent of country north and west of Elmira. Defendant entered into a contract with the Butler Colliery Company by which said defendant agreed to take all the coal the Butler Company desired to send north of the state line, not exceeding 2,000 tons per month, and the Butler Colliery Coal Company on its part agreed not to sell coal to any other party, except defendant, to go north of the state line (between New York and Pennsylvania) during the continuance of the agreement. The Butler Company sold coal, during the term covered by the agreement, to parties other than the defendant; and having delivered to defendant, under the agreement, coal which the latter refused to pay for, the action was brought to recover for the coal so delivered under the agreement. It appeared that defendant had made similar contracts with all the other mining proprietors of Pittston, and that the object was to so control the shipment and supply of coal for the Elmira market as to maintain an unnaturally high price for coal in that market, and to prevent competition in the sale of coal therein. The court, in considering the appeal, said: "That a combination to effect such a purpose is inimical to the interest of the public, and that all contracts designed to effect such an end are contrary to public policy, and therefore illegal, is too well settled by adjudicated cases to be a question of this day. [Cites Coal Co. v. Coal Co., 68 Pa. St. 182; People v. Fisher, 14 Wend. 9; Sleeper v. Van Middlesworth, 4 Denio, 434; Bank v.

King, 44 N. Y. 87.] Every producer or vendor of coal or other commodity has the right to use all legitimate efforts to obtain the best price for the article in which he deals; but when he endeavors to artificially enhance prices by suppressing or keeping out of market the produce of others, and to accomplish that purpose by means of contracts binding them to withhold their supply, such restraints are even more mischievous than combinations not to sell under an agreed price. Combinations of that character have been held to be against public policy and illegal. * * * Parties entering into contracts of this description must depend upon each other for their execution, and cannot derive any assistance from the courts." And the contract was held void. Salt Co. v. Guitrie, 35 Ohio St. 672; Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 349; and Coal Co. v. Coal Co., 68 Pa. St. 182, are to the same general effect. In the case at bar the facts are, as we think, even stronger against the plaintiff than in Arnot v. Coal Co. Here it entered into a contract with the object and view to suppress the supply and enhance the price of lumber in four counties of the state. The contract was void as being against public policy, and the defendants, as they had a right to do, repudiated the contract. Plaintiff, who has parted with nothing of value, now seeks to recover damages for non-delivery of lumber under this contract. Plaintiff had an undoubted right to purchase any or all of the lumber it chose, and to sell at such prices and places as it saw fit; but when, as a condition of purchase, it bound its vendor not to sell to others under a penalty, it transcended a rule, the adoption of which has been dictated by the experience and wisdom of ages, as essential to the best interests of the community, and as necessary to the protection alike of individuals and legitimate trade. With the results naturally flowing from the laws of demand and supply the courts have nothing to do; but when agreements are resorted to for the purpose of taking trade out of the realm of competition, and thereby enhancing or depressing prices of commodities, the courts cannot be successfully invoked, and their execution will be left to the volition of the parties thereto.

2. It is claimed by appellant that the contract is divisible, and the first part can stand though the latter be illegal. If the whole vice of the contract was embodied in the promise of the defendants not to sell lumber to other persons, the illegality would lie in the promise alone, and it might be contended with great force that this promise was divisible from the agreement to sell. Under the findings of the court, however, the illegality inheres in the consideration. The very essence and mainspring of the agreement—the illegal object—"was to form a combination among all the manufacturers of lumber at or near Felton, for the sole purpose of increasing the price of lumber, limiting the amount thereof to be manufactured, and give plaintiff control of all lumber manufactured," etc. This being the inducement to the agreement, and the sole object in view, it cannot be separated, and leave any subject-matter capable of enforcement, as was done in Granger v. Mining Co., 59 Cal. 678; Treadwell v. Davis, 34 Cal. 601; and Jackson v. Shawl, 29 Cal. 267. The case falls within the rule of Valentine v. Stewart, 15 Cal. 404; Prost v. More, 40 Cal. 348; More v. Bonnet, 40 Cal. 251; Forbes v. McDonald, 54 Cal. 98; Arnot v. Coal Co., supra. The good cannot be separated from the bad, or, rather, the bad enters into and permeates the whole contract, so that none of it can be said to be good, and therefore the subject of an action.

We fail to see any inconsistency between the eighteenth finding and the first or sixth. The first finding declares that plaintiff and defendants entered into the contract set out in the amended complaint. The sixth finding is to the effect that the contract has not been rescinded, abrogated, or modified. The eighteenth finding is as to the real object and purpose of the contract. The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

SWAIN v. BURNETTE et ux. (No. 9,898.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1888.)

1. JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT—AGAINST PLAINTIFF—WHEN ERRONEOUS.

A judgment by default against a plaintiff, for failure to amend his complaint after obtaining leave to do so, will be reversed on appeal, if the complaint states a cause of action.

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—WHEN GRANTED IN PART—PLEADING.

A complaint for the specific performance of a contract for an exchange of lands which alleges that by reason of an error in the supposed boundaries of defendants' land, discovered by plaintiff since the contract was made, there is a deficiency in the quantity thereof, and they are therefore unable to fully carry out the contract, and which prays compensation for such deficiency, states a cause of action, as the plaintiff may, at his option, require defendants to execute the contract as far as possible, and make compensation for the residue.

3. SAME.

In an action for the specific performance of a contract to convey land, in which both husband and wife were defendants, an averment in the complaint that the land in question, although standing of record in the name of the wife only, was the community property of both, is material, as showing the propriety of joining the husband as a defendant, and should not be stricken out.

4. SAME.

Plaintiff, in an action for specific performance of a contract for exchange of lands, alleged in his complaint that, on a certain day, he tendered defendants a deed in accordance with their agreement, and also that on a later day he delivered to them, and they accepted, a like deed, and that they retained the same, and were thereby vested with title to the land described therein. On motion of defendants, the averments relating to the latter deed were stricken out. Held, while the tender of the first deed might have been sufficient, the other allegations should have been allowed to remain in the complaint, as they presented a stronger equity for plaintiff.

5. SAME—DECREE.

A plaintiff, in an action for the specific performance of a contract to convey land, is entitled, upon obtaining relief, to have an account of the rents and profits received by defendant.

6. PLEADING—MOTION TO STRIKE OUT.

If, in a complaint, an averment of a material fact is insufficient, the remedy is by demurrer, and not by motion to strike out.

7. APPEAL—WHAT APPEALABLE—MOTION TO STRIKE OUT.

An order granting a motion to strike out averments from a pleading is not appealable, but may be reviewed on an appeal from the final judgment in the action.¹

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; N. HAMILTON, Judge.

Action by William B. Swain against Eugene T. Burnette and Nettie C. Burnette, his wife, to compel the defendants to specifically perform a contract for the exchange of real estate. The complaint contained allegations to the effect that there was a deficiency in the area of defendants' land, caused by mistake in the boundary lines, which was discovered by plaintiff after the agreement, and prayed compensation therefor. On motion of defendants, certain parts of the complaint were stricken out; a demurrer was filed, but withdrawn, and leave given plaintiff to amend, which he declined to do, and judgment dismissing his action was entered, from which this appeal was taken.

Rep. 186; Manufacturing Co. v. Clark, (Neb.) 37 N. W. Rep. 628.

HAYNE, C. Suit to compel specific performance of an agreement to exchange lands. The defendants demurred to the amended complaint, and moved to strike out portions of the same. Both matters came on to be heard at the same time. The court granted the motion to strike out; "and, in the matter of the demurrer, counsel for plaintiff asking leave to amend the amended complaint herein, and the demurrer, by consent of all parties, being withdrawn," leave to amend was granted. Plaintiff failed to amend within the time allowed by the court, and thereupon final judgment was entered against him by default. The appeal is taken from the judgment; a bill of exceptions incorporating the proceedings on the motion to strike out having been settled and filed.

1. The demurrer, having been withdrawn, cannot be considered. The judgment was by default, and if the complaint (as it stood after the granting of the motion to strike out) states a cause of action the judgment cannot stand. It is well settled that a judgment by default in favor of the plaintiff will be reversed on appeal from the judgment, unless the complaint states a cause of action. Hallock v. Jaudin, 34 Cal. 172; Choynski v. Cohen, 39 Cal. 592; Mining Co. v. Greenwood, Id. 71; Rhoda v. Alameda Co., 52 Cal. 350, and see Howard v. Galloway, 60 Cal. 11. And upon analogous principles a judgment by default in favor of the defendant will be reversed on appeal from the judgment if the complaint states a cause of action. The judgment by default against the plaintiff is in effect an adjudication that he has no case, or, in other words, that his complaint does not state a cause of action. If it does state a cause of action, the judgment is erroneous. It makes no difference that the plaintiff asked leave to amend. It is quite possible that the complaint could be improved in some respects; and it is to be presumed that plaintiff, at the time he asked leave to amend, desired to improve it. But if it stated a cause of action, this was not necessary. And the plaintiff had a right to change his mind, and stand upon it as it was. The case is like the very common one where a demurrer is sustained, and upon request of plaintiff, leave to amend is granted, but not availed of, and judgment goes by default. No one could doubt that in such a case, if the complaint states a cause of action, the judgment must be reversed. The question, therefore, is whether the complaint states a cause of action. And we think it does, although it is very loosely drawn. It proceeds upon the principle that, where the defendant is not able to perform the whole of his contract, he may, at the option of the plaintiff, be compelled to perform it as far as he can, with compensation for the deficiencies. See 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 779; Marshall v. Caldwell, 41 Cal. 614, 615. In this regard it is to be observed that the compensation which plaintiff seeks does not consist of damages for false representations, as might be supposed from a cursory reading of the complaint. If that were the case, we should be inclined to doubt whether his claim for such damages would be available in a suit like the present. The averment is that the defendants agreed to convey the things which plaintiff says he has since found they did not own. The complaint seems full of contradictions, uncertainties, and ambiguities; but we think it states a cause of action even after being stripped of some of its averments by the motion to strike out.

2. The respondent objects to the right of appellant to be heard as to the motion to strike out, on the ground that no appeal was taken from the order granting that motion. But such an order is not mentioned among the interlocutory orders which the statute makes the subject of an appeal. Hence it is not itself appealable. It can be reviewed, however, upon appeal from the judgment, as an intermediate order which involves the merits or necessarily affects the judgment. Code Civil Proc. § 956. And we think the order was erroneous in several respects: (a) The plaintiff, after alleging that on the 9th of July he tendered to the defendants a deed of the land which he was to convey to them, proceeded to allege that on the 15th of the same month he delivered such deed to their agent, and that said deed was accepted, and that "ever since that date the said defendants have held, and do now hold, said deed and title papers, whereby the unincumbered title of said lands and premises of said plaintiff now vests in the said defendants." The court below struck out the allegation as to the delivery on the 15th of July, but left the remainder. This leaves the averments upon the subject in a somewhat unintelligible shape. We think this part of the complaint should have been allowed to remain as it was pleaded. It is true that the tender on the 9th of July might have been sufficient without the rest of it. But the subsequent delivery and acceptance presents a stronger equity. And, besides, if it should turn out that the plaintiff is not entitled to enforce the agreement of exchange, he would at least be entitled to a reconveyance of what he conveyed to the defendants. And this relief, we think, should be had in the present action. (b) Paragraph 9 should not have been stricken out. It went to excuse a slight delay on the part of the plaintiff. See Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 571; Fowler v. Sutherland, 68 Cal. 415, 9 Pac. Rep. 674. If it be an insufficient excuse, the remedy was by demurrer, and not by motion to strike out. Jackson v. Lebar, 53 Cal. 258, 259. (c) The averment that the property, although standing of record in the name of Nettie C. Burnette, was the community property of both defendants, should not have been stricken out. It went to show that Eugene T. Burnette was properly joined as a defendant. (d) The averment as to rents and profits should not have been stricken out. If plaintiff shall succeed, he will be entitled to an accounting of the rents and profits upon principles of equity. See Fry, Spec. Perf. § 889; Worrall v. Munn, 38 N. Y. 137; Heinlen v. Martin, 53 Cal. 322. As has been stated, if the averments on the subject are defective, the remedy is not by motion to strike out.

The other matters discussed do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the judgment and orders be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the above opinion.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

LARKIN v. LARKIN. (No. 11, 333.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—JURISDICTION—APPEALABLE ORDERS—REFUSING NEW TRIAL.

An order refusing a new trial, and dismissing the motion therefor, being appealable, an order refusing to set aside said order is not appealable.¹

2. SAME—WHAT REVIEWABLE—DEFECTIVE TRANSCRIPT.

Commissioner's decisions. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. GREENE, Judge.

This was an action by Stephen Larkin against Jennie Larkin. Defendant appeals from the final judgment, from the order refusing a new trial, and dismissing the motion therefor, and from an order refusing to set aside and vacate the order above mentioned.

Charles F. Hanton, (L. L. Cory, of counsel,) for appellant. Thos. H. Smith and Mastick, Belcher & Mastick, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an appeal from a final judgment in divorce proceedings, from an order refusing a new trial and dismissing the motion therefor, and from an order refusing to set aside and vacate the order above mentioned. As the appellant confesses, there is no record here upon which an appeal from the judgment can be considered. The order refusing a new trial, and dismissing the motion therefor, was itself appealable. It has been often held by this court that it will not take jurisdiction of an appeal taken from an order refusing to set aside an order itself appealable. Tripp v. Railroad Co., 69 Cal. 632, 11 Pac. Rep. 219, and cases cited. So that it alone remains to be determined what course is to be taken as to the appeal from the order refusing a new trial and dismissing the motion therefor. The order appealed from shows that the motion was heard upon affidavits and oral testimony. There being in the transcript no statement on appeal, no bill of exceptions, and no papers identifiable as the papers used on the hearing of the motion to dismiss, the validity and regularity of the order of dismissal is not reviewable on appeal. "The presumption is that the order was properly made, and, in the absence of a bill of exceptions or statement on appeal making the motion and order part of the record of the case, that presumption is conclusive." Strathern v. Dakin, 63 Cal. 479; citing Nash v. Harris, 57 Cal. 242. We therefore advise that the appeal from the judgment and order last made, refusing to set aside the order denying a new trial and dismissing the motion therefor, be dismissed, and that the order last mentioned be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the appeal from the judgment and order last made, refusing to set aside the order denying a new trial, and dismissing the motion therefor, is dismissed, and order denying a new trial is affirmed.

AMES v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (No. 11, 266.

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1888.)

1. OFFICE AND OFFICER—SALARY—ALLOWANCE BY AUDITOR—ACT CAL. MARCH 4, 1878.
Under act Cal. March 4, 1878, providing that gas inspectors "shall be entitled to a salary to be paid and allowed" by the board of supervisors, it is not necessary that a claim for such salary be presented to the auditor to be allowed or audited by such officer.

2. SAME—SALARY—ALLOWANCE BY BOARD OF SUPERVISORS—WHEN BARRED.
Under consolidation act Cal. § 90, providing that a demand on a city treasury shall be barred by limitation, unless "presented for payment, properly audited, within one month after such demand became due and payable; or, if it be a demand which has to be passed and approved by the board of supervisors, etc., then within one month after the next regular session of the board held next after the demand accrued," etc.,—a claim for a salary, due at the end of each month, having never been presented for payment, nor presented to the board of supervisors to be passed or approved, is barred after the lapse of one month.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

George Flournoy, Jr., City and County Atty., for appellant. Rhodes & Borden, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. Action to recover salary due plaintiff as gas inspector of the city and county of San Francisco for a period extending from the 7th of September, 1884, to the 20th of November, inclusive. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. In the view we take of this case it is only requisite to pass on the points hereinafter considered, and therefore we say nothing as to the other points presented by counsel for the defendant. It is contended that plaintiff cannot recover because his claim was not properly presented for payment, as it was never presented to the auditor for allowance, and it is also contended that his right of action is barred by section 90 of the consolidation act.

It may be conceded that it was not necessary for plaintiff to present his claim to the auditor of the city and county for allowance. The statute authorizing the appointment of gas inspector provides that "such gas inspector shall be entitled to a salary to be paid and allowed by said board." See act of March 4, 1878; St. 1877-78, p. 168. The board here mentioned is the board of supervisors of the city and county. By that board the allowance is to be made. As the claim is to be allowed by the board, we say it may be conceded that the board was the auditing tribunal, and therefore it was not necessary for plaintiff to present his claim to the auditor to be allowed or audited by that officer.

We proceed to consider the point made on section 90 of the consolidation act. That section is as follows: "Sec. 90. The salaries, fees, and compensation of all officers, including policemen and employes of all classes, and all teachers in common schools, or others, employed at fixed wages, shall be payable monthly; and any demand whatsoever upon the treasury, hereafter accruing, shall not be paid, but shall be forever barred by limitation of time, unless the same be presented for payment, properly audited, within one month after such demand became due and payable; or, if it be a demand which has to be passed and approved by the board of supervisors or board of education, then within one month after the regular session of the proper board, held next after the demand accrued, or unless the board of supervisors shall, within six months after the demand accrued as aforesaid, on a careful investigation of the facts, certify that the same is in all respects just and legal, and that the presentation of it, as above required, was not in the power either of the original party interested or his agent, or the present holder; in which case it shall be barred in the same manner, unless presented for payment within twenty days thereafter." The salary of gas inspector is to be paid monthly. It is so provided by the statute authorizing his appointment, (see act of 4th of March, 1878, St. 1877-78, p. 168,) and by the section of the consolidation act above quoted. This salary is then due and payable at the end of each month of the gas inspector's term of office. The claim of plaintiff was never at any time presented for allowances to the board of supervisors. If the board of supervisors was the auditing tribunal, it was never at any time presented to the board to be audited. As said above, the salary was due and payable at the end of each month of plaintiff's term of office, and, it appearing that it was never presented for audit at all, it follows that it was not and could not be presented for payment, properly audited, within one month after it became due and payable at the close of each month. If the provision in section 90 that a demand on the treasury of the city shall not be paid, but shall be forever barred by limitation of time, "unless the same be presented for payment, properly audited, within one month after such demand became due and payable," is not applicable, it must then come under that portion of section 90 which immediately follows the provision just referred to. Under either portion of the section, we think the claim of plaintiff was barred when this action was begun, and no recovery should be had on it. It is barred by the last portion of the section because it was never presented to the board of supervisors to be passed or approved.

The judgment must be reversed, and cause remanded, and it is so ordered.

PACIFIC MUT. LIFE INS. CO. v. SHEPARDSON et al. (No. 12,435.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—SERVICE OF NOTICE—SUFFICIENCY OF AFFIDAVIT.

An affidavit of service of notice of appeal, which states simply that affiant "alleges and believes" that he served the notice, is fatally defective, as not stating positively the fact of the service.

2. SAME—SERVICE OF NOTICE BY MAIL—SUFFICIENCY OF AFFIDAVIT.

An affidavit of service of notice of appeal by mail is fatally defective, unless stating that affiant and the person served had their offices in different places, and that there was communication by mail between such places.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Colusa county; E. A. BRIDGFORD, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company of California against Dudley Shepardson and others. Judgment for plaintiff and Dudley Shepardson and wife, two of the defendants, appeal. Defendant's attorney, upon whom the notice of appeal was served by mail, had his office at San Francisco, and the notice was mailed at Colusa.

Shepardson & Moore and Joe Hamilton, for appellant. C. N. Fox, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal, and must be granted for the following reasons:

1. The affidavit of service of the notice of appeal does not state positively its service, but only that the affiant alleges and believes he served it.

2. The affidavit fails to show that the affiant and the person served resided or had their offices in different places (Cunningham v. Warnekey, 61 Cal. 507,) or that there was any communication by mail between Colusa and San Francisco, (Reed v. Allison, 61 Cal. 461; Steele v. Supervisors, 62 Cal. 6.) The appeal is dismissed.

THOMPSON v. WHITE. (No. 9,885.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—FAILURE TO INSTITUTE APPELLATE PROCEEDINGS.

Where no motion for a new trial is made, and appeal is not taken within 60 days from the rendition of final decree, the sufficiency of the evidence to justify either such final decree or a previous interlocutory decree will not be considered.

2. EQUITY—DECREE—INCONSISTENT WITH INTERLOCUTORY ORDER—EFFECT.

That a final decree is inconsistent with an interlocutory decree is immaterial, as the latter may be modified on final hearing as the law and evidence may require.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

Action, by James M. Thompson against George W. White, to compel specific performance of an agreement to assign an interest in a patent. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

L. D. Smoot, for appellant. M. A. Wheaton, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. This case was originally in the Nineteenth district court. That court made certain findings of fact, and an interlocutory decree therein, and referred the case to Gordon N. Mott, the court commissioner. This official made a report, which was "confirmed" by Judge CARY of the superior court, the successor of the Nineteenth district court; and the case then went to his successor, who made an order setting aside all the proceedings, upon the theory that there had been a mistrial, and that a case could not be tried by piecemeal by different judges, neither of whom had before him the evidence on which the other acted. Upon appeal, this order was reversed, and the cause was remanded "for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion." 63 Cal. 505. The case then came before Judge MAGUIRE, of the superior court, who had succeeded to the office, for "further proceedings." Neither party offered additional evidence; the case being submitted upon the pleadings and papers on file, which included the interlocutory decreed, and the report of Commissioner Mott above mentioned. A final decree was rendered, from which the plaintiff appeals. The argument for the appellant ranges itself under two heads, which we will consider separately.

1. The learned counsel contends that "the decree of September 11, 1884, [which is the final decree,] is erroneous in ascertaining an indebtedness of $5,000 from Thompson to White, when the testimony taken by Commissioner Mott shows that White, upon a fair statement of the account, is largely indebted to Thompson." It is not entirely accurate, under our system, to say that the evidence does not justify a decree. The evident intention, however, is to say that the evidence does not justify the decision. But no motion for a new trial was made, and the appeal was not taken within 60 days from the rendition of the final decree, (and, of course, not for a long time after the interlocutory decree and findings,) and hence no question of the sufficiency of the evidence can be considered, whether to justify the decree or the decision.

2. It is contended that the final decree is inconsistent with the interlocutory decree. As a matter of course, whatever was decided on the former appeal has become the law of the case, and must govern on this appeal. The question is whether it was there decided that the final decree cannot be inconsistent with the interlocutory one. And we do not think that it was. The court below had proceeded upon the theory that there could not be, under our system, such a thing as an interlocutory decree except in partition cases; in other words, that the court had no power to make such a decree. All that was necessary for the appellate court to decide was that the trial court had such power, and that the proceedings should not be set aside as for want of power. And this is what we think it did decide; its language being, "There was no warrant for its vacation upon the theory that it was beyond the power of the court to make." It was not necessary for the court to say that the trial court could not, on the final hearing, modify the interlocutory decree as the law and the evidence might seem to require; and it did not say it. It was not even necessary for it to say what kind of interlocutory decree it referred to. The opinion is not entirely clear in this regard, but we think it sufficiently shows that the court referred to the interlocutory decree of the old equity practice. It could not have referred to the interlocutory decree established by our statutes in partition cases, because that kind of a decree is itself appealable, and is not reviewable on appeal from the final decree; whereas the opinion says of the interlocutory decree that it "is also reviewable on appeal from the final judgment." Page 509. And, unless the court intended to evolve something entirely new, (which cannot be supposed,) it must have had reference to the interlocutory decree of the old equity practice. Its language is consistent with this idea; for it said that the intention of the codifiers was not "to abolish the power of a court of equity to pronounce what in equity was called an interlocutory decree or decretal order." And what is said with reference to new trials evidently refers to the findings of fact upon which the interlocutory decree rested, which findings had been set aside by the court below, along with the decree resting upon them. If this be the true interpretation of the opinion; it does not matter whether the final decree is inconsistent with the interlocutory one or not; for, under the old equity practice, the interlocutory decree could be modified on the final hearing as the law and the evidence should require. Fourniquet v. Perkins, 16 How. 82.

The foregoing covers all the points made. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

BURNETT v. KULLAK. (No. 12,362.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 11, 1888.)

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—REQUISITES OF CONTRACT.

Defendant made a contract with plaintiff as follows: "Received of L. G. Burnett the sum of $100, being a deposit on the one-quarter interest of the Callis tract of forty-three and one-half acres. * * * The terms of this transaction are $4,000 for said interest in said tract; $1,500 cash within sixteen days from date, as soon as L. G. Burnett is satisfied as to the title of said tract, and $2,500 on mortgage, as per deed and agreement from Callis (Tom) to Kullak & Winchester. It is hereby agreed that Burnett shall pay the interest on a certain promissory note for $1,700, at 10 per cent. interest, from April 5th." Held, that such a contract is too indefinite and uncertain to sustain an action of specific performance.¹

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; R. M. DILLARD, Judge.

Action by L. G. Burnett against Louis F. Kullak for specific performance of a contract to convey land. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and plaintiff appealed.

Thomas McNulta, for appellant. W. C. Stratton, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. This action was brought to compel specific performance of a contract, which contract is in the following words: "SANTA BARBARA, CAL., April 19, 1887. Received of L. G. Burnett the sum of $100, being a deposit on the one-quarter interest of the Callis tract of forty-three and one-half acres, or one-half interest of the undersigned in said tract. The terms of this transaction are $4,000 for said interest in said tract; $1,500 cash within sixteen days from date, as soon as L. G. Burnett is satisfied as to title of said tract, and $2,500 on mortgage, as per deed and agreement from Callis (Tom) to Kullak & Winchester. It is hereby agreed that Burnett shall pay the interest on a certain promissory note for $1,700, at 10 per cent. interest, from April 5th. LOUIS F. KULLAK." The complaint alleges "that the said land mentioned therein as the Callis tract was, at the date of said contract and still is, commonly known and called by that name, and that the same is situated in the Carpenteria valley, and contains forty-three and one-half acres." It further alleges offer of performance on the part of plaintiff within the period prescribed by the agreement, and refusal of defendant to comply, etc. A demurrer was interposed by defendant to the amended complaint, which was sustained by the court, and, on the refusal of plaintiff to amend, judgment was entered in favor of defendant, from which judgment plaintiff appeals.

A glance at the agreement shows that it was loosely and inartificially drawn. We are of opinion that the description of the premises might be held sufficient. A description of land by name is or may be sufficient if the boundaries so known are well defined. Haley v. Amestoy, 44 Cal. 132; Truett v. Adams, 66 Cal. 218, 5 Pac. Rep. 96. The name of the county in which the land is situate may be useful as a part of the description, but, if otherwise sufficient, is not essential, as in a pleading, where it usually performs the office of showing the subject-matter within the jurisdiction of the court. In other respects we think the agreement and complaint fatally defective. To mention one: We suppose a mortgage was to be given for $2,500, part of the purchase price.

¹Equity will not specifically enforce a contract wanting in definiteness or mutuality. Bourget v. Monroe, (Mich.) 25 N. W. Rep. 514; Hall v. Loomis, (Mich.) 30 N. W. Rep. 374; Moses v. McClain, (Ala.) 2 South. Rep. 741; Recknagle v. Schmalz, (Iowa,) 33 N. W. Rep. 365; Durkee v. Cota, (Cal.) 16 Pac. Rep. 5; Fogg v. Price, (Mass.) 14 N. E. Rep. 741; Appeal of Holthouse, (Pa.) 12 Atl. Rep. 340; Magee v. McManus, (Cal.) 12 Pac. Rep. 451; Johnston v. Trippe, 33 Fed. Rep. 530; Duff v. Hopkins, Id. 599; Stembridge v. Stembridge's Adm'r, (Ky.) 7 S. W. Rep. 611; Gallagher v. Gallagher, (W. Va.) 5 S. E. Rep. 297; Angel v. Simpson, (Ala.) 3 South. Rep. 758; Iron Co. v. Todd, (Del.) 14 Atl. Rep. 27; Lasher v. Gardner, (Ill.) 16 N. E. Rep. 919; Zeringue v. Railway Co., 34 Fed. Rep. 239.

The language of the agreement, which is not helped by averment, is: "Twenty-five hundred on mortgage, as per deed and agreement from Callis (Tom) to Kullak & Winchester." For how long is the mortgage to run? At what rate of interest? Suppose defendant had made default, how could the court have determined as to the sufficiency of a mortgage, under this clause to be given by the plaintiff to entitle him to a deed? Or, what is the same thing, had plaintiff proved all the allegations of his complaint, the court would have been left in the dark as to the terms of the mortgage he was to give. It is not necessary to pass upon the sufficiency of the complaint had the deed and agreement from Callis to Kullak been set out or pleaded, for the reason that it was not done. We are of opinion the agreement is too indefinite and uncertain to support a judgment for specific performance, and that the demurrer was properly sustained. Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MADDEN. (No. 20,403.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1888.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS—RECONCILING CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

An instruction, in a criminal case, that it was the duty of the jury to make a reasonable and conscientious endeavor to reconcile the facts and evidence with defendant's innocence, was properly refused, since the jury should reconcile conflicting evidence if they can, regardless of the conclusions to which it might lead.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE—RES GESTÆ.

On a trial for assault with intent to commit murder, evidence of a conversation between defendant's brother and another, on the day before the alleged assault, was properly admitted, where the evidence showed that the same matter spoken of in the conversation was again brought up by defendant's brother just before the fight in which the assault was made, and that the person who engaged with the brother in the conversation offered in evidence participated in the fight.

3. ASSAULT AND BATTERY—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the evidence showed that one on trial for an assault with intent to commit murder had fired a pistol shot at another during a fight at a saloon, it was not error to refuse to instruct the jury that they might find defendant guilty of simple assault.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; J. J. DE HAVEN, Judge.

McQuaid & Wheeler, for appellant. George A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

THORNTON, J. The defendant was tried on an information for an assault with intent to commit murder, and was convicted for an assault with a deadly weapon. He moved for a new trial, which was denied. This appeal is prosecuted by him from the judgment and the order denying a new trial. Our attention is first called by defendant's counsel to several requests on behalf of defendant, which were refused by the court, and to which exceptions were reserved. It is contended that the court erred in refusing to give the requests numbered 4, 7, 10, 11, and 14, asked by defendant. There was no error in refusing request 4, because it had been given in the instructions 1, 2, 3, asked by defendant. Request 7 is embraced in 5 and 6, which were given as asked by defendant. Therefore there was no error in refusing it. Request 10 is embraced in 12 and 13, which were given, and there was no error in refusing it. Request 10 relates to the law of self-defense. We think the law on that point was sufficiently set forth to the jury in instructions 12 and 13, and that no error was therefore committed by the court below in refusing it. Request 14 was properly refused. The request embraced this proposition: That it was the duty of the jury to make a reasonable and conscientious endeavor to reconcile the facts and evidence in the case with defendant's innocence. While it is the duty of the jury to endeavor to reconcile, and to reconcile, if they can, discrepant and conflicting evidence, we do not know that they are bound to reconcile it with defendant's innocence. If, after reconciling conflicting evidence, the conclusion reached is that defendant is innocent, they must so declare in their verdict; if the conclusion reached is that defendant is guilty, they are bound so to declare. What we desire to say is that the jury must reconcile inharmonious and conflicting evidence if they can, regardless of the conclusions it may lead to. We hold that the court committed no error in refusing the request above asked.

We find no error in the directions given by the court of its own motion; nor in refusing to direct the jury that they might find the defendant guilty of a simple assault. The defendant having fired his pistol at Jacobson during the fight which occurred at Ferris' saloon, if guilty at all, was guilty of something beyond a simple assault. In this view, we think defendant sustained no injury in the refusal to direct the jury that they might render a verdict against defendant of a simple assault.

There was no error in the ruling of the court in admitting the testimony of the witness Axton as to the conversation which took place at Renfro's saloon. The conversation took place between George Madden and Chub Hitchings. There was evidence tending to show that the defendant and his brothers George and Mike, with Chub Hitchings, went together, on the next day, to Ferris' saloon; that the same matter mentioned in the conversation was there spoken of by George Madden to Ferris, just before the fighting there commenced; and that Hitchings participated in the fight. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that the court committed no error in admitting the testimony. We find no error. Judgment and order affirmed.

SHADBURNE v. DALY. (No. 11,364.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1888.)

1. CONTRACT—CONSIDERATION—FORBEARANCE TO FILE CLAIM AGAINST AN ESTATE.
Forbearance by a creditor of a deceased person to present and pursue his claim against the estate, there being no agreement on his part to that effect, is not a sufficient consideration to support a promise by the widow of deceased to pay the claim.
2. BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—CONTENTS—SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS.
Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 650, prescribing the preparation, settlement, etc., of bills of exceptions, and requiring that they contain "all the exceptions taken upon which the party relies," etc., specifications of the particular errors of law on which the appellant will rely are not necessary in a bill of exceptions.
3. SAME.
Where no point is made on appeal as to the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, a specification of the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient is not necessary in the bill of exceptions.
4. PLEADING—AMENDMENT.
A motion for permission to file an amended answer, which would not change the issues, is properly overruled, where the motion was made on the eve of the trial, while the jury were in attendance.
5. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—ACTION FOR FEES—EVIDENCE.
In an action involving attorney's fees, a question asked of such attorney as a witness, as to whether, when he gave his client certain advice, he knew a certain principle of law rather inconsistent with such advice, was properly excluded, where the principle of law, as stated in the question, was incorrect, the purpose of the question being to show corrupt advice tending to promote litigation.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

Action by George D. Shadburne against Annie E. Daly. The order copied in the opinion was drawn in payment of attorney's fees. Defendant attempted to show that Mr. Plunkett, the attorney, in giving certain advice, was acting corruptly, and trying to promote litigation for his own benefit; and in this connection the question of evidence passed upon in the opinion was raised. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 650, treats at length of the preparation, contents, and settlement of bills of exceptions. It requires, among other things, that the bill contain "all the exceptions taken upon which the party relies." Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

E. W. McGraw, for appellant. George D. Shadbourne, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. This action was brought against the defendant as drawer of an order of which the following is a copy:

SAN FRANCISCO, August 8, 1885.

"William Younger: Please pay William A. Plunkett, or order, the sum of $315, and charge the same to my account. ANNIE E. DALY."

This order was on the 10th of August, 1885, indorsed by Plunkett to plaintiff. The order was presented to Younger, who refused to accept it, of which defendant was duly notified.

The point is made by the respondent that the bill of exceptions contains "no specification of particulars," and should therefore be disregarded. We find no defect in this regard in the bill. No point is made by appellant as to the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, and therefore no specification of the particulars in which such evidence is insufficient is required. No specification of the particular errors of law on which the appellant will rely is made in her bill. But while this is required in a statement of the case, (Code Civil Proc. § 659, sub. 3,) it is not in a bill of exceptions, (Code Civil Proc. § 650.) The point of respondent, therefore, is not tenable. We have examined the testimony given in the case on behalf of the plaintiff, and are of opinion that defendant's motion for a nonsuit was properly denied. There was some evidence on each point on which defendant based her motion.

The court did not err in refusing to the defendant leave to file an amended answer. The motion for leave was made on the eve of the trial, when a jury was in attendance. Moreover, we cannot perceive that defendant was injured by the refusal. The cause was tried as if all the matters set forth in the amended answer were pleaded. Counsel for appellant urges nothing to the contrary of this. He states in his points that "the amended answer did not materially change the issues, but tendered them in more proper legal form, bringing the defense directly under" certain sections of the Civil Code, the numbers of which he gives.

W. A. Plunkett, assignor of plaintiff, was attorney for George Daly, the husband of defendant, in certain proceedings in bankruptcy prosecuted under the United States bankruptcy act of March 2, 1867. Daly's petition in bankruptcy was filed on the 14th of March, 1873. After the commencement of the proceedings, two actions were commenced against Daly: one by Goodwin & Co., for furniture, and the other by Frank G. Edwards, for carpets. The suit of Goodwin & Co. was commenced on the 15th of March, 1873, in the Third district court. The suit of Edwards was commenced in the same court on the 27th of March, 1873. In the suit of Goodwin & Co., the plaintiffs attached the furniture for the price of which they were suing. Under Plunkett's advice, Daly filed no answer in either of the cases. Undertakings were given to release the property attached, and the causes proceeded, it would seem, to judgment. Plunkett testified that he told Daly not to answer, as he could not do so without committing perjury. After obtaining the judgments, the plaintiffs tried to enforce them, and Plunkett commenced a suit in equity in the United States district court asking for a restraining order. A restraining order was procured in the action, and, some days later, a perpetual injunction was had restraining the enforcement of the judgments. The plaintiffs were thus defeated, and the furniture was set aside to Daly in the bankruptcy proceedings. The order on which this action was brought was given to Plunkett in payment of fees for professional services rendered by him to George Daly in the injunction suit above mentioned and some other suits, including Daly's application in bankruptcy. There was evidence tending to show that the defendant (Mrs. Daly) assumed the payment of this claim against George Daly, in consideration that Plunkett would not present his claim for these services against Daly's estate, Daly having died in 1881, leaving an estate amounting to $159,000. On cross-examination of Plunkett, who was called by plaintiff at the trial of the cause, the following question was put to him by attorney for defendant: "Were you aware, as an attorney, at the time you advised Mr. Daly that he could not answer the Goodwin and Edwards suits without committing perjury, that he might have put in answers setting up the adjudication in bankruptcy, and that would have ended the suits?" The adjudication in bankruptcy referred to in the interrogatory just quoted was the adjudication of Daly, a bankrupt; and inasmuch as the setting up such adjudication in bankruptcy would not have put an end to the suits, but only stayed them provisionally under section 21 of the United States bankrupt act, (see section 14, St. at Large, p. 526,) we see no error in the ruling of the court. It will be seen, on examination of this section, that the suit will, "upon the application of the bankrupt, be stayed to await the determination of the court in bankruptcy on the question of the discharge, provided there be no unreasonable delay on the part of the bankrupt in endeavoring to obtain his discharge." If the witness had answered the question in the affirmative, it would not have here been in accordance with the act, for such a course would not have put an end to the suits; if he had answered it in the negative, it would not have shown ignorance, but acquaintance with the act. And, as the showing would not have put an end to the suits, we cannot see that the court erred in not allowing the question.

The defendant asked the court to instruct the jury: "Forbearance by a creditor to present a claim to the executor of a will of a deceased person is not consideration for a promise on the part of the widow of the testator to pay such claim against him, unless there was an agreement for forbearance." In such a case as this, there must be a consideration to sustain the promise. It is urged herein that the forbearance by the creditor to present his claim against the estate of the deceased, and actual forbearance, is a sufficient consideration, and that, in consideration of the forbearance by Plunkett to present his claim against the estate of George Daly, the defendant, his widow, agreed to become responsible for it. We cannot see how it became a consideration unless the minds of the parties met on an agreement for such forbearance. There must not only be an agreement to forbear, but actual forbearance. Robinson v. Gould, 11 Cush. 55. The mere forbearance to sue is not a sufficient consideration for a promise to pay the debt of another. Mecorney v. Stanley, 8 Cush. 85. So here the mere forbearance by Plunkett to present and pursue the claim, there being no agreement to that effect, would not be a consideration sufficient to support a promise by the defendant to pay the claim. The court, therefore, erred in refusing the instruction above quoted. We have examined the various other points, and find no error in them. We wish to say that, in our opinion, the question whether the cause of action against George Daly was barred prior to his death is not a material one in the action on the promise of the defendant, and that we do not find in the cause anything tending to show fraud or undue influence by respondent over appellant.

For the error above pointed out the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. So ordered.

DRAGHICEVICH v. VULICEVICH. (No. 11,389.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1888.)

AWARD AND ARBITRATION—SUBMISSION—FAILURE TO STIPULATE TO ENTER AS ORDER OF COURT—DISCONTINUANCE.

A submission of a pending action to arbitration, which does not stipulate that it shall be entered as an order of court, operates as a discontinuance of the action.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; D. BELDEN, Judge.

Action by John Draghicevich against Marco Vulicevich for dissolution of partnership, pending which plaintiff died, and the action was revived in the name of his administratrix, Catherine Draghicevich. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

Archer & Bowden, for appellant. Wm. Gill, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This action was brought to obtain a dissolution of partnership which it was alleged existed between the parties, and for a distribution of the assets. The answer does not deny the partnership, but denies some other material allegations of the complaint; and for a further defense alleges that after the complaint was filed, and before the answer was filed, the plaintiff had died, and the defendant, as surviving partner, had taken into his possession all the personal property of the partnership for the purpose of winding up the affairs thereof, and that he had ever since been engaged in doing so, and that he is ready at any time to render a full and complete account of his acts as such surviving partner. And for a further defense defendant alleges that after the filing of said complaint, and before the death of said Draghicevich, said plaintiff and defendant agreed in writing to submit all matters in dispute between them as copartners to the award of arbitrators, who, after hearing said parties, published their award. Therefore defendant prayed to have the action dismissed, with costs, and for such other or further relief as might be meet. Afterwards, and before any further proceedings were had in the case, a stipulation, of which the following is a copy, was filed: "It is hereby stipulated that this action was commenced in May, 1883; that John Draghicevich, the plaintiff, died on the 22d day of August, 1883, while he and defendant were still copartners, as alleged in plaintiff's complaint herein. That no receiver was or ever has been appointed in this action; that, after the death of the said plaintiff, the defendant, as he was advised and believed it to be his duty, took, as surviving partner of said copartnership, into his business all the personal property of said partnership belonging thereto at the date of the death of said decedent, for the purpose of winding up the business of said copartnership, and ever since has been engaged in winding up the affairs of said copartnership; that on the 18th day of June, 1883, the plaintiff and defendant entered into the submission attached to the defendant's answer, and marked 'Exhibit A;' and all the allegations of said answer in reference to the arbitration in pursuance of said submission, and the acts of the parties thereunder subsequent to said arbitration agreement, and to the date of the death of decedent, as true, as in said answer alleged. It is further stipulated that this action shall be submitted for decision of the court upon the foregoing facts, and upon the further stipulation that all the allegations contained in said complaint are true, and upon the answer of defendant, as the pleading in said action. Dated San Jose, February 19, 1884. WM. L. GILL, Plaintiff's Attorney. BURT & PFISTER, Attorneys for Defendant." The case was tried by the court, findings filed, and judgment entered.

Appellant insists that the submission to arbitration, and the acquiescence of the parties therein, operated as a discontinuance of the action, and cites Gunter v. Sanchez, 1 Cal. 45, in which the court said: "If the reference of the cause was a submission to arbitration, the suit ceased to be pending in court, for the submission of a cause to arbitration operates as a discontinuance." In the agreement to submit the matters in controversy to arbitrators, it was not stipulated that it be entered as an order of the court, nor does it appear to have been filed with the clerk. Therefore it cannot be treated as an arbitration under the Code. Code Civil Proc. § 1283. The case is not unlike Heslep v. San Francisco, 4 Cal. 1, in which the court said that the agreement to submit the matters in dispute to arbitrators "was a voluntary withdrawal of the case from the jurisdiction of the court, by which the court lost all control over the cause." It was further said in that case that, if it should be contended that it was a common-law submission to arbitration, then the plaintiffs had lost all standing in court, and must resort to their remedy on the award. We think the submission of the cause to arbitrators operated as a discontinuance of the action, and that after such discontinuance the proceedings of the court were without jurisdiction. The conclusion renders it unnecessary to consider the other points presented by appellant.

Judgment reversed, and the court below is directed to dismiss the action.

ESCHEAT—WHEN PROCEEDINGS MAY BE INSTITUTED—DEATH OF PERSON WITHOUT RESIDENT HEIRS.

Civil Code Cal. § 1404, provides that "no non-resident foreigner can take by succession, unless he appears and claims within five years after the death of decedent;" section 1405 provides that, "when the succession is not claimed, as provided in the preceding section, the district court, on information, must direct the attorney general to sell such property, and deposit the proceeds of in the state treasury for the benefit of the non-resident foreigner, to be paid him whenever, within five years after such deposit, proof is produced * * * that he is entitled thereto;" and section 1406 provides that, "if no one succeeds to the estate, as herein provided, the property of the decedent devolves and escheats to the state." Held, that a proceeding brought by the attorney general under Code Civil Proc. PATERSON, J. On April 4, 1883, Thomas H. Blythe, a citizen of the United States and resident of the city of San Francisco, died intestate, leaving property valued by the appraisers at $2,490,236.54. Defendant was appointed administrator of the estate on June 12, 1883, and duly qualified. On June 23, 1883, the notice to creditors to present their claims within 10 months from said date was first published. Before the expiration of said 10 months, viz., on March 21, 1884, the information herein was filed by Attorney General Marshall in behalf of the state of California, praying for a decree that said property has escheated to the state; that defendants, about 30 in number, be enjoined from asserting any claim or interest in or to said estate. The information alleges the death of T. H. Blythe; that he was the owner in fee of the property described; that he was never a citizen of the United States, but was an alien and a subject and citizen of the kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; that he died without leaving any wife, kindred, or heirs to succeed to his estate; that defendant is the administrator of the estate; that the estate is still open and undistributed; that defendant has collected rents amounting to about $90,000; that Florence Blythe and others claim to be the heirs at law of Thomas H. Blythe; that none of the defendants are heirs, or entitled to share in, or succeed to, his estate; that the state of California is, by law, entitled to the estate. A motion was made to dismiss the information, and, upon the hearing thereof, a showing was made to the court of the citizenship of Blythe, that he was a citizen of the United States, and a resident of the state of California; that the defendant Roach was duly appointed administrator; that notice to creditors was first published June 23, 1883, and inventory filed on the 15th of November, 1883; that 84 claims had been presented to the administrator against the estate, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $618,000; that divers suits are pending against the administrator as such; that applications for the sale of portions of the estate, valued at $150,000, had been made, etc. The court thereupon denied the application for a restraining order, and dismissed the information. We think that the judgment should be affirmed.

1. In State v. Smith, 70 Cal. 156, 12 Pac. Rep. 121, Mr. Justice McKINSTRY, in his opinion for the court, said: "All aliens take by succession. Civil Code, § 671. The failure of a non-resident alien to 'appear and claim' within five years after descent cast operates a bar of his right to assert any title in the property as against the state. And this not on the idea that the property has escheated to the state, as of the date of the death of the ancestor, but because by the law the non-resident takes subject to the loss of his right by a failure to make claim within the five years. * * * It would seem to follow that a non-resident alien would have no defense to an inquest to 'vest the title in the state' in the nature of office found, except a defense based on his appearance and claim within the five years, and it necessarily follows that a proceeding brought by the attorney general under title 8, pt. 3, is premature, if commenced within the five years after the death of the ancestor." That case is conclusive of this, unless, as claimed by appellant, the allegation that there are no heirs at all makes this a case of an absolute escheat, and the cause of action one which accrued the moment Blythe died. But was the court bound by this averment? Is it possible in law or in fact for a party to know that there are no heirs so soon after the death of the intestate? A fact impossible in law cannot be admitted by demurrer. Railroad Co. v. Palmes, 109 U. S. 253, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 193. Alien heirs have five years after descent cast to appear and claim their right by succession. Can any one affirm within that time that there are no heirs? Does not the affirmation of such a proposition presuppose acquaintance with every non-resident alien and his genealogy? The averment is clearly one of fact, impossible in law, and which cannot be admitted by demurrer. In estates of over $10,000 in value creditors have 10 months within which to present their claims. Would the allegation, in any proceeding had within that time, that there are no claims against the estate, conclusively establish upon demurrer, or motion to dismiss, that no claims exist? How, until the expiration of the time allowed by law, is it possible for any one to say there are no creditors? The ascertainment of such a fact is practically impossible, and as a matter of law cannot be admitted on demurrer or motion to dismiss. The legislature did not intend that a proceeding of this kind should be commenced before the expiration of five years. The Codes of this state, like all other laws, proceed upon the theory that things have happened according to the ordinary course of nature and the ordinary habits of life; and it is a presumption of law that every intestate has left some one on earth entitled to claim as his heir, however remote. Code Civil Proc. § 1963, subd. 28; Abb. Tr. Ev 85, 86. In every provision of our Codes relating to the administration of estates, and germane to the subject, this presumption is indulged. These provisions are numerous, and it is unnecessary to copy them here. We cite a few sections: 1365, 1371, 1726, 1728, 1729, 1737, 1739, Code Civil Proc.; 1405, 1406, 1407, Civil Code. Every provision is made for administration upon the estates of persons dying intestate. Provision is made for the election of an officer, and his duties are prescribed for the administration of all estates where parties in interest omit or neglect to administer thereon. Every public administrator "must take charge of the estates of decedents who have no known heirs." Section 1726, Code Civil Proc. He is subject to the control and direction of the court. If, after the final settlement of the affairs of any estate, there be no known heirs or claimants thereof, the county treasurer must pay into the state treasury all property in his hands belonging to the estate, upon order of the court; and, if any such moneys or property escheat to the state, they must be disposed of as other escheated estates. Id. §§ 1739, 1743. It is clear from these provisions that the estates of persons dying without heirs are as much subject to the operation of the law as other estates. It is apparent that after the public administrator has taken charge of estates which have escheated, or are liable to escheat, he alone is entitled to proceed with administration of the estate as provided in the Code. Section 1445, Civil Code, provides that "when succession is not claimed as provided in the preceding section, the court on information must direct the attorney general to reduce the property to the possession of the state, or to sell and deposit the proceeds in the state treasury for the benefit of the non-resident foreigner, to be paid to him whenever, within five years after such deposit, proof to the satisfaction of the state controller and treasurer is produced that he is entitled to succeed thereto." This section would seem to imply that it is only when succession is not claimed within five years after the death of the decedent that proceedings may be commenced to reduce the property to the possession of the state. Section 1406, Civil Code, provides: "If no one succeeds to the estate or the proceeds, as herein provided, the property of the decedent devolves and escheats to the people of the state, and is placed by the state treasurer to the credit of the school fund." Thus it would appear that the state will take possession of property when no one claims it within five years after the death of the decedent, but that the property will not escheat until five years thereafter. Section 1407 confirms this view. It provides that "real property passing to the state under the last section, whether held by the state or its officers, is subject to the same charges and trusts to which it would have been subject if it had passed by succession, and is also subject to all the provisions of title 8, pt. 3, Code Civil Proc." The procedure in the last section referred to is the procedure which is here instituted by the attorney general. Administration is clearly one of the "charges and trusts" to which the property would have been subject, if it had passed by succession. Title 8, referred to in section 1407, supra, makes no provision for the payment of funeral expenses, expenses of last illness, or the debts of the decedent. There must be a certain and uniform system of administration on the property of decedents. For this purpose, chiefly, public administrators have been appointed and required to give bonds for the faithful discharge of their duties, and creditors have been given the right of administration. We think that the information filed by the attorney general is premature. Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. COIN. (No. 20,354.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1888.)

CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS—REASONABLE DOUBT.

It is reversible error, in a criminal case, to refuse to instruct the jury that the burden is upon the prosecution of proving every element of the crime charged, beyond a reasonable doubt, where no other instruction is given stating the law of reasonable doubt in criminal cases.¹

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; H. K. S. O'MELVENY, Judge.

Robert Hardie, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

MCKINSTRY, J. The defendant asked the court to instruct the jury: "The burden is upon the prosecution of establishing every element of the crime of which the defendant may be convicted, beyond a reasonable doubt." Through inadvertence, or for some reason which does not appear in the record, the court refused to give the instruction requested, and omitted to give any other instruction of a like character, or stating or bearing upon the rule as to reasonable doubt in criminal cases. Defendant took proper exception to the refusal of the court to give the instruction requested. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

MAGUIRE v. DE FREMERY et al. (No. 9,960.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1888.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—WIFE'S SEPARATE ESTATE—WHAT IS—EVIDENCE.

A deed conveying land to a single woman sufficiently shows the land to be her separate estate, though followed after her marriage by a second deed from the same grantor to her in her married name, and upon an expressed money consideration.

Repartment 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; A. M. CRANE, Judge.

Action by John Maguire against W. C. B. De Fremery, executor of Rose Maguire, deceased, and Peter Maguire, to quiet title. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

P. J. Van Loeben Sels, (James M. Haven, of counsel,) for appellant. Charles F. Hanlon, for respondents.

¹ A reasonable doubt is one for which a sensible man can give a good reason, based on the evidence or want of evidence. It is such a doubt as a sensible man would act upon, or decline to act upon, in his own concerns. U. S. v. Jones, 31 Fed. Rep. 718. The guilt of an accused is proven beyond a reasonable doubt when, upon the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, the minds of the jurors are in that condition that they can say from the evidence they have and feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge. A reasonable doubt does not consist of possible or conjectural doubts not growing out of the evidence, but is one which, when considering the evidence alone, leads the juror to hesitate, and upon which he would refuse to act in the important concerns of life. It is error to charge the jury that it is a doubt for the having of which the juror can give a reason derived from the testimony. Carr v. State, (Neb.) 37 N. W. Rep. 630. Respecting "reasonable doubt" in criminal cases, see Knarr's Appeal, (Pa.) 9 Atl. Rep. 878; People v. Lee Sare Bo, (Cal.) 14 Pac. Rep. 310; McCullough v. State, (Tex.) 5 S. W. SHARPSTEIN, J. Appeal from an order granting a new trial. Action by surviving husband of defendant's testatrix against him and her sole surviving child to quiet the alleged title of plaintiff to a certain lot of land in the city of Oakland. Judgment and decree in favor of defendants. The plaintiff moved for a new trial on the grounds—First, insufficiency of the evidence to justify the judgment, decree, and findings, and that it is against law; second, errors in law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by plaintiff. The motion was made upon a statement of the case, a bill of exceptions, and the minutes of the court. The record before us contains a statement on motion for new trial. There is no copy of a bill of exceptions, or of the minutes of the court. The particulars in which the evidence was insufficient to justify the judgment and findings is specified as follows: "First. The evidence shows that the property was conveyed to Mrs. Maguire, during coverture, for money consideration, which raised the presumption that it was common property; and no evidence whatsoever was introduced to show that any of the moneys paid for said property was not the common property of the parties to the marriage. Second. No evidence was offered to show that the property was acquired by said Rose Barker as her separate property, or that it was acquired by any money other than common money. Third. The evidence shows that the estate was common property. Errors in law occurring at the trial, excepted to by the plaintiff. The court erred in holding that the property was not the common property of Maguire and wife." The error of law specified is that "the court erred in holding that the property was not the common property of Maguire and wife." The evidence contained in the statement is as follows: "Plaintiff took the stand and testified: 'I married the mother of the defendant, Peter Maguire, on the 21st of September, 1868, in Oakland. Her maiden name was Rose Barker. Defendant, Peter Maguire, is my only child, and is the issue of said marriage.' Plaintiff introduced in evidence a deed in writing of the premises in suit, dated the 10th of November, 1869, from James De Fremery to Rose Maguire, wife of [plaintiff] John Maguire, whereby said James De Fremery, in consideration of the sum of five dollars, ($5,) gold coin, to James De Fremery in hand then paid by the said Rose Maguire, granted, bargained, sold, remised, conveyed, and quitclaimed to her, said Rose Maguire, the premises in suit, and which deed was recorded at the request of A. G. Lawrie, November 15, 1869, at 8:32 A. M., in Liber 48 of Deeds, pp. 313 and 314, in Alameda county recorder's office. Plaintiff rests. Defendant offers in evidence a deed from the same James De Fremery to the same woman, Rose Barker, dated 19th September, 1868, of the premises in suit, whereby said James De Fremery, for and in consideration of the sum of $500, gold coin of the United States, to him in hand then paid by said Rose Barker, granted, bargained, sold, conveyed, and confirmed to her, said Rose Barker, the premises in suit, and which deed was recorded at the request of A. G. Lawrie, November 15, 1869, at 8:30 A. M., in Liber 48 of Deeds, pp. 310, 311, in same recorder's office." The evidence shows beyond a doubt that the lot in controversy was the separate property of Rose Maguire at the time of her death. The conveyance of De Fremery to her before her marriage with the plaintiff is conclusive upon that point. The subsequent conveyance to her by the same grantor did not affect the title conveyed in the former deed. It certainly did not change the character of the property from separate to community property. Being unable to discover any sufficient ground for granting a new trial, the order granting it must be reversed. Order reversed.

HOLLAND v. WILSON. (No. 12,078.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1888.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS—FILING CLAIM—SPECIFICATIONS REFERRED TO IN CONTRACT.

Under a contract to erect a building "conformable to the drawings and specifications made," the drawings and specifications are a part of the contract, and should be filed under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1183, regarding mechanics' liens, providing that "all such contracts shall be * * * filed in the office of the county recorder."

2. PLEADING—ANSWER—SUFFICIENCY OF AVERMENTS.

In an action for work and materials furnished for the erection of a building, where defendant sets up a special contract for its erection according to certain plans and specifications, an averment in the answer as to filing the contract in the recorder's office, that "the said agreement was filed in the office of the county recorder," as required by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1183, is not an averment that the plans and specifications were filed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; JOHN D. WORKS, Judge.

This was an action by J. C. Holland against Warren Wilson on the common counts for work and materials furnished by the plaintiff to the defendant. The defendant, in the third paragraph of his answer, set forth a special contract, made a part of the answer, and alleged non-performance thereof by plaintiff, to defendant's damage. The special contract provided, among other things, that the plaintiff should erect the building "conformable to the drawings and specifications made by C. E. Sanger, and signed by the parties, within the time aforesaid, in a good, workman-like, and substantial manner, to the satisfaction and under the direction of the said C. E. Sanger, architect, * * * and also shall and will find and provide such good, proper, and sufficient materials, of all kinds whatsoever, as shall be proper and sufficient for completing and finishing all the said brick-laying and plastering, and other works of said building mentioned in the brick-layers' specifications." Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1183, regarding the liens of mechanics and others upon real property, provides, as to contracts between the owner of the land and his contractor, that "all such contracts shall be in writing when the amount agreed to be paid thereunder exceeds one thousand dollars, and shall be subscribed by the parties thereto, and shall, before the work is commenced, be filed in the office of the county recorder of the county, or city and county, where the property is situated, who shall receive one dollar for such filing; otherwise they shall be wholly void, and no recovery shall be had thereon by either party thereto; and in such case the labor done and materials furnished by all persons aforesaid, except the contractor, shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and they shall have a lien for the value thereof." The answer of defendant regarding the filing alleged "that before the work therein mentioned was commenced, to-wit, on or about the 5th day of March, A. D. 1886, the said agreement was filed in the office of the county recorder of San Diego county, state of California, in the county where the said property is situated." The plaintiff demurred to the third paragraph, and the demurrer was sustained. Trial was had with jury waived, and judgment was entered for the plaintiff, from which the defendant appeals.

M. A. Luce, for appellant. Collier & Collier, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. We think the court below ruled correctly in sustaining the demurrer to the portion of the answer numbered 3. The "plans and specifications" referred to in the agreement were a part of the contract, and should have been filed in the recorder's office, under section 1183, Code Civil Proc.

The averment as to filing is insufficient, in failing to show that the plans and specifications were filed. Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE ex rel. DANIELS v. HENSHAW. (No. 11,724.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1888.)

1. STATUTES—REPEAL—BY IMPLICATION.

St. Cal. 1865-66, p. 193, (act March 10, 1866,) established a police court in the city of Oakland, and provided for the election of a police judge, with jurisdiction of certain offenses, mainly petty, committed in the city, violation of ordinances, etc., such as was possessed by justices. St. 1885, p. 213, (act March 18, 1885,) vested the judicial power of cities having 30,000, and less than 100,000, inhabitants (Oakland being such city) in a police court to be held by the city justices, or by one of them to be designated by the mayor, to which it gave exclusive jurisdiction of certain offenses, violation of ordinances, etc., in almost precisely the language of the former act, providing for fees, seal, appeals, records, etc., following in most respects the framework of the former act, and concluded by providing that the act should take effect at the expiration of the terms of office of the police judges of said cities, or when a vacancy should occur therein. Held, that the latter act was intended to embrace the city of Oakland in its provisions, and was an implied repeal of the former act. McKINSTRY, J., dissenting.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—STATUTES—UNIFORMITY OF OPERATION.

Said act of 1885 does not, by reason of its provision for taking effect at the expiration of the terms of such judges, conflict with Const. Cal. art. 1, § 11, providing that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation.

3. SAME—LOCAL LAWS—WHAT ARE.

Nor is said act in violation of Const. Cal. art. 4, § 25, which provides that the legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any case where a general law can be made applicable.¹ McKINSTRY, J., dissenting.

4. SAME—TITLE OF LAW—UNITY OF SUBJECT.

The title of said act of 1885, "An act to provide for police courts in cities having 30,000, and under 100,000, inhabitants, and to provide for officers thereof," is sufficiently comprehensive to designate the matters stated in the act, under Const. Cal. art. 4, § 24, which provides that no act shall contain more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title.

In bank. Appeal from superior county, Alameda county; W. E. GREENE, Judge.

Action of quo warranto, brought at the relation of S. F. Daniels against F. W. Henshaw, to try the right of defendant to the office of judge of the police court of the city of Oakland. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. Const. Cal. art. 4, § 25, provides that the legislature shall not pass any local or special law where a general law can be made applicable. Article 4, § 24, provides that no act shall contain more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title.

Jas. A. Johnson, (Geo. E. Whitney, Henry Vrooman, and Moore & Reed, of counsel,) for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., J. C. Martin, John Yule, and Fox & Kellogg, for the People.

SEARLS, C. J. This action was brought against the defendant, F. W. Henshaw, for usurpation of an office, as provided by Code Civil Proc. §§

803-810. The judgment in the court below was against defendant, who appeals. The case comes up on the judgment roll, containing the following agreed statement of facts: "It is hereby stipulated and agreed by and between the respective parties hereto, plaintiff and defendant, (1) that there was a municipal election held in the city of Oakland on the 8th day of March, 1886, at which relator, S. F. Daniels, received the highest number of votes cast for police judge of the city of Oakland, for the full term of two years next ensuing after such election, to succeed himself, he then being the duly elected, qualified, and acting incumbent of the office. (2) That within the time prescribed by law he took the oath of office, and duly qualified, as required by law. (3) That he is eligible, qualified, and competent to discharge and perform the duties of the office. (4) That he is of right entitled to have, hold, and enjoy the rights and emoluments of the office of police judge of the city of Oakland for the full term of two years from and after his said election, and that he should be let and put into possession of the said office, and should receive its emoluments, if such office now exists. (5) It is further stipulated and agreed that the only question involved in this proceeding is whether or not the office of police judge of the city of Oakland was abolished by an act of the legislature of the state of California, entitled: 'An act to provide for police courts in cities having thirty, and under one hundred thousand, inhabitants, and to provide for officers thereof,' approved March 18, 1885. It being further stipulated and agreed that if the act above named did abolish the office of police judge of the city of Oakland, as provided by an act of the legislature entitled 'An act so establish a police court in the city of Oakland, and define its jurisdiction, duties, and fees of courts and its officers,' approved March 10, 1866, and the supplementary and amendatory acts thereto, then the defendant is entitled to have and hold the said office, and exercise its functions; but that, if the said act did not abolish said office, then, and in that event, the relator, S. F. Daniels, should be let and put into possession of the said office, and have and receive its emoluments, and exercise the functions of said office."

As will be seen, the agreed statement of facts, by conceding the right of the relator, Daniels, to the office of police judge, if "such office now exists," and the right of respondent, Henshaw, to the office of judge of the police court, if there is no such office as police judge, eliminates from the problem all questions except one, viz.: Was the office of police judge of the city of Oakland abolished by an act of the legislature of the state of California, entitled "An act to provide for police courts in cities having thirty thousand, and under one hundred thousand, inhabitants, and to provide for officers thereof," approved March 18, 1885? St. 1885, p. 213. The city of Oakland was incorporated as a municipal corporation by an act of the legislature, approved March 25, 1854. St. 1854, p. 183. The charter provided for various officers, among them a mayor, upon whom, among other powers, was conferred jurisdiction of all violations of the city ordinances, and like jurisdiction as is conferred upon justices of the peace. On the 4th day of April, 1864, an act of the legislature was passed under which one justice of the peace was provided for in said city, with like powers within the city of Oakland as justices of the peace in the county of Alameda. St. 1863-64, p. 393. On the 10th day of March, 1866, an act of the legislature was approved, entitled "An act to establish a police court in the city of Oakland, and define its jurisdiction, duties, and fees of court and its officers." St. 1865-66, p. 193. This last statute provided for the election of a police judge in and for said city of Oakland, who should serve for two years. To the police court was given jurisdiction of certain public offenses committed in the city, such as petty larceny, assault and battery, breaches of the peace, riots, affrays, misdemeanors, etc.; all actions for the violation of city ordinances, both civil and criminal; and in certain civil actions in which the city was a party or interested,—his jurisdiction being limited in civil and criminal cases, as is that of justices of the peace. This law, with certain amendments to it, not material to the present inquiry, entitles relator to the office of police judge, unless repealed by the act of 1885, specified in the agreed statement of facts.

The question presented naturally suggests a division under two heads: (1) Did the legislature seek, by the act of 1885, to repeal the act of 1866? (2) Had it the power to do so by the method pursued? The act itself must furnish the data for the solution of the first question. Section 1 of the act of 1885 is as follows: "The judicial power of every city having thirty thousand and under one hundred thousand inhabitants shall be vested in a police court, to be held therein by the city justices, or one of them, to be designated by the mayor, but either of said city justices may hold such court without such designation; and it is hereby made the duty of said city justices, in addition to the duties now required of them by law, to hold said police court." Sec. 2. "The police court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of the following public offenses committed in the city." Then follows a list of the offenses, among which are petty larceny, assault and battery breaches of the peace, riots, affrays, willful injury to property, and all misdemeanors punishable by fine or imprisonment, or by both; of proceedings respecting vagrants, etc.; following almost precisely the language of the act of 1866. Section 3 gives exclusive jurisdiction for violation of ordinances, and for the collection of any license provided by said ordinances, as was provided in section 4 of the act of 1866. Section 6 provides for a clerk of the police court, to be appointed by the city council; prescribes his duties, etc. The subsequent sections provide for the payment of the fees of the court into the city treasury, for a seal for the court, for appeals to the superior court, authentication of records, etc.; following in most respects the framework of the law of 1866. The language of the first clause of the first section of the act of March 13, 1885, in terms comprehends every city having a population of 30,000 and under 100,000 inhabitants. The second and third sections give exclusive jurisdiction to the court therein provided for, in the very cases previously confided to the former court. This power is incompatible with that exercised by the former court. Both cannot exist together. If the latter has exclusive jurisdiction, the former cannot exist and transact business as a court. The last section of the act of 1885 shows, as we think, the intention of the law-making power. It is as follows: "This act to go into effect upon the expiration of the term of office of the present police judges of said cities, or when a vacancy occurs therein." Evidently the object of this last section was to leave the police judges in office until the expiration of their terms, or until a vacancy should occur in the office, and then to succeed them by the new courts created by the statute. We peruse the statute in vain for evidence of any intention to limit its application to a portion only of the corporations included within its general terms. We therefore conclude the intention of the legislature to have been to provide for police courts and judges thereof in all the cities of the state having 30,000 and less than 100,000 inhabitants. The law does not favor the repeal of statutes by implication, and will, in all proper cases, in the absence of an express clause repealing a former act, so construe the new law that both may stand; but where, as in the present case, the latter statute is repugnant to the former, and both cannot stand together, the latter will repeal the former. It was said in City and County of Sacramento v. Bird, 15 Cal. 295: "Every statute must be considered according to what appears to have been the intention of the legislature, and even though the statutes relating to the same subject be not in terms repugnant or inconsistent, if the latter statute was clearly intended to prescribe the only rule which should govern in the case provided for, it will be construed as repealing the original act." See, also, State v. Conkling, 19 Cal. 512; Norris v. Crocker, 13 How. 429; Sedg. St. & Const. Law, 124; Fraser v. Alexander, 16 Pac. Rep. 757. We think the intention of the legislature to frame a general law, the frame-work of which should include the class of cities in question, the repugnancy of such law to the former statute, and the intention to repeal the former statute, are all apparent upon the face of the act of March 18, 1885.

The more difficult question remains: Had the legislature power to pass the act of March 18, 1885, in the form which it assumed, and thereby repeal the former law? It is contended by counsel for relator that the legislature had no such power; that, by the method adopted in the act of 1885, the legislature had no power, either directly or by implication, to alter, amend, or repeal the whole or any part of the act of 1866, for the reasons (1) the act of 1885 is in conflict with section 11 of article 1 of the constitution, in that by its own terms it must take effect in different cities at different times; that is to say, when the term of the police judge expires, or when there shall be a vacancy in his office. Section 11 of article 1 of the constitution provides that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation." In order to constitute the uniformity of operation specified in the constitution, it is not necessary that the general law must operate alike upon all the subjects or persons to which it applies, independent of all other considerations, but that it shall operate uniformly upon all persons standing in the same category, and upon rights and things in the same relation. The law which punishes the different grades of crime differently, each according to its grade, is not lacking in uniformity of operation because it metes out one punishment to the burglar, and another to the murderer, or because it fails to punish the innocent. A law which required railway engineers to give notice by blowing a steam-whistle or ringing a bell upon approaching a road or street crossing would not be lacking in uniformity of operation because a like warning was not required of footmen or drivers of ox-teams. To similar facts under like circumstances, to persons similarly situated, the law must apply uniformly. The law must be as general as the subject to which it relates, and its application must be uniform as to all persons and things embraced within it; or, if the subject of the law is divided into classes, the provisions applicable to each class must apply to all matters or persons included in such class. Smith v. Judge, 17 Cal. 554. It must not grant to any citizen or class of citizens privileges which, upon the same terms, and under like circumstances, shall not equally belong to all citizens. Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 366; Ex parte Smith, 38 Cal. 710. In this last case it was said in substance that it was not intended by the provision under consideration to prevent legislation which is local in its operation, or special in its effect, or that all differences founded upon class or sex should be ignored.

It is mainly urged under this head that the law does not have a uniform operation, in that by its own terms it must take effect in different cities at different times; that is to say, in each city to which it applies at the expiration of the term of the then incumbent in the office of police judge in such city, etc. It is argued that, as the terms of the police judges must expire, or vacancies occur, at different periods of time, and as the law only takes effect when the term expires, or the vacancy occurs, there can be no uniformity as to time, and hence no uniformity of operation in the law. This argument involves the consideration of what is meant by the term "uniform operation," as used in the constitution. Does it involve, as an essential, identity of time, so as to make it necessary that it take effect at the same time upon all subjects to be governed by it? In an extreme sense this question must be answered in the negative. Nearly all general laws, however uniform in their operation, apply to—or may apply to—and affect persons or property, or both, not in esse at the date of their passage. This certainly cannot be urged as an argument against uniformity. If the law operates equally upon all the objects embraced within it when they come within the circle or scope of its authority, the uniformity of operation contemplated by the constitution is attained. A general law to fill vacancies in office cannot be void for want of uniformity of operation, because such vacancies must occur at different periods. If it meets every contingency when it arises, and treats all the contingencies of like character in like manner, it is uniform in its operation. We do not think identity as to the time of operation essential, except where it is coupled with identity of facts or circumstances. Under the same circumstances, existing at the same period of time, the law must apply equally at the same time, or uniformity of operation is not attained. Beyond that, identity as to time of application is not necessary.

It would seem the last objection we have been considering is more properly referable to another head suggested by counsel for relator, viz.: Is it local and special legislation? In support of the affirmative of this proposition we are referred to the case of Miller v. Kister, 68 Cal. 145, 8 Pac. Rep. 813. In that case the court held that section 4 of the act of March 18, 1885, amending the act of March 14, 1883, (County Government Act,) was local or special legislation, and unconstitutional. The grounds of the decision, so far as important here, were: (1) That the amendment in question was a general law; (2) that, as a general law, its operation was restricted, so that as to certain salaries it did not apply until the expiration of the terms of the incumbents then in office, except as to the officers of counties coming under three classes, and as to them it took effect at a date named in the law. The court held, under these circumstances, that, while the legislature could suspend the operation of the general laws of the state, yet that, when it did so, the suspension must be general, and that it could not be made in individual cases, or for particular localities; citing Cooley, Const. Law, 391; Railroad Co. v. Baldwin, 57 Cal. 165; French v. Teschmaker, 24 Cal. 544; and holding the law in violation of subdivision 29, art. 4, Const., and as having the effect of destroying the uniformity of the operation of the law. The distinction attempted to be made by the statute under consideration in that case is not found here. It dealt with forty-eight classes of officers, and was to take effect as to all of them except three classes, upon the expiration of the terms of office of the incumbents. It was a general law, applying alike to all the classes, but took effect at different times upon different classes. No such distinction is made by the law under consideration here. The statute we are reviewing operates alike upon all the persons to whom it applies, and it applies equally to all persons in the same category. Under the authority given by our constitution, we think it scarcely necessary to discuss the power of the legislature to classify municipal corporations according to population. The manner of their classification is a subject for legislative control, and the courts may not interfere with the discretion vested in a co-ordinate branch of the government. The manifest object of classifying municipal corporations according to population, and in preventing their creation by special laws, as provided by section 6 of article 11 of our constitution, was to avoid the necessity of special legislation. That cities containing a large population require different legislation from those composed of a few hundred inhabitants is evident. To so classify them that general laws applicable to these separate classes will meet the necessities of the case was a wise provision; and a law which applies to one or more, but not to all, of these classes, is not, for that reason, special legislation. The case of Earle v. San Francisco, 55 Cal. 488, relating to salaries of public school teachers, was held special legislation and void, because it selected from the general class of public school teachers of the state those within certain cities and counties, and regulated their salaries in a manner different from that of others without such localities. To fix the salaries in a class of towns, and leave the balance to be regulated by the local authorities, was said to be special legislation. We are of opinion the act of 1885 is a general law. The decision of this court in Thomason v. Ashworth, 14 Pac. Rep. 615, renders it unnecessary for us to dwell upon the question of the right of the legislature to pass general laws affecting municipal corporations without reference to whether such corporations were formed before or after the constitution of 1879.

The title of the law, "An act to provide for police courts in cities having thirty thousand and under one hundred thousand inhabitants, and to provide for officers thereof," is explicit and sufficiently comprehensive to designate the matters stated in the act.

Some of the questions discussed by counsel in the briefs on file are eliminated from the record by the agreed statement of facts, and need not be mentioned; others are not of controlling importance, and we do not pause to notice them beyond saying our opinion of them does not militate against the general conclusion that the office of police judge of the city of Oakland was abolished by the act of March 18, 1885, and, as a consequence, that, under the agreed statement of facts, the defendant, F. W. Henshaw, is entitled to have and hold the office of judge of the police court of the city of Oakland, and to exercise the functions of said office.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the court below directed to enter judgment in favor of defendant.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

THORNTON, J., (concurring.) In the case of Ex parte Henshaw, on habeas corpus, 15 Pac. Rep. 110, I expressed my opinion on the questions involved in this case. That opinion is in harmony with that of the chief justice herein. I have seen no reason to change my views on the questions involved herein since the opinion was pronounced in Ex parte Henshaw, and concur in the foregoing opinion of the chief justice.

MCKINSTRY, J., (dissenting.) The question presented is. Were the act "to establish a police court in the city of Oakland, and define its jurisdiction, duties, and fees of court and its officers," approved March 10, 1866, and the acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, repealed by the act entitled "An act to provide for police courts in cities having thirty and under one hundred thousand inhabitants, and to provide for officers thereof," approved March 18, 1885? The act of March 10, 1866, as supplemented and amended, was part of the charter of the city of Oakland prior to the adoption of the present constitution. Upon that subject I fully concur with the views of Hon. W. T. WALLACE, judge of the superior court of San Francisco, (late chief justice of the supreme court,) as expressed in his recent decision in Ex parte Casselli. That learned judge said. "It" (the act of 1866) "provided for the election of a police judge 'at the charter election of 1867,' and that in the mean time the office should be filled by an incumbent to be elected by the 'city council of Oakland.' The police court thus established, and its incumbency thus provided for, had a jurisdiction, local and criminal, coterminous with the boundaries of the city, embracing certain offenses when committed therein. These were all cases of petit larceny, * * * and 'all proceedings for violation of any ordinance of said city,' etc. It was vested besides with a civil jurisdiction, also local to the city,—actions for the collection of taxes and assessments 'levied in said city for city purposes;' or for the erection or improvement of school-houses, and of public buildings; laying out, opening, and improving streets, sidewalks, lanes, alleys, etc.; the purchase or improvement of public grounds, etc. In short, without further reciting the provisions of the act, it is seen to have been in its entire scope distinctly municipal in character, spending its whole force upon the government, civil and criminal, of the city of Oakland, and the regulation of its internal municipal affairs." Again: "Had its title been 'An act to amend the charter of the city of Oakland,' instead of 'An act to establish a police court in the city of Oakland,' there can be little doubt that it would have equally well comported with the substance and body of the act. * * * But the distinctive character of a legislative act is to be determined by the substance of its provisions as found in the body of the statute, rather than by reference to the phraseology of the title prefixed. Especially is this so in considering the legislation occurring under the former constitution of the state. Under the legislative practice then prevailing, the title was rarely a matter of legislative debate or scrutiny," etc. Adams v. City and County of San Francisco, 50 Cal. 118. And, after further argument and illustration, the learned judge concludes that the act of March 10, 1866, was incorporated into, and became part of, the municipal charter of the city of Oakland. In the same decision, Judge WALLACE—conceding what, in his view, it was not necessary to dispute, that by the sixth section of article 11 of the constitution the charter of the city of Oakland was subject and controlled by general laws, even such as might change the constitution of all municipal organizations existing when the state constitution was adopted—proceeds to prove that the act of March 18, 1885, entitled "An act to provide for police courts in cities having 30,000 and under 100,000 inhabitants, and to provide for officers thereof," was not a general law, within the meaning of the constitution. "Cities and counties" and "towns" are omitted both from the title and body of the act. "Cities with population between thirty thousand and one hundred thousand inhabitants are the only municipalities selected for the operation of the act; 'cities and counties' with population between thirty thousand and one hundred thousand are omitted altogether; so are 'towns,' regardless of population." Ex parte Casselli.

For myself, I am of opinion that the "general laws" mentioned in the last clause of section 6 of article 11 of the constitution do not include laws which change the charters of cities organized before the adoption of the constitution. As said by Mr. Justice SHARPSTEIN, in Stande v. Commissioners, 61 Cal. 325: "It is clear to my mind that, when the constitution declares that cities organized before its adoption shall be subject to and controlled by general laws, it means as to matters not specially provided for in charters which existed at the date of the adoption of the constitution; otherwise they would be subject to and controlled by general laws passed for the incorporation of cities and towns, without having first voted to organize under such laws." The sixth section of article 11 of the constitution reads: "Corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws; but the legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns, which laws may be altered, amended, or repealed. Cities and towns heretofore organized or incorporated may become organized under such general laws whenever a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall so determine, and shall organize in conformity therewith; and cities or towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this constitution, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws." The city of Oakland, in my opinion, is not subject to nor controlled by the act of March 18, 1885, even if that act can be treated as in any sense a general law. Assuming that the framers of the constitution did not intend to insert contradictory provisions in the same section,—that, after having declared that cities or towns organized before the adoption of the constitution should not be brought within the operation of the general laws providing for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to population of cities and towns, without the consent of a majority of their electors, they did not intend immediately afterwards to declare that cities and towns existing before the adoption of the constitution should be subject to and controlled by such general laws,—section 6 of article 11 is not difficult of interpretation: First. Corporations for municipal purposes may not be created by special laws. Second. The legislature must provide by general laws for the incorporation, organization, and classification in proportion to population of cities and towns, which (general laws) may be altered, amended, or repealed. (The general laws under which, after the adoption of the constitution, cities and towns are to be incorporated and organized, must provide for the classification according to population of the cities and towns incorporated and organized under them.) Third. A city or town, organized while the former constitution was in force, may become organized under the general laws passed by direction of the present constitution for the incorporation, etc., of cities and towns, whenever a majority of its voters shall so determine. (And it cannot be made subject to such general laws, or any part of them, without the consent of a majority of its electors.) Fourth. A city or town, organized under the general laws for the incorporation of cities and towns, cannot be made subject to any statute changing its organization, except the statute is amendatory of the general laws under which it was incorporated, and is a statute operative, at least, upon all of its class, as cities and towns are classified under such general laws. Fifth. The legislature has complied with the mandate of the constitution by the enactment of the law of March 2, 1883, "to provide for the classification of municipal corporations," and the law of March 13, 1883, "to provide for the organization, incorporation, and government of municipal corporations." St. 1883, pp. 24, 93. The first of these acts provides. "All municipal corporations within this state are hereby classified as follows: Those having a population of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants shall constitute the first class; those having a population of more than thirty thousand, and not exceeding one hundred thousand inhabitants, shall constitute the second class," etc. The act of March 18, 1885, which is claimed to be operative in the city of Oakland, attempts to create a single class for a particular purpose,—a different class from any provided for in the general law, passed in obedience to the behest of the constitution for the classification of municipal corporations. It attempts to provide for a police court in every city "having 30,000 and under 100,000 inhabitants." If the act of March 18, 1885, is a general law, within the meaning of section 6, art. 11, of the constitution, it applies to all cities, whether organized before the adoption of the constitution or afterwards, under the general law of 1883, having a population of 30,000 and less than 100,000. It applies to all of that supposed class, (at least,) or it is not a general law. But will any one contend that, after general laws have been passed for the incorporation, organization, and classification of cities, in proportion to population, the legislature may create, not merely a new classification of all cities and towns for a special municipal purpose, but a single class, differing from any included in the general classification, for a special municipal purpose? Sixth. If, however, the act of March 18, 1885, can be treated as operative with respect to cities of the second class, formed under the general law of 1883, it constitutes an amendment of the general law providing for the incorporation, etc., of cities. An amendment is incorporated into, and becomes a part of, the statute amended. It seems very plain that, inasmuch as the city of Oakland, created before the adoption of the constitution, cannot be forced to organize under, or be subject to, the general laws for the incorporation, organization, and classification of cities and towns, without the consent of a majority of its electors, it cannot be made subject to a part of such general laws for the incorporation of cities and towns, without the consent of its voters. If it can, the city of Oakland may, without the consent of a majority of its voters, by means of a series of amendments of the general laws providing for the incorporation, etc., of cities, be transferred entirely under the regime of such general laws.

It being morally demonstrable that the "general laws" to which cities and towns organized before and after the adoption of the constitution are subject, are not laws which would change the provisions of charters existing prior to the adoption of the constitution, full force and effect may be given to the last clause of section 6, art. 11, by holding it to refer to laws general as opposed to local laws, or such as are limited in their operation to certain places, as to all or a particular class of cities and towns. Upon this matter I have nothing to add to what I had occasion to say in Thomason v. Ashworth, 14 Pac. Rep. 623, 624. A city is a collective body of inhabitants, incorporated, etc. The citizens are incorporated, the charter is their charter. They are subject to general laws, in common with all the citizens of the state. But a law operative only in one, two, or all cities is not a general law, within the meaning of section 6, art. 11, but is a local law. I dissented from the opinion of the court in Thomason v. Ashworth, and I should not deem it necessary to dissent from the decision of a majority of the justices herein were it not that, in my view, there is a clear distinction between that case and this. Previous to the decision in that case, this court had held that a certain provision of the constitution had "struck dead" the street law of 1872,—part of the charter of San Francisco. If, as had been held by a majority of this court, the street law of 1872—part of the charter of San Francisco—was struck dead on the 1st day of January, 1880, then there were no provisions in the charter of San Francisco relating to or providing for street work when the "street law" of 1885 was passed. St. 1885, p. 147. The street law of 1885, held valid in Thomason v. Ashworth, 14 Pac. Rep. 615, did not, therefore, interfere with or repeal any express provision of the statutes incorporating or organizing the city and county of San Francisco. But the case here is different. The act of March 10, 1886, to "establish a police court in the city of Oakland," was in full force and effect, as part of the charter of the city of Oakland, when the statute of March 18, 1885, "to provide for police courts in cities having 30,000," etc., was passed. If the last act became operative in Oakland, it altered, in a matter of most material concern, the city government there existing.

RUDDLE v. GIVENS, Sheriff. (No. 12,541.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1888.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—WHAT CONSTITUTES—CHANGE OF POSSESSION.

Plaintiff purchased certain horses, and a day or two after the purchase, in company with his vendor, went to a pasture, took possession of the horses, and removed them, but subsequently had them put back. Some time afterwards the vendor took the horses from such pasture to another party, and contracted for their pasturage, claiming to be the owner. In the absence of plaintiff, the vendor had sold some of the horses, and had sufficient control to have sold them all. Held, that under Civil Code Cal. § 3440, providing that a sale of such personal property, made by a person in possession, is conclusively presumed to be fraudulent against his creditors unless accompanied by immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession, such a sale was not valid as against the creditors of the vendor.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Merced county; C. H. MARKS, Judge.

Action by Joseph A. Ruddle against John H. Givens, sheriff. Judgment for plaintiff; and defendant appealed. Civil Code Cal. § 3440, provides that "every transfer of personal property other than a thing in action, or a ship or cargo at sea or in a foreign port, and every lien thereon, other than a mortgage, when allowed by law, and a contract of bottomry or respondentia, is conclusively presumed, if made by a person having, at the time, the possession or control of the property, and not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the things transferred, to be fraudulent, and therefore void against those who are his creditors while he remains in possession, and the successors in interest of such creditors, and against any persons on whom his estate devolves in trust for the benefit of others than himself, and against purchasers or incumbrancers in good faith subsequent to the transfer."

Cal. Rep. 16-19 P.—44

Frank H. Farrar, for appellant. R. H. Ward, for appellee.

SEARLS, C. J. This is an action of claim and delivery, brought by plaintiff to recover possession or the value of two brown work horses, one bay work horse, one roan work horse, and four two-year-old colts, branded "X" on left hips; also, two yearling colts not branded. Plaintiff claims title to the property and right of possession under a bill of sale dated June 2, 1886, executed by one John K. Walling in favor of himself. This bill of sale, in addition to describing the horses in dispute here, also purported to convey title to other horses not in dispute. Plaintiff also claims right of possession by virtue of a delivery of such possession to him made one or two days after the bill of sale was executed. Defendant justifies, as sheriff of Merced county, under an execution levied by him upon the property in an action wherein A. Zirker and R. W. Hammatt, under the firm name of Zirker & Hammatt, were plaintiffs, against the said John K. Walling, defendant; and also denies right of possession in plaintiff, and sets up ownership, right of possession, and possession in the said John K. Walling. The case was tried by a jury. Plaintiff had a verdict upon which judgment was entered. The appeal is by defendant from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial. The important question for consideration is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. There is very little conflict in the testimony. Taken in its most favorable aspect to plaintiff, it shows that on the 2d day of June, 1886, he received a bill of sale of the horses in dispute, and of others not in dispute, from John K. Walling, his brother-in-law. The horses, at the time of the sale, were at the pasture of a man by the name of Davis. A day or two after the sale, plaintiff and Walling went to Davis' pasture, where plaintiff took possession, and removed a part of the horses to George Barfield's and part to Schaffer's pasture. After the horses had been in Barfield's pasture for sometime, plaintiff told Davis to take them from Barfield's and to put them back in his pasture. Walling took the horses in dispute here, and put them into the pasture of a man named Asbury, where they remained until taken by defendant as sheriff, under a writ of attachment against the property of Walling, on the 9th day of June, 1887. E. Asbury was sworn for defendant, and testifies as follows: "The horses described in the complaint were placed on my ranch by John K. Walling. I don't remember the time they came, but have a memorandum. The pasturage was charged to John K. Walling, and he told me they were his horses. Walling and the plaintiff were present when the horses were brought to my place. Walling made the contract with me for the pasturage, and Ruddle had nothing to say about it." On cross-examination, he testified as follows: "Walling told me he brought the horses to put them in pasture, and he and I made a bargain, and he put the horses in. I don't know how many were taken out after that, nor how long they were away. I don't know who took them away, nor who returned them. Neither Walling nor Ruddle paid the pasturage, but it was paid by the defendant. I know the plaintiff, and have known him since he was a little boy. I met Walling and the plaintiff on the road. I might be mistaken about the plaintiff being with Walling at the time; it might have been some one else. I am not certain it was the plaintiff; it might not have been." Kahl, being duly sworn for the defendant, testified as follows: "I was at Mr. Asbury's place about October, 1886, when the horses in dispute in this action were brought there. Mr. Asbury and I met them on the road, and Mr. Walling asked if he could get the horses in the pasture. Asbury told him he could. I think it was the plaintiff that was with Walling at the time. I kept the pasture accounts, and charged the pasturage to Walling." Plaintiff denies that he was with Walling when he placed the horses with Asbury. He went to Idaho about October, 1886, and was absent some three or four months. During this time, Walling sold some of the horses, and, as plaintiff says, "had control enough of the horses to have sold all of them while I was away." Plaintiff paid $900 for all the horses purchased by him, the number of which does not appear. There are some other items of testimony bearing more or less remotely on the subject of possession, but nothing to change our view that the evidence failed to show such a continued change of possession of property as is contemplated by section 3440 of the Civil Code, and as required by said section to render a valid sale as against creditors of the vendor. That Walling was indebted to Zirker & Hammatt; that an action was brought, a writ of attachment issued in due form, and was placed in the hands of the defendant as sheriff, and by him regularly levied upon the property in dispute; that a judgment was taken, and the property levied upon and sold under an execution issued on said judgment,—are all admitted in the record. We are of opinion the verdict was not supported by the evidence, and the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

ROUSSINET v. REBOUT. (No. 12,345.)
(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1883.)

PLEADING—VARIANCE—IMMATERIAL ALLEGATIONS.

Where a complaint alleged that defendant leased land to plaintiff, to be used for cultivating flowers and plants, reserving the product of certain orange trees, with the right to care for and clean said trees; that the lease provided that the care of the trees must not cause damage to the tenant's plants; that defendant carelessly and negligently used a stream of water upon the trees, thereby washing certain destructive insects upon the plants, injuring and destroying them for sale: held, that plaintiff was entitled to recover for any injury to the plants caused by defendant in the care of the trees, either with or without negligence on his part, the allegation as to negligence being surplusage.

In bank. Appeal from superior court; Los Angeles county; H. K. S. O'MELVENY, Judge.

Action by Theophile Roussinet against F. Rebout. The complaint alleged that defendant leased a lot of land to plaintiff, to be used for cultivating flowers and plants, reserving the product of certain orange trees, with the right to care for and clean said trees; that the lease provided that the care of the trees must not cause damage to the tenant's plants; that defendant carelessly and negligently used a stream of water upon the trees, thereby washing certain destructive insects upon the plants, injuring and destroying them for sale. Nonsuit was granted, and plaintiff appealed.

M. V. Biscailus and Shaw & Damron, for appellant. George J. Denis and Chapman & Hendrick, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. Defendant was the owner of a lot of land in the city of Los Angeles, which he leased to the plaintiff. The following is a copy of the lease, as translated, the original being in the French language: "LOS ANGELES, 16th of July, 1885. (Contract made in duplicate.) I declare having rented to Mr. Theophile Roussinet 9,975 square feet on Vignes street. The conditions are that I must take care of the trees and clean them, and the orange crop belongs to me. The contract is good for two years, with a three-months privilege. The rent for the land is $3, and for the house $5, per month; and the water shall be paid by the landlord and the tenants equally; payable in advance from the 1st day of August, 1885. The care given to the orange trees must not cause any harm to the plants raised by the tenant. [Signed] F. REBOUT." The court below, after hearing the testimony of the plaintiff, upon motion of defendant, granted a judgment of nonsuit, from which plaintiff appeals, and brings up the evidence in a bill of exceptions.

The whole problem is confined within narrow limits. There were upon the premises leased by defendant, say 15 orange trees, the care and product of which he retained. Plaintiff leased the land to be used and used it for the cultivation of flowers, shrubs, trees, and rare and ornamental plants. The lease made by defendant contained these clauses: "I [the defendant] must take care of the trees and clean them, and the orange crop belongs to me. * * * The care given to the orange trees must not cause any harm to the plants raised by the tenant." There was abundant evidence tending to show that defendant's orange trees were infested with the insect known as the "White Cottony Cushion Scale;" that defendant, for the purpose of freeing his trees therefrom, used a stream of water from a garden hose upon the trees, whereby the insects were washed from the trees upon the ground, and upon plaintiff's plants and flowers, the effect of which was to injure and destroy them, and render them unfit for market, etc. The court below, in granting the nonsuit, so far as we can judge from the record, proceeded upon the theory that defendant was charged in the complaint with having conducted the washing of his trees in a careless, negligent manner; and, as the evidence failed to show negligence on his part, there could be no recovery. It is true, the complaint charges the acts of washing the trees to have been negligently performed; but this was an immaterial averment. Defendant, having covenanted that "the care given to the orange trees must not cause any harm to the plants raised by the tenant," is liable, under the terms of his lease, if harm came to the plaintiff's plants from the care given the orange trees, either with or without negligence on his part. It is a case of the alleged violation of a contract, which violation resulted in injury to plaintiff; and, as there was testimony tending to sustain the material allegations of the complaint, the nonsuit was improperly granted. Judgment reversed, and a new trial ordered.

THORNTON, J. This action was brought to foreclose the interest of the defendant, as a delinquent purchaser from the state, in a certificate of purchase of lands in Fresno county. The judgment was by default, and was entered after an alleged constructive service of the summons by publication. The judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff on the 25th of October, 1876. Defendant moved to vacate the judgment on the ground that there had never been any affidavit made or order directing the service of summons by publication. The motion was denied, and defendant excepted. It appears from the bill of exceptions that no affidavit was ever made or any order of court directing service of summons by publication. The court, therefore, never acquired any jurisdiction of defendant, and the judgment rendered is erroneous and void. This conclusion is sustained by People v. Applegarth, 64 Cal. 229, and People v. Mullan, 65 Cal. 396, 4 Pac. Rep. 348. The court erred in denying defendant's motion to vacate the judgment. The application for such vacation is a direct proceeding, (People v. Mullan, supra,) and was made in time, (People v. Greene, 16 Pac. Rep. 197.) The order is reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to vacate the judgment.

PEOPLE v. HANSELMAN. (No. 20,380.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1888.)

1. LARCENY—INDICTMENT.

Under Pen. Code Cal. § 484, defining larceny to be the felonious taking away the "personal property of another," an indictment which does not allege the property taken to have been that of some person other than the defendant is fatally defective even after verdict.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE—CONSENT.

An officer, to detect the author of certain thefts, feigned a drunken slumber, with intent to allow any thief to rob him in order to make a case of larceny against him, having no suspicion that defendant would be the one. While in this condition, perfectly conscious and making no resistance, defendant took money from his person. Held, that the conduct of the officer did not constitute such consent as to take away a material element of the crime, and that defendant was guilty of larceny.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; WILLIAM A. CHENEY, Judge.

Pen. Code Cal. § 484, defines larceny to be the felonious taking away "the personal property of another."

Shaw & Damron, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

MCFARLAND, J. The defendant, who is appellant here, was convicted of the crime of grand larceny, averred to have been committed by taking three dollars from the person of F. O. Slianker. The motion in arrest of judgment should have been granted. There is no pretense of an averment in the information that the thing alleged to have been taken was the property of any person other than the appellant. The attorney general admits this omission to be a fatal defect "unless the Code had changed the rule." But the Code does not make any change which would justify a pleader in omitting from an indictment any essential element of the crime sought to be charged; and, under all definitions of larceny found in the books, the ownership of the property averred to have been stolen in some other person than the one charged with stealing it is an essential element of the crime. The Code of this state provides that it must be the property "of another;" and all the authorities are concurrent to the point that this essential part of the crime must be stated in the indictment. 2 Archb. Crim. Law, 357 et seq.; 2 Russ. Crimes, 107. To disregard this firmly-fixed and universal rule, in order to condone the faultiness of the information in this case, would be to commit an act of judicial usurpation. The case of People v. Hicks, 66 Cal. 103, 4 Pac. Rep. 1093, cited for respondents, is against them. In that case the court held that there was a sufficient averment that the property stolen belonged to the prosecuting witness; and the opinion went upon the theory that such an averment was necessary. For this reason, therefore, the judgment must be reversed.

But, as the case may possibly be tried again under another information or indictment, it is proper to notice the second point made by appellant. The appellant claimed that he was not present at the time of the alleged commission of the larceny, and introduced some evidence tending to prove an alibi. The jury, however, had a right to believe the testimony of the prosecuting witness, Slanker. But the appellant contends that Slanker's testimony, taken as true, does not make out a case of larceny, because it shows that the money was taken with his (Slanker's) consent. The statement of Slanker was substantially this: He was a constable in the town of Pomona, and, some crimes having been committed in the town, he, for the purpose of detecting the thieves, on the night of the alleged larceny, disguised himself, and feigned drunkenness. After staggering around the streets awhile, he lay down in an alley, and pretended to be in a drunken stupor. Shortly afterwards the appellant and another person came to him, and took from his person three dollars, which he had put in the pocket of his overalls. He was perfectly conscious at the time, and made no resistance, and intended that any thief who tried it should be allowed to take the three dollars, in order that a case of larceny might be made out against him. He had no previous suspicion, however, of the appellant, and was surprised at his participation in the act. And, under these circumstances, counsel for appellant contends that the thing done was not larceny, because the money was not taken against the consent of the prosecuting witness. It is, no doubt, true, as a general proposition, that larceny is not committed when the property is taken with the consent of its owner, but it is difficult, in some instances, to determine whether certain acts constitute, in law, such "consent;" and, under the authorities, we do not think that there is such consent where there is mere passive submission on the part of the owner of the goods taken, and no indication that he wishes them taken, and no knowledge by the taker that the owner wishes them taken, and no mutual understanding between the two, and no active measures of inducement employed for the purpose of leading into temptation, and no preconcert whatever between the thief and the owner. And some of the circumstances were present in all the cases cited by counsel for appellant. In the case of Rex v. McDaniel, Fost. Cr. Cas. 121, which was a case of robbery, Salmon, the person alleged to have been robbed, entered into a conspiracy with one Blee, by which Salmon was to be robbed by Blee and certain other persons whom Blee was to entice into the scheme, and the court held that the acts done in carrying out the conspiracy, which looked like robbery, were not robbery at all, because Salmon was an active participant in and had planned the whole affair; and Justice FOSTER, delivering the opinion of the court, in noticing the case of one Norden, makes a distinction between that case and the McDonald Case which may well be applied to the case at bar. He says: "I come now to the case which I promised at the beginning to consider, and distinguish from the present case. One Norden, having been informed that one of the early stage-coaches had been frequently robbed by a single highwayman, resolved to use his endeavors to apprehend the robber. For this purpose he put a little money and a pistol into his pocket, and attended the coach in a post-chaise till the highwayman came up to the company in the coach and to him, and, presenting a weapon, demanded their money. Norden gave him the little money he had about him, and then jumped out of the chaise with his pistol in his hand, and with the assistance of some others took the highwayman. The robber was indicted about a year ago in this court for a robbery on Norden, and convicted. And very properly, in my opinion, was he convicted. But that case differed widely from the present. In that case Norden set out with a laudable intention to use his endeavors for apprehending the highwayman in case he should that morning come to rob the coach, which at that time was totally uncertain; and it was equally uncertain whether he would come alone or not. In the case now under consideration, there was a most detestable conspiracy between Salmon and the rest of the prisoners that his property should be taken from him under the pretense and show of a robbery; and time, place, and every other circumstance were known to Salmon beforehand, and agreed to by him." In U. S. v. Whittier, 5 Dill. 35, cited by appellant, the defendant was tempted to send obscene matter through the mails by a decoy letter sent to him for the express purpose of inducing him to commit the offense. In Dodge v. Brittain, Meigs, 84, the court merely holds that there would have been no larceny "if the master had directed the servant to deliver the property to the thief, instead of directing him to furnish facilities for his arriving at the place where it was kept." This case, indeed, is most strongly against the contention of appellant. Bishop, under the head of "Plans to Entrap," sums up the authorities on the subject as follows: "If a man suspects that an offense is to be committed, and, instead of taking precautions against it, sets a watch, and detects and arrests the offenders, he does not thereby consent to their conduct, or furnish them any excuse; and, in general terms, exposing property, or neglecting to watch it, under expectation that a thief will take it, or furnishing any other facilities or temptations to such or any other wrong-doer, is not a consent in law." 1 Bish. Crim. Law, § 262. From the authorities, and upon principle, we are of opinion that the conduct of the witness Slanker, as detailed by him in his testimony, did not amount to consent in law, and affords no reason why the act of appellant in taking the money (if he did take it in the manner as sworn to by Slanker) was not larceny. If there had been preconcert of action between Slanker and appellant, a different question would have been presented.

We think that the instructions of the court were, upon the whole, correct; but the record does not show any exceptions taken to them. At all events, if there shall be another trial the court can readily make its instructions comply with this opinion. Judgment and order appealed from reversed, and cause remanded.

STALLARD v. CUSHING et ux. (No. 11,314.)
(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1888.)

1. WAYS—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

The owner of a city lot divided a portion of it into smaller lots, bounded at one end by a street, and leaving at the other an alley-way 10 feet wide, upon which all the lots abutted, and conveyed said lots to different persons, including in each deed the right of way over the alley, which was a cul-de-sac 87 feet long, and opening on a street. For about 20 years the alley was used by the owners of the lots and their employes, and persons visiting them. The alley was marked on the map of the city engineer, but not on the official map of the city. There being no other evidence of dedication to public use, and none of acceptance by the public, these facts constituted such alley a private way appurtenant to the lots, and not a public highway.

2. SAME—OBSTRUCTION—INJUNCTION.

The owner of a lot having a way appurtenant may, by a mandatory injunction, compel the removal of a stairway which obstructs such way; equity having jurisdiction on the principle of avoiding a multiplicity of suits.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; M. A. EDMONDS, Judge.

Action, by Joshua H. Stallard against Clinton Cushing and Jennie Cushing, to compel the abatement of a nuisance to a private way. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. In addition to the facts stated in the opinion, it was proved that the lots abutting on the alley also fronted on Sutter street, and that the alley had been used for about 20 years by the owners thereof, and their employes and others, such as grocers, milkmen, peddlers, etc., having occasion to visit there. It further appeared that the map of the city engineer showed the alley, but that the official map did not. There was no other evidence tending to establish a dedication to public use, and none of acceptance by the public.

Wm. & Geo. Leviston, for appellants. Wm. F. Herrin, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This action is to compel the removal of an obstruction, in the shape of a stairway, placed by the defendants in an alley through and over which the plaintiff has the right of way as an appurtenance to the lot upon which stands his dwelling-house. The plaintiff had judgment as prayed for, and from that, and an order denying a new trial, the defendants have appealed. The alley over which the right of way is alleged to exist in favor of the plaintiff is 10 feet wide, and is a cul-de-sac, running easterly 87 feet from Taylor street, near Sutter. The land on which the alley is laid out was originally a 50-vara lot belonging to a single individual. He sold the easterly 50 feet of this lot to a man named Hagerman, and divided the other part of it into six lots in such a way as that they all abutted on this alley. As these six lots were sold to different parties, the right of way over this alley was reserved to each of the purchasers in the several deeds of conveyance made thereto. Stalard, the plaintiff, by and through mesne conveyances from the original owner of all the lots, became the possessor of one of them so abutting on the alley, and the defendants also of another such lot. The plaintiff's lot is further down in the alley from Taylor street, where the alley debouches, than is that of the defendants, so that the stairway of the defendants very materially obstructs the ingress and egress of the plaintiff to and from his lot and Taylor street.

From the evidence it is very clear to us that the alley was never dedicated to the use of the public as a highway. There is an absence of all appearance of any intention so to dedicate it on the part of the man who first laid it out and opened it, and there does not appear to have been any acceptance of it as a street or public highway for the general public. To the contrary, it seems to have been intended for and used as a means of approach to the lots and houses there situate for the private use only of those few persons who might dwell there, and those who approached them to minister to their wants. Being a private way, to the unobstructed use of which the plaintiff was entitled, and which use was peculiarly his own, and that of the few persons only who dwelt on the lots which had formerly comprised the 50-vara lot, the injury which the plaintiff suffered was not one in any way common to the general public, and he was entitled to have it abated as a nuisance, as its existence violated his legal rights, which could only be maintained by an injunction ordering its discontinuance, or a resort to a multiplicity of suits for damages, which last alternative action, rather than the first, the law does not force him to take. Wood, Nuis. §§ 782, 783. There is no prejudicial error shown by the record, and the judgment and order should be affirmed.

BARR et al. v. O'DONNELL et al. (No. 11,309.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1888.)

1. STATUTE OF FRAUDS—AGREEMENTS RELATING TO LAND—PLEADING.

In an action to enforce a trust in land, where it appears on the face of the complaint that the alleged trust rests on a parol agreement to reconvey, the defense of the statute of frauds may be taken advantage of on demurrer.

2. SAME—EXPRESS TRUST.

Plaintiff and defendant purchased a tract of land as equal owners, holding as tenants in common. Thereafter they divided the same, each conveying to the other by deed absolute; plaintiff receiving less land than defendant. This partition was not intended as final, but it was agreed by parol that defendant should hold in trust to convey to plaintiff sufficient of the land to make their shares equal. Held, that under Civil Code Cal. § 852, and Code Civil Proc. § 1971, providing that an express trust in real property can be created only by an instrument in writing, subscribed by the party creating it, such agreement was insufficient to charge the land conveyed to defendant with an express trust in plaintiff's favor.

3. TRUSTS—RESULTING.

In such case, under Civil Code Cal. § 2217, declaring that "an involuntary trust is one which is created by operation of law;" and section 2224, providing that "one who gains a thing by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, the violation of a trust, or other wrongful act, is, unless he has some other and better right thereto, an involuntary trustee of the thing gained for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it,"—no trust arises in favor of plaintiff by operation of law, defendant having gained possession of the land by none of the wrongful means enumerated.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Marin county; J. G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

Action by William Barr and others against Connell O'Donnell and others to establish a trust in certain real property in the town of San Rafael. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiffs appeal.

C. B. Darwin and Joseph Kirk, for appellants. Hepburn Wilkins, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was brought to establish a trust in relation to certain real property in the town of San Rafael. The defendant interposed a general demurrer to the complaint, which was sustained, and, the plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was entered that he take nothing by his action. The material facts stated in the complaint are as follows: In March, 1879, the plaintiff William Barr and the defendant Connell O'Donnell purchased and became equal owners as tenants in common of a described tract of land. In January, 1881, they divided this tract of land; each conveying to the other, by a deed absolute in form, a described portion thereof. The portion described in the deed to Barr contained 31,388 superficial feet, and the portion described in the deed to O'Donnell contained 57,608 superficial feet. It was not intended that this partition should be final; and at the time the deeds were made it was mutually agreed in parol, by and between Barr and O'Donnell, "that said O'Donnell should hold the said land in trust to transfer to said Barr, when said Barr should thereafter require him to do so, such portion thereof as would make the parts owned by each in severalty of equal value, without improvements, and would thereafter effect such partition of the 'original purchase' as would be equal." In August, 1881, Barr demanded that O'Donnell should convey to him "such portion of said lot which he (O'Donnell) had the legal title to as would make the interests of each of them of equal value," but O'Donnell declined to comply with the demand. The prayer is that O'Donnell be declared to hold the land conveyed to him by Barr in trust, "and that it be ascertained, under the direction of the court, what portion of the land deemed to O'Donnell in severalty would be sufficient, when conveyed to said Barr, to make the shares of O'Donnell and Barr, realized from the 'original purchase,' equal in value," and for general relief.

The demurrer was properly sustained. It is clear that the complaint does not state facts showing an express trust in favor of the plaintiff. Such a trust can be created only by an instrument in writing, subscribed by the party creating it. Civil Code, § 852; Code Civil Proc. § 1971. If land be conveyed by an absolute deed, no express trust in favor of the grantor can be raised by proof of a parol agreement by the grantee to hold the property in trust or reconvey it. Burt v. Wilson, 28 Cal. 632; Gallagher v. Mars, 50 Cal. 23; Fouty v. Fouty, 34 Ind. 433; Movan v. Hays, 1 Johns. Ch. 339. And if it appears from the face of the complaint that the alleged trust rests in a parol agreement to reconvey, the defense of the statute of frauds may be taken advantage of on demurrer. Ward v. McNaughton, 43 Cal. 159; Walker v. Locke, 5 Cush. 90; Slack v. Black, 109 Mass. 496. Does the complaint state facts showing a trust created "by operation of law?" Section 2217 of the Civil Code declares that "an involuntary trust is one which is created by operation of law;" and section 2224 provides that "one who gains a thing by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, the violation of a trust, or other wrongful act, is, unless he has some other and better right thereto, an involuntary trustee of the thing gained, for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it." There is no allegation in the complaint that the defendant gained any part of the land in question by any of the wrongful means above enumerated. It is not charged that, at the time of making the partition and interchanging the deeds, either party deceived, misled, or imposed upon the other; but it appears that they executed these conveyances advisedly, and at the same time made a parol agreement that O'Donnell should hold an undefined portion of the land in trust, and retransfer it at some future time to Barr. It is then further charged only that at a subsequent time O'Donnell violated this parol agreement, and refused to retransfer the unascertained and undefined part of the land to which Barr was entitled. The complaint does not, in our opinion, make a case which comes within the provisions of the Code above cited, or within the well-settled rules of law in regard to implied and constructive trusts. The judgment, we think, should be affirmed.

I concur: FOOTE, C.

HAYNE, C. I concur. It is not contended by counsel that the relation between the parties was what the law recognizes as confidential.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

RYALL v. CENTRAL PAC. R. CO. (No. 11,305.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1888.)

RAILROAD COMPANIES—INJURIES TO PERSONS ON TRACK—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.
Plaintiff, an experienced railroad man, yard-master for a railroad company, was injured by defendant's train, which was backed against him, being run in a manner prohibited by a city ordinance, with no light on the rear end. The night was dark. Plaintiff stood between two tracks, in a place he knew to be dangerous, and where he need not have been in the discharge of his duty, his back towards the approaching train, and the track on which it was running. There was evidence that the bell was ringing at the time. The accident occurred in a yard where there were many tracks, and trains constantly being made up. Held, that the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury was his own negligence, and that he could not recover, though defendant had violated the ordinance, and was guilty of negligence in running its train.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; M. A. EDMONDS, Judge.

Action for damages by Jeremiah Ryall against the Central Pacific Railroad Company for injuries received by being run over by defendant's train. It appeared on the trial that plaintiff, who was an experienced railroad man, and yard-master of another railroad company, was struck by defendant's train, which backed against him, on a dark night, while he was standing between the tracks, with his back towards the approaching train, and towards the track on which it was running. The accident occurred in a yard where there were many tracks, and trains being constantly made up. There was also evidence that the bell was ringing at the time. Other facts appear in the opinion. The instructions given and excepted to by plaintiff, referred to in the opinion, were upon the subject of contributory negligence, and were in substance the same as the views expressed therein with reference to the weight of evidence and the motion for a new trial. Judgment below for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

Royce & Cummins, for appellant. W. H. L. Barnes, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This action was brought to recover damages for injuries received from the cars of the defendant corporation while the plaintiff was engaged in the alleged performance of his duty as an employee of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. The cause was tried before a jury, and a verdict rendered in favor of the defendant, from which, and an order denying a new trial, the plaintiff has appealed. The negligence of the defendant is alleged as the proximate cause of the injuries received by the plaintiff, while the defendant contends that the carelessness of the plaintiff resulted in his being seriously hurt. Conceding, without deciding, all that the plaintiff can possibly claim from the evidence,—that defendant was guilty of negligence in running its cars against the plaintiff and maiming him, and that no light was displayed upon the rear of the train, or any of the precautions taken which an ordinance of the city of San Francisco required should be done; that, in running its train as it did, the defendant was guilty of a misdemeanor,—nevertheless, the evidence shows that the plaintiff, when struck, was not at the place where he should have been in the proper performance of his duty, in attending to the business of his employer; that, fully informed of the danger which he ran, he unnecessarily and carelessly placed himself between two tracks, where a train moving upon one or both tracks would have endangered his being crushed, either if one was standing still and the other in motion, or both had been in motion; that his back was turned towards the approaching train which struck him, and it is very doubtful, even if there had been a light on the rear end of it, that he would have seen or noticed it. When struck, he was between two trains, one on each track on both sides of him. In other words, we are clearly of opinion that the plaintiff's gross negligence, and not that of the defendant, was the proximate cause of the damage done to his person of which he complains. This being so, we do not see how the jury could have found in his favor without doing so against the weight of evidence. The court did not commit error in granting the portion of the instructions which was excepted to, and we cannot consider a possible mistake as to those instructions which were not excepted to. No prejudicial error appearing in the record, the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

STRAUS v. WILLIAMSON et al. (No. 12,483.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1888.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

In an action to amend a mortgage on the ground of mistake, and to foreclose the mortgage as amended, a judgment for defendant upon a finding that no mistake occurred, will not be disturbed on the ground that the evidence did not support the finding when the evidence on the material points of the case is conflicting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; D. S. GREGORY, Judge.

Action, by J. Straus against A. Williamson and J. H. Orcutt, to have the description in a mortgage made by defendant Williamson reformed so as to embrace property other than that described in the mortgage, on the ground of mistake, and, when so reformed, to foreclose the same. The defendant Orcutt was made a party because he was a grantee of the land intended to be described in the mortgage, subsequent to its making. Judgment went for plaintiff, against Williamson, for the money secured by the mortgage; but the court below refused to reform the mortgage, and found against plaintiff as to the alleged mistake. From this judgment, and an order refusing him a new trial, plaintiff appealed.

J. M. Wilcoxon, for appellant. W. H. Spencer and V. A. Gregg, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The contention of appellant in this case is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision. We find, on an examination of the record, that the evidence is conflicting on the material points, and therefore the judgment and order must be affirmed. So ordered.

CARPENTER v. EWING. (No. 11,140.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1888.)

TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—FAILURE OF RECORD TO SET OUT EVIDENCE.

Where the record does not disclose the evidence on which the instructions objected to were given, it will be presumed that it was such as to justify the giving of the instructions, unless it appears that they would be erroneous under every conceivable state of facts.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

Caroline Carpenter brought ejectment against Robert Ewing to recover certain real estate. There was judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

Geo. N. Williams, for appellant. Lloyd & Wood, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action of ejectment to recover a strip of land eight inches wide and twenty-four feet long. The complaint contains the ordinary allegations of ownership and ouster, and is not verified. The answer contains a general denial, with allegations of actual and bona fide possession by defendant and his grantors for more than five years before the commencement of the action, and the plea of the statute of limitations. The case was tried before a jury, and a verdict returned for defendant, on which judgment was entered. The plaintiff appealed from the judgment, and has brought up in the transcript the pleadings, judgment, and nine instructions given to the jury at the request of the defendant, but none of the testimony on which the instructions were based. The appellant insists—and this is the only point made—that the first five instructions, though admitted to be sound as abstract propositions of law, were misleading and erroneous, because not applicable to the issues raised under the plea of the statute of limitations. The instructions complained of relate to an agreed line between contiguous owners of real property, and an acquiescence therein for the period of five years.

Whether evidence as to an agreed line and long acquiescence, if objected to, was admissible under the pleadings or not, it is not necessary to determine. If the case was tried upon the theory that such evidence was admissible, and it was offered and received without objection, it became the duty of the court to instruct the jury upon the law of the case as presented, and the losing party cannot be permitted here for the first time to raise an objection on this ground. Boyce v. Stage Co., 25 Cal. 460; Bell v. Knowles, 45 Cal. 193; Yik Hon v. Water-Works, 65 Cal. 619, 4 Pac. Rep. 666. None of the evidence being brought up in the record, and there being nothing to show its purport or tendency, it will be presumed that it was such as to justify the instructions, and that they were properly given. The settled rule is that, where the record contains no part of the evidence, the judgment will not be disturbed on account of instructions alleged to be erroneous, unless it appears that such instructions would have been erroneous under every conceivable state of facts. People v. Dick, 34 Cal. 663; Baldwin v. Bornheimer, 48 Cal. 433; People v. Smith, 57 Cal. 130; People v. Gilbert, 60 Cal. 108. It is not pretended that the instructions complained of here would be erroneous under every conceivable state of facts, and the judgment should therefore be affirmed.

MCCLOSKEY v. KRELING et al. (No. 11,272.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1888.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY—CONTROL OF BUILDINGS WITHIN FIRE LIMITS.

Under Const. Cal. art. 11, § 11, authorizing cities, towns, etc., to make such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws, a city ordinance providing that no building within the fire limits shall be built or enlarged except with brick or stone; that before any building shall be enlarged, its safety shall be certified to by the board of firewardens; that no wooden building shall be enlarged without a permit from the board of supervisors and mayor, granted after the filing of plans and specifications, and reference of the latter to the board of firewardens, and written report by them, and the filing of a copy of the permit within 2 days in the offices of the engineer and marshal of the fire department; and that the building shall be finished within 90 days after the permit becomes a law,—is a valid ordinance.

2. SAME—CONTROL OF BUILDINGS WITHIN FIRE LIMITS—RIGHTS OF ADJOINING OWNERS.

If, under such ordinance, a right of action is given to private persons, it is given only to one whose damage is special, and the depreciation of plaintiff's property, which is a part of a densely populated tract, and the increase of his insurance rates by reason of the proximity of defendant's wooden building, are not such special damages to plaintiff as give him a right of action.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

Action by James McCloskey against John Kreling, William Kreling, and Joseph Kreling, for injunction. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. The ordinance referred to in the opinion provides, among other things, that all buildings within said fire limits, after the approval of said order, shall be made and constructed of brick or stone; that no building already erected, or thereafter to be erected, in said city and county shall be enlarged, raised, or built upon in such a manner that were the said building wholly built or constructed after the passage of said order it would be a violation of any of the provisions of said order; that, before any building of brick, stone, iron, or wood shall be enlarged, raised, altered, or built upon, the same shall be first examined by the board of firewardens to ascertain if the same is in good condition to be enlarged, raised, altered, or built upon, and they shall have certified to the safety of making said alterations; that no wooden building within the fire limits shall be enlarged or rebuilt upon without a permit from the said board of supervisors, approved by the mayor of said city and county, and that no such permit shall be granted unless the applicant shall file with the clerk of the said board of supervisors, when the application is made, the plans and specifications of the improvement contemplated, and such plans and specifications of the improvement shall have been referred to the board of firewardens of said city and county, and a majority of them shall have examined the premises to be enlarged or built upon, and reported their opinion thereon in writing to said board of supervisors, and that a copy of all such permits given shall be filed by the applicant within 2 days after the same are given in the office of the chief engineer of the fire department of said city and county and the fire marshal; that, in granting permits to erect, enlarge, build upon, alter, or change a frame building within the fire limits, the permit shall be void if the work is not commenced within 10 days after said permit becomes a law, and be finished within 90 days, and that all such permits shall have the time specified in them; that no permit shall be considered valid unless all the requirements of said order, applying to the granting of permits, shall have been complied with; that the board of firewardens shall consist of the chief engineer, the assistant chief engineer, the assistant engineer, and the clerk of the fire department of said city and county, and the fire marshal of said city and county; and that any act done by a majority of said board of firewardens shall be deemed to be the act of the whole board.

J. B. Hart, for appellant. H. H. Lowenthal, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. Action by the owner of certain houses in the city of San Francisco to enjoin the continuance of an adjacent wooden building, which was built in violation of the ordinance establishing the fire limits. The court below gave judgment in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals. We think the ordinance is a valid one. Const. art. 11, § 11; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. (3d Ed.) § 405; Amyx v. Taber, 23 Cal. 370; Ex parte Shrader, 33 Cal. 279; Ex parte Smith, 38 Cal. 702; Johnson v. Simonton, 43 Cal. 242; Ex parte Delaney, Id. 479; Ex parte Casinello, 62 Cal. 538; Ex parte Moyner, 65 Cal. 33, 2 Pac. Rep. 728; Ex parte Heilbron, 65 Cal. 610, 4 Pac. Rep. 648; Ex parte White, 67 Cal. 102, 7 Pac. Rep. 186; In re Yick Wo, 68 Cal. 294, 9 Pac. Rep. 139; In re Linehan, 72 Cal. 114, 13 Pac. Rep. 170; Barbier v. Conolly, 113 U. S. 27, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357.

In the absence of this ordinance, the maintaining of a frame building in a city would not give a right of action to the owners of adjacent property, although the value of such property was thereby decreased and the rates of insurance raised. Such circumstances are ordinary incidents to residence and ownership in a city. Rhodes v. Dunbar, 57 Pa. St. 274. If we assume that the ordinance gives a right of action by private persons, it can only be to those who suffer damage by reason of its violation, and this damage must be special, and not such as is common to the public. The defendant's building, being "located in a portion of said city and county compactly built upon and densely populated," would naturally cause to others more or less of the same depreciation in value and increase of insurance rates from which it would seem the plaintiff suffers. Hence there is no damage which is special to him. Depreciation in value is not a ground of special damage. Severy

v. Railroad Co., 51 Cal. 197; Bigley v. Nunan, 53 Cal. 404. The injury "must be special in character, and not merely greater in degree than that of the general public." Bigley v. Nunan, supra; Crowley v. Davis, 63 Cal. 460. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

WEITHOFF v. MURRAY et al. (No. 12,155.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1888.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—CONTRACT OF HIRING—DISCHARGE BY DEATH OF MASTER—PLEADING.

In an action by an employe to foreclose a lien for work done by him after the death of his employer, under Civil Code Cal. § 1998, providing for compensation from the employer's successor for such service, so far as it is necessary to protect the property, and for a reasonable time after notice of the facts to the successor, a complaint alleging "that it was necessary for this plaintiff to continue his services after the death of said Hugh Murray, * * * and that said services were necessary to protect," etc.; "that the continuation of said services up to the 30th day of June, 1888, was a reasonable time,"—is defective, in pleading mere conclusions of law.

2. SAME—REASONABLE TIME.

Under Civil Code Cal. § 1998, providing, in case of death of an employer, for payment of his employe, by the employer's successor, for such services as are necessary to protect the property, and for a reasonable time after notice of the facts to the successor, six months' continuation of services after the appointment of an administrator of the employer's estate, in the absence of special circumstances shown, is more than a reasonable time.

3. MECHANIC'S LIEN—PROCEEDINGS TO PERFECT—TIME OF FILING CLAIM.

In such case a claim of mechanic's lien for work done during the five months succeeding the appointment of the administrator, filed six months after such appointment, is not a compliance with Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1187, requiring such claims to be filed within either 30 or 60 days from the termination of the employment.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Calaveras county; C. V. GOTTSCHALK, Judge.

Action by William Weithoff against Mathew Murray, as administrator of Hugh Murray, deceased, and others, to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Hugh Murray died December 1, 1883. The claim of lien was filed in the office of the county recorder of Calaveras county on the 25th day of July, 1884, and in the recorder's office of Amador county on the 29th day of July, 1884; the property claimed to be subject to the lien being partly in each county. Section 1996, art. 4, Civil Code, provides: "Every employment in which the power of the employe is not coupled with an interest in its subject is terminated by notice to him of (1) the death of the employer; or (2) his legal incapacity to contract." Section 1187, Code Civil Proc., provides: "Every original contractor, within 60 days after the completion of his contract, and every person, save the original contractor claiming the benefit of this chapter, must, within 30 days after the completion of any building, improvement, or structure, or after the completion of the alteration or repair thereof, or the performance of any labor in a mining claim, file for record with the county recorder of the county in which such property, or some part thereof, is situated, a claim containing a statement of his demand," etc.

Reddick & Solinsky, for appellant. Eagon & Rust, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. Action to foreclose a laborer's lien. The court below gave judgment for the defendants on demurrer to the amended complaint, and the plaintiff appeals. The facts shown by said complaint are substantially as follows: The plaintiff was employed by one Hugh Murray, who was the owner of a certain "water-ditch property," as "a laborer and ditch-tender." The employment must be taken to have been from month to month. After a little more than five years the owner died. We think it must be assumed from the complaint that the plaintiff had notice of the death of his employer, and therefore that the employment was at an end, (Civil Code, § 1996,) unless the case falls within the following provision of the same Code: Sec. 1998. "An employe, unless the term of his service has expired, or unless he has a right to discontinue it without notice, must continue his service, after notice of the death or incapacity of his employer, so far as is necessary to protect from serious injury the interests of the employer's successor in interest, until a reasonable time after notice of the facts has been communicated to such successor. The successor must compensate the employe for such service according to the terms of the contract of employment." In order to bring himself within this section, the plaintiff alleges "that it was necessary for this plaintiff to continue his services as laborer and ditch-tender, on said ditch property, after the death of said Hugh Murray, in the same manner as prior to said Hugh Murray's death; and that plaintiff did work and labor on said ditch as laborer and ditch-tender continuously from the time of the death of said Hugh Murray up to and including June 30, 1884, and that said services, so performed by plaintiff after the death of said Hugh Murray, as aforesaid, were necessary to protect from serious injury the said ditch premises, and the interests therein of the successors of the said Hugh Murray; that the continuation of said services up to the 30th day of June, 1884, was a reasonable time after notice of the facts had been communicated to the said successors in interest of said Hugh Murray."

The objection to the foregoing is that it does not state facts, but mere conclusions of law. We cannot accept the mere assertion of the plaintiff that the continuance of his employment was necessary. He should have stated facts showing it to be so. Nor, if it were otherwise as to the necessity, can we accept his mere assertion that the period of such continuance was reasonable. The administrator was appointed January 15, 1884; and, when he was appointed, it was the duty of the plaintiff to inform him of the state of the case. If good excuse for not doing so existed, it should have been shown. For all that appears in the complaint to the contrary, he was notified as soon as appointed. And on this assumption we think that, in the absence of special circumstances, the delay from January to June was wholly unreasonable. This being the case, it appears from the complaint that the notice of lien was not filed within either 30 or 60 days from the termination of the employment. Code Civil Proc. § 1187. The only question is as to the existence of the lien; for no claim was presented to the administrator, and the plaintiff expressly waives all recourse against any property of the estate other than the ditch property, and all claim for compensation for services since the death of his employer. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

SCHUYLER v. BROUGHTON, Sheriff. (No. 12,333.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1888.)

1. HOMESTEAD—DECLARATION—STATEMENT OF VALUE.

A clause in a declaration of homestead, as follows: "And we do place the value of said land at a sum not to exceed $1,600,"—is not so positively bad as to render the declaration void under Civil Code Cal. § 1263, requiring the declaration of homestead to contain an estimate of the actual cash value of the premises.

2. SAME—DESCRIPTION OF PREMISES.

Under Civil Code Cal. § 1263, requiring, in declarations of homestead, a description of the premises, the following description is sufficient: "The lot of land and premises situated in the Lompoc valley, county of Santa Barbara, state of California, bounded and described as follows: Being the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of subdivision No. 11, as laid down on the official map of Lompoc Valley Land Company's lands, and contains forty acres of land, more or less."

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; R. M. DILLARD, Judge.

Action by Annie Schuyler to restrain the execution of a deed by R. J. Broughton, sheriff, of land in which plaintiff claims a homestead. Judgment for plaintiff, from which defendant appeals. A former appeal of this case is reported in 11 Pac. Rep. 719.

B. F. Thomas, for appellant. W. C. Stratton, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to obtain a judgment restraining the defendant, sheriff of Santa Barbara county, from executing a deed to the premises described in the amended complaint. The premises were sold by the sheriff by virtue of an execution issued on a judgment against W. H. Schuyler, the husband of the plaintiff, who claims said premises as a homestead, the homestead declaration having been filed before the said judgment was rendered. The plaintiff recovered judgment in the superior court, from which the defendant has appealed to this court. It is contended by the appellant that the homestead declaration is not sufficient—First, because it does not state an estimate of the actual cash value; second, because the description is not sufficient. The clause in the declaration of homestead as to value is as follows: "And we do place the value of said land at a sum not to exceed sixteen hundred dollars." The fourth subdivision of section 1263 of the Civil Code requires the declaration of homestead to contain "an estimate of their actual cash value." In Ashley v. Olmstead, 54 Cal. 616, this court held that a declaration of homestead which failed to contain any estimate of the value of the premises was void. In Ames v. Eldred, 55 Cal. 136, it was held that a declaration which stated "that the actual cash value is $5,000 and over" did not contain an estimate of the actual cash value, and was therefore defective. In Read v. Rahm, 65 Cal. 343, 4 Pac. Rep. 111, where the statement was "that the cash value of the said above-described premises is three thousand dollars," it was held sufficient. In Graves v. Baker, 68 Cal. 134, 8 Pac. Rep. 693, a statement in the declaration of homestead that "the cash value of the homestead is about four thousand dollars" was held sufficient as a statement of value. The statute in reference to homesteads is a remedial measure, and as such is to be liberally construed. We are not at liberty to disregard the statute; its provisions are binding upon us, and in the absence of a compliance with them we can only declare the result flowing therefrom. The concurrence of several things are necessary, under our statute, before exemption can be allowed. Where these several acts have been substantially performed, and where the declaration contains the essence of the statutory requirements, the construction should be so liberal as to advance the object of the constitution and statute. By use of the language adopted by the declarants in this case we think it may be fairly inferred they estimated the value of the premises to be about $1,600. The phrase used, "And we do place the value of said land at a sum not to exceed sixteen hundred dollars," though not precise, is such as is frequently used to convey the impression that the figures mentioned approximate the judgment of the speaker. A homestead, to the extent of $5,000, may be secured by the owner and occupant being the head of a family. One object of the statute, requiring the declaration of the applicant to contain an estimate of the value of the premises, was no doubt to give notice to the world whether or not the value was within the statutory limit of $5,000; and, if not, the excess of value above such limit. If within the $5,000 limit, that fact is all that creditors, present or future, can be interested in knowing. It is in such a case beyond their reach.

If the valuation, however, is in excess of $5,000, they are interested in knowing the extent of the excess of value, and, so far as the public is concerned, we can see good reasons for holding homestead claimants to greater strictness in the one case than the other. Not that the plain provisions of the statute can be dispensed with in either, but what is a substantial compliance with the terms of a statute is a question which is often to be determined by the nature, object, and effect of the act or acts set up as constituting compliance. We are far from commending the statement as to value, used in the case, as a precedent to be followed, and wish to be distinctly understood as only holding that it is not so positively bad as to render the declaration void.

The description of the property to which objection is made is as follows: "The lot of land and premises situated in the Lompoc valley, county of Santa Barbara, state of California, bounded and described as follows: Being the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of subdivision No. 11, as laid down on the official map of Lompoc Valley Land Company's lands, and contains forty acres of land, more or less." In Thompson v. Thompson, 52 Cal. 154, it was said the following description in a deed was not as matter of law void for uncertainty: "Lot No. 62, containing 50.52 acres, situate in the town and county of Santa Barbara, state of California, and numbered and marked on the official map or plan of outside lands of the town of Santa Barbara, made by William H. Norway, surveyor." A "deed" excepting therefrom all the land comprehended in the encinal or temescal sold on the 13th of March, 1852, to John Caperton and others, was held a sufficient description to except the land so described. Truett v. Adams, 66 Cal. 218, 5 Pac. Rep. 96. It is not necessary that a description of land in a homestead declaration should be more particular than in a conveyance. Ornbaum v. Creditors, 61 Cal. 455. The description is not void for uncertainty. The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

McNEE v. DONAHUE. (No. 11,107.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1888.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—GRANT TO STATE—BY ACT OF CONGRESS.

Act Cong. July 13, 1866, (14 St. U. S. 218,) provides, in section 1, that where the state of California had theretofore selected lands in part satisfaction of grants from the United States, and had disposed thereof to purchasers in good faith under her laws, the lands so selected should be and were thereby confirmed to said state; and in section 2 that, where the selections were made on lands already surveyed by the United States, it should be the duty of the state authorities to notify the proper register of the land-office thereof, where that had not already been done, which notice should be regarded as the date of selection, and making it the duty of the commissioner of the land-office to investigate such selections, and, if found correct, to certify them to the state. The effect of this legislation is to grant in presenti the lands therein mentioned, in spite of the provisions concerning notice, and the duty imposed on said commissioner; and no patent is necessary to convey the legal title.

2. SAME—TITLES DERIVED FROM STATES—PURCHASERS IN GOOD FAITH.

Defendant being in possession of lands mentioned in said sections, as purchaser from the state, without patent therefor, an act of congress donated lands to the state to found an agricultural college, and the state selected the land so held by defendant under said act, and sold it to plaintiff. A patent issued from the United States to the state, and from the state to plaintiff. Held, in ejectment, that, the land having been already conveyed by the act of 1866, the state was vested with the legal title for the benefit of and in trust for defendant, and could not dispose of it to plaintiff, who should be treated as holding the title, under his patent, as trustee for defendant, and required to convey to him.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; D. BELDEN, Judge.

Ejectment by John H. McNee against Peter J. Donahue. Judgment for defendant, declaring plaintiff a trustee of the legal title, and requiring him to convey to defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

S. F. Leib, for appellant. Doyle, Galpin & Scripture, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The plaintiff sues in ejectment for 106.24 acres of land in Santa Clara county. The defendant denied the material allegations of the complaint, and put in a cross-complaint, praying for a conveyance from the plaintiff. The court below gave judgment for the defendant, as prayed for, and the plaintiff appeals. The facts are substantially as follows: In September, 1853, one Stephen Franklin was the owner of two land-warrants issued under the act to provide for the disposition of 500,000 acres of land granted to the state by act of congress, for which warrants full value was paid; and in said month he located the same upon the tract in controversy, which was then vacant and unappropriated public land of the United States. At the time of such location said Franklin was in the actual possession of said tract, with certain adjoining land, making 578 acres in all. The dwelling-house and barns were on the adjoining land. On the tract in controversy was an artesian well, with ditches for carrying water from the same. The whole was under one general inclosure, and was cultivated as a single farm. Franklin remained in possession until 1862, when his interest was acquired by James Donahue, the father of the defendant. In 1862 the tract in controversy was selected by the state as lieu lands. In that year Donahue, who was then in possession, purchased from the state "in good faith," and paid the full purchase price therefor, and on January 22, 1864, the state issued and delivered to him a certificate of purchase of said lands. He continued in possession until his death, "in the year 1864 or 1865." The defendant then succeeded to the interest of his father, and ever since remained, and was at the commencement of the action, in the actual possession of said tract. The land was not surveyed by the authority of the United States until May, 1866, when it was surveyed, and located in township 6 S., range 1 W., Mount Diablo meridian. It will be observed that this was before the passage of the act of July 23, 1866, "to quiet land titles in the state of California." 14 St. U. S. 218. That act contained, among other things, the following provisions. Section 1. "That in all cases where the state of California has heretofore made selections of any portion of the public domain in part satisfaction of any grant made to said state by any act of congress, and has disposed of the same to purchasers in good faith under her laws, the land so selected shall be, and are hereby, confirmed to said state." Then follows certain exceptions which we do not think apply to the present case. Whitney v. Morrow, 112 U. S. 693, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 333. Sec. 2. "And be it further enacted that, where the selections named in section 1 of this act have been made upon lands which have been surveyed by authority of the United States, it shall be the duty of the proper authorities of the state, when the same has not already been done, to notify the register of the United States land-office for the district in which the land is located of such selection, which notice shall be regarded as the date of the state selection; and the commissioner of the general land-office shall, immediately after the passage of this act, instruct the several local registers to forward to the general land-office, after investigation and decision, all such selections, which, if found to be in accordance with section 1 of this act, the commissioner shall certify to the state in the usual manner." Section 3 relates to selections upon unsurveyed lands, and gives directions concerning the making of the surveys, section 4 relates to swamp and overflowed lands, and the remaining sections relate to matters which are not material to be considered. The court finds that the proper authorities of the state had notified the register of the United States land-office, etc., on May 30, 1866, which was before the passage of the act, and therefore within the clause, "when the same has not already been done," above quoted. Apparently, to make matters sure, the state authorities gave another notice after the passage of the act, "which notice was received by the register of the said United States land-office, and filed by him on the 10th day of April, 1867." But it does not appear that the commissioner of the land-office ever certified the land over to the state, as directed by section 2, above quoted. So much for the basis of the defendant's claim. The plaintiff claims the land under a selection by the state in September, 1873, as part of the Agricultural College grant. The purchase price was fully paid by plaintiff and his assignors. On June 1, 1882, the United States issued and delivered a patent for the land to the state, and on the 17th day of June the state issued and delivered her patent to the plaintiff.

We think the act of 1866 operated as a grant in presenti. A confirmatory act operates as a grant. "That a grant may be made by a law, as well as a patent pursuant to a law, is undoubted, (Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 128;) and a confirmation by a law is as fully, to all intents and purposes, a grant as if it contained in terms a grant de novo," (Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. 454; Chouteau v. Eckhart, 2 How. 372, 373; Grignon's Lessee v. Astor, Id. 319; Langdeau v. Hanes, 21 Wall. 521, Maxwell Land-Grant Case, 122 U. S. 365, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1271, 121 U. S. 325, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1015.) And, in construing grants, the words "is hereby granted" operate as a grant in presenti. In Railroad Co. v. U. S., 92 U. S. 741, the court (per DAVIS, J.) said of the grant there in question: "It creates a present interest, and does not indicate a purpose to give in future. 'There be, and is hereby, granted,' are words of absolute donation, and import a grant in presenti. This court has held that they can have no other meaning; and the land department, on this interpretation of them, has uniformly administered every previous similar grant." And to the same effect: Railway Co. v. Railway Co., 97 U. S. 496; Railroad Co. v. Baldwin, 103 U. S. 429; Van Wyck v. Knevals, 106 U. S. 365, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; Wright v. Roseberry, 121 U. S. 500, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 985. Now, the words "is hereby confirmed," used in the act under consideration, are words of present confirmation; and if "confirmed" means "granted," as is above shown, they must be words of present grant. And they were so construed in Ryan v. Carter, 93 U. S. 78. Such a construction goes much further towards carrying out the purpose of the act, which was to "quiet" land titles, than one which would vest no right in the state, or in the purchaser from her in good faith, but which simply offers a privilege of purchase. The latter construction, as it seems to us, would tend to open the door to those who go prowling around for flaws in their neighbor's titles. It makes no difference that the state authorities were required to notify the register of the selections, "when the same has not already been done." Such notice had already been given at the date of the passage of the act. In the language of the statute, "the same had already been done." And the second notice, which was probably given out of abundance of caution, did not affect the validity of the first notice. The provision of the act is that the time of said notice "shall be regarded as the date of the state selection;" and, in view of the fact that the notice had already been given, it follows that it must be held that there was a valid selection as of a date prior to the passage of the act. But if this were not the case,—that is to say, if the second notice (given after the passage of the act) is to be taken as the notice in the case,—it would not, in our opinion, affect the question as to the operation of the act as a grant in presenti. The case, we think, would be like that of railroad grants, which, although the lands cannot be identified until the road is located and the map filed, yet, nevertheless, operate as grants in presenti, and, upon the location of the road and filing of the map, relate back to the passage of the act. "In that sense we say that the grant is one in presenti. It cuts off all claims * * * to any portion of the lands from the date of the act, and passes the title as fully as though the sections had then been capable of identification." Van Wyck

v. Knevals, 106 U. S. 365, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; Railroad Co. v. Baldwin, 103 U. S. 429; Railway Co. v. Railway Co., 97 U. S. 496, 497; Railroad Co. v. U. S., 92 U. S. 741; Schulenberg v. Harriman, 21 Wall. 60. See, also, Wright v. Roseberry, 121 U. S. 500, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 985, and Lessieur v. Price, 12 How. 76.

Nor does it make any difference that the commissioner of the general land-office, on receiving the notices above mentioned from the various registers, "if he finds them to be in accordance with section 1 of this act, is directed to certify them over to the state in the usual manner." This merely furnishes record evidence of the selection and identification, and this purpose is not at all affected by the fact that the land-officers are to first investigate whether the selections came within the purview of the act. Even if a patent had been required to be issued, it would not have operated to transfer the title which had already passed. As was said by the court (per FIELD, J.) in Whitney v. Morrow, 112 U. S. 695, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 335: "If, by a legislative declaration, a specific tract is confirmed to any one, his title is not strengthened by a subsequent patent from the government. That instrument may be of great service to him in proving his title if contested, and the extent of his land, especially when proof of its boundaries would otherwise rest in the uncertain recollection of witnesses. It would thus be an instrument of quiet and security to him, but it could not add to the validity and completeness of the title confirmed by the act of congress." See, also, Langdeau v. Hanes, 21 Wall. 529. This construction is not inconsistent with the cases of Toland v. Mandell, 38 Cal. 30, and Collins v. Bartlett, 44 Cal. 371. Those decisions related to unsurveyed lands, and consequently were under the third section of the act under consideration. The second section of the act relates to surveyed lands, (by which we understand lands surveyed, under the authority of the United States, at the date of the act,) and is somewhat different from the third section, relating to unsurveyed lands. The correctness or incorrectness of those decisions, therefore, is not involved here. The case of Hodapp v. Sharp, 40 Cal. 69, so far as we can ascertain from the report, seems to have been under the second section; and the court reached a different conclusion from that at which we have arrived. It held that the provision that the selections "shall be, and are hereby, confirmed to said state," as used in the act, mean that the selection "is not confirmed, and title does not pass to the state, until the land is certified over to the state." Id. 73. This seems to us to be contrary to the federal decisions above cited, which, of course, in a matter of this kind, are of paramount authority.

If our construction of the act of 1866 is the true one, the legal title passed to the state. And it seems clear that, if it did, she held it in trust for the purchasers mentioned in the act, and could not dispose of it to others. The whole purpose of the act was to quiet the titles of those who had purchased from the state in good faith. The predecessors of the defendant had done all that was required of them, and consequently had the beneficial interest. They could be in no worse position than that of settlers upon public lands who have complied with all the conditions required of them. And, as was said by BRADLEY, J., delivering the opinion in Wirth v. Branson, 98 U. S. 121: "The rule is well settled by a long course of decisions that when public lands have been surveyed and placed in the market, or otherwise opened to private acquisition, a person who complies with all the requisites necessary to entitle him to a patent in a particular lot or tract is to be regarded as the equitable owner thereof, and the land is no longer open to location. The public faith has become pledged to him, and any subsequent grant of the same land to another party is void, unless the first location or entry be vacated and set aside. This was laid down in the case of Lytle v. State of Arkansas, 9 How. 314, and has ever since been adhered to. See Stark v. Starrs, 6 Wall. 402. Subsequent cases which have seemed to be in conflict with these have been distinguished from them by the fact that something remained to be done by the claimant to entitle him to a patent; such as the payment of the price, the payment of the fees of surveying, or the like. See, also, Simmons v. Wagner, 101 U. S. 261.

If the state held the land in trust for the predecessor of the defendant, she could not dispose of it to the plaintiff. Van Wyck v. Knevals, 106 U. S. 365, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336. The cases of Wirth v. Branson and Simmons v. Wagner, above cited, seem to hold that a subsequent patent from the state, in violation of the rights of "the equitable owner," is absolutely void. But for the purposes of the present case it is immaterial whether the legal title passed to the plaintiff by the state patent or not. If it did pass to him, he took it with a trust in favor of the defendant. If what we have endeavored to show above be correct, the defendant was the equitable owner; and it is found that the plaintiff had notice of the defendant's rights. The plaintiff's counsel asks, "On what theory has a trust been declared and fastened on us?" The theory is plain: "When the legal right has passed from the United States to one party, where in equity and in good conscience, and by the laws of congress, it ought to go to another, a court of equity will convert the holder into a trustee of the true owner, and compel him to convey the legal title." Rector v. Gibbon, 111 U. S. 291, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 605. If, on the other hand, the legal title did not pass to the plaintiff, his patent constitutes a cloud upon the defendant's right, which he is entitled to have removed. In this regard the case of Van Wyck v. Knevals, 106 U. S. 370, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336, is precisely in point. And we may say of the defendant here, who is a cross-complainant, as was said in that case: "The existence of the patent embarrasses the assertion of the complainant's rights; that is, it prevents him from obtaining a strictly legal title, which would enable him to recover possession of the premises by an action at law. The existence of the patent also creates a cloud upon the title of the land. * * * The existence of the patent, therefore, under these circumstances, furnishes ground for equitable relief. That relief, however, should properly be limited to a decree declaring the equity of the complainant, the invalidity of the title of the defendant, and enjoining him from the assertion of any claim to the property under the patent; but inasmuch as no objection is taken to the form of the decree as entered, which requires the defendant to execute a conveyance of the premises to the complainant, and as the execution of such a conveyance, amounting in fact to a release of his claim to the property, will accomplish all that could legally be effected, it is not considered necessary to order a modification of it."

It is unnecessary to give any extended notice to the argument that the patent from the United States to the state conveyed the land in trust for the purposes of an agricultural college, and could not be diverted from such purposes. In the first place, it is doubtful whether a trust is fastened upon the state by reason of the agricultural land grant. Emigrant Co. v. County of Adams, 100 U. S. 61. In the second place, the title did not pass to the state under the patent from the United States, but under the previous act of 1866.

Several other points are made in the somewhat discursive brief of the learned counsel for the appellant. We have examined them all, but do not think they require special notice. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

RYAN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.
(No. 12,568.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1888.)

WRIT OF REVIEW—WHEN LIES.

Where a judgment has been entered for defendant, and, on plaintiff's motion, the court vacates the judgment, and restores the case to the calendar for a new trial, a writ of review by the supreme court will not lie to a subsequent order, made on defendant's motion, setting aside the former order, and refusing a new trial.

In bank. Upon a petition for a writ of review.

The facts, as shown by plaintiff's petition, are as follows: Mary Ryan, the petitioner, says that she is the party beneficially interested herein, and plaintiff in the cause of Mary Ryan v. C. P. Kennedy and Mary A. Kennedy, Executor and Executrix of Philip Kennedy, Deceased; that said cause was commenced in the justice's court of the city and county of San Francisco on September 17, 1887, and was brought for the recovery of $102, money loaned to Philip Kennedy, defendants' testator; that on October 21, 1887, defendants having answered, the cause was tried before J. D. PAGE, presiding justice of said court, and judgment entered in favor of plaintiff for $102 principal, $5.10 per centage, and $10 costs; that defendant appealed to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, from the said judgment, on questions of law and fact, and the cause was assigned to F. W. LAWLOR, presiding judge of department No. 8 of said court; that, on motion of plaintiff, the cause was set for trial on January 9, 1888, and was tried on that day by said LAWLOR, and an oral decision given in favor of defendants, plaintiff demanding findings; that on or before January 17, 1888, judgment without findings was entered in favor of defendants, at the written request of their attorney; that on January 20, 1888, notice was given and filed that on January 27th following plaintiff would move the court to set aside the judgment entered against her, (on the ground that the same was ineffectual and void because there were no findings to sustain it,) and to restore the cause to the calendar, and set a day for trial thereof, at which time the motion was heard, and an order entered vacating said judgment, and restoring the cause to the calendar for trial on March 6, 1888; that on February 3, 1888, on motion of defendants, an order was entered by the court, setting aside that portion of its order of January 4, 1888, which restored the cause for trial; that plaintiff excepted to said last order, which, as she is informed and believes, is in excess of the jurisdiction of the court granting it; that affiant is informed that she has no right of appeal, nor any remedy other than by her present proceeding. Wherefore she prays the supreme court that respondent, the said LAWLOR, J., be directed to certify and send up, for review by said supreme court, a transcript of the record and proceedings in said cause, and that meanwhile execution for defendants' costs be stayed.

James Gartlan, for petitioner. Charles F. Hanlon, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. We have examined the petition on this application for a writ of review, and can find no reason why the writ should issue. The application is therefore denied. Ordered accordingly.

BERNIAUD v. BEECHER. (No. 12,378.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 5, 1888.)

EVIDENCE—PAROL—TITLE TO LAND.

It is error to permit counsel to ask a witness if he knows, by general reputation, who owned the land in controversy, since title cannot be proven by reputation.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. G. SWINNERTON, Judge.

J. A. Loutitt, (S. D. Woods and A. L. Levinsky, of counsel,) for appellant.
L. W. Elliott and John C. Byers, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. The court erred in allowing the following question to be put to one Daniel Meader, who was called as a witness for plaintiff: "Do you know, by general reputation, who owned the west one-half of block 229?" The question was answered by witness that it was, by general reputation, said to be the property of Mrs. Rosina Berniaud. Mrs. Berniaud is the person for whom this action is prosecuted by J. M. Hogan, her guardian ad litem. We find no other error in the record. Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

CALIFORNIA CENT. RY. CO. v. HOOPER et al. (No. 12,574.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1888.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN—PROCEDURE—SUBSTITUTION OF NEW CORPORATION AS PLAINTIFF.

Where a railroad corporation brings action to condemn certain real estate, and, having consolidated all its franchises and privileges with several other corporations, the consolidation has incorporated, the court is authorized to substitute the consolidated corporation as plaintiff under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 385, providing: "An action or proceeding does not abate by the death or any disability of a party, or by the transfer of any interest therein, if the cause of action survive or continue. In case of the death or any disability of a party, the court, on motion, may allow the action or proceeding to be continued by or against his representative or successor in interest. In case of any other transfer of interest, the action or proceeding may be continued in the name of the original party, or the court may allow the person to whom the transfer is made to be substituted in the action or proceeding."

2. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

In condemnation proceedings, after the court has submitted to the jury the question, "Were the lands described in plaintiff's complaint, and sought to be condemned for the right of way, * * * necessary for such right of way?" it is not an abuse of discretion to refuse to recall the jury, and submit an interrogatory requested by defendants as to whether it was necessary for the plaintiff to take any of their tract for the purpose of its right of way.

3. SAME.

In condemnation proceedings, where the evidence tended to prove that two locations of the proposed railroad were equally good and convenient, an instruction to the jury that "the fact, if proven, that another equally desirable and convenient line could be had by passing over other grounds, did not show that the land sought to be taken was not necessary for the use of plaintiff," is a proper instruction.

4. SAME.

A charge in condemnation proceedings, as follows: "The fact that some other company had ample terminal and depot grounds was no reason why the plaintiff should not condemn such lands described in the complaint as the jury should find to be necessary for the construction and operation of its roads,"—is not erroneous.

5. SAME—PLEADING—DESCRIPTION OF LAND.

In a complaint in condemnation proceedings, a description of a strip of land sought to be condemned in a block known as "Block 302," as follows: "Thence, crossing Spring street or avenue upon and across block 302, in Middletown, as delineated on the map filed herewith, and marked Exhibit A, in the office of the clerk of this court, and more particularly known as the 'Gardner and Bleeker tract,'" no part of the map being designated as Middletown, no scale of measurement appearing on the map, nor the width of streets, nor size of lots, nor certainty as to the area, limits, or quantity of the land sought to be condemned,—is a defective description.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; HENRY M. WILLIS, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by California Central Railway Company against George F. Hooper, David L. Gardner, John R. Bleeker, and others. Defendants Gardner and Bleeker appeal from the judgment.

A. B. Hotchkiss, for appellants. A. Brunson, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. The action was originally brought by the San Diego Central Railroad Company, a corporation, to condemn for a public use certain real property. After the commencement of the action it was made to appear to the satisfaction of the superior court that the San Diego Central Railroad Company had consolidated all its franchises, properties, rights, and privileges with several other railroad corporations, and that the consolidation had, by articles of agreement, incorporated under the name and style of the "California Central Railway Company;" and thereupon the court ordered that the California Central Railway be substituted as plaintiff in the action, in the place of the San Diego Central Railroad Company. Civil Code, § 473. Of course, an order ex parte, substituting one person for another as plaintiff, is not conclusive upon the defendant. But here the regularity of the consolidation, as a consolidation, is not denied. It is, however, disputed that, as a matter of law, the new plaintiff acquired any right to prosecute the action by virtue of the consolidation and order of the court. The articles of consolidation constituted the new articles of incorporation to be filed. Railroad Co. v. Railroad Co., 67 Cal. 59, 7 Pac. Rep. 123.

It is contended by appellant that, when the San Diego Central Railroad Company was amalgamated with other companies, the San Diego Central "died," and the proceedings died with it; that the cause of action did not survive the existence of the corporation which began it. The constitution of Ohio of 1851 prohibited special acts of incorporation, and provided "corporations may be formed under general laws, which [general laws] are subject to alteration or repeal by the legislature." In Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 319, it was held where a railroad corporation created by special act, prior to the taking of effect of the constitution of 1851, voluntarily consolidated with another company, under a general law, after the adoption of that constitution, the new corporation, created by the consolidation, was subject to the provisions of the constitution above referred to, and derived its powers and franchises from the general laws; and, accordingly, that the new corporation could not charge more than a limited freightage, fixed by an amendment of the general laws, although the consolidated company, created prior to the constitution of 1851, was originally authorized by its charter to charge "reasonable" rates. In that case it was said it was a condition precedent to the existence of the new corporation that the old ones should first surrender their vitality, and submit to dissolution: Shields v. Ohio, is cited by counsel for appellants as bearing upon the present controversy. Since the organization of the state government of California corporations have been formed, and legally can only have been formed, under general laws. None of the corporations merged in the California Central had any other powers or franchises than are enjoyed by it. No such question arises here as was presented in the Ohio case. Whether the consolidating companies ceased to exist, for every purpose, immediately on consolidation,—whether they did not continue separate as to their creditors, (Civil Code, § 473),—is, perhaps, unimportant here. It is certain that, after the amalgamation, the San Diego Central, as a distinct entity, had no interest in nor right to continue the prosecution of the action by it commenced for the condemnation of private property. But, in authorizing corporations to commence and prosecute proceedings like the present, the state does not transfer to such corporations the exercise of the power of eminent domain. The legislature determines that property taken to be used for certain railroad purposes is taken for a public use. Since the state must act through agents, and as the necessity for taking particular property, and the fixing of just compensation to be paid for it, are quasi judicial questions, the legislature authorizes a corporation to bring and prosecute an action to secure a judgment determinative of the necessity, and of the valuation, and formally transferring the use. While a corporation which brings such an action is the proper party to bring it, because the statute makes it the proper party, its interest in the action is but incidental and subordinate to the main purpose, (which alone justifies the proceeding under the constitution;) the main purpose being to secure private property, upon just compensation, for a public benefit. In initiating the proceedings, the corporation acts as agent of the state; the legislature having provided the mode for the employment of the power of eminent domain. Houghton v. Austin, 47 Cal. 655; Mahoney v. Water-Works Co., 52 Cal. 162. The legislature, which has power to name the agent, has power to provide for the transmission of the agency during the pendency of an action by a change of the plaintiff, at least where, as here, the substituted plaintiff has acquired all the rights, powers, and franchises of the original plaintiff, continues the prosecution of the same action upon the same cause of action,—for the condemnation of the same property for the same public use.

Nor is anything to the contrary of the foregoing decided in Mahoney v. Water-Works Co., supra. In that case it appeared that on the day of the commencement of an action by a water corporation for the condemnation of certain land and water, the corporation assigned to certain individuals its right and privilege to acquire and condemn the land and water; the assignees agreeing to pay the amount of damages which should be awarded to the owner of the property in the action, and the corporation covenanting to convey to the assignees (or their beneficiary) the land and water after it should be acquired. The assignees took the assignment for "the use and benefit" of the Spring Valley Company. After the assignment, the corporation last named conducted the proceedings in the name of the original plaintiff. In that case, even treating the assignment of the right to acquire etc., as an attempted purchase by the Spring Valley Company, there was no "consolidation" of the two companies,—no acquisition by that company of the rights and franchises of the corporation plaintiff. The issue made and tried was the necessity of the taking of the private property for the public use represented by the plaintiff, not for the public use represented by the Spring Valley Company. The court said that the attempt by the plaintiff to transfer the right of acquiring the land and water through the condemnation proceedings was ultra vires. Mahoney v. Water-Works Co., was an action brought by the owner of the property sought to be condemned, he claiming that he was entitled to recover of the defendant the assessed value of the land and water as appraised in the condemnation proceedings brought and prosecuted to an alleged judgment by and in the name of the Clear Lake Company; this, by reason of an assignment by that company of its right to bring and prosecute the condemnation proceedings to certain individuals, for the use and benefit of the Spring Valley Company. It was held the last-named company could not take an assignment of a right to condemn property not necessary, as must be presumed, to the public use, by it represented. Moreover, what was said on the subject was not strictly necessary to the judgment. The assignment was to individuals, and the statutory proceedings to condemn were commenced by, and could, under the particular statute, only be prosecuted by, a corporation. In the case now here the present plaintiff had acquired, in the manner provided by statute, the right to represent the public use represented by the original plaintiff, as incidental to its acquisition of the right and franchise of building and operating the same railroad, along the same line, and between the same termini.

Section 385 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads: "An action or proceeding does not abate by the death or any disability of a party, or by the transfer of any interest therein, if the cause of action survive or continue. In case of the death or any disability of a party, the court, on motion, may allow the action or proceeding to be continued by or against his representative or successor in interest. In case of any other transfer of interest, the action or proceeding may be continued in the name of the original party, or the court may allow the person to whom the transfer is made to be substituted in the action or proceeding." As to natural persons, the statute speaks of those who may become disabled as different from those who may die. The last sentence relates to voluntary transfers, or to transfers not brought about by the death or disability of the original party. A corporation "in charge of the public use for which the property is sought," (Code Civil Proc. § 1244,) and which must be styled plaintiff, has an interest in the action,—an interest in securing the easement, and in the control of the property which may be taken for the public use represented by the plaintiff in the action. The action does not abate by reason of the plaintiff's disability or attempted transfer, in case the transfer is provided for by statute, and the transferee is in all respects the successor to the interest, both so far as the same is direct, and to the extent that the original party had charge of the public use. Certainly, the right of the successor, if the laws intend him to be successor, to prosecute the action, is not affected by the mere circumstance that the original plaintiff becomes disabled or goes out of existence by the process (amalgamation) which operates a transfer of the previous interest of the original plaintiff, and brings the successor into life. Aside from the direct benefit it will receive in case the property is appropriated to the public use of which it has charge, the very statute which requires the action to be prosecuted in the name of a corporation confers upon it an interest. The agency is in its nature an office. The corporation is a trustee prosecuting the proceeding primarily for the state, which, by its legislature, has declared the use to be public. By permitting a consolidation of the corporation with others, and the creation of a new corporation thereby, the new creature is made a corporation, like each of the others. Aside from the franchise to be a corporation, which is the same as that of each of the consolidating companies, it acquires the rights and franchises to build and operate the roads which all the others had the right to build and operate, and, with this last, the right to commence or prosecute an action for condemnation of property necessary to the building and operation of each of such roads. Had the consolidation occurred before the commencement of this proceeding, the present plaintiff could have begun it. By reason of the subsequent consolidation it took the place, in all respects, so far as this proceeding is concerned, of the original plaintiff. We are of opinion the court below was authorized to make the order of substitution, and so far the judgment is regular and valid.

A bill of exceptions recites that, before the jury returned the defendants requested the court to submit the interrogatory to the jury: "Was it necessary for the plaintiff to take any of the Bleeker and Gardner tract for the purpose of its right of way?" The court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to recall the jury. Besides, the complaint alleged that a portion of block 302, in Middletown, was necessary for the right of way. The court found that block 302, in Middletown, belonged to these appellants. The court submitted to the jury the question: "Were the lands described in plaintiff's complaint, and sought to be condemned for the right of way, * * * necessary for such right of way," etc.?

In the absence of the evidence given before the jury, we cannot pass upon the relevancy and propriety of instruction No. 5, asked by defendants. The instruction immediately following in the transcript was substantially given by the court. It is urged the court erred in refusing an instruction that if the land described in the complaint "is being condemned for the use and benefit of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad Company," etc., the jury should find for defendants. The evidence is not here, and in another instruction the court said: "There is no evidence in the case connecting the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad Company with this suit, nor any question as to the necessities of that company for these grounds in any way presented by the pleadings." We have examined the charges claimed by appellants to be violative of section 19 of article 6 of the constitution, and find that they are not charges with respect to matters of fact. After saying that there was some evidence in the case tending to show that another railroad company had terminal grounds and other facilities for transacting business in the city and on the bay of San Diego, and that the defendants had offered evidence tending to show that a part of the proposed line of plaintiff's railroad might be so shifted as to pass over other lands, and make an equally good and convenient line of road, the learned judge below said: "The fact that some other company had ample terminal and depot grounds was no reason why the plaintiff should not condemn such lands, described in the complaint, as the jury should find to be necessary for the construction and operation of its roads; and the fact, if proved, that another equally desirable and convenient line could be had by changing it to another place, and passing over other grounds, did not show that the land sought to be taken was not necessary for the use of plaintiff," etc. The instruction as to the non-effect of evidence of the possessions or property of another company was not erroneous. In the absence of a recital of the evidence, we must presume the evidence offered by the defendant with regard to another line tended to prove just what the judge said it intended to prove,—that another line would be "equally good and convenient." The Code provides that, where the land is required for public use, it must be located in a manner compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury, and subject to the provisions of section 1247. Code Civil Proc. § 1242. One of the two lines equally good and convenient for the railroad company may be of greater injury to the land-owner, or may not permit of a proper regulation of the place and manner of making connections and crossings. Code Civil Proc. § 1247. If there be two lines equally good and convenient both for the property owner and railroad company, the fact of the existence of two such lines does not constitute a reason why neither should be adopted. Even if it should be conceded that in such case the owner of the land over which both lines pass has a right to determine which of the two shall be adopted, there is no pleading or evidence in the transcript before us indicating the defendant's selection of one route rather than another.

It is, however, contended by appellants that there is no certain or sufficient description of the land sought to be taken from them for a way, in the complaint, findings, or judgment. The Code of Civil Procedure (§ 1242) provides that the agent of the state may survey and locate the land sought to be condemned, and that the complaint shall contain a description of each piece of land sought to be taken, and whether the same includes the whole or only a part of an entire parcel, (§ 1244.) The value of each piece taken is to be fixed by the court, as well as the amount of injury done to the remainder of a tract when a part is taken. The judgment must be so far certain as that the parties, and any ministerial officer who may be called on to enforce the judgment, may know what land is to be taken and paid for. The complaint herein avers that there is needed land, for the right of way, "upon and over Atlantic street from the end of said wharf to Spring avenue, curving easterly, and passing upon and across lots A, B, C, and D of block fifty (50) of said Gray & John's map; thence crossing Spring street or avenue upon and across block 302, in Middletown, as delineated on the map filed herewith and marked 'Exhibit A,' in the office of the clerk of this court, and more particularly known as the 'Gardner and Bleeker tract,' taking a strip of 100 feet wide, fifty feet on each side of the center line of said railroad track, as shown on said Exhibit A," etc. The findings and judgment refer to the complaint, and contain no further description. The map brought here is certified by the clerk of the superior court to be a copy of the original on file in his office. The following is a portion of the map accurately transferred:

NOTE. The figures "752" appear on the map in red.

No part of the map in the transcript is designated as "Middletown;" no scale of measurements appears upon it; the points of the compass are not indicated; neither the width of the streets, nor the size of the lots or blocks, can be ascertained from it; and, with respect to land sought to be taken from appellants, no certainty can be arrived at, by an examination of the map, as to its area, limits, or quantity. The complaint, independent of the map, contains no description of the land to be taken from appellants out of block 302: and by reference to the map it is impossible to determine at what point on Spring or California street the line of the railroad enters or leaves the block 302, as laid down thereon. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

HELM v. WILSON. (No. 11,187.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1888.)

1. EJECTMENT—NONSUIT—DEED—FALSA DEMONSTRATIO.

It is not error on suit for the recovery of land for the court to refuse to grant a motion for a nonsuit against the plaintiff, because his deed, by mistake recites that the land is in the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$, instead of reciting that it is in the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the quarter section named, where the land really intended to be conveyed can be identified by monuments fixed upon the ground.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE—CONTRACT OF PURCHASE.

A written contract, under which the defendant went into possession of a piece of land, and built a house and made valuable improvements thereon, and under which the land was afterwards conveyed to him, may be offered in evidence in an action involving the question of the boundaries of the land conveyed to him, to show that he was the equitable owner of the land, and had authority to make an agreement settling a doubtful line between it and an adjoining lot.

3. BOUNDARIES—RECOGNITION—INSTRUCTIONS—STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

An instruction that no parol agreement in regard to land is good except when there is a dispute between owners of adjoining tracts of land about a doubtful line, and an agreement upon a division line between them, is erroneous, it not being necessary to the validity of such an agreement that there should be a previous dispute about the line.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; R. MCGARVEY, Judge.

H. W. Helm brought an action against J. G. Wilson to recover a piece of land. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

J. T. Rogers, for appellant. J. A. Cooper and T. J. Carothers, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The plaintiff owns two acres of land and the defendant one acre. The parcels are adjacent, the plaintiff's land lying east of defendant's. The question in the case is as to the location of the line dividing the parcels. The plaintiff claims that the line is about 22 feet west of the line claimed by defendant, and he brought this action to recover from defendant possession of the disputed strip. The case was tried before a jury, and the verdict and judgment were for the plaintiff. The defendant moved for a new trial, and has appealed from the judgment and order denying his motion.

Both parties derive title through mesne conveyances from Mrs. William Henry, who prior to September, 1877, owned the south half of the quarter section in which the "strip" is situated. The plaintiff proved that on the 4th day of September, 1877, Mrs. Henry conveyed to E. Barnett four acres of land described as "lying on the south side of and within the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ " of the quarter section referred to, "commencing at an iron stake in the center of the road on the south line of said described land, near a creek running in a westerly direction, on or near said south line," and extending north 12.65 rods, and west 50.60 rods; that on the same day, and within a few minutes after he received his deed, Barnett conveyed to F. B. Layton the E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the four acres so conveyed to him, and thereafter, on the 28th of June, 1883, Layton conveyed the same to the plaintiff; that on the 12th of April, 1883, Barnett conveyed to the defendant one acre, being part of the original four-acre tract described as commencing at a point 25.30 rods west from the iron stake mentioned in the deed from Mrs. Henry, and extending north and west 12.65 rods. The plaintiff also proved that the four-acre tract was situated in and was a part of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the quarter section referred to, and not in the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ thereof; that at the time of the conveyance by Mrs. Henry the tract was surveyed and its corners staked, an iron pin or stake being placed at the south-east corner thereof, and that the iron pin was then where it was placed at the time of the survey; that measuring from the iron pin, according to the calls of his deed, the strip in dispute was a part of the two acres conveyed to him. When the plaintiff rested his case, the defendant moved for a nonsuit, on the ground that plaintiff had failed to show that the strip of land in controversy was within the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the quarter section described in the complaint, and had shown that the said S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ was still owned by Mrs. Henry. The court denied the motion, and the defendant excepted to the ruling. The defendant then offered in evidence a written contract, by which Barnett agreed to convey to him the one acre subsequently conveyed, and he agreed to erect upon the premises a framed house of two stories in height, to be covered on the outside with rustic, and the lower story to be finished and painted, for the purposes and uses of a store, the contract reciting that "it is understood that the said party of the second part is to have the sole use, possession, and enjoyment of said property, to rent the same and to use it as his own property, in a lawful manner." The contract was dated August 17, 1878, was signed by both parties, and duly acknowledged, and on the 5th of November, 1878, was recorded in the county records. The plaintiff objected to the contract being received in evidence, on the ground that it was immaterial and incompetent, and that he was not in privity with it. The court sustained the objection, and the defendant reserved an exception. The defendant proved that he went into possession of the land contracted to be sold to him, and in 1878 built a house thereon 24 by 40 feet, and 2 stories high. He also erected a fence along what he supposed to be his east line, which line is the east line of the now disputed strip. About 100 feet of this fence was burned down in 1881, and was rebuilt by defendant in 1884. Defendant also, in 1884, erected on the south end of the disputed ground a two-story building, the lower story being intended for a saloon. One McClasky built a part of the original fence. He was called as a witness, and, having stated that he knew the parties to the action and Layton and the land in controversy, was asked: "Question. Do you know where the fence was built across it, near the middle of the four-acre tract of land? Answer. Yes, sir. Q. Who built that fence? A. I built a portion of it. Q. Under whose direction? A. Under Mr. Wilson's. Q. What directions did Mr. Wilson give you at the time? A. He told me to go and see Mr. Layton. Q. Did you have any conversation with Layton? A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, what was said by Mr. Layton at that time? A. He pointed out the marks he had on the fence; he said there was as far as his land went. Q. On what fence? A. On the picket fence that was on the north side of Layton's lot. Q. A picket fence that ran east and west along the north boundary of the four acres? A. Yes, sir; on the north boundary. * * * Q. What was done by you and Layton at that time? A. Well, I told him that Mr. Wilson wanted me to put up a chicken-house and chicken-yard there, and wanted me to put it on the line. I told him I would set the post there, and he would tell me where to put it. I walked out and held up a stake, and he told me when it was right, and I built the fence accordingly. Q. Where did Mr. Layton stand at that time? A. He stood at the north. Q. Which way did Mr. Layton look at that time? A. Looking south. Q. What object did he sight by? A. The post on the rail fence,—sighted to the road. Q. Did he tell you that he looked at that? A. Yes, sir. Q. Where was it? A. It stood on the south side. Q. Did you see the post? A. I saw the post. Q. Where did you put the fence with reference to the marked line? A. I placed it right on the line. * * * Q. How far across the lot did you build? A. I suppose about thirty yards. * * * Q. Do you know whether there was a fence afterwards built from the corner of the chicken-yard, where you left it, clear across to the front? A. Yes, sir. Q. What was it Mr. Layton said when he pointed out this notch on the fence about his land? A. He said that was as far as his land came. Q. Was this fence afterwards built on the line, as you got it from him, from the chicken-yard across? A. It was built on the same line as the fence I built." The defendant was a witness in his own behalf, and testified: "I have known this 4-acre tract for twenty-six years, and I have been in possession of this 'strip' since 1878. On the 1-acre tract which I got from Barnett I built, in 1878, a house twenty-four by forty feet, and two stories high. I fenced the lot. A part of the fence was the one to which McClasky testified. I have used it in various ways up to the line pointed out by Layton in 1878. No one has ever claimed any of it except me. * * * A portion of the fence was burned down when Layton's house was burned. It was again built, in the spring of 1884, under these circumstances: They wanted a division fence there, and I sent some of my boys over there to set up some posts and rebuild it. They went over there, and set some posts, first commencing at my store, and running up to the corner, and then commenced setting posts to run north, and the plaintiff said they were setting the posts wrong,—not setting them to conform to old line,—and they quit. I afterwards went there, and the plaintiff and I pulled up some of the posts and strung them along to suit his notions of the line. Afterwards I had the fence built on the line on the east side of the 'strip' indicated then by the plaintiff. This was before I commenced to build the saloon. The plaintiff did not object to my building the fence, nor claim any of the land west of the fence. We pulled up and reset four or five posts. The old stubs were there to go by. It had been burned for about one hundred feet." Layton was called as a witness for plaintiff, and testified: "I know the plaintiff and defendant and the 'strip' in dispute. I am the grantor of the plaintiff, and was present in 1877, when Taylor surveyed the four acres. I set the corner stakes or pins. * * * When I sold to plaintiff I showed him my boundaries, though I did not point out the iron pin to him. I don't know that I showed him the western boundary. He could see my fence. I did not show him any land now included in the 'strip.' I did not show him any land as mine west of the fence McClasky built. I never told anybody that I claimed any part of the 'strip.' I used it before it was fenced, but I did not use or claim it as mine. After it was fenced I never claimed it. It was fenced about 1878 or 1879. Up to this time there had been no controversy about the boundaries." The plaintiff was called as a witness for himself, and testified: "I know the defendant. He is in possession of the 22-foot 'strip.' * * * In the spring of 1884 the defendant built a fence and house and horse-shed on this land. The house is 2-story, about 20 by 40 feet, and stands on the south end of the land facing the street. It is about forty feet from defendant's store, and about fourteen feet from my dwelling-house. I was at home, and saw the house being built. The defendant told me he was building it. I objected to its being built there, because it was so near my own house. I did not object because I owned the land. I never thought I owned it. I never heard any one say the 'strip' belonged to my lot until we measured it, about a month before the suit was commenced. Never claimed to own it till it was measured. I do not know that Layton ever claimed to own it. In 1881 there was a fence along the east side of this 'strip.' * * * There was in 1881, and is now, a chicken-lot extending from the north boundary south, on and along the east side of this 'strip' for about one-third along the 'strip' in length. It had been there probably a year. From the south-east corner of the chicken-lot there was a fence, above spoken of, on and along the east side of the 'strip,' on through to the street. Mr. Layton's house, on the 2-acre tract, was burned in July, 1881, and at that time the said fence was also partly burned for about one hundred feet back from the street. The old stubs of the burned posts still stood in the ground. On this line, marked out by these old stubs, the defendant, in the spring of 1884, built another fence. His boys came and put down some posts. They did not set them on the old line, but east of it. I told them about it. They then quit. It was afterwards built on the old line, marked by the stubs, by the defendant. About one month before the fence was built I had a conversation with the defendant. It was something like this: He said that he would furnish the lumber to build the fence on the old line if I would nail on the boards, and that I might nail them on my side so as to have the smooth side to my house. The defendant and I reset some of the posts set by his boys. We put them on the old stub line. The defendant built the fence." There was also testimony offered by defendant for the purpose of showing the original location of the north-west and south-west corners of the four-acre tract, and that, measuring from such south-west corner, the iron pin at the south-east corner must have been originally placed further east than it then was; but, upon objection by the plaintiff, the testimony was excluded.

The court, at the request of the plaintiff, gave to the jury, among others, the following instruction: "I charge you that no parol agreement is good between parties in regard to real estate, except that when owners of adjoining tracts of land are uncertain about the true division line between them, and there is a dispute about the same, they may then agree upon a division line as the true line, and if they do so agree, and erect a division fence upon what they agree upon as the true line, in such case the agreement of the parties would govern; but you must find, by a preponderance of testimony, that there was a dispute between the adjoining owners as to the true line, and that such line was agreed upon, or you cannot find for the defendant upon the theory of an agreed line."

1. We do not think the court erred in refusing to grant the defendant's motion for a nonsuit. The fact that each of the deeds described the land conveyed as being a part of the south-east quarter, instead of the south-west quarter, of a quarter section named, is not controlling. If the land really intended to be conveyed can be identified by monuments actually fixed upon the ground, then the mistake as to the 40-acre subdivision in which it is situated may be rejected as falsa demonstratio. In this case both parties were in possession, and claiming a part of the four-acre tract conveyed by Mrs. Henry, and the only question as to its location was as to where were its exact eastern and western boundaries.

2. We think the court erred in refusing to admit in evidence the written contract made between Barnett and the defendant. Under that contract defendant went into possession of the one-acre tract described, and erected improvements thereon. He became the equitable owner of the land, and as such dealt and agreed with Layton as to its eastern line. He was entitled to show by his contract his relations to the land and to the adjacent owner.

3. We also think the court erred in giving the instruction above quoted. It in effect told the jury that no agreement between coterminous owners, as to their boundary line, is binding, unless there has been a dispute as to the true line. If this be sound law, then it must follow that in every case where a line is uncertain, though both parties agree as to where the line is, and erect thereon a division fence and acquiesce in that line for a long time, still, when the true line is discovered, the agreement and acquiescence will count for nothing, and the true line may be insisted upon. We think the dispute a false quantity, and that the instruction was misleading. In Truett v. Adams, 66 Cal. 223, 5 Pac. Rep. 96, the rule is said to be that "where it is proved that a line has been agreed upon, either expressly or by long acquiescence, as the dividing line between two tracts of land, courts will not disturb the line." In White v. Spreckels, 17 Pac. Rep. 717, it is said: "Where coterminous proprietors of land in good faith agree upon, fix, and establish a boundary line between their respective tracts of land, in which they acquiesce, and under which they occupy, for a period equal to that fixed by the statute of limitations, the line as thus established is binding upon them, and those holding under them, or either of them." Here the division line was agreed upon, and the fence built, according to the testimony of Layton and the plaintiff, in 1878 or 1879, and this line was acquiesced in, according to the testimony of all the witnesses, until about a month before the action was commenced, which was on the 25th of November, 1884. If the time of building the fence was rightly given by Layton and the plaintiff, then it would seem that there was an acquiescence and occupancy for a period longer than that fixed by the statute of limitations to bar an action. Besides, it appears that in 1884 the defendant, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the plaintiff, erected valuable improvements upon the disputed "strip." It has been held that, even without any agreement more than is implied from their acts, if two persons trace their dividing line, and both recognizing it as such, one goes forward with the knowledge and acquiescence of the other, and makes valuable improvements, so valuable as to work great injury to the party making them if the line be disturbed, the other will be estopped from afterwards alleging such mistake as shall deprive the builder of his improvements; and especially if the party seeking to disturb the line knew at the time the improvements were made all that he subsequently learned, or if he had the means of knowledge. Dolde v. Vodicke, 49 Mo. 98; 1 Wait, Act. & Def. 719, and cases cited. Many other points are made, but they do not require special notice. In our opinion the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

WRIGHT v. MIX. (No. 9,932.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1888.)

ASSIGNMENT—OF CLAIM FOR SERVICES RENDERED—PURCHASE BY EMPLOYER.

M. employed defendant to do certain work, no price being fixed. Subsequently, H. was, with M.'s consent, associated with defendant in the work, and to receive one-third of the proceeds. Upon the completion of the work, a dispute as to the value thereof arose, and H., without the knowledge of defendant, accepted a sum in satisfaction of his claim, and executed an assignment of his interest to plaintiff, who had no interest in the matter, but was acting for M., who furnished the money to pay H. Defendant recovered a judgment against M. for his services, and plaintiff, as assignee of H., sued to have a trust declared in one-third of the judgment by virtue of said assignment. Held, that M. was legally liable to both defendant and H., and that under Civil Code Cal. § 1473, providing that full performance of an obligation by the party whose duty it is to perform it, or by another person with his assent, if accepted by the creditor, extinguishes it, the payment to H. extinguished his claim, and plaintiff was entitled to no part of said judgment.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

John Reynolds, for appellant. S. W. Holladay, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Suit to declare a trust as to one-third of a judgment recovered by the defendant, Mix, against one Henry Miller. It appears that Miller employed Mix, who was a searcher of records, to prepare an abstract of title to the Las Animas rancho, to be used in a partition suit. A few days after the agreement the defendant, Mix, with the consent of Miller, associated with himself another searcher, (one Howes,) and agreed that he should have one-third of what should be obtained for their services. When the abstract was prepared a dispute arose as to what was to be paid for it, no sum having been fixed. Miller offered the searchers $1,800, in addition to certain sums which he had paid on account, in satisfaction of what was due to them. They declined this proposition; but a short time afterwards Howes, without the knowledge of Mix, agreed with the attorneys of Miller to accept $600 as his share of what was due to himself and Mix. There was also an understanding that, in case anything over and above the fee was ordered paid by the other cotenants as costs in the partition suit, Howes was to get one-third of it; but he was to have no further personal claim against Miller. In pursuance of this arrangement, Miller furnished the money to pay Howes. Howes did not give any satisfaction or receipt, but executed an assignment to the plaintiff, Wright. Wright was an attorney, who had an office adjoining the offices of the attorneys for Miller. He paid no money to Howes, and had no interest in the claim, but acted simply as the "trustee" of Miller. Mix afterwards brought suit upon the claim, and recovered a judgment against Miller for the sum of $10,000, which judgment was affirmed on appeal. It does not clearly appear whether that suit is to be taken as for the whole demand against Miller, or only for Mix's two-thirds of it; and, in the view we take, it is not necessary to determine that question. Wright now sues to declare Mix a trustee for him as to one-third of the $10,000 judgment. The court below gave judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

1. We think that upon the record the obligation of Miller was directly to Howes and Mix, and not to Mix only. In the first instance, it was to Mix only. But it is alleged in the complaint that a few days thereafter Mix "obtained the consent of said Miller to associate with him in said employment one S. P. Howes. * * * And it was on said last-named day agreed, by and between said defendant and said Howes, that they should together revise, correct, and complete said abstract, and that the fee or price which should be obtained for their services in the matter should be divided between them." This allegation is not denied. And we think the construction that must be given to it is that a new arrangement was made between Miller, Mix, and Howes, by which the latter two were to do the work jointly, and be interested in the fee in the proportions mentioned, in which view Miller was responsible directly to Howes as well as to Mix. There is some evidence to the effect that Mix proceeded on the theory that Miller was responsible to him alone, and that Howes "was his assistant, having no relation with Miller." But that does not seem to have been Howes' view of the matter. And the court finds that "Mix, by consent of Miller, associated with him in said work one S. P. Howes, and they (Mix and Howes) agreed together in writing to do said abstract work, and Miller agreed to pay therefor." The court, therefore, took Howes' view of the matter. But, however this may be, the allegation of the complaint, being admitted, must control. Miller, therefore, was liable directly to Howes for one-third of the fee.

2. Miller having paid the $600 directly to Howes, and the latter having accepted it in full satisfaction, his claim was extinguished. In this regard the court finds that "Howes had been fully paid and settled with by Miller for all his (Howes') claims and demands for his services in the matter of said abstract, at or about the time of his pretended assignment to plaintiff above set forth, * * * of all of which plaintiff had due notice at the time of said payment and settlement." And this finding is justified by the evidence. It is undisputed that the money came from Miller. The plaintiff had no interest in it whatever, and admits that he acted only as "trustee" for Miller. Howes says that he "had settled with Miller;" that his understanding of the transaction was that it was simply to protect Miller; and that after the settlement he had no further personal claim against Miller. Taking these to be the facts, it is evident that the claim was extinguished by payment, and could not be kept alive in the way attempted. "Full performance of an obligation, by the party whose duty it is to perform it, or by any other person on his behalf, and with his assent, if accepted by the creditor, extinguishes it." Civil Code, § 1473. An obligation which has been extinguished by payment cannot be subsequently transferred. Moran v. Abbey, 58 Cal. 167; Gordon v. Wansey, 21 Cal. 78; Bank v. Lay, 80 Va. 436; McClure v. Andrews, 68 Ind. 98; Rolfe v. Wooster, 58 N. H. 526. And we think that it makes no difference that the attempted transfer is made at the same time as the payment and as part of the same transaction. It was a mere disguise gotten up as a weapon for use in the controversy with Mix. This being the case, if the suit by Mix is to be regarded as for the whole amount due to himself and Howes, the payment to Howes would have been a defense pro tanto, and ought to have been pleaded in that action. If, on the other hand, the suit by Mix was only for his two-thirds, the other third was not involved, and the plaintiff has no color of right to the judgment. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

GRANT v. HEVERIN et al. (No. 11,160.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1888.)

TRUSTS—ASSIGNMENT BY TRUSTEE—EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

An assignee of a bond who holds the legal title for another, upon the death of the latter holds in trust for his legal representatives; and if assignment is made by the assignee to the widow with notice by her of the character of his title, and without any consideration, she acquires no title upon which she can recover.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; M. A. EDMONDS, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth A. Grant against M. Heverin, P. Mallon, and Charles McVicker, upon a bond. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. The trial court found that on March 11, 1876, action was begun by John Hughes against M. Heverin, and property of the defendant was attached and taken possession of by levy. That, to obtain the release of the same, the bond in question was entered into, in terms as follows: "John Hughes, Plaintiff, vs. Michael Heverin, Defendant. Whereas, the above-named plaintiff commenced an action in the district court of the Fourth judicial district of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, against the above-named defendant, claiming that there was due to said plaintiff from said defendant the sum of seven hundred and fifty dollars, or thereabouts, and thereupon an attachment was issued against the property of said defendant as security for the satisfaction of any judgment that might be recovered therein, and certain property and effects of the said defendant have been attached and seized by the sheriff of said city and county under and by virtue of said writ; and whereas, the said defendant is desirous of having said property released from said attachment: now, therefore, we, the undersigned, residents and householders in the state of California, in consideration of the release from said attachment of the property attached, as above mentioned, do hereby jointly and severally undertake, in the sum of fifteen hundred dollars, and promise, that, in case the plaintiff recover judgment in the action, defendant will, on demand, pay to plaintiff the amount of whatever judgment may be recovered in said action, together with the percentage, interest, and costs; the same to be paid in United States gold coin if so required by the terms of the judgment. Dated at San Francisco the 16th day of June, A. D. 1876. M. HEVERIN. P. MALLON. CHARLES McVICKER." That March 11, 1878, the plaintiff, Hughes, sold all his interest in the bond and judgment to one John Grant, and at his request assigned the same to Michael Mullany. That September 5, 1882, judgment was recovered, and August 6, 1883, execution was issued thereon, and returned unsatisfied. That afterwards, on August 13, 1883, the said John Grant died, and Mullany assigned the bond and judgment to his wife, this plaintiff; and that payment of the judgment has been refused. Judgment was entered against defendants, and motion for new trial was denied.

M. C. Hassett, for appellants. Mich. Mullany, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. The evidence in this case shows that Mullany, the assignor of the plaintiff, held the undertaking assigned to him for John Grant; that John Grant was the owner of the undertaking; and that Mullany held the legal title to it for him. The evidence further shows that, after John Grant's death, Mullany assigned it to his widow, the plaintiff herein. We are satisfied from the evidence that the plaintiff was not the purchaser for value of the instrument assigned; and, further, that she was a purchaser with notice of John Grant's title. In fact, we cannot see how she could have been, under the evidence, a purchaser without notice of the character of the title of her assignor, Mullany. On John Grant's death the undertaking in suit here passed to his administrator or executor. Mullany then held the legal title to the undertaking in trust for the personal representative of John Grant, and had no right to assign to Grant's widow. The plaintiff has no title on which she can recover. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded.

BANK OF HEALDSBURG v. HITCHCOCK. (No. 11,351.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

Where the order of the court denying a motion for a new trial is stated to be based on the ground that "a motion for a new trial is not the proper remedy," it will be presumed that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was in all respects regular, and that said motion was not denied on the ground that such notice of intention to move for a new trial was not given in time or not at all.

2. COURTS—JURISDICTION BY CONSENT—PARTITION.

Where the parties to an action of partition file a stipulation in regard to the partition of the lands in controversy, and other lands not involved in the suit, and one of the parties fails to comply with the stipulation, the court cannot render any decree in such action upon the stipulation; the contract contained in the stipulation being entire.

Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; JOHN G. PRESSLEY, Judge.

This is an action for partition of certain lands situated in Sonoma and Mendocino counties, Cal., and described in the complaint and answer and cross-complaint. The action came on regularly for trial on May 21, 1885, before J. G. PRESSLEY, judge of the superior court of Sonoma county, Cal., to which court the action had been regularly transferred from the superior court of Mendocino county. On said day plaintiff asked leave of court to file the following stipulation, which, not being objected to by defendant, was accordingly filed; whereupon the case was continued indefinitely, and ordered stricken from the calendar, to be restored on motion: "In the Superior Court, Sonoma County, State of California. Bank of Healdsburg vs. Hollis Hitchcock. The parties to said action hereby stipulate for partition of the lands for which said action was brought, and, to settle any question in relation to other lands adjoining said lands, stipulate" for the partition of such other lands also. On June 8, 1885, on motion of plaintiff, the said cause was restored to the calendar, and continued to June 15, 1885. The plaintiff then moved for judgment upon the stipulation, and read the same in evidence, and also the affidavit of James H. McGee, showing that defendant had failed and refused to perform the stipulation on his part, and the court found that said defendant had so refused to perform. No further evidence being offered, after argument the court ordered judgment for plaintiff; and on June 25, 1885, the following decree was duly signed and entered in said cause, viz.: "This cause having by stipulation been transferred from the superior court of Mendocino county, and coming on to be heard on the 21st day of May, A. D. 1885, upon the complaint of the plaintiff and the answer of the defendant, and the said cause being called for trial, on motion of defendant's attorneys in open court, duly consented to and signed by plaintiff's and defendant's attorneys, a stipulation was duly filed in said cause, on motion of the attorneys for the respective parties, stipulating for a partition of the lands set out and described in plaintiff's complaint, and for a judgment against the said defendant for an accounting of three hundred dollars in United States gold coin for moneys laid out and expended on the common property, and for one-half of the costs of suit; now, on this 15th day of June, A. D. 1885, on motion of the attorneys for plaintiff for judgment upon said stipulation in pursuance of the terms thereof, which motion was argued by the attorneys for plaintiff and defendant, and taken under advisement by the court until the 19th day of June, A. D. 1885, when the court rendered its decision on said motion in writing, sustaining and granting said motion, and ordering judgment as per said stipulation regarding all the matters and things forming the subject of this action: now, therefore, on motion of plaintiff's attorneys, this 25th day of June, A. D. 1885, it is ordered that partition of the lands mentioned, set out, and described in plaintiff's complaint herein be had between plaintiff and defendant, as follows: It is hereby ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said plaintiff, the Bank of Healdsburg, have set off to it, and the same is hereby set off to it, in severalty, all that portion of the lands set out and described in plaintiff's complaint herein, situate, lying, and being on the south or southerly side of what is known as and commonly called the 'Rock Pile Creek,' * * * in township eleven (11) north, range 13 west of Mount Diablo meridian, in the county of Mendocino, state of California. It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said defendant, Hollis Hitchcock, have set off to him, and the same is hereby set off to him, in severalty, all that portion of the lands set out and described in plaintiff's complaint herein, situate, lying, and being on the north or northerly side of said Rock Pile creek, * * * in the county of Mendocino, state of California. The said parties, plaintiff and defendant, are hereby decreed and adjudged the owners in fee-simple and in severalty of the lands above described and set off to the Bank of Healdsburg and Hollis Hitchcock, respectively. It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the plaintiff, the Bank of Healdsburg, do have and recover, of and from the defendant, Hollis Hitchcock, the sum of three hundred dollars in United States gold coin, and that plaintiff have execution therefor; that the plaintiff and the defendant each pay one-half of the costs of this action." The order denying motion for new trial was as follows: "There was no trial of this case. The decree was signed, and judgment ordered, on a written stipulation of the parties, signed by their attorneys and filed. I am of opinion that there was no error in entering the decree and judgment, and that, even if there was, a motion for a new trial is not a proper remedy. The motion 'to vacate and set aside the decision of the court,' * * * and to grant a new trial of said cause,' is denied." Defendant appeals.

Thos. J. Geary, for appellant. J. H. McGee and W. F. Russell, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. We think that the record here shows that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was properly and duly given. We find in the order denying the motion that the court below denies it on the ground that "a motion for a new trial is not the proper remedy." If the notice of intention to move was not given at all, or was not given in time, the court might and would have denied the motion for a new trial on one or the other of such grounds. The ground on which the court rested its denial of the motion satisfies us that the notice for a new trial was in all respects regular, and that there is no ground to indulge the presumption that the notice of intention was not given at all, or not given in time, and, on one or the other of such grounds, that the motion was denied. The court decided the cause on a stipulation or contract made between the parties to the action in regard to the partition of the lands involved in this case, and other lands not involved herein. The contract was entire, its terms being dependent, and in our judgment the court erred in selecting a portion of the contract and ruling on it, and disregarding other portions of it. No one can say on reading the contract (which seems to have been filed as a stipulation in the cause) that the defendant consented or would have consented to the partition of the land involved in this action, unless the provisions of the contract in regard to the other lands were also carried out. We are of opinion, therefore, that there was no evidence to justify the decision of the court. If the defendant refused to carry out his contract with the plaintiff, the plaintiff has its remedy by an action for specific performance. The judgment and order must be reversed, and the cause remanded. So ordered.

BECK et al. v. SOWARD. (No. 12,476.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1888.)

1. HOMESTEAD—DECLARATION BY WIFE—ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Civil Code Cal. § 1239, provides that a homestead cannot be selected from the separate property of a wife without her consent, shown by joining in a declaration of homestead; section 1262 provides that such declaration must be acknowledged in the same manner as grants of real property; section 1186, that the acknowledgment of a married woman must not be taken unless she is made acquainted by the officer with the contents of the instrument, on an examination without the hearing of her husband. Under these provisions a certificate that "she was by me first made acquainted with the contents thereof, and thereupon acknowledged to me, on examination separate and apart from, and without the hearing of, her husband, that she executed," etc., it is defective, in not showing that she was made acquainted with the contents of the declaration on an examination without the hearing of her husband, and such declaration is invalid. MCFARLAND, J., dissenting.

2. HOMESTEAD—RIGHT OF SURVIVING HUSBAND.

Under Civil Code Cal. § 1265, which provides that, upon the death of a person whose property was set apart as a homestead, (except in case of community property of a married person,) such property shall descend to the heirs or devisees; and section 1386, which provides that, where deceased leaves a wife or husband and more than one child, such wife or husband shall inherit one-third of the real estate, and the children the remainder jointly,—the husband of a deceased wife, who left more than one child, inherits only one-third of her separate real estate set apart in her life-time as a homestead.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. W. HUTTON, Judge.

Action to quiet title, brought by M. A. Beck, M. J. Bryant, Serena Thurman, E. T. Smith, Joseph Hart, Meredith Hart, Mitchell Burks, and Catherine Burks, against Richard Soward. The superior court rendered judgment for plaintiffs, declaring them to be the owners of an undivided two-thirds interest in the land in controversy. Defendant appeals.

Williams & McKinley, for appellant. Shaw & Damron, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. J. This is an action to quiet title, brought by plaintiffs, the heirs of Millie C. Soward, deceased, against Richard Soward, her husband. The land in dispute was the separate property of Millie Soward, deceased. Defendant claims under the declaration of homestead set forth in the findings. It is claimed by plaintiffs and respondents that the declaration of homestead upon the separate property of the wife was invalid, upon the grounds—First, that it was not properly acknowledged by the wife; second, that it did not show declarant was the head of a family; third, that it did not show the estimated value of the property.

The homestead declaration was executed in November, 1880, and recorded December 10, 1880. Section 1239 of the Civil Code provides that "the homestead cannot be selected from the separate property of the wife without her consent, shown by her making, or joining in making, the declaration of homestead." It follows that the wife was a necessary party to the declaration of homestead upon this, her separate property. The declaration must be executed and acknowledged in the same manner as a grant of real property is acknowledged. Civil Code, § 1262. "The acknowledgment of a married woman to an instrument purporting to be executed by her must not be taken unless she is made acquainted by the officer with the contents of the instrument on an examination without the hearing of her husband; nor certified unless she thereupon acknowledges to the officer that she executed the instrument, and that she does not wish to retract such execution." Id. § 1186. In the present case the acknowledgment of decedent is certified to as follows: "And I do hereby further certify that the said Millie C., wife of Richard Soward, is personally known to me to be the person whose name is subscribed to said instrument as a party thereto, and that she was by me first made acquainted with the contents thereof, and thereupon acknowledged to me, on examination separate and apart from, and without the hearing of her husband, that she executed the same freely and voluntarily, for the uses and purposes therein mentioned, without fear or compulsion or undue influence of her said husband, and that she did not wish to retract the execution of the same." As will be seen, the certificate fails to show that the party was made acquainted with the contents of the instrument by the officer on an examination without the hearing of her husband, as required by section 1186 of the Civil Code. The form used was such as was provided by the statute prior to the Code; but, since the adoption of that instrument, a married woman, in acknowledging an instrument, must be made acquainted with and acknowledge the instrument without the hearing of her husband. If she acknowledges the homestead declaration in the same manner as she is required to acknowledge a grant of real property, she must be made acquainted with its contents on an examination without the hearing of her husband, as provided in section 1186 of the Civil Code; and, as that section provides that the acknowledgment of married women to an instrument must not be taken without this formula, we are of opinion there was no sufficient evidence of such an execution of the instrument by deceased as was requisite to its validity. The reasons for requiring a homestead declaration, made by a wife upon her separate property jointly with her husband, to be explained to and acknowledged by her without the hearing of her husband, are as all-prevailing as those which apply to the conveyance by her of her separate property. The strongest reason, however, is to be found in the fact that the provision is statutory, and the statute not only requires it, but inhibits the taking of an acknowledgment by a married woman in any other way. The case of Clements v. Stanton, 47 Cal. 60, in which it was held that the wife might acknowledge, in the mode prescribed by law for the acknowledgment of conveyances of real property by persons other than married women, a declaration of homestead selected by her alone, was one which originated prior to the adoption of the Code, and when the inhibition contained in section 1186 did not exist. We think the rule enunciated in Hutchinson v. Ainsworth, 63 Cal. 286, in case of an acknowledgment similar to the one here, is the true one, and applicable alike to all acknowledgments of instruments by married women.

We have discussed this question as though it were important to a determination of the case. The judgment of the court below must be affirmed for another reason. The homestead was carved out of the separate property of the wife in December, 1880. The wife died intestate February 16, 1887, leaving a husband and more than one child. By section 1265 of the Civil Code, the homestead not being community property, but having been selected from the property of the wife, upon her death descended to her heirs; that is to say, there being more than one child and a surviving husband, one-third of it was succeeded to by the husband, and the remaining two-thirds, in equal shares, to the children, etc., as provided in section 1386 of the Civil Code. This is precisely the result reached by the court below; and, had the homestead been held valid, it would not have changed the order of succession. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; MCKINSTRY, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

McFARLAND, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment on the point last named in the opinion of the chief justice, but I dissent from the view that the certificate of acknowledgment of Mrs. Soward to the homestead declaration is so defective as to render it void. I have always been loath to see titles to real property broken up on account of irregular acknowledgments of deeds and conveyances, and I think that such result should not be declared except when the failure to substantially comply with statutory requisites is clear and marked. Such, in my opinion, is not the case in this instance. Scarcely any one would notice the alleged defect upon a first reading of the certificate, and I think a fair construction to be that the word "thereupon" connects what precedes and follows it, and shows, substantially, that making her acquainted with the contents of the instrument, and her acknowledgment of it, were parts of the same transaction, and that both occurred "without the hearing of her husband."

ORDER OF MUTUAL COMPANIONS v. GRIEST et al. (No. 11,068.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1888.)

INSURANCE—MUTUAL BENEFIT CERTIFICATE—DESIGNATION OF BENEFICIARY.

Testator became a member of a mutual insurance association whose constitution provided that the association would pay a stated sum, upon the death of the member, to the person designated in writing as beneficiary, allowing a change of beneficiary on application in writing to the secretary; and his deceased wife, without his designation, was made beneficiary. Subsequently he remarried, and by his will bequeathed the insurance to his surviving wife, directing the officers of the order to substitute her name in the certificate, and pay her the money. Held, that a judgment awarding the fund to the executor of testator's estate, to be distributed as the probate court might direct, was proper as against the heirs of the first wife; she never having been designated as beneficiary.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; JACKSON TEMPLE, Judge.

Action by the Order of Mutual Companions against Eliza Griest, widow of Peter Griest, deceased, Israel Cook, executor of his estate, and Rebecca Young and others, children and grandchildren of Leah A. Griest, a former wife of said Peter Griest, to determine the conflicting claims of defendants to the proceeds of a policy of insurance issued by plaintiff on the life of deceased. From a judgment awarding the fund to the executor, the said children and grandchildren bring this appeal.

J. H. McGee, J. T. Campbell, and W. F. Russell, for appellants. Wm. B. Haskell, A. B. Ware, and L. A. Norton, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. Peter Griest, deceased, was, at the time of his death, a member in good standing of the corporation plaintiff, known as the "Order of Mutual Companions." Before its incorporation there had been in existence another corporation of a somewhat similar character, called the "Sonoma & Marin Mutual Beneficial Association." The constitution of each of these corporations provided that each member should designate in writing some person as nominee for the benefits, and that upon the death of a member the nominee so designated by him should receive a certain amount of money according to class, etc., which, in the case of said Peter Griest, if there had been a nominee, would have been $2,000. The nominee might also be changed by the member forwarding to the secretary an application upon a blank used for that purpose. Peter Griest had been a member of the Sonoma & Marin Association, and had designated as his nominee therein his then wife, Leah A. Griest. But that association was disincorporated by decree of court in December, 1882. During said year (1882) the plaintiff herein, the Order of Mutual Companions, was incorporated, and said Peter Griest became a member of it on December 28, 1882. A benefit certificate was issued to him at the last-named date, in which said Leah A. Griest was mentioned as nominee; but Mrs. Leah A. Griest had died in July, 1882, several months before he became a member of the corporation plaintiff, and he had not designated her, nor did he ever designate any other person, as his nominee in said corporation, or make any application for a change of nominee. In November, 1883, Peter Griest and the defendant Eliza Griest intermarried, and continued to be husband and wife until February 15, 1884, when said Peter Griest died. He left a will in which he bequeathed his "life insurance, amounting to $2,000, in the Order of Mutual Companions," to his surviving wife, the said Eliza Griest, and directed the officers of said order to substitute her name in the certificate, and to pay her the money. The defendant Israel Cook is the executor of the estate. After the death of Peter Griest, his said executor demanded that plaintiff pay to him, as executor, the said $2,000. The surviving widow, Eliza Griest, also demanded that said money be paid to her. The other defendants are children and grandchildren of the deceased wife, Leah A. Griest, and they demanded that the money be paid to them. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff brought this action; and in its complaint, after stating the foregoing facts, admits its moral obligation and willingness to pay the money to whomsoever the court may direct it to be paid, and asks the court to determine by its judgment to whom the money shall be paid, and to relieve plaintiff from further liability or embarrassment in the premises. The court below rendered judgment that the executor of the estate of said Peter Griest take said money, to be distributed as the probate court may direct. From this judgment the defendants, children and grandchildren of said Leah A. Griest, deceased, appeal to this court.

It is somewhat difficult to see how either of the parties could have been legally "aggrieved" by any judgment that the court might have rendered. It seems to be admitted that the plaintiff was not legally liable to pay the money to anybody. It was liable only to the nominee of a deceased member, and in this instance there was no nominee. Peter Griest did not designate Leah A. Griest as his nominee; and, if he had, such designation would have been a nullity, because there was no such person in existence. The appellants, therefore, as her heirs or representatives, had no interest in or ownership of the money; and how can they be aggrieved even if the court gave property not theirs to the wrong party? And, in good conscience, they are not entitled to it, because Peter Griest intended it to go to another person. If he had designated his living wife as nominee in the proper way, instead of relying upon an expression of his desire in his last will and testament, there would have been no difficulty in legally consummating his intention. But, under any view, we do not see how a better conclusion could be arrived at than the one reached by the court below, namely, that the money should go, in the first instance at least, as part of the estate, to the executor. And this is so, certainly, as against the appellants; for the surviving wife, Eliza Griest, does not appeal. Judgment is affirmed.

WILL—BEQUEST OF INSURANCE MONEY.

Testator became a member of a mutual insurance association whose constitution provided that the association would pay a stated sum, upon the death of the member, to the person designated in writing as beneficiary, allowing a change of beneficiary on application in writing to the secretary; and his deceased wife, without his designation, was made beneficiary. Subsequently, he remarried, and by his will bequeathed the insurance to his surviving wife, directing the officers of the order to substitute her name in the certificate, and pay her the money. Held, that such surviving wife was entitled to the fund as against testator's children.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county.

Peter Griest, deceased, was, at the time of his death, a member in good standing of the Order of Mutual Companions. Before the incorporation of the order there had been in existence another corporation of a similar character, called the "Sonoma & Marin Mutual Beneficial Association." The constitution of each of these corporations provided that each member should designate in writing some person as nominee for the benefits, and that upon the death of a member the nominee so designated by him should receive a certain amount of money, according to class, etc., which, in the case of said Peter Griest, if there had been a nominee, would have been $2,000. The nominee might also be changed by the member forwarding to the secretary an application on a blank used for that purpose. Peter Griest had been a member of the Sonoma & Marin Association, and had designated as his nominee therein his then wife, Leah A. Griest. That association had been disincorporated in 1882, and the Order of Mutual Companions incorporated; Peter Griest becoming a member. A benefit certificate was issued to him, in which said Leah A. Griest was mentioned as nominee. Leah A. Griest had died several months before he became a member of the order, and he had not designated her, nor did he ever designate any person, as his nominee in said corporation, or make any application for a change of nominee. Thereafter Peter Griest and Eliza Griest intermarried, and continued to be husband and wife until the death of said Peter Griest. He left a will in which he bequeathed his "life insurance, amounting to $2,000, in the Order of Mutual Companions," to his wife, Eliza Griest, and directed the officers of said order to substitute her name in the certificate, and to pay her the money. In Order of Mutual Companions v. Griest, ante, 652, it was decided that the heirs of Leah A. Griest, the former wife, had no claim to the fund, and that it was to be treated as part of the estate of said Peter Griest.

J. H. McGee, J. T. Campbell, and W. F. Russell, for appellants. A. B. Ware and L. A. Norton, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by the children and grandchildren of Peter Griest, deceased, from an order of the superior court, sitting in probate, distributing to Eliza Griest, surviving widow of said Peter, certain money paid to the executor of his estate by a certain mutual benefit corporation called the "Order of Mutual Companions." The debts of the estate were all paid, and no question is made by creditors, or any person other than the appellants herein. The facts of the case are fully stated in Order of Mutual Companions v. Griest, ante, 652, (No. 11,068, this day decided by this court.) After the decision of the latter case in the court below, the said Order of Mutual Companions paid the money to the executor of said estate, and the court distributed it, as aforesaid, to the respondent herein, Eliza Griest. There is no doubt that Peter Griest, by his last will and testament, bequeathed this money, so far as he possibly could do so, to his surviving wife, Eliza; and, as we held in the other case above referred to that the money must be treated as part of the estate, we think that the court below was right in distributing it according to the will. Order appealed from affirmed.

CRIMINAL LAW—TWO TERMS OF IMPRISONMENT—WHEN SECOND TERM BEGINS.

K. being convicted of two distinct crimes, and sentenced to two terms of five years in the penitentiary, on the same day, on the expiration of one sentence brought habeas corpus. Held, that under Pen. Code Cal. § 669, providing that, where one is convicted of two or more crimes before sentence has been pronounced on him for either, the imprisonment for the second term begins on the termination of the first, the sentences were not concurrent and closing at the same time; but it is for the warden of the prison to examine the records, and determine which is the first sentence, and the second sentence will begin on the termination of the first. MCFARLAND, J., dissenting.

J. K. Kirby applied to the supreme court for a writ of habeas corpus, being at the time confined in prison under sentence.

Edmund Tauszky, for petitioner. George A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the State.

THORNTON, J. The warden of the state prison at Folsom, Charles Aull, made the following return to the writ herein:

"In the Supreme Court of the State of California. In the Matter of the Application for a Writ of Habeas Corpus on Behalf of James Kenan Kirby. To the Honorable, the Supreme Court of the state of California: State of California, County of Sacramento—ss.: I, Charles Aull, warden of the California state prison at Folsom, do hereby certify that I received the annexed writ of habeas corpus on the 24th day of May, A. D. 1888; and, in obedience to commands of same, I make return as follows: I have James K. Kirby, the party named in said writ, as a prisoner at the California state prison at Folsom, and I hold the said James K. Kirby a prisoner at the California state prison at Folsom by virtue of two certified copies of judgments duly made and entered in the honorable superior court of the county of Solano, state of California, each of said judgments bearing date October 8, 1884; true copies of which said judgments are hereunto annexed, and made part of this return. I also hereto annex, and make part of this return, certified copies of the minutes of the superior court of Solano county showing the arraignment and pleas of James K. Kirby on the 7th day of October, 1884, in the cases numbered, respectively, Nos. 201 and 202 of the docket of said court. I further certify that the said James K. Kirby was received at the prison as a convict under and by virtue of said judgments, as shown by the records of the prison, on the 9th day of October, A. D. 1884, and he has now been imprisoned under said judgments three years, seven months and fifteen days. And I further certify that, during the said imprisonment of the said Kirby, his conduct has been such as to entitle him, under the provisions of section 1590 of the Penal Code, and under the rules adopted by the state board of prison directors, to have deducted from his full term, as credits for good behavior, a period of seventeen months. All of which is respectfully submitted for the consideration of the honorable court.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand, and affixed the seal of the prison, this 24th day of May, A. D. 1884. CHARLES AULL, Warden.

Defendant, appearing without counsel, in reply to the court stated that he did not desire counsel. The original information was read by the clerk, and a copy thereof furnished this defendant. Defendant stated that his true name is James K. Kirby. It is ordered that all proceedings hereafter had against said defendant be had in his true name, referring therein to the name by which he was informed against. "In the Superior Court of the County of Solano, State of California. Wednesday, October 8, A. D. 1884. Present: Hon. JOHN M. GREGORY, Judge. The People of the State of California vs. James K. Kirby, Named in the Information James Kirby, Defendant. (No. 201.) Convicted of grand larceny. The district attorney, with the defendant, James K. Kirby, came into court. The defendant was duly informed by the court of the nature of the information filed on the 7th day of October, A. D. 1884, charging him with the crime of grand larceny committed on the 13th day of August, A. D. 1884; of his arraignment and plea, to-wit, guilty of the offense charged in this information. The defendant was then asked if he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him, to which he replies that he has none. And, no sufficient cause being shown or appearing to the court, thereupon the court rendered its judgment: that whereas the said James K. Kirby having been duly convicted in this court of the crime of grand larceny, it is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said James K. Kirby be punished by imprisonment in the state prison of the state of California at Folsom for the term of five (5) years. The defendant was then remanded to the custody of the sheriff of Solano county, to be by him delivered into the custody of the proper officers of said state prison."

"In the Superior Court of the County of Solano, State of California. Wednesday, October 8, 1884. Present: Hon. JOHN M. GREGORY, Judge. The People of the State of California vs. James K. Kirby, Named in the Information, with John C. Burk, as James Kirby, Defendant. (No. 202.) Convicted of grand larceny. The district attorney, with the defendant, James K. Kirby, came into court. The defendant was duly informed by the court of the nature of the information filed on the 7th day of October, 1884, charging him with the crime of grand larceny committed on the 14th day of September, 1884; of his arraignment and plea, to-wit, guilty of the offense charged in the information. The defendant was then asked if he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him, to which he replies that he has none. And no sufficient cause being shown or appearing to the court, therefore the court rendered its judgment: that whereas, the said James K. Kirby having been duly convicted in this court of the crime of grand larceny, it is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said James K. Kirby be punished by imprisonment in the state prison of the state of California at Folsom for the term of five (5) years. The defendant was then remanded to the custody of the sheriff of Solano county, to be by him delivered into the custody of the proper officers of said state prison."

It appears from the foregoing return there were two convictions and two sentences of the applicant, Kirby; and it is argued that it was the duty of the court, in pronouncing the sentences, to designate that, at the close of the imprisonment under the first sentence, the imprisonment under the second sentence should commence; inasmuch as this has not been done by the court on the trial of Kirby, that the sentences ran concurrently, and the periods mentioned in both close at the same time. Whatever might be the correct rule in such a case at common law, or in some of the other states where such a statute as exists here is not in force, we hold that the question herein must be and is determined by the provisions of section 669 of the Penal Code. Section 669 of the Penal Code is in these words: "When any person is convicted of two or more crimes before sentence has been pronounced upon him for either, the imprisonment to which he is sentenced upon the second or other subsequent conviction must commence at the termination of the first term of imprisonment to which he shall be adjudged, or at the termination of the second or other subsequent term of imprisonment, as the case may be." We are of opinion that this section is a mandate to the warden who holds the prisoner in custody, and by it he is informed that the imprisonment on the second conviction must commence at the termination of the first term of imprisonment. As the law is a mandate to the warden, that officer is empowered to examine the records of the court in which the prisoner was convicted, to ascertain which is the first and which is the second sentence. The records of the trial court will give him all the information required to enable him to act understandingly in the matter, whether in regard to attributing the credits to which the prisoner is entitled, or in determining the length of time during which the convict must be imprisoned; and, should any application be made to the governor for pardon, we see no difficulty in the way of his ascertaining in which case he is called on to act. The records of the trial court are open and accessible to him, that he may obtain information in regard to the subject on which he is called to act. We say that the records of the court will furnish all requisite information, for the reason that they will show which was the sentence pronounced on the first and which on the second conviction. We cannot concur in the argument of counsel for the applicant, and are of opinion that in this case the imprisonment of the applicant must continue for the period of five years under each sentence; one period of five years following the other of the same length, shortened by such credits as he may be by law entitled to. While we are convinced of the correctness of the foregoing, we think it proper to say that, in the case of two convictions of the same person, it would be right and proper that the court, in pronouncing its sentence upon the second conviction, should order and have inserted in its judgment a direction that the period of imprisonment on the second sentence should commence at the close of the period of imprisonment under the first. Not having suffered such imprisonment, the prisoner is not entitled to his discharge, and he must therefore be remanded to the custody of the warden aforesaid of the state prison at Folsom. So ordered.

TREGEAR v. ETIWANDA WATER CO. (No. 12,556.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 11, 1888.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGE—CORPORATE STOCK—DELIVERY OF CERTIFICATE.

A mortgage of shares of corporate stock, although land is also included in the mortgage, is valid and binding between the parties, without delivery of possession of the certificate of stock.

2. CORPORATIONS—STOCK—ACTION TO COMPEL ISSUE OF CERTIFICATE—PARTIES.

In an action against a corporation to compel the execution and delivery of a certificate of certain shares of stock which stand on the books of the company in the name of another, from whom plaintiff claims title under a mortgage and sheriff's deed in foreclosure proceedings, the mortgagor is not a necessary party.

3. SAME—PLEADING.

The complaint, in such an action, is not demurrable on the ground of unintelligibility for the reason that the writ issued in the foreclosure proceedings, under Code Civil Proc. § 684, which requires that such writ shall recite the judgment or the material parts thereof, and direct the officer to make the sale for its enforcement, is termed "an order of sale."

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; JAMES A. GIBSON, Judge.

Action by James Tregear against the Etiwanda Water Company to compel said company to execute and deliver to plaintiff a certificate of certain shares of stock standing on the books of the company in the name of another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 684, provides that, "when a judgment requires the sale of property, the same may be enforced by a writ reciting such judgment, or the material parts thereof, and directing the proper officer to execute the judgment, by making the sale and applying the proceeds in conformity therewith."

H. C. Rolfe, for appellant. Charles R. Gray, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. Plaintiff brought this action against the Etiwanda Water Company, a corporation, to compel said corporation, through its officers, to execute and deliver to him, in his name, a certificate for 20 shares of its capital stock now standing in the name of R. B. Warren on the books of the company. The complaint shows that W. B. Warren was the owner of 20 shares of the capital stock of defendant, and was registered as the owner thereof on the books of defendant, and held and still holds a certificate therefor in his name, issued by defendant to him. That on the 18th of October he executed a mortgage to one George Chaffey upon certain real estate, together with the stock in question, and certain other stock not in controversy, to secure the payment of a promissory note for $2,000. The note and mortgage were indorsed and delivered to plaintiff, who, at the maturity of the note, foreclosed the mortgage, and obtained a decree of sale under which the stock in question and real estate were sold by the sheriff and purchased by plaintiff, who received a certificate of sale, and at the end of six months, in default of redemption, a deed. Plaintiff presented his sheriff's deed to defendant, and demanded a transfer of the stock to his name on the books of the company, and that a certificate issue to him, which, as to the 20 shares in dispute, was refused. That Warren has no interest in the stock, but still stands upon the books of the company as a stockholder therein. It does not appear that the certificate representing the 20 shares was ever indorsed to, held or possessed by, plaintiff or his assignor, but it still stands in the name of, and is possessed by, Warren. Defendant demurred to the complaint upon the grounds—First, that the complaint does not state facts sufficient, etc.; second, defect of parties defendant in not joining Warren and the president and secretary of defendant; third, that it is unintelligible as to what is meant by the order of sale issued upon the judgment and in pursuance of which the sale was made by the sheriff. The contention of appellant is (1) that shares of capital stock of a corporation are personal property; (2) that they are not the kind of personal property that can be mortgaged.

Shares of stock in a corporation are certainly personal property. At common law, personal property could not only be mortgaged, but the mortgages were in many cases held valid, without change of possession, in the absence of fraud, even against subsequent bona fide purchasers and creditors. Hilbrook v. Baker, 5 Me. 309; Bissell v. Hopkins, 3 Cow. 166; Bucklin v. Thompson, 1 J. J. Marsh. 223; Letcher v. Norton, 4 Scam. 575; Homes v. Crane, 2 Pick. 610. We are not aware of any case in which, independent of some statute, it has been held that a sale of personal property, and retention of possession thereof by the vendor or mortgagor, is void as between the parties thereto. The great contest which has been urged upon questions growing out of the retention of possession of personal property by the vendor or mortgagor after a sale or mortgage has been, not between the parties, but between the creditors of the mortgagor or vendor on the one hand and the parties on the other. This contest, from the days of the celebrated Twyne Case, 3 Coke, 80, was continued in England for several generations, and resulted in an adjudication of the question in all its phases. We inherited it from our English ancestors, and the courts of the several states have been called upon to go over much of the same ground. In most of the states of our Union statutes have been passed setting at rest the more important questions involved in the problem. Section 3440 of our Civil Code declares every transfer of personal property, and every lien thereon, with few exceptions, where made by a person in possession, and not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by a continued change of possession, of the things transferred, to be fraudulent, and therefore void, as against creditors, etc. The statute does not attempt to determine the effect of the transfer as between the parties, but only as to creditors, their successors in interest, trustees, etc.; leaving the rule as it before existed between the parties. The property involved here is not of the class upon which a chattel mortgage, as defined by statute, may be given. It may, however, as between the parties, be mortgaged. The fact that the mortgage included both real and personal property is of no significance. We are of opinion that, as between the parties thereto, the mortgage of the 20 shares of the capital stock was valid and binding without the delivery of possession. It would, of course, under our statute, have been void as to creditors and subsequent purchasers in good faith for a valuable consideration, but there are no such persons here complaining.

We fail to see wherein R. B. Warren, the mortgagor, is a necessary party defendant. In equitable actions there is a marked distinction between proper parties and necessary parties defending. Necessary parties are those without whom no decree can be made determining the principal issues in the case. Proper parties are those without whom a substantial decree may be made, but not one which shall completely settle all the questions which may be involved in the controversy, and conclude the rights of all the persons who have any interest in the subject-matter of the litigation. A decree cannot bind one who is not a party to the action, and by making him a party he may frequently be bound, and questions as to him determined which would otherwise remain open and subject to future adjudication. Parties to the main issue or issues to be determined, and which are essential to any valid decree, are necessary parties; those who are only interested in subordinate or collateral questions are proper parties,—that is to say, persons who may or may not be made parties. The failure to make the latter parties defendant is not cause for demurrer. Pom. Rem. § 329, et seq. Warren is to be treated as the vendor of the plaintiff, who, through his agent, the sheriff, sold his stock in the corporation to plaintiff. Upon the facts, as stated in the complaint, his interest in the subject-matter ceased upon the consummation of the sale as effectually as though he had in person assigned his shares to the plaintiff. If there were any reasons why such assignment, apparently valid, was not so in fact, it was a matter of defense to be set up by way of answer; and then, and on such showing, if it appeared to the court that Warren was a proper party defendant, it would have been the duty of the court, under section 389 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to order him brought in.

We are of opinion the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the defendant, that there is no apparent defect of the necessary parties defendant, and that the complaint is not amenable to the charge of being unintelligible. The practice of the courts in this state, in directing the sale of incumbered property under foreclosure proceedings, has not been uniform. A copy of the decree, duly certified, and which gave full directions as to the time, place, manner of sale, etc., was said to be sufficient in Heyman v. Babcock, 30 Cal. 367. Under section 684, Code Civil Proc., a writ reciting the judgment, or the material part thereof, and directing the officer to execute the judgment, by making the sale, etc., is the proper course. By analogy to the former equity practice, this writ is usually termed an "order of sale." Plaintiff so calls it in his complaint, and, as we think, properly. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

2 Cal. Unrep. 878

PEOPLE v. BOWERS. (No. 20,345.)*

(Supreme Court of California. June 14, 1888.)

1. COURTS—APPELLATE JURISDICTION OF SUPREME COURT IN CRIMINAL CASES.

The supreme court, under Const. Cal. art. 6, § 4, has appellate jurisdiction, in criminal cases prosecuted by indictment in a court of record, in questions of law only, and cannot set a verdict aside where the evidence is conflicting.

2. HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE.

Where a druggist testifies that he had sold defendant, a physician, who is on trial for murdering his wife by poisoning with phosphorus, medicine during the illness of his wife, and says he would not put up phosphorus in overdoses for any one but a physician, and is asked if he would then, and answers, not until he had spoken to the physician, the answer cannot prejudice defendant, as it is not proof of a general custom, nor is it claimed that he had sold phosphorus to defendant.

3. SAME—TRIAL—ORDER OF TESTIMONY.

It is not error to allow a witness for the prosecution to testify after defendant has opened his case, when the reasons given by the court for so doing show there has been no abuse of the discretion given by Pen. Code Cal. § 1094.

4. SAME—EXAMINATION OF EXPERTS.

In a trial for murder, where the state claims the death was caused by poisoning, it is admissible to ask expert witnesses the cause of the death when there is some evidence to support the facts hypothetically stated in the questions.

5. SAME.

It is proper to propound an hypothetical question to an expert, based on any facts of which there is evidence, though the weight of evidence may be strongly against the truth of the facts assumed, and it is for the jury to disregard the opinion if the evidence fails to establish the facts thus assumed.

6. SAME—QUESTIONS BY THE COURT.

It being in the discretion of the court to permit leading questions, it may, of its own motion, ask questions of witnesses in that form.

7. SAME—OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE.

Where the stomach and intestines of deceased are set aside for analysis, but not sealed, and the physician who had them in charge is certain they have not been tampered with, it is for the jury to decide whether there is a doubt as to that fact; and an objection to the sufficiency of the identification, not made until after the testimony for the people is all in, comes too late.

8. SAME—EXAMINATION OF DEFENDANT.

To ask defendant, on cross-examination, the name of his father and mother, cannot prejudice him.

9. SAME—CONDUCT OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

Where the prosecuting attorney proposes to read to the jury in his argument a paper not in evidence, and stated that it purported to be the record of defendant as furnished by a chief of police, while his course is reprehensible, it does not prejudice defendant when it is promptly rebuked by the court, who charges the jury that statements of counsel not in proof are not evidence, and to be disregarded.

10. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the court, after charging in strong language as to the presumptions surrounding defendant, and the certainty of proof required, calls the jury's attention to the fact that the law should be fearlessly administered, and that, if they were satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt, they should be derelict in duty if they failed to find so, it is not prejudicial, though not in good taste.

11. SAME—APPEAL—MATTER NOT SHOWN BY THE RECORD.

Where, after defendant appeals from a conviction for murder, a third person confesses that he committed the crime, and that defendant is innocent, these matters not being in the record, and there being no law by which they can be for the first time presented to the supreme court, cannot be considered by it.

12. WITNESS—CREDIBILITY—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

A witness cannot be asked, on cross-examination, whether she is not in the habit of playing cards for money, and asking for money from her daughter for that purpose, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 2051, providing that evidence of a particular wrongful act is not admissible to impeach a witness.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. MURPHY, Judge.

J. Milton Bowers was indicted for the murder of his wife. The court, after the case for the prosecution had closed, and the defendant's case had begun, permitted a witness for the prosecution to be called under Pen. Code Cal. § 1094, which provides that, for good reason, the court, in its discretion, may change the order of trial as provided by the statute. Defendant was convicted, and sentenced to be hanged, and appeals.

Charles N. Fox and Colin Campbell, for appellant. George A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the State.

PATERSON, J. On August 24, 1885, Mrs. Cecelia Bowers, wife of defendant, Dr. Bowers, became very ill with what appeared to be a bilious colic. On the following day, and later, physicians were called in and, after making a diagnosis of the case, all pronounced it to be "abscess of the liver." She was treated accordingly by the attendant physicians, but continued to suffer great pain in the right side, and to vomit and discharge large quantities of pus and bile until her death, which occurred November 1st following. On November 3d the coroner of the city and county of San Francisco received an anonymous communication which stated that there was reason to believe there had been foul play in the treatment of Mrs. Bowers during her last illness, and requesting an official investigation. The coroner proceeded to the house of defendant, where preparations were being made for the funeral, summoned a jury, and held an inquest. He then postponed the investigation until after the funeral, upon a promise made by those in charge of the funeral that the remains would not be interred, but would be placed in a vault, and returned to the morgue for the autopsy. Owing to a misunderstanding, the remains were interred at the conclusion of the funeral services on that day, November 3d. On the morning of November 5th the coroner discovered the mistake which had been made, disinterred the remains, and held the autopsy. On December 30, 1885, an information was filed, charging the defendant with having willfully, unlawfully, and of his malice aforethought killed said Cecelia Bowers; and on April 23, 1886, he was convicted of murder in the first degree, and thereafter, June 2, 1886, his motion for a new trial having been denied, he was sentenced to be hanged. The case is made remarkable, in one respect, by recently discovered evidence which purports to be the written confession of one Henry Benhayon, brother of the deceased, in which he declares that he poisoned his sister, and that Dr. Bowers is innocent. If the events occurred as stated in the brief of appellant's counsel,—and they are matters of notoriety,—the facts would entitle the defendant to a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, if presented in time to the court below; but they were not presented to the court below, and unfortunately could not be presented, because they occurred pending appeal. The appeal herein was taken on June 2, 1886. On October 23, 1887, the coroner received through the mail a letter which had been deposited in a postal box late the night before, which reads as follows: "CTRY, October 22, 1887. Dr. J. I. Stanton, Coroner—SIR: That I may not change my resolution, I send you this in advance. I am the cause of my sister's (Cecelia Bowers') death on November 1, 1885. I could not keep the horrible secret any longer; I had to write it in a memorandum book, and I lost it. This is one of my reasons for making my exit from the world's stage. Dr. Bowers knew nothing of my ———, and had no hand in her death. No one is to blame but myself, and I take this step to relieve myself from further misery, and all concerned. I do not wish to see my mother. H. BENHAYON." On receipt of this letter a search was made for the author thereof, and his body was found on the floor in the room of a lodging-house, with a bottle nearly empty, but containing poison, lying beside it. The written confession and letters which were found on a table in the room stated, in substance, that Dr. Bowers and his wife had always quarreled; that Mrs. Bowers said she would poison the doctor before he should leave her; that he (Benhayon) secured the poison with which to kill the doctor, but his sister would not listen to the proposition, and threatened to expose him; that, after his sister became sick, he felt an irresistible impulse to "use the stuff on her, and finish Bowers later;" that he took a pill and capsule out of her box, and filled the capsule with two kinds of poison, put it back, and took others, until four capsules had been poisoned and exchanged; that he did not think Bowers could get in any trouble, for the person who furnished him with the poisons said a chemist told him no doctor could find it in the stomach, for it was blood-poisoning; that he forced his sister to give him an order for her insurance policy in the F. of P., but he dare not present it. In the letter to Dr. Bowers he stated to him that Mrs. Bowers had been unfaithful, and cautioned him against certain friends, whom he charged with criminal intimacy with her. While it is admitted by counsel for appellant that ordinarily no argument could be made here upon facts occurring after appeal taken, it is urged that the evidence which has been discovered in this case "is of so grave a character, and points so strongly to the innocence of this defendant, that, however informally it may have come to the attention of the court, this or any other court of competent jurisdiction should say that he shall not be executed until it shall have been submitted, in common with other evidence in the case, to a jury of his country." But, manifestly, the court has no authority to consider these matters as thus presented. They are no part of the record sent to us from the court below, and there is no provision of law by which newly-discovered evidence may be presented to this court in the first instance. The remedy in such cases rests with the executive. He alone can afford relief.

It is claimed by counsel for appellant—and this is their leading contention—that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict of the jury. A determination of this question has imposed upon us an examination of all the evidence offered, the statement of which covers about 1,200 pages of the record. It would be impractical to discuss within the limits of a judicial opinion the character, bearing, and weight of all the testimony offered by the respective parties in this case. It might be sufficient to say that the evidence is conflicting, and that it would be an invasion of the province of the jury to go into an examination of the weight of the evidence. It is claimed, however, that inasmuch as the evidence of death by poisoning is all circumstantial, and especially as it is all expert-opinion testimony, the ordinary rule should be relaxed, because the untrained mind of the jury cannot be expected to comprehend or appreciate the full effect of such evidence. But this might be said in every case where the verdict is based upon expert testimony, and the judgment of this court as to the facts be substituted for that of the jury. Whatever may be the right or duty of this court to interfere with the verdict of a jury in civil cases when it deems it to be against the evidence, the constitution provides that it "shall have appellate jurisdiction, * * * in all criminal cases prosecuted by an indictment or an information in a court of record on questions of law alone," (article 6, § 4;) and in cases of this kind, where it appears that there is a conflict in the evidence, we are not justified in setting aside the verdict. The question is not whether the witnesses for the prosecution are less intelligent and more prejudiced than those of the defense; not whether what they said was true or false. Those are matters for the jury. The credibility of the witness and the weight of his testimony is always for the jury. Counsel for the defendant do not claim that there were no expert witnesses whose testimony was deserving of respect and weight, but it is claimed that all the expert testimony given in this case which is entitled to consideration came from witnesses for the defendant. Their position is clearly set forth in the following frank statement by one of the defendant's attorneys: "If it shall be said that these strictures upon expert medical testimony apply to the testimony of the experts who testified in behalf of defendant as well as to that of those on behalf of the prosecution, I answer that the value of the opinion of a medical expert depends upon his intelligence, his knowledge of the subject upon which he gives his testimony, and his honesty and impartiality; and I ask the court to carefully examine the testimony of the expert witnesses for both the prosecution and defense, and determine whether these desiderata,—some or all of them,—are not generally absent in the testimony of the expert witnesses for the prosecution,—and present, in an unusual degree, in the testimony of defendant's experts. There are expert witnesses—the exceptions, it is true—whose testimony the courts receive with favor and respect, and to whose opinion they accord the utmost deference; and some such witnesses, at least, the defendant has, I think, been fortunate in securing." The theory of the prosecution is that defendant caused the death of his wife by administering to her toxic doses of free phosphorus. This theory stands or falls upon the evidence offered as to—First, the clinical symptoms; second, the pathological conditions disclosed by the autopsy; and third, the presence of free phosphorus in the organs of the deceased, as revealed by chemical analysis.

1. The Clinical Symptoms. The clinical symptoms in phosphorus poisoning are violent cramps in the stomach, vomiting of dark-green matter, a burning sensation in the stomach, and silvery white condition of the tongue and mouth, rawness of the throat, disagreeable taste in the mouth, purging, convulsions, collapse, and coma preceding death. Counsel for appellant has greatly aided us in our examination of the testimony by a synopsis thereof, in which the substance of the evidence is very fairly stated, and there is some evidence as to every clinical symptom mentioned. It is claimed, however, that the testimony of the principal witnesses for the people, as to these symptoms, is conflicting, and that the testimony of one witness nullifies that of another; but, as before stated, it is for the jury to determine from all the evidence which witness is to be accredited.

2. Pathological Conditions. There were present at the autopsy 11 physicians, all of whom testified at the trial. The pathological conditions are stated in the official report of Dr. Blach, the city physician of the city and county of San Francisco, who superintended the autopsy on the body of the deceased in pursuance of an official investigation as to the cause of her death. The report of the autopsy is as follows: "External inspection: Body of a well-nourished woman four feet eight inches in height, about one hundred and twenty-five pounds weight; rigor mortis absent; no external marks of violence. The mouth: The mucous membrane of the mouth very white and thickened. The esophagus: The mucous membrane presents a similar appearance to that of the mouth, but not so general. Body emits no odor of decomposition. The thoracic cavity: The lungs apparently normal; pericardial fluid about half an ounce, and somewhat reddened; heart weighs seven ounces, valves healthy, but walls thin; atheromatous patches on the aorta; clot of blood in the heart. Abdominal cavity: Liver weighs one pound and twelve ounces, not adherent to walls of the abdomen; capsules slightly adherent to the convex surface; the consistency of the liver soft; the stomach nearly empty; ulcer one and one-half inches from the cardiac orifice, near the greater curvature, about the size of a quarter of a dollar; the edges of the ulcer raised; the tissues of the mucous membrane of the stomach about the ulcer infiltrated with pus; extravasations of blood in the neighborhood of the ulcer; capillary hemorrhages in the fundus; pyloric extremity highly congested; mucous membrane of the stomach thickened, and of an opaque, yellowish color; intestines slightly congested. Kidneys: The right one normal; small extravasation of blood in the center of the kidney; left kidney apparently normal. Pelvic cavity: Contains three quarts of blood, partially organized; also extensive extravasation of blood in the pelvic cellular tissue; the left ovary contains a large mass of blood; the right ovary normal; left fallopian tube dilated, and contains remains of fluid exudations; right fallopian tube dilated, and filled with blood; the uterus healthy in every respect. Cranial cavity: Slight oedema on surface of brain; brain otherwise healthy." Dr. Blach testified that he was satisfied at the autopsy there was fatty degeneration of the kidney, but did not care to say so in his report, because it was a matter that could not be determined with certainty without a microscopic examination. Dr. Abrams, who made the examination with the microscope, testified that he found the liver in a high state of fatty degeneration. Dr. Stallard corroborates the statement. It was shown that the liver was greatly atrophied, and bore no evidence of ulceration or abscess. When the stomach was opened, some of the physicians present noticed a strong garlicky odor, which is one of the evidences of phosphorus poisoning. There was evidence showing that the ulcer in the stomach was undergoing a healing process; that the blood clots were harmless, because encysted by nature, and that these reparative processes had gone on to such an extent that the continued nausea and vomiting, which increased as the patient grew worse, could not be attributed to either the ulcer or hamatocles. The physicians having found no cause of death, the stomach was removed, and given to Dr. Johnson for chemical analysis; and the heart and liver were given to Dr. Abrams for microscopic examination. Dr. Johnson testified, in substance, that he first tested the contents of the stomach for arsenic, and then for mercury, and finding no trace of either of these poisons, but having detected an alliaceous odor in the nature of garlic, he made a test for phosphorus by the Mitscherlich apparatus and process; that by this test he obtained luminosities, which were proof positive of the presence of unoxidized phosphorus; that sulphur has the property of condensing upon its surface free phosphorus; that he took the distillate (from the contents of the stomach and the intestines) in the flask, placed it in a small piece of sulphur, and then sealed it; that after heating it, the sulphur was removed, dried, and placed in the palm of his hand, and the result was a light luminosity or phosphorescence; that there was a strong alliaceous or garlicky odor from the distillate. He testified that free phosphorus is an irritant poison, and in its free form, as he found it, produces vomiting, pain in the stomach, convulsions, coma, and death; fatty degeneration of the liver being one of its accompaniments. He expressed himself as perfectly satisfied, after finding free phosphorus in the stomach, that death was caused by free phosphorus. Dr. Abrams testified that from what he observed at the autopsy, from the examination he made with the microscope, and what he saw in assisting Dr. Johnson in his chemical analysis, that "the introduction of phosphorus or caustic poison was the cause of the death of Mrs. Bowers." Many of the expert witnesses testified that they knew of no disease that could produce all the pathological conditions described; that, while each and every one of the conditions might be the result of some natural disease, when taken separately, they could not, taken all together, be the combined results of any disease. Dr. Johnson and Prof. Price both experimented with and made tests of "Fellows' Sirup of Hypophosphites," which had been given to Mrs. Bowers by her physicians, and which the defense claimed might account for the luminosity and garlicky odor, and both testified that no traces of luminosity or garlicky odor could be discovered. In short, the testimony introduced by the prosecution tended to show that it was a case of slow poisoning by the administration of free phosphorus, which produced the ulcer of the stomach by its irritant action, affected the whole mucous membrane from the mouth to the stomach, causing excessive vomiting, and fatty degeneration of the liver. The most that can be said against the verdict, so far as the evidence goes, is that it depends entirely upon circumstantial evidence, and that the evidence as to the circumstances is conflicting. But the experts were shown to be competent to speak. The jury heard their evidence, passed upon their credibility, and are the sole judges of the weight to be given to the testimony of each witness. In all cases of poisoning, except where there are eye-witnesses, the evidence is necessarily expert opinion in character; and, if the rules which are here urged were to be applied, it would be impossible to secure a conviction in any such case.

Conceding that the deceased was poisoned, as claimed by the prosecution, it is still contended that the evidence is insufficient to show that the defendant administered the poison to her; and that, if she was killed with phosphorus, there is stronger evidence to prove that some person other than defendant administered it to her than there is to prove that the defendant administered it. But here, again, follows an argument by counsel for the appellant, which is robbed of its force by the fact that there is evidence, although conflicting, as to the defendant's treatment of his wife during her life-time, and by the fact that he expected to receive a large sum of money upon her death. That he treated her cruelly there is abundant evidence, and as to means and opportunity to commit the crime, there is no question. So far as the intent and motive are necessary in making out the offense charged, it is sufficient to say that, in addition to evidence of cruel treatment, and declarations indicating regret on the part of the defendant that his wife was not killed in an accident which occurred while driving, and a wish that she might die, there is evidence that he secured insurance upon her life, in various societies, to the amount of $17,000. The fact that he had his own life insured in her favor for a like amount is a circumstance which naturally weakens the force of the argument made by the prosecution so far as the insurance upon her life bears upon the question of motive, but it was for the jury to say, from all the circumstances of the case, after they became satisfied that the deceased was killed by phosphorus, who administered it, and for what purpose. Our attention is directed to the authorities, which say that in cases of this kind the proof ought to be not only consistent with the prisoner's guilt, but inconsistent with every other rational conclusion. This is, of course, true; and the jury were told repeatedly that the circumstances proved must exclude to a moral certainty every other hypothesis except the single one of guilt. But it does not follow that, because there is evidence tending to show that defendant did not commit the crime, the proof is consistent with the prisoner's innocence. Evidence is simply the means of proving a fact; that which tends to establish a fact. Proof is the establishment of a fact by evidence; and it is only upon the theory that the witnesses whose evidence was favorable to the defendant, and no others, are to be accredited in their opinions, that it can be said, as matter of law, the proof is consistent with innocence. The jury may not have believed any one of the witnesses for the defense in anything he said, and were not bound to say there was a reasonable doubt because the witnesses of the prosecution did not agree as to the cause of the conditions found, or the cause of the death of deceased.

At the trial a motion was made to strike out the testimony of Dr. Johnson bearing upon the chemical analysis, on the ground that there was not sufficient proof of identity of the material submitted to the witness for analysis, and upon the further ground that proper precautions had not been taken to prevent said material from being tampered with. It appeared that the anatomical jars which held the stomach and contents, and the contents of the intestines, were covered like preserve jars, and wrapped in paper, but were not sealed at any time; were exposed during the autopsy; and were afterwards locked in a case for two days in the laboratory of Cooper Medical College, to which Dr. Johnson and the janitor (who died prior to the trial) had access. Dr. Johnson was quite certain that the jars had not been touched from the time he placed them in the laboratory until he took them out again. No objection was made to the sufficiency of the evidence to identify the material at the time the doctor was examined as a witness, nor until the evidence for the prosecution in chief was all in, when the motion to strike out was made. The evidence being relevant and material, the objection came too late. But, in any event, it was for the jury to say whether it had been tampered with, or whether there was a doubt as to that fact. There were no suspicious circumstances tending to show that the jars had been tampered with; and, while those in charge did not employ the safeguards which might reasonably be expected from men who knew that the materials in their possession were to be used as evidence against a person suspected of murder by poison, yet, in the absence of some evidence tending to show that the jars were tampered with, we cannot presume that anything was added to their contents.

During the progress of the trial the court propounded to some of the expert witnesses several questions which counsel for appellant claimed were improper. We see no valid objection to the questions thus asked, except that in form they are leading and suggestive. If they assumed facts not proved, the attention of the court ought to have been directed to this objection. While it was probably not the duty of the defendant to urge his objections to questions asked by the court with the formality and persistence required when counsel for the prosecution were examining the witness, yet the attention of the court ought to have been called in some manner to the objectionable matters. It is in the discretion of the court to allow counsel to ask leading questions, and there is no reason why the court may not, of its own motion, ask questions in that form.

The conduct of the assistant district attorney in proposing to read to the jury, during his argument, a paper which had not been introduced in evidence, and in asserting that it contained the record of defendant from the chief of police of Chicago, was inexcusable and reprehensible. We think, however, that, so far as the defendant's interests were concerned, no prejudice resulted from this violation of professional duty, for it was promptly rebuked by the court at the time, and the following instruction was thereafter given: "In weighing the evidence in this case, it is important that you should bear constantly in mind that statements of fact made by counsel, whether in examination of witnesses or in argument of the facts so stated, are not in proof, are not in evidence, and are to be discarded from your consideration."

The court did not err in overruling objections to questions put to Drs. Johnson, Lane, and others, calling for their opinions as to the cause of death. It is sufficient if there be some evidence in the case to support the facts stated in the hypothetical question. Reg. v. Frances, 4 Cox, Crim. Cas. 57; Hurst v. Railroad Co., 49 Iowa, 76; Filer v. Railroad Co., 49 N. Y. 42; Webb v.

State, 9 Tex. App. 490. Some of the questions called for an opinion as to the cause of death. In cases of this kind this is permissible when the facts are stated to or by the witness. By answering this question the witness does not assume the province of the jury, and determine the precise question they are to pass upon. The question was, what caused the death? not, who caused the death? Conner v. Stanley, 67 Cal. 316, 7 Pac. Rep. 723, cited by appellant, is clearly not in point. State v. Smith, 32 Me. 370; Shelton v. State, 34 Tex. 664; Ebos v. State, 34 Ark. 520; Lawson, Exp. Ev. 221.

Mrs. Benhayon, a witness for the prosecution, was asked, on cross-examination, whether she was not in the habit of playing cards for money, and demanding money from her daughter for that purpose. "Evidence of particular wrongful acts is not admissible to impeach a witness," (section 2051, Code Civil Proc. ;) and we cannot see the pertinency of the evidence if offered for any other purpose.

In one of the hypothetical questions asked by him, counsel for the people used the word "luminosity." The question was objected to on the ground that this word introduced a conclusion of fact drawn from actual facts found during the chemical analysis. The witness, Dr. Dennis, seems to have understood the meaning of the word, and no attempt was made, on cross-examination, to show that he meant any other kind of luminosity than that described by Dr. Johnson. It is a word which evidently has a definite meaning, and is well understood by medical experts when used in explaining the result of a chemical analysis.

The court did not err in allowing Dr. Lane to testify on behalf of the prosecution after the defendant had opened his case. The reasons given by the court show that there was no abuse of discretion. The same may be said of the ruling of the court in allowing the witness Price and others to testify in rebuttal. Section 1094, Pen. Code; People v. Strong, 46 Cal. 302.

There was some evidence tending to show the existence of every fact stated by counsel for the people in the hypothetical questions propounded to Dr. Lane. It may be apparent, as claimed by counsel for defendant, that some of these facts were not proved, the weight of the evidence being strongly against them; but this does not determine whether the proper foundation has been laid for the question. It is proper to assume, within the limits of the evidence, any state of facts which the evidence justifies, and obtain the opinion of the expert. The facts are assumed for the purpose of the question only, and, of course, if the evidence fails to establish the material facts thus assumed, the jury must disregard the opinion. Reg. v. Frances, supra; Lawson, Exp. Ev. 153.

The testimony of Brooks and Hogan was properly admitted. The defendant's declarations as to the conduct of his wife were evidently made to show that her death was caused by her own acts. This is clearly shown by his declaration made to the witness Hogan in the city prison. But, without a declaration by the defendant that such was his purpose, the jury might readily believe from the statement itself that it was made for the purpose of explaining the cause of her death.

A. Hogg was called as a witness, and having testified that he was a druggist, and had sold Dr. Bowers medicine several times during the last illness of Mrs. Bowers, without prescriptions therefor, said that he would not put up phosphorus in overdoses for any one not a physician. He was asked this question: "But if a physician called upon you for it in that way, you would put it up, wouldn't you?" Counsel for the defendant objected to the question on the ground that it was incompetent. The objection was overruled, and an exception reserved. The witness answered: "I would make some remark to the physician first, if it were an overdose, because otherwise I would be liable to get into trouble." We cannot perceive how this answer could have prejudiced the defendant's case. It was not an attempt to prove a general custom, and what Mr. Hogg would do was entirely immaterial. It was not claimed that he had sold phosphorus to Dr. Bowers.

On cross-examination the defendant was asked to name his parents. Objection was made that it was not cross-examination. The objection was overruled, and an exception taken. The defendant answered that his father's name was Matthew Minslow Bowers, and his mother's maiden name was Stump. This answer certainly did not prejudice the defendant. The same may be said of the answers given to other questions put to defendant and those asked in the cross-examination of Jenkins.

Several exceptions were taken by counsel for defendant to the rulings of the court in excluding and admitting evidence which we do not deem of sufficient importance to review in detail. It is sufficient to say that we have carefully examined them all, and found no prejudicial error in any of them.

The charge of the court as to the credibility of defendant and the weight of his testimony has been approved here several times. People v. O'Neal, 67 Cal. 378, 7 Pac. Rep. 790. That portion of the charge which counsel referred to as "an elaborate speech to the jury" might have been omitted without injury to the rights of either the prosecution or the defense, but we cannot see any prejudicial error in it. The court had given many instructions couched in very strong language, cautioning the jury against forgetting the presumptions with which the law clothed the defendant, and the certainty of proof of every element which the law required before conviction; and, in closing the charge, called the attention of the jury to the fact that the law should be fearlessly and impartially administered; that verdicts should not be dictated by any other considerations than the law and the evidence; and that, if they were satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty of the guilt of the defendant, they would be derelict in their duty to the people of the state if they failed to say so. It would be better taste and more dignified judicial style to give the law to the jury in its simplest forms, applying such principles thereof as are applicable to the facts of the case, without lecturing the jury upon the consequences of a failure to obey the mandates of their oaths. Anything else is liable to lead the court into error, cause suspicion of prejudice against one side or the other, and give this court unnecessary labor and annoyance.

We have carefully examined the record upon every question presented by the defendant's counsel on this appeal, and we see nothing in the record which would warrant us in reversing the judgment. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

BUNDY et al. v. MAGINESS. (No. 12,232.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 11, 1888.)

1. ASSAULT AND BATTERY—CIVIL ACTION—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

Under Civil Code Cal. § 3294, providing for the giving of exemplary damages in actions for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, where defendant is guilty of malice, such damages were properly assessed in an action for assault and battery, where the evidence satisfied the jury that the assault was maliciously made.

2. SAME.

In an action for assault and battery, the fact that defendant had previously been punished, criminally, for the assault is not a bar to the recovery of exemplary damages for the same offense.

3. SAME—EVIDENCE—PLEADING AND PROOF.

Where defendant, in an action for assault and battery, after alleging, in his answer, acts of provocation, both at the moment of the assault and at other times prior to it finally alleges that the acts of provocation that caused the assault were those occurring at the moment thereof, he cannot introduce evidence of other provocative acts done before the assault.

4. JUDGMENT—ENTRY—TIME.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 664, providing that, when a trial by jury has been had, judgment must be entered by the clerk, in conformity to the verdict, within 24 hours after the rendition of the verdict, a judgment upon a verdict rendered Saturday night will not be invalid though not entered until Monday morning, the statute being purely directory, and not mandatory.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; GEORGE E. WILLIAMS, Judge.

Action by Lizzie Bundy and W. L. Bundy, her husband, against Samuel Maginess, to recover damages for an assault and battery on the wife. Judgment for plaintiffs for $600 damages, and defendant appealed. Defendant set up in his answer acts of provocation, both at the time of the assault and at other prior times, in mitigation of damages. It appeared that defendant had, previous to this action, been fined in a criminal action for the same offense. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 664, provides that "when trial by jury has been had, judgment must be entered * * * within twenty-four hours after the rendition of the verdict," unless reserved for argument, or a stay of proceedings is granted. Civil Code Cal. § 3294, provides that "in any action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, where the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, actual or presumed, the jury, in addition to the actual damages, may give damages for the sake of example, and by way of punishing the defendant."

Blanchard & Swisler, for appellant. Grove L. Johnson and Irwin & Irwin, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. The defendant, Samuel Maginess, was sued by the plaintiff Lizzie Bundy, joined with her husband, to recover damages for an assault and battery inflicted upon her. In his answer the defendant did not deny the assault and battery, but claimed that he only slapped the plaintiff, and that the slap he gave her "was wholly provoked" by the insulting and taunting speech of the plaintiff eo instanti. Upon the trial he endeavored to introduce evidence showing other provocative acts of the plaintiff done before the time of the alleged slapping. Inasmuch as, according to his answer, the provocation, which caused the assault and battery, was that occurring at the moment of the attack on the plaintiff, it is difficult to see how any other acts of provocation, which he says in that pleading had nothing to do with his unlawful act, could be availed of as a defense. He cannot be permitted to disprove the allegations of his answer. The fact that upon a verdict rendered Saturday night, a judgment was not entered until the following Monday, cannot be held to invalidate it under a statute purely directory, and not mandatory, as is section 664, Code Civil Proc. It is also claimed that in an action of this kind exemplary damages cannot be given, and that the court erred in giving instructions to the jury that they could allow them. But in this state the law does allow such damages for an oppressive or malicious assault upon the person. Section 3294, Civil Code; Wade v. Thayer, 40 Cal. 585. It is further alleged that no such rule of law should have been given to the jury to guide their action as that which ignored the punishment of the defendant criminally for the assault, as a defense against an action for exemplary damages, if the evidence warranted it. It was held, in Wilson v. Middleton, 2 Cal. 54, that such punishment was no bar to the recovery of exemplary damages for such an unlawful act as the defendant committed. The evidence before the jury, as we think, justified them in determining that the defendant had inflicted severe injury upon the plaintiff, and had done so maliciously. Such being the case, their verdict should not be disturbed. Section 3294, Civil Code. We perceive no error in the granting or refusing instructions by the court. No prejudicial error appearing in the record, we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

HAYS et al. v. STEIGER. (No. 11,295.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 13, 1883.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—MEXICAN GRANT.

Act Cong. July 23, 1866, § 7, entitled "An act to quiet land titles in California," giving to one who for valuable consideration, in good faith, has purchased lands of Mexican grantees, "where the lands so purchased have been excluded from the final survey of any Mexican grant," and who has used, improved, and possessed the same, the right to purchase such lands at the minimum price, applies to lands included within the exterior boundaries of a Mexican grant for a specific quantity within a larger tract described by outside boundaries, commonly known as a "float;" the land so purchased having fallen outside the tract, as the specific quantity was afterwards officially located and surveyed.

2. SAME—LAND-OFFICE—JURISDICTION OF SECRETARY OF INTERIOR—MEXICAN GRANTS.

The secretary of the interior has jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from the decision of the commissioner of the land-office in a contest between two claimants of public lands, involving the construction of said act.

3. SAME—REVIEW OF SECRETARY'S DECISION BY COURTS—PLEADING.

A complaint by the heirs of a pre-emptor against a homestead patentee, seeking to charge defendant as trustee of the land in question, as to which, after a contest between such defendant and the pre-emptor, the land had been granted to defendant, alleged that defendant had, in violation of Rev. St. U. S. § 2291, aliened a part of the land, and thereby forfeited his entry, and that the secretary of the interior erred in said contest in holding that such alienation did not work a forfeiture; but did not allege that such alienation was proved before said secretary, and found by him to be true, and that he had made such decision as a matter of law. Held, that the forfeiture was insufficiently alleged, as the decisions of the officers of the land-office are final on matters of fact, and reviewable in matters of law only.

4. SAME—HOMESTEAD ENTRIES—ALIENATIONS.

Rev. St. U. S. § 2291, providing that no patent shall issue for a homestead until the applicant makes affidavit that he has not alienated any part of the land except for church, cemetery, or school purposes, or for right of way for a railroad, applies only to alienations made after the filing of the homestead claim.

5. SAME.

A complaint attacking a homestead patent for such alienation, not averring that the alienation was not for one of the purposes excepted by said statute, was therefore bad.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; JOHN G. PRESSLEY, Judge.

Action by Mary T. Hays, Isabella G. Krager, Thomas D. Mann, and Edward H. Mann, an infant, by his guardian, against Edward Steiger, to declare a trust in defendant in a tract of land in Sonoma county to which defendant had obtained a patent. Judgment on demurrer was rendered for defendant, and plaintiffs appealed. Act Cong. July 23, 1866, § 7, (14 St. 220, § 7,) entitled "An act to quiet title to land in California," provided that where persons, in good faith and for valuable consideration, have purchased of Mexican grantees lands excluded from the final survey of any Mexican grant, and have used, improved, and possessed the same, such persons shall have the right to purchase the same at the minimum price.

James A. Waymire and Frederic Hall, for appellants. Henley & Oates, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The plaintiffs are the heirs at law of one John Mann, who died intestate on the 25th day of July, 1872. Mann was a qualified pre-emptor, and in 1863 settled upon a tract of unsurveyed land in the county of Sonoma. He erected improvements on the land, and continued to reside thereon with his family until the time of his death. The township in which the land was situated was afterwards surveyed, and on the 16th of August, 1880, an approved plat thereof was filed in the United States land-office at San Francisco. On the 27th of October, 1880, one of the plaintiffs, for and on behalf of the heirs of Mann, filed with the register and receiver of the land-office a declaratory statement, claiming the right to pre-empt, for the use and benefit of the said heirs, 160 acres of land, which was described as lots 4 and 5 of section 22, and lots 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 22 of section 23, in township 6 N., etc. In 1870 the defendant entered upon a part of the land claimed by Mann, and thereafter resided thereon. On the 8th of November, 1880, he filed in the land-office an application for a homestead on land described as lots 1, 3, 6, 7, 10, 11, 12, and 14 of section 23, in township 6 N., etc. The land applied for by both parties, to the extent of 110.81 acres, was the same. The defendant claimed that, under the provisions of section 7 of the act of congress of July 23, 1866, entitled "An act to quiet land titles in California," he had a right to purchase all the land applied for by him, for the reason that the same was within the exterior boundaries of a Mexican grant, known as "Agua Caliente," but was excluded therefrom upon final survey by the United States, and he was a bona fide purchaser thereof, for a valuable consideration, from parties who purchased from the original grantee of the grant. The contest between the parties as to which had the right to enter the land was tried before the register and receiver of the land-office, and the decision was in favor of the defendant. From that decision an appeal was taken to the commissioner of the general land-office, and he reversed the decision of the register and receiver, and entered one in favor of the plaintiffs. An appeal was then taken to the secretary of the interior, and that officer reversed the decision of the commissioner, and affirmed that of the register and receiver. Subsequently a United States patent was regularly issued to the defendant. The plaintiffs claim that they have an equitable right to the 110.81 acres of land in dispute, and they brought this action to charge the defendant as trustee of the title, and to compel its transfer to them. The defendant demurred to the complaint, and the demurrer was sustained. The plaintiffs declined to amend, and thereupon judgment was entered against them. The appeal is from the judgment.

It is not claimed for the appellants that the respondent holds the title in trust for them if the land was in fact within the exterior boundaries of the Agua Caliente grant. Nor is it claimed that the courts can review the action of the officers of the land department in so far as their decisions are based upon questions of fact, the rule to the contrary being well settled. Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 330, 340; Quinby v. Conlan, 104 U. S. 420, 426. But it is insisted that the land was not within the exterior boundaries of the grant, and that the register and receiver and secretary of the interior erred, as a matter of law, in holding that it was, and awarding it to the respondent; and this presents the principal question for consideration. The complaint alleges that the grant, known as "Agua Caliente," was made to Lazaro Pina by Alvarado, as governor of California, on the 13th day of October, 1840, and approved by the departmental assembly on the 8th of October, 1845, and that it was confirmed, by the United States district and supreme courts, to the claimant thereof, as follows: "The land of which confirmation is made, is situated in the present county of Sonoma, and is of the extent of two leagues in length, by a quarter of a league in width, and known by the name of 'Agua Caliente,' and is bounded on the south-west by the arroyo of the rancho of Petaluma; on the south-east by the town of Sonoma; on the north by the hills and mountains which intervene and separate the rancho of George Yount; and on the north-west by the rancho of Mr. John Wilson,—being the same land which was granted to Lazaro Pina by Governor Alvarado." It is then alleged that the official survey of the grant was made by one Lewis, in the month of Deember, 1870, and was afterwards fully approved; "that by said survey the said arroyo mentioned in said grant was made a fixed boundary on the westerly side thereof; that said survey embraced two and one-half leagues in length along and nearly parallel to the general course of said arroyo, and a width of one-quarter of a league on the easterly side of said arroyo; that said eastern line of said survey was situate and run west of the so-called 'Napa Hills;' that, upon the publication of said survey of Lewis, objections were filed thereto by said defendant and others, claiming that the said eastern boundary did not extend far enough to the east to protect them." It is further alleged that on the 21st of February, 1878, the commissioner of the general land-office made a decision "holding that the grant of Agua Caliente was a grant limited for quantity, by the calls of the title papers and decree of the United States courts, to two and one-half leagues in length by one-quarter of a league in width; that said arroyo mentioned in said grant was the westerly boundary thereof; that said survey of Lewis contained said quantity; that said eastern line was an exterior boundary of said grant according to the calls thereof; that said survey should be approved, and the same was by said commissioner approved;" that the commissioner further decided "that the boundary described in the said decree as the northern must be regarded as the eastern boundary; and that it is a well-settled rule that, when hills or mountains are described as the locative calls of a grant, the boundary must follow along the foot or base of such hills or mountains,"—all which decisions were confirmed by the secretary of the interior on the 9th of January, 1879.

The above are all of the averments found in the complaint in reference to the confirmation and location of the grant. Now, conceding that the hills or mountains mentioned in the decree of confirmation as the northern boundary are really upon the east, and form the eastern boundary, and that, where a grant is described as bounded by hills and mountains, the line runs along the base, and not the summit, of the hills, still we are unable to see anything showing that the land in controversy was not within the boundaries of the grant as originally made and confirmed. So far as we can see, it may lie between the eastern line of the survey and the base of the hills. There is nothing shown to the contrary; and, as pleadings are construed most strongly against the pleader, this seems to us to constitute a sufficient answer to the appellants' contention. The grant was evidently what is called a "float;" that is, a grant of quantity only, within a larger tract, to be located by consent of the government before it can attach to any specific land. U. S. v. McLaughlin, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1177, (lately decided by United States supreme court.) If we are right in what has been said, the case is within the rules of law as declared in Hosmer v. Wallace, 97 U. S. 575, and Rutledge v. Murphy, 51 Cal. 388.

It is contended that the secretary of the interior had no jurisdiction to hear the contest between the plaintiffs and defendant upon appeal from the decision of the commissioner. In Hosmer v. Wallace, supra, there was an appeal from the decision of the commissioner to the secretary of the interior. That case was like this, and no question was made as to the right of appeal. As we understand it, the secretary is at the head of the land department, and is clothed with supervisory power over all the rulings and acts of the commissioner.

It is alleged in the complaint that said defendant and his wife conveyed a part of said land included in his homestead claim to George W. Whitman on the 9th day of July, 1874, which deed of conveyance is now of record in said county, and that no reconveyance has been made to said defendant by said Whitman, nor by any other person. It is contended that by this conveyance defendant forfeited his right to a homestead, and in support of this position sections 2290 and 2291 of the United States Revised Statutes are cited. The first section provides that the person applying for the benefit of the homestead act shall make affidavit "that such application is made for his exclusive use and benefit, and that his entry is made for the purposes of actual settlement and cultivation, and not either directly or indirectly for the use or benefit of any other person," etc.; and the second section provides that no patent can be issued until the applicant "makes affidavit that no part of such land has been alienated, except as provided in section 2288. Section 2288 provides that a pre-emption or homestead claimant may transfer any portion of his pre-emption or homestead "for church, cemetery, or school purposes, or for the right of way of railroads across such pre-emption or homestead." There are several answers to this contention: First. It does not appear that the matter was ever presented for decision, or was decided, by the register and receiver, or the commissioner, or the secretary of the interior. The statement in the complaint, found among the alleged errors of the secretary, that "said secretary erred in not holding that said conveyance to G. W. Whitman by said defendant forfeited his homestead," is a mere conclusion, and not a statement of any fact. But, as the courts can only review and correct the errors of law committed by the land-officers, the facts on which those errors are supposed to be based should be fully stated. For example, it should have been alleged, not only that the conveyance was made, but that the fact that it was made was proved before the land-officers, and found to be true, and that nevertheless the secretary decided that it did not operate to forfeit the defendant's right. In the absence of such a statement of the facts, the question presented does not arise, and cannot be considered. Second. According to the averments of the complaint, the defendant made the conveyance complained of in 1874, and did not file his homestead claim till 1880. But the sections cited refer only to proceedings taken after the homestead claim is filed. Third. It does not appear how large a "part" of the land was conveyed, or for what purpose. So far as we can learn from the complaint, defendant may have conveyed to Whitman a part only large enough to make a family burying-ground, and may have transferred it for cemetery purposes.

There are no other points that require consideration. We find no error in the record, and therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

2 Cal. Unrep. 873

WALLACE v. HOPKINS. (No. 11,226.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 13, 1888.)

FACTORS AND BROKERS—COMMISSIONS—EVIDENCE.

The plaintiff and defendant entered into a written agreement that if plaintiff should succeed in selling certain mining stock in defendant's possession, that plaintiff should receive all defendant's stock at 20 cents per share, and the shares held for third persons at 50 cents per share. Plaintiff then went to T. one of the stockholders, and by inducing him to believe that all the stockholders had agreed to take 20 cents per share for their stock, procured an order on defendant authorizing him to sell all T.'s stock at 20 cents per share, and deposited the said order with defendant. The next day T. revoked the order, but plaintiff received no notice thereof, and sold the mine at the price agreed on between himself and defendant. Defendant received all the money paid by the persons to whom plaintiff sold, and paid T. 50 cents per share for his stock. Plaintiff sued defendant for the difference between the price of the stock at 20 cents and 50 cents per share. Held, that defendant was not liable, not having received any money from the sale of the stock for the use of plaintiff.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDON, Judge.

The plaintiff, Thomas Wallace, alleges that on or about the 8th day of March, 1879, at San Francisco, the defendant, William S. Hopkins, received

$1,450 from the sale of stock in the "Niagara G. & S. Mg. Co.," to be paid to and for the use of the plaintiff; that the defendant, although often requested, has not paid any part thereof to the plaintiff; and judgment is asked for that sum, with interest from that day. The answer denies these statements. The evidence establishes, without any conflict, that on the 28th day of February, 1879, the defendant had in his possession 57,595 shares of the stock of said company, of which 4,900 shares belonged to William R. Townsend. A portion belonged to the defendant, and the remainder was owned by other persons. On that day Townsend gave the plaintiff an order, directed to the defendant, reading as follows: "You are hereby authorized to sell the 5,000 shares Niagara stock, more or less, in your hands, belonging to me, for the sum of one thousand dollars, gold coin. This to hold good for fifteen days from date,"—which writing the plaintiff on that day delivered to the defendant, who wrote at the bottom of it the following, in red ink: "[Four thousand nine hundred shares belonging to W. R. Townsend, 225 shares having been delivered to his client. 2-28-79. WM. S. HOPKINS.]" On the same day the defendant delivered all the shares of stock, in an envelope, to the cashier of Donohoe, Kelly & Co.'s Bank, at San Francisco, and instructed the cashier to deliver the package containing the stock to the plaintiff, or his order, in New York, upon payment of $15,446. The stock was accordingly forwarded to Eugene Kelly & Co., New York city. The plaintiff started for New York March 1, 1879, arrived there the 8th of that month, and on the 10th of that month the plaintiff effected a sale of all of the stock, Israel S. Blumenburg paying Eugene Kelly & Co. on that day the said $15,446; and the money was telegraphed out to San Francisco the same day. In that sale the 4,900 shares brought $2,450, being part of the $15,446, all of which money was received by the defendant on that day; and it is the difference between that $2,450 and $1,000, which the plaintiff claims Townsend was to have for the 4,900 shares of stock, that the plaintiff seeks to recover in this action. The plaintiff testified that he agreed with Townsend to pay him $1,000 on or before the 15th day of March, 1879, for the 4,900 shares of stock; that Townsend agreed to the sale, and gave to the plaintiff that order upon the defendant to deliver the stock to the plaintiff upon the payment of $1,000; that the plaintiff received this order on the 28th day of February, 1879; that he took the order to the defendant on the same day, and then stated to him that he had purchased this stock from Townsend; that the understanding between the plaintiff and defendant then was that the plaintiff should pay the defendant, on account of Townsend, $1,000 for that stock, and that the defendant should hold the balance the stock might bring to plaintiff's credit, provided the plaintiff made the payment on or before March 15, 1879, according to the order; that the defendant said he was very glad that the plaintiff had made that purchase; that he would feel more interest in making sale of the whole parcel of stock; that the defendant then agreed, if the plaintiff went east, to sell the whole stock, and succeeded in so doing, the whole money should be sent to the defendant, and that the money received for the 4,900 shares should be disposed of by the defendant by paying Townsend the $1,000, and retaining the balance for the plaintiff; that the plaintiff agreed with Townsend to pay him the $1,000 out of the proceeds of the sale of the stock; that the plaintiff left for New York on the next day, March 1, 1879, to effect a sale of the whole stock; that the plaintiff demanded the $1,450 of the defendant several times before bringing this suit, and after the defendant had admitted to the plaintiff the receipt of the money; that the reason the $1,450 was not deducted out in New York was because the defendant held the whole stock in trust for the parties interested in the pool, and the collection was made as an entirety; that the plaintiff's object in going east was to insure the sale of the stock, because he had an interest of $1,450 in the success of the sale; that Townsend and the defendant understood that the plaintiff was going to New York to effect the sale; that the only interest the plaintiff had in the whole stock, or making the sale, was the 4,900 shares, which he thus purchased. The defendant testified that it is likely he wrote the red-ink portion on the order, in presence of the plaintiff, to show him just how many shares Townsend had in his possession; that when the plaintiff delivered this written order to him, the plaintiff expressed a desire that when the money was paid over, the defendant should retain the difference between the $1,000 and the $2,450, and wished the defendant to place the difference to the plaintiff's credit, and pay it over to him; that it was a question in his mind, and so he stated to him, if it was the right or proper thing for him to do; that he had no understanding or agreement with the plaintiff with reference to the Townsend stock and money other than that whoever the money belonged to he was willing to pay it to; but that he did not recognize Mr. Townsend's order on him to accept the $1,000. W. R. Townsend testified that the substance of the conversation between the plaintiff and himself, at the time he signed the writing above mentioned, was that the plaintiff stated he was going east to effect a sale of the Niagara stock which the defendant held in the pool for the different stockholders. That his understanding from the plaintiff was that the other stockholders would accept 20 cents a share. That plaintiff wanted to know whether he would go in with the rest. That he told him he would do whatever the rest did. He would not swear that the plaintiff told him that the other parties had authorized Hopkins to sell the stock for 20 cents a share. That was his understanding. For that reason he gave him the writing. That the next day he saw one of the stockholders, who told him he had not agreed to sell at that price. That he revoked the letter to Hopkins as soon as he could find him. That the plaintiff told him he was going east to sell the stock, and he wanted him to allow his stock to be sold for $1,000. That he understood the plaintiff to have the option on all the stock at rate of 20 cents a share. And he says: "I wrote that note to Hopkins, authorizing him to accept $1,000, which would be twenty cents a share on my stock." That he did not notify the plaintiff that he had revoked the authority which he had given the defendant to sell.

The court found the following facts: "(1) That on the 28th day of February, 1879, the defendant had in his possession upwards of 50,000 shares of the capital stock of a corporation called the 'Niagara Gold & Silver Mining Company.' A portion of said stock was owned by said defendant, and a portion thereof was owned by other persons. Defendant had authority from the owners of said stock to sell the same at fifty cents per share. Among the stock so held by him were 4,900 shares belonging to and the property of one Wm. R. Townsend. Said Townsend had previously authorized said defendant to sell said stock for fifty cents a share. On said 28th day of February, 1879, said plaintiff and said defendant made an agreement by which the said defendant gave the plaintiff the privilege to purchase all said stock held by said defendant on or before the 15th day of March, 1879, at the following rates, to-wit: Twenty cents a share for the stock owned by defendant, and fifty cents a share for the stock held by defendant, but owned by other parties. This agreement included the 4,900 shares of stock owned by said Townsend. After the agreement was made, and on said 28th day of February, 1879, the said plaintiff had an interview with said Townsend, in which the said Townsend understood that all the stockholders owning said stock held by said defendant, as aforesaid, had authorized the sale of the same at twenty cents a share. Thereupon, and with that understanding, Townsend wrote a note to said defendant authorizing him to sell his [Townsend's] stock at $1,000, which note was delivered to said Wallace by Townsend, and by Wallace delivered to defendant. Afterwards, and on the same day, Townsend called on defendant, and from him learned that the other stockholders having stock in defendant's hands had not authorized the sale of their stock at twenty cents a share, or at any price less than fifty cents per share. Thereupon Townsend revoked and countermanded his said authority to defendant to sell said stock at twenty cents a share, but left defendant with authority to sell it at fifty cents a share. Plaintiff was not advised of this action on Townsend's part, but went immediately to New York and effected a sale of all said stock at the prices before mentioned, to-wit, twenty cents a share for defendant's stock, and fifty cents a share for all the other stock held by defendant, including Townsend's said stock. And the said purchase price was paid over to said defendant within said fifteen days after said 28th day of February, 1879. On receipt of the money, defendant paid Townsend fifty cents a share for his stock. The money claimed by plaintiff is the difference between $1,000 and the fifty cents a share of this 4,900 shares of Townsend's stock. (2) The defendant did not receive the sum of $1,450 from the sale of the capital stock of the Niagara Gold & Silver Mining Company on the 8th day of March, 1879, to be paid to or for the use of the plaintiff, nor did defendant receive any money from the sale of said stock for the use of the plaintiff, and the allegation of the complaint in that behalf is not true. (3) The defendant has not paid the sum of $1,450 to plaintiff, or any part of it." The court gave judgment for the defendant for costs. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Wm. H. Hart, for appellant. Daniel Titus, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This action was brought to recover a sum of money alleged to be due the plaintiff from the defendant. The court below gave judgment in favor of the defendant, and from that and an order denying a new trial the plaintiff has appealed. In his statement, on motion for a new trial, he specifies particulars in which the evidence is alleged to be insufficient to support findings one and two of the decision; and his main contention here seems to be that the trial court made those findings against the evidence given on the trial. We have carefully examined all the evidence in the record, and are of the opinion that the court below was fully justified in finding as it did, and, no prejudicial error appearing, we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C., HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

ANSCHLAG v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES. (No. 20,429.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1888.)

CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL AND ERROR—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—MANDAMUS.

Under Pen. Code Cal. § 1171, requiring a draught of a bill of exceptions, upon two days' notice to the district attorney, to be presented to the judge within ten days after judgment or within that period delivered to the clerk of the court, to be delivered to the judge at the earliest period practicable, a petition for a writ of mandate to have settled a bill of exceptions is insufficient, and will be dismissed, when it fails to show that the bill of exceptions was presented to the judge upon the required notice to the district attorney, and fails to state when the bill was presented to the judge or delivered to the clerk.

In bank. Original proceedings in mandamus.

Application by John H. F. Anschlag for a writ of mandate to the superior court for the county of Los Angeles, Hon. W. A. CHENEY, presiding, to have settled a bill of exceptions. Pen. Code Cal. § 1171, provides that a draught of a bill of exceptions shall, upon two days' notice to the district attorney, be presented to the judge within ten days after judgment, or within that period be delivered to the clerk of the court to be delivered to the judge at the earliest period practicable.

Frederick McGregor, for petitioner. Atty. Gen. Geo. A. Johnson, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. Application for a writ of mandate to have settled a bill of exceptions. The petition for the writ is clearly insufficient. It fails to show that a bill of exceptions was presented to the judge upon the notice required by law to be given to the district attorney. In fact, there is no statement in the petition when the bill was even presented to the judge, or delivered to the clerk of the court for him. The averments of the petition should set forth facts showing that the statute in regard to the presentment and settlement of bills of exceptions has been complied with, or facts showing a sufficient reason why it has not. See Pen. Code, § 1171. The petition is an important pleading, and should state the necessary facts which entitle the applicant to the writ. If we granted the writ on such a petition as the one here presented, we would be sanctioning a practice too loose and indefinite to meet with the approval of any court. The application is denied and the petition dismissed without prejudice.

In re LANE. (No. 20,421.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 16, 1888.)

INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION—CERTAINTY.

Under Pen. Code Cal. § 1426, providing that "all actions before a police court for a public offense of which such courts have jurisdiction must be commenced by a complaint under oath, setting forth the offense charged, with such particulars of time, place, person, and property as to enable the defendant to understand distinctly the character of the offense complained of, and to answer the complaint," a complaint alleging that the prisoner "then and there did unlawfully and willfully become and was a visitor to a certain house and place for the practice of gambling, there situate in said city and county of San Francisco, to-wit, at 14 Kearney street, thereby violating the provisions of sections 1 and 33, order No. 1,587 of the board of supervisors of the said city and county, as amended by order No. 1,955 of said board, contrary to the form, force and effect of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of California," etc., sufficiently charges a criminal offense, and sets out the order of the board with sufficient certainty to give the police judge's court jurisdiction of the offense and the person of defendant.

Commissioners' decision. Original proceedings on habeas corpus.

Charles Lane, being held by the police judge's court as a prisoner for violation of an ordinance of San Francisco against visiting gambling houses, prays for a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that the complaint under which he was arrested alleges no offense. Pen. Code Cal. § 1426, provides that "all actions * * * before a police court for a public offense of which such courts have jurisdiction must be commenced by a complaint under oath, setting forth the offense charged with such particulars of time, place, person, and property as to enable the defendant to understand distinctly the character of the offense complained, and to answer the complaint."

Alfred Clarke and J. D. Sullivan, for petitioner. Davis Louderback, E. B. Stonehill, and Walker C. Graves, for the People.

FOOTE, C. The prisoner was complained of before the police judge's court of the city and county of San Francisco as having committed a misdemeanor in violation of an ordinance of said city and county in that he "then and there did unlawfully and willfully become and was a visitor to a certain house and place for the practice of gambling, there situate in said city and county of San Francisco, to-wit, at 14 Kearney street, thereby violating the provisions of sections 1 and 33, order No. 1,587 of the board of supervisors of the said city and county of San Francisco, as amended by order No. 1,955 of said board, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California. And this complainant, upon oath, accuses the said Charles Lane of having committed said crime, and this complainant further alleges and deposes that the said accused was then and there arrested therefor in the actual commission of the said offense," etc. The complaint was duly sworn to by one J. W. Wallace. As we think it sufficiently charges a criminal offense, and the order of the board is set out and pleaded with sufficient certainty, the police judge's court has jurisdiction of the offense, and of the person of the defendant. The ordinance, according to the return of the officer having the defendant in custody, seems to be valid, and we perceive no sound reason why the defendant should not be tried for the offense of which he is duly complained of before the proper tribunal. We therefore advise that the writ be denied, and defendant remanded.

I concur: HAYNE, C. BELCHER, C. C., took no part in this opinion.

PER CURIAM. For the reason given in the foregoing opinion the writ is denied, and defendant remanded.

CONTEMPT OF COURT—PROCEDURE—JURISDICTION.

A judgment and order of commitment for a contempt committed in the presence of the court, not entered until 50 days thereafter, and without notice, or any previous action in the matter, is void.

In bank. Original proceeding on habeas corpus to discharge W. W. Foote, committed for contempt, by the superior court of Alameda county; W. B. GREEN, Judge.

David McClure, Eugene Deuprey, and John A. Stanley, for petitioner. S. P. Hall, Dist. Atty., and Daniel Titus, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Admitting that petitioner was guilty of contempt, committed in the presence of the court, it appears that no proceedings were taken by the court at the time the contempt was committed to punish the petitioner; nor were there any steps taken to retain jurisdiction until 50 days thereafter, when the order, adjudging him guilty of contempt, and imposing a fine of $300, was made without notice of any kind. Under these circumstances, we think the court lost jurisdiction to proceed against petitioner for contempt, and that the order and commitment are void. Let the petitioner be discharged.

PEOPLE v. BROWN. (No. 20,399.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 15, 1888.)

1. HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—PREVIOUS QUARREL.

On trial for murder, testimony as to a quarrel between defendant and deceased, which occurred several years before the homicide charged, and threats by defendant then made, though remote, is admissible to show malice; its remoteness only affecting its weight.

2. SAME—CROSS-EXAMINATION OF DEFENDANT.

Where defendant, on trial for murder, was a witness in his own behalf, and, after stating that he had no quarrel with deceased on the day of the homicide, was asked, on cross-examination, whether they did not have a quarrel in a certain hotel several years before, and answered in the negative, such examination, though improper, is not reversible error, defendant not having been prejudiced thereby.

8. CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—ILLNESS OF JUROR.

The sickness of a juror, whereby, as alleged, he was prevented from exercising that "keen judgment or calm deliberation" required for the discharge of his duties, no objection having been made to the juror at the time, is not sufficient ground for a new trial, under Pen. Code Cal. § 1181, subd. 4, allowing a new trial when the verdict has been decided by any means "other than a fair expression of opinion on the part of all the jurors."

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; WILLIAM W. CROSS, Judge.

Oregon Sanders and W. A. Gray, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

McFARLAND, J. The defendant was convicted of murder in the second degree, and appeals from the judgment and order denying a new trial. The case was here on a former appeal, (72 Cal. 390, 16 Pac. Rep. 1,) when the defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, and the judgment was reversed on a point which did not arise upon the second trial.

1. The witness, Mrs. Clark, was allowed, against defendant's objection, to testify to a quarrel between the defendant and the deceased, and threats made by the former against the latter. The ground of the objection was, mainly, that the quarrel testified to, happened several years prior to the homicide. This testimony was to the point of malice, and, while it was somewhat remote, we cannot say that it was inadmissible. Its remoteness went to its weight.

2. It is objected that the cross-examination of the defendant, who offered himself as a witness, was allowed to take too wide a range. The defendant testified as follows: "My object in drawing my pistol was to scare my brother away so that he would not shoot me. I had no desire or intention to shoot him. I had had no quarrel with him that day." The questions asked him were, mainly, whether or not he had a quarrel with the deceased a few minutes before the shooting; what kind of a pistol he had, and why he cocked it, etc. These questions were, we think, clearly proper. The prosecuting attorney then asked him this question: "You say you never had a quarrel with your brother?" To this question defendant, without making any objection, answered, "No, sir." He was then asked if he had a quarrel with the deceased in a certain hotel some years before. Objection was made to this question. The objection was overruled, and the defendant answered, "No, sir; I did not." Conceding that the last question was improperly allowed, under the authority of People v. O'Brien, 66 Cal. 602, 6 Pac. Rep. 695, we do not see how defendant was prejudiced by the error. He would not have been in any more favorable position if the question had neither been asked nor answered.

3. During the trial one of the jurors became sick. His condition was apparent to all persons present. The judge of the court called attention to the juror's illness several times. He was asked if he was able to perform his duties as a juror, and was told that, if he was not, the court would take a recess, or excuse him if necessary, etc.; but he replied to each inquiry that he was better, and could go on. No objection was made to the juror by defendant, nor did any one object to proceeding with the trial. But the sickness of this juror was afterwards sought to be used as ground for a new trial, and evidence was introduced tending to show that his sickness prevented his mind from acting clearly and fairly in considering the case and arriving at a verdict. The attorney general contends that in no case can the sickness of a juror be a cause for a new trial. Section 1181 of the Penal Code provides that a new trial may be granted only in the cases enumerated in seven subdivisions of the section. The ground relied on here must be included, if at all, in subdivision 4, which is as follows: "When the verdict has been decided by lot, or by any means other than a fair expression of opinion on the part of all the jurors." It would be quite a stretch of construction to hold that the sickness or mental condition of a juror would be one of the "means" contemplated by this language; and yet we are not prepared to say that some extreme cases of this kind might not, by necessity, be brought within it,—such, for instance, as the insanity of a juror occurring after the jury had been impaneled, and not discovered until after the verdict. It is sufficient, however, for the purposes of this appeal, to say that no such extreme case was made out by the evidence received by the court, or offered by the appellant, on the hearing of the motion. There was no pretense that the juror was of "unsound mind." The most that can be said of the evidence is that in the opinion of some physicians the pain which the juror suffered from, an attack of pneumonia, must have prevented him from exercising that "keen judgment or calm deliberation" which a juror ought to possess. We think, therefore, that, under any view of the law, the court below properly held this ground for a new trial insufficient. There are no other points in the case necessary to be noticed. Judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed.

ZARO v. DAKAN, Sheriff. (No. 11,310.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 15, 1888.)

SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES—WRONGFUL SEIZURE—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a sheriff for seizing, as property of a third person, goods claimed by plaintiff, the ownership of the goods is the point in issue; and, possession being merely evidence of title, it is error to instruct the jury that the verdict must be for plaintiff if, at the time of the levy, he was owner or in possession.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; F. J. McCANN, Judge.

Action by Marko Zaro against Elmer Dakan, sheriff of Santa Cruz county, for levying upon apples, which plaintiff claimed, as property of another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

A. S. Kittredge and Goldsby & Jeter, for appellant. Charles B. Younger and J. Edward Marks, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The defendant, as sheriff of the county of Santa Cruz, on January 31, 1884, attached the apples in controversy under a writ issued in the case of Hodge v. Burns et al. Plaintiff brought this action to recover the value of the property, claiming to be the owner thereof. The answer denies that plaintiff is the owner of the property, and alleges ownership in Burns et al. At the trial the evidence introduced by the plaintiff tended to show that he was the owner of the property at the time it was taken by the defendant. The evidence introduced by the defendant tended to show that, prior to the levy of the attachment, plaintiff had sold the property to Burns, and that the latter had the possession and control thereof. At the request of the plaintiff, the court instructed the jury as follows: "(7) The issuance and delivery to the defendant of the writ of attachment issued in the case of L. C. Hodge vs. William S. Burns et al. did not justify the defendant in attaching the apples in controversy if, at the time the defendant attached them,—if he did attach them,—said plaintiff was the owner or in possession of them; and if the jury believed from the evidence that, while said plaintiff was owner or in possession of said apples, said defendant took them, and has not returned them to said plaintiff, then said plaintiff is entitled to recover, and the verdict must be in his favor."

The court erred in giving this instruction. The ownership of the apples was the question in issue. The actual possession of the property at the time was evidence of title only. The plaintiff may have been in possession of the property, at the time of the levy, without ownership therein. The instruction quoted above was not qualified or explained by other instructions given. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

SCHEERER v. EDGAR, Auditor. (No. 11,032.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 15, 1888.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—AUDITOR—WARRANTS.

Under act Cal. April 23, 1853, (Worley's Comp. p. 42,) authorizing the auditor of San Francisco to audit any and all sums that may be allowed and ordered paid by the board of supervisors, by authority of the act, and giving the board power to order judgments against the city and county to be paid, where the board has ordered payment of a judgment to be made to the judgment creditor, the auditor has no authority to draw the warrant in favor of an assignee of the judgment, although he had notice of the assignment.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. LAWLER, Judge.

Petition by Joseph Scheerer against William Edgar, auditor of the city and county of San Francisco, to compel defendant to draw a warrant in his favor. Writ granted, and the auditor appeals.

John L. Love and George Flournoy, Jr., for appellant. E. A. & G. E. Lawrence, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action instituted for the purpose of compelling, by a writ of mandate, the auditor of the city and county of San Francisco to draw his warrant on the treasurer in favor of the assignee of a plaintiff, who had obtained a final judgment for a sum of money against said city and county. It appears that Paul Friedhofer was the plaintiff for whom the judgment was rendered; that before the auditor drew his warrant on the treasurer, the judgment had been assigned by Friedhofer to the petitioner in this action; that the auditor had notice of the assignment, but drew the warrant in favor of Friedhofer, the person ordered paid by the board of supervisors. The court below gave judgment in accordance with the prayer of the petitioner, and from that and an order denying a new trial this appeal is taken. The authority of the auditor to draw his warrant on the treasurer for the payment of a final judgment against the city and county depends upon section 2 of an act approved April 23, 1853, to be found on page 42 of Worley's Compilation of the Consolidation and other Acts relating to the Government of the City and County of San Francisco, which is as follows: Sec. 2. "The auditor of said city and county is hereby authorized to audit * * * any and all sums that may be allowed and ordered paid by said board of supervisors, by authority of this act." Another part of this act gives the board power to "order paid any final judgment against said city and county." It is unnecessary to discuss here the question as to whether that act has been so amended as that such judgments must be paid out of the general rather than the surplus fund. The order made by the board for the auditing and payment of the judgment in controversy is in this language: "Authorization No. 3496. Resolved, that an expenditure of two thousand and forty-nine 47-100 ($2,049.47) dollars be and the same is hereby authorized to be made out of the general fund in payment to Paul Friedhofer in satisfaction of judgment rendered for plaintiff and against the defendant in the suit of Paul Friedhofer v. The City and County of San Francisco, in the superior court, department three, for the sum of $1,756.00, with costs and interest, as follows:

Judgment,	$1,756 00
Costs,	241 05
Interest, four and one-half months, at 7 per cent. per annum,	52 42
Total,	$2,094 47"

Admit that the auditor had notice that the judgment upon which this authorization was issued had been assigned to the plaintiff, before he drew his warrant for the payment of it to Paul Friedhofer, and then the question presents itself, did he then have, or has his successor now, any right under the law to recognize any one as entitled to have him draw a warrant in his or her favor, except the person or persons specified in the order made by the board? If the auditor, as, we think, is here shown by the complaint and the findings, drew the warrant, as he was authorized under the order of the board to do, and the person there nominated as the one entitled to it received it, is not his duty as a ministerial officer performed? It can be readily perceived that it will sometimes occur that the auditor may be entirely justified in refusing to draw warrants as ordered by the board. But while his right to disobey an illegal order may properly exist, and can be exercised, it would seem to be beyond his power to substitute his own affirmative action for that of the board as to matters within their jurisdiction. He can refuse to draw a warrant, but, as it seems to us, he cannot go further and draw his warrant in favor of some other person than the one whom the board has ordered to be paid. In this case the course of the auditor, in making his warrant payable to Friedhofer, was proper, notwithstanding the assignment, because the judgment was payable to him, and the order of the board of supervisors directed that the amount should be so paid. Having drawn a proper warrant, the duty of the auditor was ended, and he cannot be compelled to draw a second warrant, still less to draw one in favor of a party who is not entitled to it under the order of the board. The assignment of the judgment gave to the plaintiff the right to the warrant when it was drawn, and to compel Friedhofer to execute a proper transfer thereof to him, if he refused to do so; but it did not give him the right to compel the auditor to draw a warrant not authorized by law.

We therefore advise that the judgment and order be reversed, and the writ denied.

I concur: HAYNE, C.

BELCHER, C. C., did not participate in this opinion.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed, and the writ denied.

LOVELAND v. ALVORD C. Q. M. Co. et al. (No. 12,446.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 14, 1888.)

ATTACHMENT—APPEAL FROM JUSTICE'S JUDGMENT BY PLAINTIFF—RELEASE OF PROPERTY.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 553, providing that, "if the defendant recover judgment against the plaintiff, * * * all the property attached remaining in the sheriff's hands must be delivered to the defendant or his agent, the order of attachment shall be discharged, and the property released therefrom," an attachment of defendant's property in a justice's court is dissolved upon judgment in his favor, though plaintiff appeals.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; J. M. WILIS, Judge.

Action by J. S. Loveland against the Alvord Consolidated Quartz Mining Company and J. B. Osborne to compel the defendant corporation to transfer on its book, and issue to plaintiff, a certificate of stock attached by plaintiff in a former action, and, after the date of the attachment, sold to the defendant Osborne. Judgment was for plaintiff, from which defendants appeal.

Paris, Goodcell & Fox, for appellants. Hargrave & Gray, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. The respondent commenced an action in the justice's court against J. T. Kenworthy and H. S. Loveland, and in that action caused an attachment to issue and be levied upon 8,706 shares of the capital stock of the Alvord Consolidated Quartz Mining Company as the property of said Kenworthy. In due time said action was tried in said justice's court, and judgment was rendered in favor of defendants therein. From that judgment the plaintiff in said action (respondent here) appealed to the superior court, where he recovered judgment against said defendants. Pending said appeal in the superior court, and before any judgment was rendered therein, said Kenworthy transferred said stock to appellant Osborne, and said transfer was duly entered on the books of said company. An execution was issued upon the judgment recovered by respondent in the superior court, and levied upon said stock, and, pursuant to said execution, said stock was sold. Respondent, being the purchaser at said sale, and receiving a certificate thereof, demanded of the company and of Osborne a transfer of said stock to him, (respondent,) which was refused, and thereupon he brought this action to compel a transfer of said stock. The court below rendered a judgment in his favor, from which this appeal is taken.

We shall assume that the stock was duly attached under and by virtue of the writ of attachment, issued in the action commenced in the justice's court, and confine ourselves to the question whether, upon the rendition of the judgment in favor of the defendants in that action, the attachment became ipso facto dissolved. Section 553, Code Civil Proc., provides that, "if the defendant recover judgment against the plaintiff, any undertaking received in the action, all the proceeds of sales and money collected by the sheriff, and all the property attached remaining in the sheriff's hands, must be delivered to the defendant or his agent, the order of attachment shall be discharged, and the property released therefrom." As attachment is merely a creature of statute, its existence and operation, in any case, can continue no longer than the statute provides it may. And there is no express authority given to a sheriff to retain in his custody property seized by him under and by virtue of a writ of attachment issued out of a justice's court after a judgment in the action in which the attachment issued is rendered in favor of the defendant. No provision is made for his detention of it pending an appeal from such a judgment. In the absence of any such provision, it seems quite clear that under section 553, Code Civil Proc., supra, the defendant Kenworthy, after judgment in his favor, could make any disposition of the property which he could have made before it was attached, with like force and effect. If that be so, it follows that his transfer of it to defendant Osborne was valid. Judgment and order reversed.

BERNHEIM v. CHRISTAL et al. (No. 11,097.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 15, 1888.)

INSOLVENCY—PREFERENCE—EVIDENCE.

On appeal by plaintiff from an order granting a new trial in an action to set aside as fraudulent, under the California insolvent act of 1880, § 55, the lien of a confessed judgment and execution thereon, the evidence being conflicting as to whether the creditor had reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent, or that he owed any one else, or whether the seizure was made with a view to obtain a preference, within the meaning of the act, the order will not be disturbed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; J. H. LOGAN, Judge.

Action by Carl H. Bernheim, assignee in insolvency of Henry O'Donnell, against J. F. Christal and E. Dakan, sheriff, to set aside the lien of an execution and judgment alleged to have been fraudulently confessed by O'Donnell to Christal, contrary to the provisions of the insolvent act of 1880. On the trial, verdict was had for plaintiff. From an order setting aside the verdict, and granting a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

J. M. Lesser and Napthaly, Freidenrich & Ackerman, for appellant.
Charles B. Younger, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. This is an action brought by the plaintiff, as assignee of one O'Donnell, to set aside a lien by judgment and execution claimed to have been obtained contrary to the provisions of the insolvent act of 1880. In 1882, O'Donnell borrowed $1,000 from Christal, and gave a note therefor, payable in 90 days. On the 3d of March, 1883, Christal commenced an action on the note, and on the same day O'Donnell filed a verified answer admitting each and every allegation of the complaint, and consenting to a judgment against himself, as prayed for. On the same day judgment was entered, execution issued, and placed in the hands of the sheriff, and a levy made on the merchandise of O'Donnell. Immediately thereafter, involuntary proceedings in insolvency were instituted by the San Francisco creditors of O'Donnell, and thereafter an order was made declaring said O'Donnell to be an insolvent debtor. Section 55 of the insolvent act reads as follows: "If any person, being insolvent, or in contemplation of insolvency, within one month before the filing of a petition by or against him with a view to give a preference to any creditor or person for a claim against him, procures any part of his property to be * * * seized on execution, * * * the person * * * to be benefited * * * by such seizure having reasonable cause to believe that such person is insolvent, and that such * * * seizure * * * is made with a view to prevent his property from coming to his assignee in insolvency, or to prevent the same from being distributed ratably among his creditors, or to defeat the object of, or in any way hinder, impede, or delay the operation of, or to evade, any provisions of this act, such transfer, payment, conveyance, pledge, or assignment is void."

The fact that a transfer is not made in the usual and ordinary course of business is only prima facie evidence of fraud. Section 55, Insolvent Act of 1880. The evidence shows that Christal had made several demands upon O'Donnell for payment of the money after it became due, and before he commenced his action. The defendant testified that he did not know that O'Donnell was insolvent, or that he owed any one except himself; that he had no idea of trying to get ahead of O'Donnell's creditors, and did nothing to prevent O'Donnell's property from being distributed among the creditors; that O'Donnell did not offer any preference, or ask him to bring the suit, or talk with him at all about it, except that he consented to file an answer, doubtless to save costs of summons and attachment. The matter seems to have been left by the defendant to his attorney entirely, and without any intention whatever of securing any preference over the other creditors. Upon the showing, we cannot see that the court erred in granting a new trial. Considering all the presumptions in the case and the testimony of the witnesses, it must be conceded the evidence is conflicting. Order affirmed.

MELLOR v. CROUCH, Judge of Superior Court. (No. 12,602.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 18, 1888.)

NEW TRIAL—STATEMENT—SETTLEMENT—NOTICE.

Where defendant serves on plaintiff a statement and notice of a motion for a new trial, and plaintiff gives notice of amendments to the statement, which defendant does not accept, but delivers the statement and amendments to the clerk for the judge, and the latter fixes a time for a hearing, and the clerk gives notice of the time to both parties, it is the duty of the judge to proceed to settle the statement without any notice by defendant to plaintiff, under Civil Code Cal. § 659, providing that, if such amendment be not adopted, the moving party can serve five days' notice on the other party, and proceed before the judge, or leave the statement with the clerk for the judge, who, under section 650, is required to fix a time for settling the same, while the clerk is required to give notice to the parties.

Department 2. Original proceedings in mandamus.

F. E. Johnston, for petitioner. Thomas P. Stoney and Dennis Spencer, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Petition for a writ of mandate to compel respondent, judge of the superior court of Napa county, to settle a statement on motion for a new trial. Petitioner was defendant in a certain action pending in the said superior court, and, judgment having been rendered in favor of the plaintiff therein, the petitioner served and filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial, and, in due time, prepared a draft for a statement on motion for new trial, and served it upon the attorney for plaintiff. In due time the attorney for plaintiff therein prepared and served upon petitioner certain amendments to said statement. Within 10 days thereafter the petitioner, not desiring to adopt said amendments, delivered said proposed statement and said amendments to the clerk of said court for the judge thereof, the respondent herein; but petitioner did not serve upon the plaintiff in said action any notice that he had delivered said statement and amendments to said clerk, nor did he serve any notice whatever. The said clerk immediately delivered said papers to said judge, who afterwards designated a time at which he would settle said statement, and the clerk notified the parties of such designation. But at the time designated the attorneys for plaintiff in said action appeared and objected to the settlement of the statement, because petitioner had given no notice to plaintiff of his intention to present the statement and amendments to the judge, or to deliver the same to the clerk, or that he had not adopted the amendments. And for these reasons alone the respondent refuses to settle the statement. The proceeding in mandate was submitted on a demurrer to the petition, it being agreed that the facts are correctly stated in the petition, and that final judgment may follow the disposition of the demurrer. We think that it is the duty of the respondent to settle the statement. The parts of the Code of Civil Procedure which govern the determination of the question here presented are contained in sections 659 and 650. Section 659 provides as follows: "If not adopted, the proposed statement and amendment shall, within ten days thereafter, be presented by the moving party to the judge, upon five days' notice to the adverse party, or delivered to the clerk of the court for the judge; and thereupon the same proceedings for the settlement of the statement shall be taken by the parties and clerk and judge, as are required for the settlement of bills of exception by section 650." Section 650 has a similar provision about proposed bills of exceptions and amendments, and the delivery thereof to the judge or clerk, and proceeds as follows: "When received by the clerk he must immediately deliver them to the judge. * * * When received from the clerk the judge must designate the time at which he will settle the bill, and the clerk must immediately notify the parties of such designation. At the time designated the judge must settle the bill." The obvious purpose of these provisions is that the parties may have notice of the time when the statement will be settled. When the statement and amendments are presented directly to the judge there is no provision for any notice of the time of settlement to be thereafter given by either the judge or clerk; and in such case, therefore, the five days' notice mentioned in section 659 must be given by the party himself. But when the papers are delivered to the clerk for the judge, the purpose of the Code is effected through the requirement that then the judge must designate a time for the settlement, and the clerk must give notice of it. The provision about the five days' notice in section 659 qualifies, we think, only the preceding clause of the sentence, and is not applicable to the case when the statement and amendments are delivered to the clerk for the judge. The point that petitioner did not notify plaintiff in the said action of his refusal to adopt the amendments, and that he thereby elected to adopt them, cannot be maintained. The Code provides for no method of signifying a refusal to adopt other than the delivery of the statement and amendments to the clerk or judge. The demurrer to the petition is overruled, and it is ordered that the writ issue as prayed for.

SAN FRANCISCO SAV. UNION v. MYERS et al. (No. 11,325.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 20, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—MATTER NOT APPARENT ON RECORD.

That a judgment was indorsed "agreed to" does not show that it was rendered by consent, especially as the judgment recited a hearing, and purported to be rendered upon the evidence, and the alleged stipulation of consent was not made part of the bill of exceptions.

2. SAME—DECISION—REVERSAL.

Where a judgment in foreclosure is rendered in excess of the demand in the complaint, for an amount expended during litigation under authority of the mortgage in the absence of any showing that the excess was not in fact due, such judgment will not be modified on appeal, but reversed, though by the terms of the mortgage the effect of a new trial is to enable the plaintiff to collect 2 per cent. interest per month on the sum due up to the entry of a new judgment.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; N. HAMILTON, Judge.

Edward Lynch, for appellant. Wm. F. Herrin, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Suit to foreclose a mortgage. It appears that the judgment in favor of the plaintiff was based in part upon certain expenditures which he was authorized by the mortgage to make, but which were not alleged in the complaint. That the complaint does not support the judgment is unquestionably a ground for reversal. The respondent contends, however, that the judgment was in pursuance of a stipulation. What is claimed to constitute a stipulation consists in the words "agreed to," which, the transcript states, appear in lead pencil on the back of the judgment. There is nothing to show that the judgment was based upon this "agreement," nor even when the latter was written. Upon the motion to dismiss the appeal it was held that the judgment was not a consent judgment, the court, per MCKINSTRY, J., saying: "It does not appear whether they [the names] were signed before or after the judgment was rendered or entered; or, if signed before, that the words 'agreed to' were intended to mean anything more than that the draft of the decree or judgment prepared to be presented to the judge was agreed to as properly expressing the judgment ordered by the court." 72 Cal. 162, 13 Pac. Rep. 403. In addition to this it may be stated that even a formal stipulation appearing in a transcript is not a part of the judgment roll, and must therefore be incorporated in a bill of exceptions in order to constitute part of the record on appeal. Spinetti v. Brignardello, 53 Cal. 283. In the case of Hopkins v. Wiard, 72 Cal. 260, 13 Pac. Rep. 687, cited by counsel, the record on file shows that all the facts were set forth in the bill of exceptions, so that even if it be assumed in favor of respondent that a stipulation could give the court jurisdiction as to expenditures not alleged in the complaint, it does not appear from the record that there was any such stipulation. We do not think that a stipulation can be presumed. If it could, it would be necessary to have a bill of exceptions in every case to show affirmatively that the judgment was not by consent, which is certainly not the case.

The appellant asks that the judgment be not reversed, but that it be modified by striking out so much as is not authorized by the complaint, so that he shall not be subjected to a retrial in the court below. It is not suggested that the excess was not in fact due to the respondent. The avowed ground is that if a new trial be ordered, the respondent "would be enabled to collect interest at 2 per cent. per month up to the entry of a new judgment." The respondent, however, is not responsible for this. The appeal is the appellant's own act; and while, in a case like the present, it is in the discretion of the court to order either a new trial or a modification, it would be somewhat strange for it to act upon the principle that the respondent ought to be prevented from obtaining what will be admittedly due under his contract. We advise, that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

MAGGINI v. PEZZONI. (No. 12,563.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 20, 1888.)

1. EQUITY—CANCELLATION OF DEED.

Where, in an action by an administratrix to set aside an alleged voluntary deed of her intestate, the court finds that the intestate was at the time of unsound mind, and incapable of making a deed, and that the deed was without consideration, a judgment for plaintiff will be sustained, though the court also found that no unfair advantage was taken of the intestate or undue influence exercised over him by defendant, thereby negating in part the allegations of the complaint.

2. SAME—PLEADING.

In an action to set aside a deed, the complaint alleged that the deed was procured through undue influence, and was without consideration, and that it was recorded in the office of the county recorder, but did not, except inferentially, aver its execution. Held, that such defect, not affecting the substantial rights of the parties, was not ground for reversal, after trial and judgment on the merits, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 475, which provides that no judgment shall be reversed by reason of error or defect not affecting the substantial rights of the parties.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; R. M. DILLARD, Judge.

Action by Augusta Maggini, administratrix of Charles Maggini, deceased, against Antonio Pezzoni, to set aside a deed alleged to have been fraudulently procured by the defendant of the deceased, shortly before his death. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

J. M. Wilcoxon and W. C. Stratton, for appellant. B. F. Thomas and Thos. McNulta, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. The appeal is from the judgment, and two questions are presented for our consideration: First. Does the complainant state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action? Second. Do the findings support the judgment? The action is brought to have a certain deed vacated and set aside, and the record thereof canceled. The plaintiff sues as the administratrix of Charles Maggini, deceased, and alleges that at a time when he was of unsound mind and incapable of making any contract or transacting any business, the defendant, by taking an unfair advantage of said Maggini's weakness of mind and incapacity to transact business, induced and procured him to give an apparent consent to the execution and delivery of a grant deed for certain premises described in said complaint to the defendant, for the pretended consideration of $1,000; that the deed was given without consideration and that it is recorded in the office of the county recorder. The objection to the complaint is that it does not contain a direct, positive allegation that said Charles Maggini executed a deed to the defendant. This is an objection which ought to have been obviated when the complaint was demurred to, if not before; but we are not disposed to treat the objection now as a fatal one. "The court must, in every stage of an action, disregard any error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties, and no judgment shall be reversed by reason of such error or defect." Code Civil Proc. § 475. Here there is an attempt to allege what should be alleged in plain, positive language. The failure constitutes a defect in the pleading, which, in our opinion, does not affect the substantial rights of the parties. The court found that a deed was executed by said Maggini to the defendant, and a copy of the deed is contained in one of the findings. With nothing outside of the judgment roll before us, we must assume that all the findings are justified by the evidence. That being so, we think the substantial rights of the parties were not affected by the defect objected to. The findings that said Charles Maggini was, at the time of executing said deed, of unsound mind, and incapable of making a deed, and that he made it without consideration, are, in our opinion, sufficient to support the judgment. The finding that defendant took no unfair advantage of said Maggini, and exercised no undue influence over him, negatives some of the allegations of the complaint; but the allegation that at the date of the execution of the deed said Maggini was of unsound mind, and incapable of making a contract, and that there was no consideration for the deed, is found to be true, and that is sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to the relief granted her. Judgment affirmed.

ARMSTRONG v. LOWE. (No. 12,540.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 19, 1888.)

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—POWERS OF AGENT—REAL-ESTATE BROKERS.

A contract in writing, whereby the owner of land authorizes real-estate brokers to sell and receive deposit on same, at a certain price per acre, does not authorize them to execute a contract to convey.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; D. S. GREGORY, Judge.

Action by W. M. Armstrong against D. Lowe to recover damages for breach of an alleged contract to sell and convey land. Defendant had made the following contract with a firm of real-estate agents: "SAN LUIS OBISPO, CAL., January 6, 1887. Cook & Henderson, Real-Estate Agents: You are hereby authorized to sell my property, and receive deposit on same, situated in * * *, county of San Luis Obispo, * * * for two hundred dollars per acre, cash." Plaintiff testified that he entered into negotiations with Cook & Henderson for the purchase of the land, and introduced in evidence a written contract of sale signed by Cook & Henderson. Trial being had without a jury, the court found that defendant never agreed or contracted to sell or convey to plaintiff, and that plaintiff never at any time agreed to purchase of defendant any land whatever, and that plaintiff never at any time paid to the defendant any sum of money upon any contract concerning any real estate, and dismissed the complaint. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, which being overruled, plaintiff appeals.

J. M. Wilcoxson, for appellant. Venable & Goodchild and W. H. Spencer, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The sole question in this case is whether the real-estate brokers whom the defendant employed "to sell" certain real property had authority to execute a contract to convey. We think that, upon the authority of Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 244, 245, it must be held that they had not, and that the case of Rutenberg v. Main, 47 Cal. 219, is not in point. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

I concur: FOOTE, C.

BELCHER, C. C., took no part in this opinion.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

WHEATON v. NORTH BRITISH & MERCANTILE INS. CO. (No. 9,929.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1888.)

1. INSURANCE—APPLICATION—OVERVALUATION.

In an action on a fire insurance policy which made the application a warranty and a part thereof, and provided that, if any false representation was made of the condition, etc., of the property, "or any overvaluation, or any misrepresentation whatever, either in a written application or otherwise, * * * this policy shall become void," there was evidence that the insured stated to the agent that the value of the property was about $1,500. The application, which was written by the agent, and which did not state the extent of his agency, stated the value to be $1,800. The true value was $1,302. There was evidence that insured did not read the application, or know of the statement therein as to value. Held, that neither the oral nor written representation debarred plaintiff from recovering unless intentionally or fraudulently made, or so negligently made as to induce an overvaluation.

2. SAME—ACTS OF AGENT.

In such an action an instruction that if the insurance agent had seen the property, and inserted a value in the application not given by the insured, and the latter signed the application without reading it, and without having his attention called to the valuation, and without knowing the valuation inserted therein, and was induced to do so by an act on the part of the company, the company was estopped from denying the correctness of such valuation, was as favorable to the company as it could require.

3. SAME—CONDITIONS OF POLICY—WAIVER—ESTOPPEL.

In an action on a fire insurance policy, an instruction that if the company's agent had knowledge of the overvaluation of the property in the application, and, after the fire, sent others to examine as to the value, and was informed by them that the value was much less than that stated in the application, and believed them; and afterwards requested proofs of loss from the insured, and thereby put him to the trouble and expense of making such proofs, the jury would be authorized to find that defendant waived any forfeiture resulting from any overvaluation in the application, is error where the policy requires proofs of loss to be furnished, and it is not shown that the agent knew or believed that the overvaluation was intentional, since a waiver by estoppel, to be binding, must be made with full knowledge of the circumstances, and must cause the other party to suffer some loss that he would not otherwise have sustained.

4. SAME—PROOF OF LOSS—WAIVER.

Where a fire insurance policy provided that proofs of loss should be served as soon after the loss as possible, and that the use of general terms, or anything less than a specific agreement indorsed on the policy, should not be construed as a waiver of any condition therein, and that the agent had no power to waive any of its printed conditions, nor to revive a forfeited policy, an instruction that delay in furnishing proofs was waived if, when served on the agent, he omitted to make objection on the ground of delay, and kept and never attempted to return them, the facts not being controverted, is not reversible error, though it is bad practice to instruct the jury to infer a fact from other facts, since the provisions of the policy refer to waiver of the conditions of the contract, and not to such matters as making proof of loss, which may be waived by an agent.

5. SAME—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the statement on motion for new trial, in an action on an insurance policy contained no specification of insufficiency of evidence to sustain a finding that a forfeiture of the policy on the ground of misrepresentation was waived, and the defendant did not ask for an instruction indicating what facts should appear to make an instruction as to waiver appropriate, an instruction that the company need not take advantage of a breach of warranty, but might waive a forfeiture by any act which, after its full knowledge of the forfeiture, subjects the insured to trouble and expense as to his claim for insurance, is not ground for reversal of a judgment for plaintiff as having been misleading.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. K. WILSON, Judge.

Action by Wheaton against the North British & Mercantile Insurance Company upon a policy of fire insurance. Defendant's local agent was Otto, and its general agent in the state was Grant. The policy provided that "persons sustaining loss or damage by fire shall forthwith give notice of said loss to the company, and, as soon thereafter as possible, render a particular account of such loss, signed," etc. Among the instructions given were the following: "If the written application for the insurance policy in question was filled up by Mr. Otto, or his clerk, in the absence of Mr. Wheaton, the applicant for insurance; and if Mr. Otto was the local agent, at Santa Cruz, of the defendant, and had seen the property described in the application, and inserted the value of such property in the application, in the absence of Mr. Wheaton, and without such valuation being dictated or given to him by Mr. Wheaton, and Mr. Wheaton signed the application on the front and reverse sides without reading it, and without having his attention called to said valuation, and without knowing what valuations were inserted in such application, and was induced to do so by any act or acts upon the part of the defendant,—then the corporation defendant is estopped from denying the correctness of the valuations expressed in said application." "That the delay in the presentation, by the plaintiff to the defendant, of the preliminary proofs, was waived if, when the preliminary proofs were served upon the agent of the defendant, he omitted to make any objection on the ground of delay in their presentation by Mr. Wheaton, and kept such preliminary proofs, and never returned them, or attempted to return them, to Mr. Wheaton." Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appealed.

T. C. Van Ness, for appellant. McAllister & Bergin, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. In Insurance Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837, the insured signed an application for a life policy, containing declarations as to his life, and past and present health, warranting the truth of such declarations. The application contained the stipulation that inasmuch as only the officers at the home office had authority to determine whether or not a policy should issue on any application, and they acted only on the written statements and representations referred to, no statements or representations made or information given to the persons soliciting or taking the application for the policy should be binding on the company, or in any manner affect its rights, unless they were reduced to writing, and presented to the home office in the application. There it appeared the agent of the company asked questions of the applicant, and the latter made answers which, if correctly written down, "would probably have caused the company to decline the risk." The agent, without the knowledge of the applicant, wrote down false answers, concealing the truth, which were signed by the applicant without reading, and by the agent transmitted to the company, and the company thereupon assumed the risk. It was said that it was the duty of the applicant to read the application before signing it; and as the application on its face showed that the power of the agent was limited, and as it was conditioned in the policy that the answers were part of it, and that no statement to the agent not thus transmitted should be binding on the principal, the policy was void. It seems to have been held that the insured must be presumed to have had notice of the limitations upon the powers of the agent contained in the application which he would have received if he had read the application. The case is distinguished from Insurance Co. v. Wilkinson, 13 Wall. 222, and Insurance Co. v. Mahone, 21 Wall. 152; the court saying: "In neither of these cases was there any limitation upon the power of the agent brought to the notice of the assured."

In the case at bar there was evidence that the plaintiff did not read the application prepared by the agent, and had no knowledge of the statement therein as to the values of the property insured. The application does not contain any express limitation upon or define expressly the authority of the agent. The present case is within the principles laid down in Insurance Co. v. Wilkinson, 13 Wall. 222, and Insurance Co. v. Mahone, 21 Wall. 152. In Insurance Co. v. Wilkinson it was held that insurance companies who do business at a distance from their principal place of business are responsible for the acts of their agent within the general scope of the business intrusted to his care, and no limitations of his authority will be binding on parties with whom he deals which are not brought to their knowledge. Hence, when the agent undertakes to prepare the application for the insured, he will be regarded in doing so as the agent of the insurance company, and not of the insured. In Insurance Co. v. Mahone a like ruling was made; and it was held that an answer to a question put to an applicant, as written down by the agent of the company when he takes the application signed by the applicant, may be proved by the testimony of persons who were present not to have been the answer given by the applicant. The law bearing upon the question is very clearly laid down by May in his work on Insurance: "Insurers may and often do find themselves in such a position that they cannot avail themselves either of breach of warranty or of misrepresentation or concealment; and, when in this position, they are said to be estopped from availing themselves, or to have waived the right to avail themselves, of such a defense. And the rule here is, with reference to the negotiations had at the time of taking out the policy, that when the application is reduced to writing by the insurer or his agent upon the oral statement of the applicant, whether the application is or is not made tantamount to a warranty by being made part of the contract, the insurer being under a strong moral obligation to secure to the applicant the protection for which he pays, if a controversy arises upon the truthfulness of the application, and statements alleged by the insurer to be essential are omitted, and others falsely made, and he seeks to avoid the contract on that ground, parol evidence is admissible to show that, at the time the negotiations were pending, the facts alleged to have been omitted or falsely stated were in fact truly stated." Page 751, § 497.

Of course, it was for the jury who tried this cause to decide whether the plaintiff knew of the contents of the application before he signed it, or whether he gave a different valuation to that therein inserted, and had reason to believe that his statement as to value had been written down as he gave it. In the answer as written down by the agent of defendant herein, the properties insured are stated to be severally worth $900, $500, and $400,—$1,800 in the aggregate. There was testimony that, prior to the preparation of the written application, the plaintiff stated to the agent of the defendant that the value of the whole property insured was about $1,500. The amount of insurance was $1,100,—$600, $300, and $200. At the trial it was stipulated that the value of the insured property at the time of the insurance, and also at the time of the fire, was the amount stated in the plaintiff's preliminary proof of loss,—$1,302.18. The policy contains the clause: "Special reference being made to assured's application and survey No. 261,707, which is his warranty, and a part hereof." It also contains the stipulation and condition: "If any false representation is made by the assured of the condition, situation, or occupancy of the property, or any overvaluation, or any misrepresentation whatever, either in a written application or otherwise, * * * this policy shall become void." In Helbing v. Insurance Co., 54 Cal. 156, it was held that a provision in a policy of insurance that the application shall be considered a warranty, and if the property insured is overvalued in it the policy shall be void, applies only where the statements as to value are intentionally false; that the question of fraud is one of fact; that although, where the discrepancy between the statement in the application and the actual value of the property is so great as to convey the conviction of fraud to the reasonable mind, the jury may and ought to find fraud, yet, where the discrepancy is very considerable, the jury may find the application not to have been fraudulent, even in the absence of explanatory evidence. There have been decisions in other states to the contrary of the view of this court in Helbing v. Insurance Co.; the question being the construction of a condition that the policy shall be void in case of overvaluation. But, as said by Mr. Wood: "There can be no doubt that, in conformity with the ordinary rules of construction applied to insurance contracts, and the ordinary principles of justice and fair dealing upon which they are supposed to be predicated, a policy cannot be held to be void for breach of such a condition, unless the overvaluation is intentional and fraudulent, and not a fair expression of the honest judgment of the insurer, and the fact that the property has been considerably overvalued does not, of itself, establish such fraud on the part of the assured as avoids the policy, * * * and the burden is on the insurer to establish both the overvaluation and the fraud." 1 Wood, Ins. § 235. See cases pro and con cited in notes to the section. The estimate of value is an opinion. The answer to the question asked as to value is to be treated as if the question read, "What, in your honest judgment and opinion, is the value of the property?" The same learned writer says: "The doctrine that held the insurer up to a strictly exact valuation would be extremely unjust, and would result in vitiating one-half of the policies issued; for, under the rule, the difference of one cent is as disastrous as a difference of a large amount." Id. Moreover, the language of the provision in the policy here sued on, that, if any false representation is made by the assured, etc., the policy shall become void, when read as a whole, very clearly shows that a willful misrepresentation as to the value of the property, or one made with such gross and reckless carelessness as in law would be treated as willful, was in the contemplation of the parties. If so, the previous clause does not make the valuation a warranty. Even when the statements in the application are declared to be warranties, they will not be regarded as such if qualified by other stipulations which afford a fair inference that the parties themselves did not so intend them. The provision that an intentional overvaluation of the property should avoid the policy was utterly unnecessary, and must be disregarded, if it was intended the applicant should warrant the exact correctness of his valuation. May, Ins. § 161. The case at bar does not, however, require a full consideration of the doctrines of warranty, as applied to insurance contracts, which, whatever their form, are treated as conditions precedent. There was evidence that the $1,800 valuation was no part of the contract between these parties. If it be said that the statement of plaintiff—"about fifteen hundred dollars"—was not true, that statement was no part of the contract as merged in the writings; therefore no warranty. A representation is clearly distinguishable from a warranty; the former being a part of the proceedings which propose a contract, and the latter a part of the contract when completed. A misrepresentation renders the contract void on the ground of fraud; a non-compliance with a warranty is an express breach of the contract. Ang. Ins. 146, 147. A fraudulent misrepresentation will avoid the contract, whether it is expressly so stipulated or not. Representations are dehors the contract. If the policy was issued to the plaintiff without any answer in the application to the inquiry as to value, there could be no breach of warranty as to value. Carson v. Insurance Co., 43 N. J. Law, 300. That an overestimate of about $200 was not necessarily intentional or fraudulent is, as appears from what has been said, very clear. The charge of the court to the effect that the overvaluation did not deprive the plaintiff of his right to recover unless it was intentionally or knowingly made, or the application was so negligently made as to induce an overvaluation, was, under the circumstances, not erroneous. The charge, in so far as it seems to make the plaintiff's right to recover depend upon affirmative fraudulent acts and conduct of the defendant's agent, which induced the plaintiff to sign the application, was at least as favorable to the defendant as it was entitled to ask.

The court below instructed the jury: "When there has been a breach by the insured of the warranty contained in an application for insurance, the insurance company may or may not take advantage of such breach, and claim a forfeiture; but it may also waive a forfeiture, and this it may do by any act on its part which, after its full knowledge of such forfeiture, subjects the insured party to trouble and expense as to his claim for insurance on said forfeited policy." The sixth subdivision of the policy reads: "The use of general terms, or anything less than a distinct specific agreement clearly expressed and indorsed on this policy, shall not be construed as a waiver of any printed or written condition or restriction therein." And by the twelfth subdivision: "It is further understood and made part of this contract that the agent of this company has no authority to waive, modify, or strike from this policy any of its printed conditions, * * * nor, in case this policy shall become void by reason of a violation of any of the conditions thereof, has the agent power to revive the same," etc. The witness Heacock testified that the plaintiff did in fact read the application, and questions attached, before signing them. If the jury believed such testimony, it was evidence tending to show that the plaintiff had knowledge of the answer valuing the insured property at $1,800; that he approved of the statement, and by ratification recognized Heacock as his agent in preparing the application. If he did, with knowledge of the contents of the application, sign it, he was bound by the statements contained in it. And the difference of $500 was some evidence of an intentional overvaluation. Whether he did or did not know its contents was a question of fact for the jury. Upon the hypothesis that he did know, the charge last quoted was material, and may have controlled the action of the jury in finding their verdict. It becomes important, therefore, to inquire whether the charge correctly declares the law. It is contended by respondent that the limitation of the agent's power contained in subdivisions of the policy 6 and 12, above quoted, do not apply to a waiver of forfeiture based on an overvaluation of the property insured. But, if the statement that the property was worth $1,800 was the statement of the plaintiff, its correctness as the fair judgment of plaintiff was a condition entering into and forming a part of the contract of insurance; and it is to such conditions, and not to mere omissions in the mode or manner provided for proving the loss after a fire, that a clause, "nothing less than a distinct specific agreement, clearly expressed and indorsed on this policy, shall operate as a waiver of any printed or written condition or restriction therein," refers. Blake v. Insurance Co., 12 Gray, 265; Insurance Co. v. Ice Co., 36 Md. 102; McCormick v. Springfield Co., 66 Cal. 361, 5 Pac. Rep. 617. It is said in 1 Wood, Ins. § 235, that when the insurer, knowing the facts, does that which is inconsistent with its intention to insist upon a strict compliance with the conditions of the contract, it is treated as having waived their performance, and the assured may recover without proving performance; "and that, too, even though the policy provides that none of its conditions shall be waived except by written agreement." But the cases referred to are those in which the agent authorized to do so has waived the condition. There is a class of cases in which it has been held that, where the policy contains a provision that if the premium shall not be paid on a day certain, or shall not be paid when the policy is delivered, the policy shall be void, and that no agent is authorized to waive any condition without authority in writing; still, as the company may at any time authorize its agents to make agreements extending the time for payment of premiums, or waiving forfeiture for non-payment, it is not bound to act on the declaration in its policy that they have no such authority; that whether it has exercised its option to empower its agents to give credit or extend time is provable by evidence oral or written; and, as showing that the company has given its agent such power, evidence is admissible as to its practice in allowing him to extend the time. Carson v. Insurance Co., supra; Insurance Co. v. Norton, 96 U. S. 243; Insurance Co. v. Doster, 106 U. S. 30, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18. But, where the policy contained the provision that no agent had power to waive any condition without authority from the secretary in writing, and the agent delivered a policy without payment of the premium, and there was no evidence, oral or written, that he had power to do so, and the premium was not paid, it was held the holder of the policy could not recover. Insurance Co. v. Springs Co., 100 Pa. St. 137. The class of cases referred to is very different from that in which the policy provides that there can be no waiver except in writing indorsed on the policy. In the last case the mode enters into and is a part of the power. The insured has full notice, when he enters into the contract, that a condition cannot be waived by an agent to whom the provision as to written indorsement relates, except in the manner in the contract provided. It is insisted by appellant that the instruction last quoted must have misled the jury. The statement on motion for new trial contains no specification of insufficiency of evidence to sustain a finding that a forfeiture was waived,—a finding which may have been included in the general verdict; and the defendant did not ask for an instruction indicating what facts should appear to make appropriate the instruction given. Under the circumstances, we think the order refusing a new trial should not be reversed, because of the possible ill effect of a charge abstractly correct. We say "abstractly correct," for it cannot be doubted that an insurer may waive a condition orally, or by his acts or conduct. It may be remarked that this court has not held, in a case in which the question was necessarily decided, that a provision in a policy that there shall be no waiver of a condition, except by writing indorsed on the policy, applies to a waiver by a "general agent" of a foreign corporation, so named, and registered as such under the statute, with presumed original powers co-extensive with those of his principal, where no restriction upon his powers is inserted in the policy. See Steen v. Niagara Co., 89 N. Y. 315. In McCormick v. Springfield Co., supra, it was held that the facts were insufficient to prove a waiver or estoppel. If what is there said seems to imply that a general agent, restrictions upon whose general powers are not inserted in the policy, or brought home to the insured, can never waive a forfeiture, except by writing, etc., the statement is mere dictum. In Gladding v. Insurance Co., 66 Cal. 6, 4 Pac. Rep. 764, the scope or extent of the agent's authority did not appear. Nor do the exigencies of the present case demand a determination of the question suggested.

The court below charged the jury that the delay in the presentation by plaintiff to defendant of proofs of loss was waived if certain acts of the general agent of the defendant were proved to their satisfaction. The clause in the policy as to no waiver except by indorsement refers to those provisions of the policy which enter into and form a part of the contract of insurance, and which are properly designated as "conditions." It has no reference to those stipulations which are to be performed after a loss has occurred, such as giving notice, and furnishing preliminary proofs. Insurance Co. v. Ice Co., Blake v. Insurance Co., supra. There can be no doubt that the agent may waive a delay in presenting preliminary proofs. Whether, in this case, the agent did waive it, was, however, a question of fact for the jury, and it is not a practice to be commended for a court to instruct the jury that they must infer a fact from other facts. Const. art. 6, § 19. Yet, as the jury would not have been justified in finding, upon the facts recited, that the delay was not waived, the instruction did not injure the defendant. It would appear that the facts stated in the instruction were not controverted.

The court below instructed the jury: "If Mr. Grant was, at the time and after the fire in question, the agent of the defendant, and, as such, had knowledge of the fire in question, and also of the valuation of $1,800 of the insured property in question in plaintiff's application for insurance, and sent Mr. Sexton or Mr. Dimond to Santa Cruz to examine, after the fire, as to the value of the insured property in question, and was informed by the report of said Sexton or Dimond that said insured property was overvalued in said application, and was of much less value than $1,800, and believed said report; and if Mr. Grant, after all this, requested the plaintiff to make out preliminary proofs, and present vouchers in support of his claim on the policy of insurance in question, and thereupon the plaintiff was put to the trouble and expense of making preliminary proofs as to his said claim by said action of Mr. Grant,—if you find such action established by the evidence,—you will be authorized to find that the defendants waived any forfeiture resulting from any overvaluation of the insured property in plaintiff's application for said insurance." It has been held that an adjustment of a claim by an insurer after a loss, and an agreement to pay a certain sum in liquidation, is a new contract, and that, in an action on such new contract, the insurer cannot, in the absence of fraud, set up a breach of warranty or condition of the policy, even if ignorant of the breach until after the agreement to pay. 2 Wood, Ins. § 450. We understand this to mean fraud on the part of the insured which induces the insurer to enter into the settlement. But here there was no such adjustment or agreement, and the action is on the policy. The waiver spoken of in the instruction is another term for estoppel. There can be no estoppel where the facts are not known, as no one can be presumed to have waived that, the existence of which he has not known. Finley v. Lycoming Co., 30 Pa. St. 311; Forbes v. Agawam Co., 9 Cush. 470; Allen v. Vermont Co., 12 Vt. 366; Biddle Boggs v. Mining Co., 14 Cal. 279. And the facts proved must be such that an estoppel is clearly deducible from them. Estoppels are not favored. Franklin v. Merida, 35 Cal. 558. The representation, whether by word or act, to justify a prudent man in acting upon it, must be plain, not doubtful or matter of questionable inference. Certainty is essential to all estoppels. Bigelow, Estop. 559. It is true, the jury were told that, if the recited acts were proved, they were "authorized," not required, to find the estoppel. But, as we have seen, the difference between the statement of value in the application and the actual value, even if very great, is at most but evidence of an intentional overvaluation; and, to constitute a breach of the condition, the overvaluation must be intentional. It would appear that a "considerable" overvaluation does not of itself establish fraud prima facie. 1 Wood, Ins. § 235. Even if it be conceded that, had the jury inferred fraud from an overvaluation of $500, the verdict would not have been set aside, it is certain that if they had found no fraud, notwithstanding an overvaluation of $500 unexplained, we would not annul the verdict as being against the evidence. From the circumstances assumed in the instruction the agent of the defendant was not bound to know as a fact that there had been a breach of the condition. He may have believed no fraud, although he accepted as true the statements contained in the reports of his subordinates. Even if those reports aroused his suspicions, he may, as a prudent and reasonable man, have reserved the matter for further investigation. He was not estopped, as having knowledge of a fact, because another fact was brought to his attention which might have excited his suspicion, or even if the fact of which he had notice ought to have put him upon inquiry. The appropriate time for investigation as to breaches of warranty or falsity of representation is when application is made for payment of a claim, and presentation of the proofs. 2 Wood, Ins. § 450. It would be unjust to the agent of defendant to assume that he anticipated the possible result of such investigation, and determined there had been an intentional overvaluation prior to the investigation. And it would place an insurer in the power of a fraudulent applicant if, having some reason to suspect a fraudulent representation, although not in possession of evidence on which he could prudently rely to prove it, he should be held to be estopped from establishing the fact that the representation was intentionally false, because he had received or asked for proofs of the loss. Even if the jury would have been authorized to infer that the agent knew of the intent to overvalue if he knew of the overvaluation, they were not so instructed. They were told they might find an estoppel from the agent's knowledge of an overvaluation, and his request for preliminary proofs; and must have understood that they could find the estoppel by direct inference from his knowledge of the overvaluation, whether he had or had not knowledge that it was intentional. This they were not authorized to do. The question is not whether there was any evidence tending to prove knowledge by the agent of a fraudulent overvaluation, but whether the jury could properly be instructed that they could directly infer, from a fact which tended to prove another fact, that which they were authorized to infer only from the fact which the probative fact tended to prove. As an intentional overvaluation would alone avoid the policy, it would seem clear that knowledge by the defendant of such intentional overvaluation was one of the facts necessary to be proved to make out an estoppel. If so, the jury were not authorized to find estoppel upon mere knowledge of the overvaluation, and request by defendant for the production of proofs of loss.

In cases like the present it must appear that the insured was misled to his prejudice; and, where no act has been done or left undone by the insured in reliance on the act or non-action of the insurer, there can be no estoppel. May, Ins. § 507; McCormick v. Springfield Co., supra. The acts or declarations must have influenced the conduct of the other party, to his injury. Biddle Boggs v. Mining Co., supra. An estoppel can never arise by implication alone, except by some conduct which induces action in reliance upon it to an extent which renders it fraud to recede from what the party has been induced to expect. Security Co. v. Fay, 22 Mich. 467. An equitable estoppel is only called into existence for the prevention of wrong and redress of injury. There must be some element of wrong in the action of the party creating it. He must know, or have sufficient reason to believe, that another party will place himself in a different position, or subject himself to additional injury, in consequence of the action or representation. The jury were not authorized to find that the plaintiff was "put to the trouble and expense of making preliminary proofs as to his claim" by the agent's request that he make such proofs. The plaintiff could not have been induced to go to such trouble and expense by the mere waiver of time within which the proofs were to be made, or of the stipulated mode of making them. It was equally his duty to make them, whether the time and mode were waived or not. His action is to be referred to the contract; his motive to the necessity of making the proofs as a preliminary to securing the insurance. After he was requested to make the proofs he had agreed to make, he made them; but the statement that he was induced to make them by the request is only a post hoc ergo propter hoc. The waiver was for his benefit, and simply left him with a right to make proofs after the time, or in a different manner, from that prescribed. Such must have been understood by both parties to be the purpose of the waiver as to the production of the preliminary proofs or the request for them. Nor were the jury authorized to find that the plaintiff would have abandoned all claim against the defendant had he been informed that the latter would resist the claim in reliance upon a breach of the condition as to overvaluation. Whether the defendant waived any forfeiture by reason of a breach of that condition or not, it was the duty of the plaintiff to make proof of his loss, and no greater effect should be referred to a request for such proof than such as would naturally, or in the usual course of things, be caused by it. His request cannot be enlarged beyond its natural import and meaning,—a waiver of plaintiff's previous failure to produce, or irregularity in producing, the preliminary proofs. The plaintiff's "trouble and expense" in preparing such proofs could not operate to estop the defendant from asserting a right which had no direct relation to or connection with their production. Were the jury authorized to find, upon the facts recited in the instruction, that it was a fraud on the part of the defendant to insist upon a breach of the condition with respect to an intentional overvaluation? There can be but one answer to the question. The facts recited could not establish an estoppel such as the jury were instructed could arise from them. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

WOOD v. STROTHER. (No. 11,397.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 13, 1888.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREET ASSESSMENT WARRANTS—MANDAMUS TO COMPEL AUDITOR TO COUNTERSIGN.

Under Laws Cal. 1871-72, p. 813, § 10, providing that the auditor, before countersigning a street assessment warrant, "shall examine the contract, the steps taken previous thereto, and the record of assessments, and must be satisfied that the proceedings have been legal and fair," mandamus is the proper remedy to compel him to countersign the warrant, since there is no other remedy in law or equity, and the determination of the auditor was not intended to be final.

2. SAME—STREET ASSESSMENT WARRANTS—FORMER INVALID ASSESSMENT.

In proceedings for mandamus to compel the auditor to countersign a street assessment warrant, pursuant to Laws Cal. 1871-72, p. 813, it is no defense that a previous invalid assessment has been issued, or that some of the property owners then paid their proportion, as such payments are to be treated as advances.

3. SAME—STREET ASSESSMENT WARRANTS—DISCRETION OF AUDITOR IN COUNTERSIGNING.

In Laws Cal. 1871-72, p. 813, § 10, providing that the auditor must be satisfied, before countersigning a street assessment warrant, that the proceedings have been "legal and fair," as it is not possible that it was the intention to give the auditor power to refuse to sign upon his own notion of fairness, though the proceedings may have been legal, the word "fair" is surplusage.

4. SAME—STREET ASSESSMENT DECLARED VOID—DELAY IN MAKING SECOND ASSESSMENT.

Where there is considerable litigation over a street improvement assessment required to be made within no specified time by Laws Cal. 1871-72, p. 813, providing therefor, and finally declared void in May, 1883, a delay until May 1885, to make a second assessment, is not such a delay as will deprive a party of his right to the assessment.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

Action by J. M. Wood against F. F. Strother, auditor of the city and county of San Francisco, to compel the defendant to countersign a warrant issued by the superintendent of public streets for $2,294, the amount of an assessment for macadamizing and curbing by plaintiff's assignor of a certain street along premises assessed. Judgment was in favor of plaintiff, awarding the writ of mandamus. Defendant appeals.

City and Co. Atty. George Flournoy, Jr., for appellant. J. C. Bates, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. This is an appeal from a judgment awarding a writ of mandamus to the auditor of San Francisco to countersign a street assessment warrant under the act of 1872. That act provides that the warrant shall be countersigned by the auditor, "who, before countersigning it, shall examine the contract, the steps taken previous thereto, and the record of assessments, and must be satisfied that the proceedings have been legal and fair." Laws 1871-72, p. 813, § 10. The word "fair" seems very loosely used in the above provision. In common usage it would convey some idea of justice or equity. But it is not possible that it could have been intended that in a case where the proceedings are legal—that is to say, in accordance with the requirements of the act—the auditor could refuse to sign upon the ground that the law was not just, or upon his own undefined notions of fairness. The word, therefore, adds nothing to the force of the word "legal," but is one of those expressions which are put in for the sake of the sound, and which convey no definite meaning.

With reference to the legality of the proceedings which the auditor is to examine, viz., "the contract, the steps taken previous thereto, and the record of the assessments," we think there can be no doubt but that if a competent court finds, after examination, that they are illegal, it will not compel the auditor to sign the warrant. The first question, therefore, is whether the proceedings were illegal. We see no illegality in them. The first defense states that the defendant "has no information or belief upon the subject sufficient to enable him to answer," and therefore he denies, seriatim, that the various proceedings set forth in the complaint were taken. The second defense avers "that he has examined said contract, and the steps taken previous thereto, as they are set out and referred to in said petition, and the record of said assessment mentioned in said petition, and is not satisfied that the proceedings upon which the same is based are or have been legal or fair." It is to be observed of these two defenses that they are not necessarily inconsistent.

ent; for the second does not specify wherein the proceedings are illegal, nor does it say that the auditor is satisfied that they are so. It simply says that he has not made up his mind on the question. But it would make no difference if the defense had set up that he was satisfied that the proceedings were illegal; for the court finds facts which show that the steps required by the street law were taken. The appeal is from the judgment only, and none of the evidence is brought up. The findings, therefore, are to be taken to be true; and it follows that the proceedings were "legal."

The second and third defenses set up matters which are outside of the proceedings referred to by the section under which the auditor acted, namely, that a former assessment had been made for the same work, and that "the greater part of the amounts therein assessed were many years since paid to and collected by plaintiff or his assignor, and that the plaintiff had lost his right by lapse of time." The court finds that no valid assessment had previously been issued. If there was a previous assessment which was invalid, that would not, of itself, be a reason why a valid assessment should not be made if the prior proceedings are sufficient to support it. Himmelmänn v. Cofran, 36 Cal. 412. Nor would the fact that some of the property owners had paid their proportion before the invalidity was discovered, affect the question. Such payments would be regarded as payments in advance; and the contractor would not be allowed to collect the sums over again any more than the holder of a note who has received payment before it was due would be allowed to do so. If the contractor should refuse to discharge the lien of record, a court of equity is amply competent to afford the necessary relief. The fact that some have paid in advance can afford no protection to those who have not paid.

Nor is the lapse of time a sufficient reason why the auditor should refuse to sign. The act fixes no time in which the assessment must be made. Dyer v. Scalmanini, 69 Cal. 640, 11 Pac. Rep. 327. Doubtless it must be done in a reasonable time. But the question of reasonableness of time is to be determined upon a consideration of all the circumstances. An apparently unreasonable delay might be explained by evidence. It does not seem to us that the auditor is charged with the duty of conducting an investigation into such outside circumstances. And if it be said that the writ of mandamus issues only in the discretion of the court, or, as it is sometimes said, is a "prerogative" writ, the answer is that we cannot say that there was an unreasonable delay. There was considerable litigation over the first assessment, which was not declared void until May 30, 1883. The second assessment was made May 12, 1885. We do not think that the lapse of time should deprive the party of his assessment.

The proceedings being "legal," the auditor was wrong in his refusal to countersign the warrant; and the remaining question is whether he can be compelled to sign by the writ of mandamus; in other words, whether mandamus is the proper remedy. The learned counsel for the appellant has directed most of his argument to this question. The argument against the writ is, in substance, that the statute requires the auditor to examine the proceedings, and satisfy himself that they are legal before signing; and that if he has examined them, and become satisfied that they are not legal, the most that can be said is that he has committed an error in a matter confided to his discretion; and that the function of the writ is not to review such exercise of discretion. It must be acknowledged that this argument is exceedingly plausible. There are innumerable cases in which it has been laid down that mandamus cannot issue to control discretion. The rule—which is undoubtedly correct, when properly understood—has been expressed in various forms. It has been repeatedly said that the writ cannot perform the functions of a writ of error; that it cannot issue to revise judicial action, but can only compel the performance of ministerial functions; and that it will issue to compel a tribunal to act in some way, but not in any particular way. These formulas undoubtedly express a truth; but they express it in an inaccurate and misleading manner. And by reasoning from them, as if literally and in all cases true, courts have sometimes been led into error, and have frequently been forced to call acts "ministerial" which are plainly not so. An examination of the authorities will demonstrate the inaccuracy of the above phrases. Thus it is not accurate to say that the writ will not issue to control discretion; for it is well settled that it may issue to correct an abuse of discretion, if the case is otherwise proper. Ex parte Bradley, 7 Wall. 377; State v. Lafayette Co., 41 Mo. 226; Village of Glencoe v. People, 78 Ill. 389; People v. Superior Court, 10 Wend. 285; Railroad Co. v. Stockton, 51 Cal. 339; Tapp. Mand. 14. So while, in one sense, it is correct to say that the writ cannot be made to perform the functions of a writ of error, in another sense it is not; for as was said by Chief Justice MARSHALL in Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 193: "A mandamus to an inferior court of the United States is in the nature of appellate jurisdiction." See, also, People v. Bacon, 18 Mich. 253. So it is not universally true that the writ will not issue to control judicial action, or to compel a tribunal, to whom the examination of a matter is intrusted, to act in a particular way. The cases in our own state show this. Thus in Russell v. Elliott, 2 Cal. 245, the writ issued to compel a judge to enter judgment upon the report of a referee. Here the judge had examined the matter, and had arrived at the conclusion that it was not proper that the judgment should be entered upon the report. But the higher court differed with him, and commanded him to do what as a judge he had refused to do. So in Mining Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 130, the writ was issued to compel the judge of a district court to issue an attachment for contempt in disobeying an injunction. A motion had been made to the judge to commit the offender, but the judge had decided that he could not do so. Here the matter was certainly to be determined by the judge in the first instance. He erred in his conclusion. And to say that a correction of such error by mandamus is not revising judicial action, or not compelling the judge to act in a particular way, is a misuse of language. So it is well settled that a mandamus may issue to compel a judge to sign a bill of exceptions. People v. Lee, 14 Cal. 510; People v. Rosborough, 29 Cal. 416; People v. Keyser, 53 Cal. 184; Lin Tai v. Hewill, 56 Cal. 118; People v. Crane, 60 Cal. 279. Whether the party has a right to have a bill, or whether it is in time, are certainly judicial questions, and they are to be decided in the first instance by the judge, who, if he decide them correctly, will not be compelled by the writ to take back his decision. Clark v. Crane, 57 Cal. 629. Is anything gained by calling such decision a "ministerial" act? So in Railroad Co. v. Stockton, 51 Cal. 329, a mandamus was issued to compel the delivery of certain bonds, although the act provided that the bonds were to be delivered upon certificate of the council that the "road has been constructed and the track laid in a manner and of a character acceptable to them."

Decisions similar in principle have been made in other courts. In King v. Justices, 5 Barn. & Adol. 667, the writ issued to compel the justices of the West Riding to hear an appeal which they had dismissed upon the ground that a certain notice had not been given. PARKE, J., said: "We have no right to interfere with the discretionary power of the sessions. Where they have that power their discretion is to be confided in. But the question, what is such reasonable notice as gives them jurisdiction to entertain an appeal? is a legal question, of which they are not the exclusive judges; and this court will see that in determining such a point they act legally and according to the jurisdiction which they possess." In Reg. v. Recorder, 1 Eng. Law & Eq. 294, the foregoing seems to have been limited to cases where the erroneous decision was upon preliminary matters. The court, per PATTESON, J., said: "Queen v. Goodrich, [19 Law J. Q. B. 413,] draws the true distinction, that when any preliminary step is necessary in order to give the court of quarter sessions power to hear the appeal, and the court comes to a wrong conclusion of law, not of fact, in respect to that preliminary step, this court will interfere by mandamus." The doctrine of the foregoing cases was approved in Castello v. Circuit Court, 28 Mo. 274, in which the court declared that it had seen no American cases to the contrary. In New York, where the formulas as to discretion, judicial action, etc., have often been repeated, it has been held that the writ may issue to compel a judge to vacate an order granting a new trial upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence, which order was in violation of the established rules that there must be no laches, and that the newly-discovered evidence must not be cumulative merely; there being no other adequate remedy. People v. Superior Court, 10 Wend. 285, 5 Wend. 114. So where the court of common pleas set aside the report of referees upon the merits, and erred in doing so, the writ issued to correct the error. People v. Court of Common Pleas, 12 Wend. 246. So where the court of common pleas granted the plaintiff leave to amend his declaration, but, under an erroneous view of the law, refused to grant leave to the defendant to plead, a higher court (per BRONSON, J.) awarded a mandamus commanding the inferior court, either to allow the defendant to plead or refuse to allow the declaration to be amended. People v. Court of Common Pleas, 18 Wend. 534. In Michigan, the rule as to discretion, etc., prevails. See Houghton Co. v. Auditor General, 36 Mich. 273; Parks v. Circuit Judge, 38 Mich. 244; Wells v. Circuit Judge, 39 Mich. 21; Railroad Co. v. Circuit Judge, 40 Mich. 168; Stork v. Superior Court, 41 Mich. 5. Yet in that state the writ has issued in the following cases: To compel a judge to set aside a judgment rendered against the relator, because of an illegal notice of trial, (People v. Bacon, 18 Mich. 247;) to compel a court to vacate an order overruling a motion for relator's discharge from arrest, (Watson v. Superior Court, 40 Mich. 730;) to compel a judge to vacate an injunction, (Van Norman v. Circuit Judge, 45 Mich. 205, 7 N. W. Rep. 796;) to compel a judge to vacate an order denying a motion to amend a record, (Frederick v. Circuit Judge, 52 Mich. 529, 18 N. W. Rep. 343.) In Alabama the rule as to discretion prevails. See Ex parte Railroad Co., 44 Ala. 655, 656. But in that state the writ has issued in the following cases: In Ex parte Lowe, 20 Ala. 330, the court had granted a new trial upon condition that costs were paid within a certain time. The costs were paid, but not, as was claimed, within the time prescribed by the order. The court took this view, and made the judgment absolute. The higher court considered that the view of the lower court was erroneous, and awarded a mandamus to compel a new trial. So, where a court gave an improper construction to a stipulation of record, and ordered a trial where it ought to have ordered a judgment in accordance with the stipulation, the writ was issued to compel a judgment. Ex parte Lawrence, 34 Ala. 446. So the writ was issued to compel a probate judge to approve a bond which had been tendered to him, and which he had refused to approve, (Ex parte Candee, 48 Ala. 387,) and to compel a chancellor to reinstate a bill which he had ordered stricken from the docket, (Ex parte State, 51 Ala. 69.) And decisions similar in principle have been made in other states. In Ex parte Pile, 9 Ark. 336, a judge was compelled by the writ to issue an injunction which he had refused to issue. In State v. McArthur, 13 Wis. 407, the writ issued to compel a change of venue. In Com. v. Sessions of Norfolk, 5 Mass. 435, it issued to compel a justice to accept a verdict and render judgment thereon. And see, also, State v. Lazarus, 36 La. Ann. 579; Com. v. Sessions of Middlesex, 9 Mass. 388; Rand v. Townshend, 26 Vt. 670; Delaney v. Goddin, 12 Grat. 266; Gresham v. Pyron, 17 Ga. 263; Ex parte Martin, 5 Ark. 371; Barnett v. Circuit Court, Hardin, 182.

In view of the foregoing cases, it seems a mere perversion of language to say that the writ will never issue to control judicial action, or to compel a tribunal to act in a particular way. It is by no means intended to assert that the writ could issue in this state in all the cases above referred to. The propriety of the issuance of the writ in any case must depend upon whether, under the law of the state where the litigation arises, the determination was intended to be final; and, if not, upon whether the system of practice furnishes any other adequate remedy. These things might be different in different states. But the cases cited serve to show that the formulas above mentioned are not universally and literally true, and that it is dangerous to reason from them as if they were so. In every case the tribunal that is to act must determine in the first instance whether the case is a proper one for its action. And in our opinion the true tests are whether its determination is intended by law to be final, and, if not, whether there is any other "plain, speedy, and adequate remedy." If the determination of the tribunal was intended to be final, it is plain that it cannot be disturbed, either on mandamus or in any other way. If it was not intended to be final, but there is another "plain, speedy, and adequate remedy," the writ cannot issue; for it was not designed to usurp the place of other remedies. But if the determination was not intended to be final, and there is no other adequate remedy, the writ must issue. Otherwise there would be an admitted wrong without a remedy. The writ issues in such case to prevent a failure of justice. And this is its ancient office. In the language of Lord MANSFIELD: "It was introduced to prevent disorder from a failure of justice, and defect of police. Therefore it ought to be used upon all occasions where the law has established no specific remedy, and where, in justice and good government, there ought to be one." Rex v. Barker, 3 Burrows, 1268. See, also, 3 Bl. Comm. 110; Tapp. Mand. 9; Com. v. Sessions of Hampden, 2 Pick. 418.

It will generally happen that where discretion is committed to an officer, or where a judicial tribunal is called upon to act, its determination is either final, or only subject to review in certain prescribed ways. But, as above shown, this is not universally true, and it is dangerous to reason as if it were so. The ultimate test is, in our opinion, as we have stated. In the present case there can be no doubt that the auditor was to examine the proceedings, and satisfy himself that they were legal, for the statute expressly says so; and if they were found by the court to be illegal the writ could not issue. But, being perfectly legal, the question is whether the determination of the auditor was intended to be final; and we can see no ground for saying that it was. There is nothing in the language of the act which shows that it was intended to be final. It certainly would not be final in favor of the contractor. In the numerous cases in which street assessments have been before the court we have never seen it suggested that the signature of the auditor cured previous illegality, and it seems clear that it would not do so. Why, then, should it be final against the contractor, and be conclusive that the proceedings are illegal, when it is apparent that they are not so? If the auditor's determination of this purely legal question were intended to be final, it would have been natural for the charter to have given the parties interested a hearing. Nothing of the kind is provided. The proposition, therefore, must go to this extent: that the auditor is clothed with absolute and despotic authority over the rights of the contractor. We are not prepared to go so far. If the determination of the auditor be not final, then, upon the principles above stated, the writ must issue; for under the street law the failure to sign the warrant brings the proceedings to a complete stop, and there is no other remedy in law or equity. We advise, therefore, that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

76 Cal. 578

MALONE v. BIG FLAT GRAVEL CO. et al. (No. 9,876.)(Supreme Court of California. June 16, 1888.)

1. MECHANIC'S LIEN—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO LIEN—MINING TOOLS AND MACHINERY.
Under Civil Code Cal. § 661, "all machinery or tools used in working or developing a mine are to be deemed affixed to the mine," and therefore are subject to lien for labor in the mine; and blacksmithing and repair work done on such machinery and tools may be made a lien on the entire mining property.
2. SAME—FOR WHAT OBTAINED—CONTRACT FOR LABOR OF OTHERS.
A contractor for the labor of others at a fixed rate for each man per day is entitled to a lien for the labor furnished by him as an original contractor, but not if acting merely as an employment agent for the laborers.
3. SAME—PROCEEDINGS TO PERFECT—FORM OF NOTICE.
A notice of mechanic's lien, alleging in substance that the claimants were employed by the defendant company, without naming the company's agent, who in fact made the contract, is sufficient.
4. SAME—WHEN TO BE FILED.
Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1187, providing that claims of lien "for the performance of any labor in a mining claim" must be filed within 30 days thereafter, laborers employed at a fixed compensation per month are not for that reason required to file notice of lien within 30 days from the end of each month.
5. SAME—ENFORCEMENT—COMPLAINT.
Where a notice of mechanic's lien sets out a contract for a fixed rate of compensation per month, and the complaint in the action to foreclose, to which the claim is attached as an exhibit, sets up a contract for labor "to the extent and value of" a sum named, without alleging any specific promise, the complaint is bad for ambiguity, and also because of the variance.
6. SAME—JOINDER OF CLAIMS.
In an action by an assignee to foreclose various liens for labor performed in a mining claim, there is no misjoinder of causes of action from the fact that several of the claims were filed against a claim of 40 acres, a part only of the entire property of the company, which consisted of several distinct claims, aggregating in all 500 acres, and that other claims were made against the entire tract.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Del Norte county; JAMES E. MURPHY, Judge.

Action by John Malone, assignee of S. R. Heath and others, against the Big Flat Gravel Company and O. M. Paris, a judgment lien creditor of the company, to foreclose certain claims for liens for labor performed in the company's mine. Copies of the notices of lien were attached to the complaint as exhibits. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal.

W. H. H. Hart, (Wm. H. Fifield, of counsel,) for appellants. Daniel Titus and L. F. Cooper, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Suit to foreclose laborers' liens. The plaintiff is the assignee of 26 liens for labor performed upon certain mining claims owned and operated by the Big Flat Gravel Mining Company. The proceedings arose under, and are to be governed by, the law as it stood in 1880. Each lien is set up in a separate count. The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the appeal is by the company and one Paris, who held a judgment lien.

1. The contract set forth in the notices of lien are different from the contracts set forth in the complaint. The notices all set forth contracts for labor at a fixed rate. The lien of Heath, which is the first in the complaint, may be taken as a type of them all. Its statement of the contract is as follows, viz.: That the company "entered into a contract with said S. R. Heath, under and by virtue of which said labor was performed, and the following is a statement of the terms, time given, and condition of said contract: To work at general blacksmithing in and upon said premises for an indefinite time at the rate of seventy-five ($75) dollars per month, payable on demand." In addition to the above, all the liens, (except that of Heath) speak of "the contract price." Independent of these latter words, however, we think it is plain that the statement in the lien is that of a contract by which the rate of compensation is fixed. The statement in the complaint is of contracts by which the rate of compensation is not fixed. All the counts are similar in form. They allege in substance that the party performed labor upon the mine "to the extent and of the value of" so many dollars. If a promise had been alleged it might have been argued that such allegation would cover the case either of an express or of an implied promise, and that the allegation as to value was surplusage; but, no promise having been alleged, the only promise that can be inferred is the one implied by law to pay the reasonable value of the labor, which would leave the important question as to the amount unsettled. This is an essentially different contract from those set out in the notices of lien. And as we understand the law, the plaintiff can recover only upon the contracts stated in the notices of lien. We do not mean to say that a difference in the amounts stated and the amounts proved would be fatal, and it is possible that there may be other differences which would not be material. But we think that in all essentials the contracts must be the same.

Such difference was a ground of demurrer for ambiguity. Frazer v. Barlow, 63 Cal. 71. The demurrer specified the ambiguity, and should have been sustained. In addition to this, the notices of lien, when offered in evidence, were objected to on the ground of a variance; and it was error to overrule said objections. The foregoing is sufficient to dispose of the appeal; but inasmuch as certain questions, which will arise upon a retrial, have been argued, we proceed to consider them.

2. It is contended for appellants that there was a misjoinder of causes of action. The facts are that the company owned about 500 acres of placer mining ground, which consisted of four claims, designated respectively as A, B, C, and D. Claim C, which comprised 118 acres, appears to have been made up of smaller claims, among which is the "John Mains" claim of about 40 acres. Upon this 40-acre claim was a saw-mill, which was moved from its former position on claim A. The claims were all adjoining each other, and the whole 500 acres was in the form of a strip along Hurdy Gurdy creek, which strip was bounded on one side by the creek, on the other side by the Big Flat ditch, which was used to supply water to the claims, on the north by McGrew gulch, and on the south by French gulch. The whole appears to have been used and operated as one mine. Twenty-three of the liens are upon the "John Mains claim" of 40 acres, and upon the ditch. These notices mentioned the saw-mill and the connecting pipes, flumes, etc., and also some "giants." The remaining three liens are upon the whole $500 acres, with the ditch and improvements.

The position is, in the first place, that the cause of action as to the "John Mains" claim should not have been joined with the cause of action as to the whole 500 acres, and that said 500 acres consisted of at least four separate claims, which should not have been joined with each other or with the ditch; and, in the second place, that there is stated a cause of action as to certain machinery, "giants," pipe, etc., which, if "lienable" at all, ought not to have been joined with the claims. We do not think there was a misjoinder. Section 1195 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "any number of persons claiming liens may join in the same action." This provision, it will be observed, does not say whether the lien must be all upon the same property or simply against the same person. We incline to the former construction. But we think that since the several claims all adjoin each other, with the ditch as a backbone, and are all owned by the same owner, and were used and operated as one mine, they may be considered as one piece of property for the purpose of the present question. We do not understand that the 500 acres consisted of land which was not subject to appropriation for mining purposes, as appears to have been the case in Williams v. Association, 66 Cal. 198, 5 Pac. Rep. 85. As we gather from the record, the 500 acres consisted of placer mining ground. And a party is not restricted in the quantity which he may acquire by purchase, but may purchase as many adjoining claims as he can, and have them included in one patent. Smelting Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636. We do not say that the unity of the property follows from the unity of ownership alone, but from that and the other circumstances mentioned. Taking the several claims to constitute one piece of property for the purposes of the mechanic's lien law, we think there was no misjoinder of causes of action. All the liens were upon the John Mains claim and the ditch and improvements, and the fact that three of them included something further is not material. The court can adjust the rights of the parties by its decrees. See, generally, People v. Hagar, 52 Cal. 171; Brady v. Kelly, Id. 371. With reference to the iron pipe, giants, etc., we think they must be regarded as part of the mine, whether they were attached to it or not; for the Civil Code provides that all "machinery or tools used in working or developing a mine are to be deemed affixed to the mine." Civil Code, § 661. The complaint is not very satisfactory in some of the above respects, but as the case must be reversed for the matter first mentioned, it can be amended so as to conform to the principles above stated.

3. It is contended for the appellants that the statement in the notices of lien as to the name of the person by whom the claimant was employed is not sufficient. All the notices state in substance that the claimants were employed by the Big Flat Gravel Mining Company. The argument is that this is the statement of a conclusion of law, and the Code requires the notice of lien to state who, in fact, employed the claimant. The case of McDonald v. Backus, 45 Cal. 262, contains the statement (the other cases cited are not, in our judgment, in point) that the notice of lien is required to state facts, and not mere conclusions of law. This was said to show that a notice of lien was sufficient if it gave the name of one member of the firm by which the claimant was employed, omitting the other members, and not giving the firm name. Possibly that case was correctly decided. We express no opinion as to it. But we do not think that the broad statement as to conclusions of law can be maintained. According to it, if the owner sends his office boy to order repairs upon a building, and the boy simply tells the laborer to make the repairs, without saying for whom, the notice of lien must give the name of the office boy as that of the person by whom he was employed. And the result would be similar if the person who sent for the laborer was himself a contractor. What good would it do for the claimant to put in his notice the name of the contractor's office boy, or that of any chance messenger,—say, an American District Telegraph boy,—as that of the person by whom he was employed? The word "employed" is not appropriate in such a connection. Nor is there anything in the nature of the case which would give such a meaning to the word. In our opinion, the intention was that the claimant should put enough in his notice of lien to enable the owner to understand whether the claimant was an original or subcontractor; in other words, whether the claimant asserted that he contracted with the owner, and had a personal claim against him, or whether he contracted with the contractor, and looked only to him and the property. The rights and duties of the two classes of claimants are materially different in several respects, and it is important for the owner to know which attitude the claimant assumes. But we should prefer not to lay down any rule about facts and conclusions of law. And in this connection we may say, as was said in Wood v. Wrede, 46 Cal. 637, that "we are certainly not disposed to defeat a lien by a nice criticism of the language in which the claim is set forth."

4. It is urged that several of the claims are not "lienable." The lien of Heath shows that he was a blacksmith. He worked in the blacksmith shop which was upon the property, sharpened picks and drills, made pipe, and did other necessary work. It is said that this was not labor upon the mining claim. But, as we have shown, the tools and machinery used in working and developing the mine are "deemed affixed to the mine." Civil Code, § 661.

Hence it would seem to follow that work upon the tools and machinery, while they are so used, is work upon the mine. This applies to several liens. The notice of lien filed by Ah Jake states that "the said Big Flat Gravel Mining Company was to pay to the said Ah Jake the sum of $50 per month for his individual labor and services, and also the further sum of $1 per day for the labor of one certain class which he might furnish, and the sum of $1.25 per day for the labor of another certain class." It is said that Ah Jake could not have a lien for the labor which he furnished in accordance with the above; that the laborers so furnished should have filed liens themselves; and that there could not be two liens for the same labor. It will be observed that the contract stated in the notice of lien is that the sums to be paid for laborers furnished by Ah Jake are to be paid to him. He was the original contractor, and the laborers were the subcontractors. And we think he was as much entitled to a lien as any other original contractor. The maxim qui facit per alium facit per se applies. It is no objection that the subcontractors could also file liens. That is the case wherever a subcontractor files a lien. The court below adjusts its decree so that the owner does not have to pay twice. If the transaction stated in the notice of lien had shown that Ah Jake simply acted the part of an employment office, and that the company was liable directly to the laborers, he would not have been entitled to a lien for their labor. There are some small matters shown by the evidence which are not "lien-able," as, for example, the deer and bear meat supplied by Morris. This should be deducted from the amount due him; but we do not think it vitiates his lien for what was due. We do not deem it incumbent upon us to go through the mass of small details collected by counsel for appellants. It is sufficient to say that the character of the work should not be scrutinized too strictly. If the labor had a legitimate connection with the working of the mine, it is sufficient within the meaning of the lien law.

5. It is contended that, where the laborers worked by the month, the notice of lien should be filed within 30 days from the end of each month. This assumes that each month is separate and distinct from every other month, and requires a separate notice of lien. But we do not think that this can be implied from the words "within thirty days * * * after the performance of any labor in a mining claim." Code Civil Proc. § 1187. Upon the same reasoning, we should have to say that persons who worked by the day should file a separate notice for each day's work.

The other points do not require special notice. We, therefore, advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to sustain the demurrer, with leave to amend.

I concur: FOOTE, C.

BELCHER, C. C., took no part in this opinion.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to the court below to sustain the demurrer, with leave to amend.

1. EVIDENCE—HEARSAY—STATEMENT OF PARTY.

In an action to have a deed absolute upon its face declared a conveyance in trust, and the land restored to the grantors, on the ground of repudiation of the trust, declarations made by plaintiffs to their attorney, in defendants' absence, touching the conveyance, are inadmissible in evidence in their favor.

2. JUDGMENT—PARTIES.

When a party is joined as defendant in a suit, and no judgment is entered or rendered either for or against him in the final decree, the cause is not disposed of as to him.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; D. S. GREGORY, Judge.

This was a suit brought by George Schultz and Henry Von Barga against George D. McLean and C. P. Robinson to have an absolute deed declared a trust conveyance and to have the lands restored to plaintiffs on the ground of defendants' repudiation of the trust. There was a decree in favor of plaintiffs. Both defendants appeal from the order denying a new trial, and defendant McLean also appeals from the judgment.

T. M. Osment, F. Adams, and V. A. Gregg, (John Garber, of counsel,) for appellants. T. C. Van Ness and J. A. Waymire, (J. P. Hoge, of counsel,) for respondents.

THORNTON, J. The court below erred in allowing the following question to be put by plaintiffs to Waymire, their attorney in this case, who was called by them: "What statement did Schultz make to you in regard to the contract which was made between him and McLean, at the time he first consulted you in regard to this suit, and before you drafted the complaint? I want to know whether the statement made to you was the same statement made here on the stand." And also erred in admitting the answer to the foregoing question. Schultz went to Waymire, and made the statement inquired about to him in regard to his case. Neither of the defendants was present when this statement was made. If such a statement is admissible, a party can make evidence for himself. For what reason or on what ground the court admitted it we cannot conjecture. For the foregoing error the judgment and order denying a new trial must be reversed, and the cause remanded. No judgment has been entered or rendered either against or in favor of defendant Robinson. The cause is not then disposed of as to him. Diggins v. Reay, 54 Cal. 526. The court should have passed on the cause as to all the defendants. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded.

SCHULTZ et al. v. McLEAN. (No. 11,436.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 19, 1888.)

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; D. S. GREGORY, Judge.

Appeal of George D. McLean, defendant, from the judgment in an action by George Schultz and Henry Von Barga against George D. McLean and C. P. Robinson. See Schultz v. McLean, ante, 775.

F. Adams, V. A. Gregg, and T. M. Osment, for appellants. T. C. Van Ness, and J. A. Waymire, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. The judgment and order in this cause were reversed in cause numbered 11,150, ante, 773, and therefore the order herein will also be reversed. Ordered accordingly.

PEOPLE v. BURKHART et al. (No. 12,581.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 19, 1888.)

SHERIFF—ACTION AGAINST—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

When a sheriff is ex officio tax collector, and gives separate bonds for the faithful performance of the duties of each office, an action on his bond as tax collector, for taxes collected and not paid over, is not barred by the expiration of the statutory period prescribed by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 839, within which actions may be brought against a sheriff.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; HENRY M. WILLIS, Judge.

Rowell & Rowell, for appellant. Andrew B. Paris, Dist. Atty., for the People.

FOOTE, C. This is an action against a tax collector, and the sureties on his bond, as such, for taxes collected by him, and not paid over to the county treasurer, as required by law. The plaintiff had judgment as prayed for, and from that the appeal is prosecuted. The only point made for the reversal of the judgment is that the action was barred by the statute of limitations of two years under Code Civil Proc. § 339, subd. 2. From the findings it appears that the failure to pay over the taxes as required by law had taken place about two years and eleven months prior to the bringing of the action, and that the defendant was sheriff and ex officio tax collector of his county. As to the time within which actions must be initiated to save the bar of the statute, section 339, Code Civil Proc., reads as follows: "Within two years: (1) * * *; (2) an action against a sheriff, coroner, or constable, upon a liability incurred by the doing of an act in his official capacity, and in virtue of his office, or by the omission of an official duty, including the non-payment of money collected upon an execution," etc. It is claimed that the defendant was tax collector because he was sheriff, and therefore the obligation he incurred by not paying over the taxes he had collected was as a sheriff, and not as tax collector, and hence the statute supra had run in his behalf. It is true, he was tax collector ex officio because he was sheriff; but, when he became tax collector, he was both sheriff and tax collector. He was liable faithfully to perform the duties pertaining to both offices, and gave separate bonds for such performance. The offices are distinct, although held by the same person, and required separate bonds. People v. Ross, 38 Cal. 76; County Government Act, §§ 57-59; Butte Co. v. Morgan, 18 Pac. Rep. 115. "The duties and obligations of the one are entirely independent of the duties of the other. * * * They are not so blended that the bond executed for the faithful performance of the duties appertaining to the one would embrace, in the absence of the statute, the obligations of the other. * * * The duties of sheriff, as such, relate to the execution of the orders, judgments, and processes of the court. * * * They have no relation to the collection of revenue." People v. Edwards, 9 Cal. 292. It is clear that the obligation which the defendant incurred was by virtue of his failure to perform his duty as tax collector; and that being so, section 337, Code Civil Proc., would have applied had four years elapsed from the time of his dereliction of duty until suit brought. Section 339, subd. 2, supra, did not apply, and the action is not barred. San Francisco v. Heyne-mann, 71 Cal. 153, 11 Pac. Rep. 870. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

I concur: HAYNE, C

BELCHER, C. C., did not take part in this opinion.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

76 Cal. 610

LIGARE v. CALIFORNIA SOUTH. R. CO. (No. 12,346.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 19, 1888.)

1. WRITS—SUMMONS—SIGNATURE OF CLERK.

Where a summons is issued on a blank, to which the clerk's name is printed, the affixing by him of the seal of the court thereto is a sufficient adoption of the printed signature, within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 407, requiring a summons to be signed by the clerk.

2. SAME—PUBLICATION—AFFIDAVIT.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 412, providing for an order of publication, if defendant "cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state," an affidavit to obtain such order, which states that defendants "have been sought for to obtain service of summons thereon, but after diligent search and inquiry cannot be found within the state," and states, further, that affiant "has made inquiry of all persons from whom he could expect to obtain information as to the residence of defendants," that summons and alias summons had been placed for service in the hands of the sheriff of the county where the suit was instituted, and of the sheriffs of several other counties, and that all such writs were returned unserved, after diligent search for defendants, is sufficient to show due diligence, when attacked collaterally.

3. SAME.

An affidavit for an order of publication against a defendant who cannot, "after due diligence, be found within the state," need not state that defendant's place of business or residence is unknown, as, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 413, the affidavit is only required to so state when it is against a "non-resident or absent defendant."

4. SAME.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 412, requiring that an affidavit for publication of summons, or the verified complaint on file, shall show a cause of action, before an order of publication issues against a non-resident or absent defendant, the cause of action may be shown either by the affidavit or the complaint, and an affidavit which refers to, and adopts a complaint on file, showing a cause of action, is sufficient.

5. SAME—ORDER.

In such case, the order of publication is not invalid, on collateral attack, although it states that the question was determined from the affidavit, "the files in the case, and other evidence produced and considered."

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; JOHN D. WORKS, Judge.

Petition by George C. Ligare against the California Southern Railroad Company, in the nature of a bill to quiet title, in which plaintiff seeks relief from a judgment by default against him, while a non-resident, in a former proceeding by defendant to condemn land. This proceeding attacks the former one for alleged defects in the order of publication therein, and prays for further proceedings in the nature of a new trial. The relief prayed for was refused, and plaintiff appeals.

J. E. Deakin, for appellant. A. Brunson and M. A. Luce, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The sole question in this case is as to the sufficiency of a service of summons by publication to sustain a judgment by default, in a proceeding to condemn land. The particulars in which the publication proceedings are supposed to be insufficient are the following:

1. It is said that the summons was not signed by the clerk. The statute requires that it should be so signed. Code Civil Proc. § 407. But we think the affixing by the clerk of the seal of the court to a form to which was appended his printed name, was an adoption of the printed signature which for the purpose in hand was sufficient. See Williams v. McDonald, 58 Cal. 529; Hancock v. Bowman, 49 Cal. 413.

2. It is contended that the affidavit for publication does not show that a cause of action existed against Ligare, the plaintiff here. The statute requires that it must appear "by such affidavit, or by the verified complaint on file, that a cause of action exists." Code Civil Proc. § 412. It will be observed of this provision that it does not require the fact to appear in both ways. It is sufficient if it appear in either way. If there is a verified complaint on file, the affidavit may be silent on the subject. And on the other hand, if the fact appears from the affidavit, it does not matter that the complaint is not verified. It appears that the original complaint was verified, but that the fictitious names of certain other defendants were ordered stricken out, and the real names inserted, and that a document purporting to be an amended complaint, which was the same as the original in all respects, except as to the said names, was filed, but was not verified. The affidavit refers "to the verified complaint on file herein, and which is made part and portion of this affidavit." Inasmuch as the so-called amended complaint made no change in the issues, it is somewhat doubtful whether, so far as this party is concerned, it superseded the original. See Brock v. Martinovich, 55 Cal. 516; Torney v. Pierce, 49 Cal. 306. But, if we assume that it did, we nevertheless think the objection is not well taken. The affidavit could refer to any document on file, and adopt its contents. In such case the oath to the affidavit is an oath to the truth of the document referred to. The affidavit here did refer to the original complaint and adopt its contents, and this complaint stated a cause of action. The fact that a cause of action existed, therefore, appeared from the affidavit. And, as above shown, it made no difference that the document which was then performing the functions of a complaint was not verified.

3. It is argued that the affidavit for publication was insufficient on the question of diligence. The Code provides that service may be made by publication (among other cases) where the person on whom it is to be made "cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state." Code Civil Proc. § 412. The affidavit in question first states that certain defendants, among whom is the plaintiff here, "have been sought for to obtain service of summons thereon, but after diligent search and inquiry cannot be found within the state." It then goes on to show what kind of search and inquiry have been made, viz., that the affiant "has made inquiry of all persons from whom he could expect to obtain information as to the residence of said defendants." It is not expressly stated what was the result of these inquiries. But the statement must be read in connection with what preceded it, viz., that after inquiry the said defendants "cannot be found within the state." And, so reading it, we think it is to be inferred that the inquiries were fruitless. The affidavit then goes on to state that "a summons and alias summonses" had been placed in the hands of the sheriff of San Diego, (which was where the property was situated,) with instructions to serve it, and that he had made return that the defendants could not be found in his county; and that "alias summonses" had been placed in the hands of the sheriffs of San Francisco, Los Angeles, Santa Clara, San Bernardino, Alameda, Humboldt, Yolo, Sacramento, and others," with instructions to make service, but that "they have all returned said summonses, with return either indorsed thereon, or written responses, that they have made diligent inquiry and search within their counties and cannot find any of said defendants herein mentioned." The affidavit is not required to follow the language of the statute, but is to state the evidence from which diligence can be inferred. Ricketson v. Richardson, 26 Cal. 153. And we think the court was authorized to infer diligence from the above-mentioned affidavit. Possibly it would have been held insufficient on an appeal, but it is otherwise upon a collateral attack. As was said by SAWYER, J., delivering the opinion in Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Cal. 348: "There is a marked distinction between an affidavit which presents some evidence on a vital point, but clearly of a character too unsatisfactory to justify an order for publication of summons based upon it, and an affidavit which presents no evidence at all tending to prove the essential fact. In the former case the judge might be satisfied upon very slender and inconclusive testimony; but there being some appreciable evidence of a legal character, which calls into action the judgment of the judge, he has jurisdiction to consider and pass upon it. He may be wholly and egregiously wrong in his conclusion upon the weight of the evidence, but he has jurisdiction to act upon it, and his action is simply erroneous. His order would in such case be reversed on appeal. But as there was jurisdiction to act, until reversed or attacked by some direct proceeding to annul it, the order and judgment based upon it would be valid. Such a judgment could not be collaterally attacked." We do not commend the affidavit in question as a model, but we think its showing of diligence is sufficient upon a collateral attack.

4. It is urged that the affidavit does not state that Ligare's place of business was not known to the plaintiff in the condemnation proceeding. Section 412 provides that service may be by publication where the person on whom it is to be made "resides out of the state, or has departed from the state, or cannot after due diligence be found within the state, or conceals himself to avoid service of summons," etc. It will be observed that these conditions are stated disjunctively. And in Anderson v. Goff, 72 Cal. 69, 13 Pac. Rep. 73, it was held that when the defendant is a non-resident no showing of diligence is necessary. And it is obvious that, upon the same principle, if any of the conditions mentioned exist, the others are immaterial. It is to be further observed that section 412 does not require the affidavit to state that the residence of the defendant is not known to the affiant. The requirement as to want of such knowledge results from section 413, which provides that, "where the residence of a non-resident or absent defendant is known," the order must direct a copy to be deposited in the post-office for him. This provision has been held to require that the affidavit must show whether or not such residence is known. Ricketson v. Richardson, 26 Cal. 153, 154. But it can only require in the cases specified, viz., in the case of "a non-resident or absent defendant." As above shown, there are several cases in which publication may be made, viz., where the defendant "resides out of the state," or where he "has departed from the state," or where he "cannot, after diligence, be found in the state," or "where he conceals himself to avoid service of summons." It is only in the two first-mentioned cases that section 413 requires the order to direct the deposit in the post-office, and, consequently, it is only in such cases that the affidavit is required to state whether the defendant's residence is known to the affiant. It may very well be that the legislature considered it useless to require the deposit where the defendant was within the state, but was concealing himself to avoid service of summons, or could not, after due diligence, be found. But whether there was any reason for the distinction or not, the cases in which the deposit is to be made are distinctly specified, and the court ought not to extend the requirements to other cases. The affidavit in question brings the case within the "due diligence" clause, and was sufficient without the statement as to knowledge of the residence.

5. It is objected that the order states that the court went outside of the affidavit in determining whether a case for publication existed. This is based upon the following recital in the order: "Upon reading and filing the affidavit of M. A. Luce, and it satisfactorily appearing therefrom, and from the files in the cause and other evidence produced and considered," etc. The argument is that the Code provides that the judge must be satisfied from the affidavit, and cannot be satisfied in any other way. But we have shown that the affidavit was sufficient, and the recital is that the judge had read it, and was satisfied "therefrom." This being so, it does not matter that the judge had additional sources of information. It would be straining the language to say that the recital meant that the court was not entirely satisfied from the affidavit, but that its satisfaction arose partially from the affidavit, and partially from the other evidence. Certainly, such a construction would not be given on a collateral attack.

We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

I concur: FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

BANK OF CALIFORNIA v. TAAFFE et al. (No. 11,219.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 20, 1888.)

1. FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER—WHEN LIES—POSSESSION.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1160, which provides that the action of forcible entry will lie where plaintiff has been "in peaceable and undisturbed possession" for five days, preceding such entry, where defendant came to plaintiff on the evening of the day the latter took possession, and wanted to know by what authority he was there, but no hostile demonstrations were made, plaintiff's possession is sufficient to enable him to bring the action.

2. SAME—FORCE.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1159, provides that every person is guilty of forcible entry who enters by breaking open doors, windows, etc. Section 1160 provides that a person is guilty of forcible detainer who by force, or by menaces and threats of violence, unlawfully holds, etc. In an action for forcible entry and detainer, defendant had entered, during plaintiff's absence, through a window, and had put plaintiff's things out in the yard. On plaintiff's return, defendant stood at the window with a pistol in his hand, and told plaintiff not to come around there, but did not threaten to shoot. Held, that there was force, within the meaning of the statute, although the pistol was not loaded.

3. APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action for forcible entry and detainer, where plaintiff had been in possession for the period required by the statute to enable him to bring the action, and the court refused to admit documents showing title in plaintiff as bearing on defendant's good faith, but received them to show that defendant's title had been transferred to plaintiff, no injury could have been produced by their admission for that purpose, as no finding was made upon the subject of title.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; CHARLES HALSEY, Judge.

Action of forcible entry and detainer by the Bank of California against George Taafe, Anna Taafe, and John Finlay. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Code Civil Proc. § 1159, provides that every person is guilty of forcible entry who enters by breaking open doors, windows, etc. Section 1160 provides that a person is guilty of forcible detainer who by force, or by menaces and threats of violence, unlawfully holds, etc.

James L. Crittenden, Crittenden & Moses, and Henry E. Highton, for appellants. Wilson & Wilson and Newlands, Allen & Herrin, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action of forcible entry and detainer. The court below gave judgment against the defendants, George Taafe, Anna Taafe, and John Finlay, and they appeal from the judgment and an order denying their motion for a new trial. Several points are made on their behalf.

1. It is said that no peaceable possession by the plaintiff was shown. The statute provides that one who has been "in the peaceable and undisturbed possession" for five days preceding the unlawful entry may maintain the action. Code Civil Proc. § 1160. This provision is substantially the same as that of section 3 of the act of 1866. See Laws 1865-66, p. 769. The evidence shows that on June 24, 1879, one Thompson, who was the agent of the bank, went to the premises, which were then unoccupied, took off the locks on the doors, and put one Phillips, another employe of the bank, in possession. Phillips remained in possession for the bank until July 19th. On the evening of the day he went there, one of the defendants came there, and wanted to know by what authority he was there, and the reply was that he was there by authority of Mr. Thompson for the bank. This seems to have been all that was said. There was no hostile demonstration. Except for this there was no molestation of any kind. Phillips' testimony in this regard is as follows: "Question. During the time you were there, did anybody say you were in unlawful possession, or deny your right to be there? Answer. No, sir. Q. From the 24th of June to the 19th of July, 1879, did anybody come there, and demand the property in any way, directly or indirectly? A. No, sir; not at all. Q. You were not molested or troubled in any way in your possession? A. No, sir." There is no testimony in conflict with this. The appellants contend that the possession was a mere "scrambling" possession, and cite the case of Bowers v. Cherokee Bob, 45 Cal. 498. In that case (which arose under the act of 1866) the plaintiff proved an undisturbed possession of more than five days; and the defendants offered to prove that, "about a month" before, they had attempted to enter, but were driven off by plaintiff by a hostile demonstration. The appellate court held that they ought to have been allowed to prove this because it tended to show that the plaintiff's possession was not "peaceable," but was "scrambling." The theory of the decisions seems to have been that the terrorizing effect of the hostile demonstration must be supposed to have continued down through the month. WALLACE, J., dissented on the ground that the occurrence "about a month" before was too remote to affect the character of the plaintiff's possession. The general doctrine as to scrambling possession has been followed in other cases. But in the present case there was no evidence of any previous hostile demonstration or use of force. When plaintiff took possession, on June 24, 1879, the place was unoccupied. It does not appear who had been in possession immediately before that, or that there was any disturbance or scrambling between the parties. The defendant Anna Taaffe says, in a general way, that she had been in possession since the death of her husband, in 1874, (but gives no facts in regard to such possession,) and that "they forced me out of possession," and that she could not tell how long she remained out. It is impossible to tell what she alludes to, or the time she refers to, or what kind of force was used. For all that appears in the record to the contrary she may have been "forced out" under a decree of a court. The witness Thompson, who had had charge of the real property of the bank for about two years previous to July, 1879, testifies that the first he had to do with the property was in January, 1879, when he found some tenants of Anna Taaffe in possession, and that he then served on them a demand for possession; but there was no disturbance of any kind. This being the evidence, it is very plain that the case is not like that of Bowers v. Cherokee Bob. In the first place, there was no evidence of any previous disturbance. And in the second place, if any act of force is to be inferred from the vague remark of Mrs. Taaffe, it was at least six months before the time the plaintiff took possession; and we think that in such case the observation of WALLACE, J., in the case referred to, would certainly apply, and that such occurrence was too remote to affect the character of plaintiff's possession.

2. It is contended that no force was used by the defendants. The evidence shows that during the temporary absence of Phillips, on July 19th, the defendant Finlay took possession. He found the door locked and got in the window, and put the things of Phillips out of the house. In so doing he acted as the agent of the other appellants. When Phillips returned, he found his things in the yard, and Finlay inside the house, standing at the window with a pistol in his hand. Finlay told him not to come around there, and Phillips said not to shoot as he was unarmed. After some conversation he left, and did not return. Phillips says he thought Finlay would shoot if he attempted to go in; but Finlay made no threat that he would shoot otherwise than by having the pistol in his hand, which he testified was not loaded; and not even put together. We think it clear that there was force within the meaning of the statute. See Dickinson v. Maguire, 9 Cal. 49; Ely v. Yore, 71 Cal. 133, 11 Pac. Rep. 868.

3. During the trial the defendants gave some vague evidence tending to show a long-continued possession by their predecessors many years previous, and introduced a chain of title from one William Taaffe. This evidence was introduced to show that the entry of defendants in July, 1879, "was made in good faith under a bona fide claim and color of title." In rebuttal, the plaintiff introduced a chain of title from William Taaffe to the bank. The plaintiff's counsel first offered the documents for the purpose of rebutting the evidence of the defendants' good faith, but the court refused to admit them for this purpose. The counsel then reoffered them for the purpose of showing "that whatever possession William Taaffe had of this property was transferred to the plaintiff;" and the court thereupon admitted them. If it be conceded that there was error in the admission of this evidence, it is apparent that there was no injury. The question of title was put in issue by the pleadings, but no finding was made with respect to it. The evidence could not, therefore, have had any effect in this regard. The question of good or bad faith does not arise under the Code in this kind of action, (Voll v. Hollis, 60 Cal. 574, 575;) and, inasmuch as the court refused to admit the evidence as bearing upon that question, it is apparent that it could not have had any effect in that regard. And, so far as the question of possession is concerned, the evidence of the plaintiff's actual and peaceable possession for the period required by the statute is so clear that we do not think the result could have been different, or that the constructive possession supposed to arise from the documents could have had any appreciable effect upon the mind of the court. The other matters do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

THOMPSON v. BRANNAN et al. (No. 11,019.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 20, 1888.)

1. EJECTMENT—MESNE PROFITS—FINDINGS BY THE COURT.

In an action of ejectment, and to recover for the use and occupation of real estate where defendant denied the entry, charged in the complaint to have been unlawfully made, and the court found that he did make the entry, and, in a separate sentence, found, "The loss of said rents issues and profits in the sum of $75," such findings, though clumsily drawn, substantially cover the issues.

2. WRITS—SERVICE BY MAIL—WHEN VALID.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1011, providing for the service of papers upon an attorney at his office, or, if it be not open, at his residence, and, if the residence is unknown, by depositing the paper in the post-office, though the attorney of plaintiff, who desired to serve a cost-bill on defendant's attorney, lived at a different post-office from that of the latter, a deposit in the post-office at the residence of defendant's attorney is not a valid service; the act requiring a service at his own post-office to be personal.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; J. K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

Action of ejectment by Albert Thompson against J. B. Brannan, J. W. Brannan, J. J. Cox, and Jacob Roberts, and for the rents and profits. Defendants denied the entry, and the court, after finding entry, found in a separate sentence, beginning with a capital letter, "The loss of said rents issues and profits in the sum of $75." Defendants appeal, alleging that the latter clause of the finding is unintelligible.

N. A. Dorn, W. M. R. Parker, S. F. Geil, and H. V. Morehouse, for appellants. D. W. Burchard, Burchard & Scott, and Burchard & Cothran, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. The complaint alleged that while the plaintiff was seized in use, and in the possession, of the premises in controversy, defendants jointly, and without right, entered into possession thereof, and ousted and ejected plaintiff therefrom, and unlawfully withheld the possession thereof from plaintiff. to his damage in the sum of $300; and the answer denied that the defendants, or any of them, took possession or "ousted or ejected plaintiff therefrom, or from any part thereof, or to his damage in any sum whatever." These allegations and denials made issues as to ouster and damages, and were so considered by the court. The findings of the court are clumsily drawn, but substantially cover the issues, and show upon their face that the ambiguity is due to erroneous capitalization and punctuation.

The judgment was entered July 7, 1884. A memorandum of costs was filed by plaintiff's attorney on July 11, 1884. An affidavit of service of the cost-bill was made by one Dexter, in which he stated "that he received the memorandum of costs herein, verified by D. W. Burchard, counsel for plaintiff. That he filed it on the 11th day of July, 1884, and took a copy thereof to serve on the defendants' counsel. He then placed a true copy of said memorandum of costs in an envelope, and duly stamped it, and addressed it to N. A. Dorn, counsel for defendants, and took it personally to the postmaster of Salinas City post-office, and told said postmaster to put it then and there (handing it to him) in Mr. Dorn's box. That thereafter, the exact date affiant does not remember, this affiant asked the said Dorn if he had so received the said paper on said 11th day of July, 1884, to which he, said Dorn, replied that he did so get it." Under the decisions of this court, we must hold that there was no service of the cost-bill. The attorney for the plaintiff lived at San Francisco, and the attorney for the defendant at Salinas City. In Reed v. Allison, 61 Cal. 461, it is said: "But a deposit in a post-office in the county or place in which a party may be served by mail, as his residence or office, would not constitute service on him by mail, because a service on him at his residence or office in his own county, to be effectual, must be made personally or constructively in the manner prescribed by subdivisions 1 and 2 of section 1011 of the Code of Civil Procedure. * * * Therefore, to constitute service by mail, the deposit in the post-office must be made in the post-office at the place where the attorney making the service resides or has his office; * * * and the affidavit of service must show a strict compliance with the provisions of the statute. Otherwise evidence must be held insufficient to establish the fact of service." See, also, Cunningham v. Warnekey, 61 Cal. 507; Steele v. Supervisors, 62 Cal. 6; Insurance Co. v. Shepardson, ante, 398, (in bank, filed May 31, 1888.) It is important that there should be a uniform rule in such cases, and we think that the decisions upon the question involved should be adhered to.

The cause is remanded, with directions to the court below to modify the judgment by striking out the words, "together with said plaintiff's costs and disbursements incurred in this action, amounting to the sum of $97.75," and as so modified the judgment is affirmed.

WISE v. HOGAN. (No. 11,147.)*

(Supreme Court of California. June 20, 1888.)

PLEADING—COMPLAINT—UNCERTAINTY.

A complaint alleging that defendant's intestate was indebted to plaintiff's intestate in the sum of $5,000, for legal services rendered by plaintiff's intestate in prosecuting and defending numerous suits, drawing various instruments, consulting and advising with defendant's intestate about his business, at his request, which services are alleged to have been rendered between January 1, 1870, and October 11, 1883, is demurrable for uncertainty in not specifying the various items and the times of the rendition of such services.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; N. HAMILTON, Judge.

*Reversed in banc.: See 19 Pac. 278, 77 Cal. 184.

Action by John H. Wise, administrator of Tully R. Wise, deceased, against J. T. Hogan, administrator of Edmond Hogan, deceased, to recover for legal services rendered by plaintiff's intestate for defendant's intestate. Judgment for defendant on demurrer, and plaintiff appealed.

A. Heynemann, for appellant. Henry Vrooman and J. C. Martin, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action brought to recover a sum of money for the alleged services, as an attorney at law, rendered by the plaintiff's intestate to the defendant's intestate. The complaint was demurred to, and the demurrer sustained. Thereupon, the plaintiff declining to amend his pleading, judgment was given in favor of the defendant, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

The fourth clause of the complaint stating the cause of action is as follows: "Plaintiff further alleges that said Edmond Hogan, deceased, was indebted to Tully R. Wise, deceased, on an account for services rendered by said Tully R. Wise, as attorney and counselor at law, in the sum of $5,000, as such attorney and counselor at law of the said Edmond Hogan, deceased; said services were rendered between the 1st day of January, 1870, and the 11th day of October, 1883; that said services consisted in prosecuting and defending numerous suits at law and equity as such attorney at law, at the request of the said Edmond Hogan, deceased; in drawing many and various instruments, and in consulting and advising said Edmond Hogan, deceased; for constant attendance in and about the business of said Edmond Hogan, deceased, at his request; that the said Edmond Hogan, deceased, has not paid the same, nor any part thereof." The second ground of the demurrer reads thus: Second. "That the said amended complaint is ambiguous and uncertain, more particularly specified in this: That it does not definitely, or with any certainty, appear therefrom what suits at law and equity were prosecuted or defended by the intestate, Tully R. Wise, deceased, or in what courts, or at what dates or times, said suits were prosecuted or defended, and it does not definitely or with any certainty appear therefrom what instruments were drawn by the said intestate, or as to what matters or upon what subjects consulting and advising were done by the said intestate, or at what times or dates said instruments were drawn, or said consultations and advisings had; and it does not definitely or with any certainty appear therefrom about what business of the said Edmond Hogan, deceased, the said intestate was in constant attendance; and it does not definitely or with any certainty appear therefrom what part, if any, of the said services charged in the complaint to have been rendered, or of the said indebtedness charged in the said complaint to have been incurred, was rendered or was incurred within the limit of the statute of limitations of the state of California, or within two years prior to the death of the said Edmond Hogan, deceased." We are satisfied that the demurrer was well taken, and advise that the judgment be affirmed.

Action by Eliss, plaintiff, against Johnson, defendant, to restrain the diversion of water from its natural channel. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. Judgment affirmed in bank, February 10, 1888, and rehearing afterwards allowed. For former opinion, see 16 Pac. Rep. 542.

Brown & Daggett and Edward J. Pringle, for appellant. Eugene R. Garber and Atwell & Bradley, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This case was decided in bank. 16 Pac. Rep. 542. A rehearing was subsequently granted, and the cause has been again argued orally and upon paper. Upon a careful examination of the record, we adhere to the conclusion reached in the former opinion. We think the photographs offered were original evidence, and not secondary, as stated in the former opinion, and that their admission in evidence was proper; but, when compared with the diagram which was admitted, we are of opinion, after studying the photographs in connection with the diagram and evidence, that defendant was in nowise injured by the exclusion of the former. As works of art, they are very creditable; as sources of information upon the pertinent questions involved, they have no appreciable value.

Upon the question of the statute of limitations, the court below found the facts against defendant. The theory that defendant only consented that the People's Ditch Company, Fowler, or the Kaweah, should run the water down Johnson slough to a given point, and then take it out, and conduct it across his land, upon condition that they should build a dam, and prevent it running upon his land below, loses most of its force when we realize that the ditch company was running the water for a practical purpose, and not merely for pleasure, and that to utilize the water for such purpose a conduit for its confinement was absolutely necessary. To give any particular force to the assertion of Johnson that he insisted upon a dam being built, and would have constructed it himself if the company had not, we must suppose that the water company were thereby induced to do something which they would not otherwise have done, which is not apparent here. It strikes us much as would the claim of an individual to the ownership of a necessary railway bridge across a stream, because he had given the right of way for the road across his land on condition that such stream should be bridged. As the bridge, in the one case, is a necessary integral part of the road, without which it could not be utilized, so, in the other, the dam was indispensable to the conduct of the water to the point of user. The cause was tried by a court well versed in questions of this kind, and entirely competent to give weight to every proper consideration bearing upon the evidence, and we do not feel authorized to disturb its findings as to the facts.

The other questions were properly disposed of in the former opinion. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. June 15, 1888.)

QUIETING TITLE—JUDGMENT—EFFECT.

In an action to quiet title to half of a certain lot of land, it appeared that the owner of the lot agreed in writing to convey it to certain persons upon the payment of their promissory note; that those persons wanted the lot for the use of others, who subsequently formed defendant corporation; that afterwards the owner, at the request of the makers of the note, who were unable to pay it or the interest thereon, sold the half involved to plaintiff's grantor, and applied the sum received to the note, giving the makers a deed of the other half. Held, that a judgment confirming plaintiff's title should not be disturbed, no errors of law being committed at the trial.

Action by Henry Gray and Elizabeth Gray against the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church of America to quiet title to a certain lot of land.

J. C. Black, for appellant. Moore & Moore and Burchard & Moore, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to quiet title to the westerly one-half of a certain lot No. 8 in the city of San José. Plaintiffs had judgment in the court below, and defendant, a religious corporation, appeals.

There is really nothing in the appeal except the contention that the court ought not to have believed the statements of some of respondents' witnesses, and should have believed all the statements of the witnesses of appellant. Respondents derive their title to the half lot through mesne conveyances from one Betsy Langhorn, to whom it was conveyed in January, 1868, by one Jacob Madden. In January, 1864, Madden, who then owned the whole of said lot 8, agreed in writing to convey it to W. B. Smith, A. B. Smith, and James Lodge, upon the payment of their joint promissory note to Madden for $620, due in 12 months, with interest at 2 per cent. per month. The Smiths and Lodge undoubtedly wanted the lot for the use of certain persons belonging to a religious society, who afterwards formed the corporation appellant herein, and who intended to build a church upon the lot. The agreement to convey upon the payment of the note was never recorded, and respondents knew nothing of it until a few weeks before this action was commenced, which was years after they had acquired the westerly half of the lot. Now appellant contends that when Mrs. Langhorn received her conveyance of the west half from Madden she took with the knowledge of, and subject to, the agreement of Madden to convey to the agents of the church society upon the payment of the said promissory note; that said note has been paid in full by appellant and its predecessors; and that respondents acquired the property subject to the trust, and should now convey to appellant. But the court finds that neither the respondents nor Betsy Langhorn ever held the legal title to the premises in trust for appellant, and finds that Betsy Langhorn bought the said west half for her own use and benefit, and paid for it with her own individual moneys. The court undoubtedly took as the truth the statement made by the witness Judge John H. Moore, and corroborated by other evidence. Moore testified that he knew all about the history of the transaction; that he kept the account of the moneys paid by the church people to Madden; that at the time of the deed to Betsy Langhorn the said Smiths and Lodge proposed, as they were short of money, and the high interest was accumulating, that Madden should sell the west half of the lot to her, and apply what she should pay for it to the note; that after this had been done there was still some money due on the note, but that, upon the urging of Moore, Madden gave them a deed to the east one-half of the lot on which the church building stands, and returned them their note; and that thus the whole transaction ended. These being the facts, we cannot see how any rights of appellant have been violated. The findings, we think, are sufficiently full, and we perceive no errors of law committed at the trial. Judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed.

PARIS et al. v. RAYNOR. (No. 12,538.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 22, 1888.)

NEW TRIAL—WHEN GRANTED—STATEMENT OF CASE.

Where the statement on a motion for a new trial specified many alleged errors, to the most of which no objection had been made or exception taken at the trial, and there is no merit in the rest, but did not contain any specifications of insufficiency of the evidence, or the bill of particulars, or the charge of the court, such motion was properly overruled.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; JAMES A. GIBSON, Judge.

Action by Paris & Goodcell, lawyers, against P. A. Raynor, to recover for services rendered as attorneys at law. Judgment for plaintiffs. A motion for a new trial was overruled, and defendant appealed.

Ezra Crossman and A. W. Blair, for appellant. Paris, Goodcell & Fox and Rowell & Rowell, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. The statement on motion for a new trial contains no specifications of insufficiency of the evidence. It does specify 35 errors alleged to have been committed by the court during the trial of the cause. The examination of these specifications reveals the fact that about 30 of them are without objection or exception entered or reserved, and there is no merit in the others. A bill of particulars is no part of the judgment roll, neither are the instructions; and they are not incorporated into the statement herein. The statement does not purport to contain all the evidence. In fact, it cannot be said that it contains any evidence. It does not show, except by inference, that anything related in the statement occurred at the trial, or that any witness was sworn. Judgment and order affirmed.

WALLACE v. BENTLEY et al. (No. 12,467.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1888.)

DECEIT—ACTION FOR—DAMAGES—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

A complaint alleging that defendants represented to plaintiff that they were authorized to sell certain property which plaintiff agreed to buy; that plaintiff, relying on the truth of the representations made by defendants, did not seek to purchase from another agent, or from the owner; that the property rose in value, but the owner refused to convey it, as defendants had no authority to sell; and that, by reason of the fraudulent representations of defendants, plaintiff was prevented from purchasing said property, and thereby suffered damage,—shows no cause of action, as plaintiff's failure to negotiate with others was not a necessary consequence of defendants' representations.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Suit by J. C. Wallace against F. Bentley and John Jeffrey to recover damages alleged to have resulted from the false representations of defendants that they were authorized to sell certain property which plaintiff agreed to purchase, but which the owner refused to convey. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Byron Waters, for appellant. Curtis, Otis & Conner, for respondents.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This appeal is from a judgment rendered in favor of the defendants after sustaining their demurrer to the complaint of the plaintiff, and his failure to amend within the time granted for that purpose. The only question which we have to determine is: Does the complaint state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action? That is the sole ground of the demurrer. The complaint states that on the 18th day of March, 1887, one Swan

Carlson was the owner of a certain tract of land in San Bernardino county, together with 10 shares of stock of the Redlands Water Company, and that on that day the defendants represented to the plaintiff that they were the agents of said owner, authorized and empowered to sell said property for the sum of $3,000, for which sum said owner was then offering to sell said property. Plaintiff was willing and desirous of purchasing said property at that price, and relying on the representations of the defendants, and having no knowledge of the truth or falsity of such representations, plaintiff accepted the offer of defendants, and paid them $100 as part of the purchase price of said property; at the same time taking from them an instrument in writing, of which the following is a copy: "SAN BERNARDINO, Cal., March 18, 1887. Received from J. C. Wallace the sum of $100 as first payment upon five acres in lot 8, block H, in Redlands, the purchase price of which is $3,000, payable as follows: One-third cash, less the above-mentioned $100; the balance to be paid on or before two years, with interest at 10 per cent. per annum, on condition that an acceptable title and abstract be furnished. BENTLEY & JEFFREY, Agents for S. Carlson." The plaintiff, relying on the truth of the representations made by the defendants, did not seek to purchase said property from any other agents, nor from the owner, though for two weeks afterwards said property could have been bought for said above-mentioned sum from a duly-authorized agent of said owner. It is further alleged that all such representations of the defendants were false, and that they had no authority whatever from the owner of said property to sell or negotiate a sale of the same, or any part thereof. Plaintiff for the first time on April 8, 1887, discovered that such representations were false. That within three weeks after the 18th day of March, 1887, said property had become of the value of $4,000, and is still of that value. That the owner refused to ratify the contract made between defendants and plaintiff, and about the first of April sold said property to some person other than plaintiff for the sum of $4,000. Plaintiff has at all times been ready and willing to comply with his part of the said contract made with defendants. That, by reason of the false and fraudulent representations of defendants, plaintiff was prevented from purchasing said property, to his damage $1,000, for which sum he demands judgment against defendants.

The theory of the pleader evidently was that, upon the facts alleged, the liability of the defendants is the same as that of the owner of the property would be if he had authorized the defendants to sell the property, and then, after they had sold it, he had sold and conveyed it to some one else. Had that been the case, he, and not the defendants, would have been liable for the damages claimed in this case. But the owner is not liable on the contract, because the defendants had no authority from him to make it. The defendants are not liable unless the contract contains apt words to charge them personally. Hall v. Crandall, 29 Cal. 568; Lander v. Castro, 43 Cal. 497. If not liable upon the contract because they did not undertake to contract on their own behalf, the plaintiff's remedy against the defendants "is an action to recover the money, if any has been paid them, or the value of the work or labor, if any has been performed for him, under the supposed contract, or special damages resulting to the plaintiff by reason of the defendants' wrong in undertaking to act for another without authority." Hall v. Crandall, supra. This action is not for the recovery of any money paid by the plaintiff to the defendants; and the only attempt to allege facts entitling the plaintiff to special damages is that, by reason of the representations of the defendants, he was prevented from purchasing the premises. But the facts alleged do not constitute prevention. The plaintiff had the same right, after negotiating with the defendants, that he had before negotiating with them, to negotiate with the owner of the premises, or any authorized agent of his, for the purchase of the property. Plaintiff's failure to do so was not a necessary consequence of the defendants' representation that they had authority to act for the owner. That constituted no legal obstacle to his doing so. The facts alleged are not, in our opinion, sufficient to constitute a cause of action on any ground upon which actions are maintainable against persons falsely representing themselves as agents for others. That an action is maintainable against one who obtains anything of value by such false representation, we do not doubt. But this action is not for the recovery of anything obtained by defendants from plaintiff, but for profits which he might have made if the person for whom the defendants had assumed to act had performed the agreement which defendants, without authority, made in his name. To so hold would be to hold that defendants were liable on the contract, which would be contrary to the doctrine of all the decisions on the subject in this state. Judgment affirmed.

NEALE et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY. (No. 12,704.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1888.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN—PROCEDURE—POSSESSION PENDING APPEAL.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1254, relating to the taking of land for public use, which provides that at any time after judgment, or pending an appeal, when the plaintiff shall have paid into court the amount of the judgment and costs, and such further sum as may be required by the court, the court may authorize plaintiff to take possession of the land condemned, when possession is taken without such an order the court may order possession to be restored to defendant.

2. APPEAL—EFFECT—STAY OF EXECUTION.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 945, which provides that an appeal from an order shall not stay execution unless a written undertaking is given, an appeal from an order requiring the delivery of possession of land will, where an undertaking is given, stay the enforcement of the order.

In bank. Original proceedings in mandamus.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1254, relating to the taking of land for public use, provides that at any time after trial and judgment, or pending an appeal, whenever the plaintiff shall have paid into court, for the defendant, the full amount of the judgment, and such further sum as may be required by the court as a fund to pay any further damages and costs that may be recovered in said proceeding, as well as all damages that may be sustained by the defendant, if, for any cause, the property shall not be taken for public use, the superior court in which the proceeding was tried may, upon notice of not less than 10 days, authorize the plaintiff, if already in possession, to continue therein, and if not, then to take possession of and use the property during the pendency of and until the final conclusion of the litigation, and may, if necessary, stay all actions and proceedings against the plaintiff on account thereof.

Hunsaker, Britt & Lamme and J. E. Deakin, for petitioners. Henderson & McDonald, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for a writ of mandate. The San Diego Land & Town Company, a corporation, commenced an action against the petitioners here, to condemn and take for public use certain real estate in the county of San Diego. Such proceedings were had in the cause for condemnation that a judgment for the sum of $100,575.90 was awarded petitioners as compensation for said land. Pending the proceedings, and before any compensation was made, said corporation, without leave or license from petitioners, and without right or title, entered into possession of said property, or most of it, flooded the same with water, and are using it as a reservoir. Thereafter petitioners applied to the Hon. EDWIN PARKER, superior judge of San Diego county, and judge of the court in which the proceedings for condemnation were pending, for an order restoring possession of said property to them, and on the 16th day of April, 1888, an order was made and entered by the court, requiring said corporation to pay said judgment before that time entered, prior to the 28th day of April, 1888, or to restore possession of said property to petitioners herein. On or about May 1, 1888, the corporation appealed to this court from said last-mentioned order, and filed a bond on appeal under section 945 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in the sum of $30,000, duly approved, as a stay of proceedings under that order. The corporation has not made compensation for said land, and still retains possession thereof.

1. The superior court in which the proceedings for condemnation were pending had authority to prevent the plaintiff therein from taking possession of the land sought to be condemned until an order therefor was made by the court. Code Civil Proc. § 1254. Possession having been taken pending the proceedings, and in advance of such order, the court was authorized to make the order of April 16th, requiring the possession to be restored to the owners, the petitioners herein. In re Bryan, 65 Cal. 375, 4 Pac. Rep. 304; Const. Cal. art. 1, § 14.

2. Did the appeal entitle the corporation to a stay of proceedings under section 945 of the Code of Civil Procedure? The order in question required the delivery of possession of real property. That section provides that an appeal from such an order shall not stay execution unless a written undertaking, as therein specified, shall be given. In the present case such an undertaking, duly approved, was given. It would seem that the converse of the proposition must be true, and that, if the undertaking is given, it does stay the execution of the order appealed from. The very object of the undertaking is to secure the person in whose favor the judgment or order is made for the damages which he may sustain by the delay. There is a broad distinction between cases of this kind, where the order requires an act to be performed, and an injunction which restrains the performance of an act. In the case of an injunction the appellant usually has security upon which he can rely in case of a reversal; here he has none. If, as petitioners claim, the corporation is in possession of the property as a trespasser without any authority, they may proceed against it by an ordinary action to recover possession; but, having elected to proceed through the instrumentality of an order, from which an appeal lies to this court, they subject themselves to the conditions of such appeal. The application for a writ of mandate is denied.

NEWMAN v. SMITH et al. (No. 12,494.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1888.)

1. EQUITY—RESCISSION OF CONTRACT—COMPLAINT.

In an action for the rescission of a contract for the sale of land, a complaint alleging that plaintiff held certain religious views regarding the spirits of the dead, and their communication with the living, and had considered it her life-work to fit up a home where people of that faith could congregate, and had made plans for the improvement of the land in question for such purpose, which she was unable to carry out through failing health; that defendant, knowing her views and wishes, in order to induce her to sell the property to him for less than its value, falsely and fraudulently represented that he held the same faith, and desired to establish such a home upon the property, where a nook should always be reserved for plaintiff; that defendant never had any intention of establishing such a home, but was purchasing the property as agent for a co-defendant, who had no intention of making good his promises and representations; relying upon which she made the contract to convey the property for $4,000 less than its true value, and upon discovery of the fraud offered to return the payment made,—states a good cause of action.

2. SAME.

Where a complaint for the rescission of a contract for the sale of land alleges an offer to return the payment made, without specifying the time when such offer was made, objection on that ground can be raised only by special demurrer.

3. SAME.

Where, in an action for the rescission of a contract for the sale of land, the plaintiff also seeks to recover damages for anxiety, worry, and harassment arising from Cal.Rep. 16-19 P.—51

the facts complained of, and for expenses in taking care of the property, a demurrer will not be sustained on the ground of misjoinder of actions, inasmuch as there can be no recovery of damages for the causes stated, and those allegations will be treated as surplusage.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Clara Foltz and Byron Waters, (Wm. G. Webb, of counsel,) for appellants.
H. C. Rolfe, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. Suit to set aside a written contract for the sale of land on the ground of fraud. The court below gave final judgment for the defendants upon demurrer to the complaint, and the plaintiff appeals. The complaint shows substantially the following facts: The plaintiff, who was the owner of the property, held "certain religious views regarding the spirits of the dead, and their communication with the living," and had "considered it her life-work to fit up a home where congenial people of like faith could congregate and be made welcome, and where full discussion of their religious views might be indulged in," and "had already made plans for the improvement of said property for such purpose," but, "owing to failing health and financial reverses, plaintiff was prompted to dispose of the property to some one who was in harmony with her religious views, and who would in some measure carry out her plans; that only with a view of said property being used for the purpose aforesaid would plaintiff ever dispose of it." The defendant Smith knew the plaintiff's views, wishes, and purposes above mentioned; and, in order to induce the plaintiff to sell the property to him, represented that he was of the same religious belief as plaintiff, and in accord with her plans as to the property, and desired to establish just such a home upon the property, "where plaintiff would always be warmly welcomed, and that she should have a little nook wherever she should choose upon said premises." The complaint alleges that all the said representations were false, and were made "willfully, falsely, and fraudulently, and with intent to deceive and defraud plaintiff, and induce her to enter into certain contracts hereinafter set out, and obtain said property for less than its value;" that Smith never had any intention of establishing such a home, or of purchasing said property for himself, but throughout the whole negotiation "was acting for and was the agent of said defendant the South Riverside Land & Water Company, and was endeavoring to secure said property for said company, and at all times acted under its instruction and advice;" that said company never had any intention of making good the representations and promises of Smith, but intended to use the property for an entirely different purpose; that plaintiff believed said representations, and, relying upon the truth of the same, gave Smith a written option of purchase within a specified time. Subsequently (for reasons and under circumstances which seem to us irrelevant) this written option was superseded by a written contract to sell and convey the property for a certain sum. It is alleged that this sum was $4,000 less than the real value of the property; and "that it was wholly in consequence of the false and fraudulent representations herein recited that she agreed to take said or any sum of money less than $15,000 for said property;" and that "but for such fraud of the said Smith this plaintiff would never have signed either of the contracts, agreements, or bonds referred to." Plaintiff was paid $500 upon said contract before she discovered the fraud which had been practiced upon her. She offered to return this, but it was refused.

The trial court sustained the demurrer on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action. In this we think the court erred. Although there is much irrelevant matter in the complaint, we think it stated a cause of action. The position of the respondents in this regard is that none of the representations or promises were inserted in the writing, and that, therefore, they could not be shown. But it is elementary that fraudulent misrepresen-tations, as to a material matter by which a party was induced to enter into a contract to his damage, is ground for an action at law or relief in equity, notwithstanding that the contract was in writing, and the representations were not. "One who willfully deceives another, with intent to induce him to alter his position to his injury or risk, is liable for any damage which he thereby suffers." Civil Code, § 1709. Fraud vitiates all transactions, and cannot be put beyond the reach of the law by so simple a device as a writing. The question, therefore, is whether the complaint shows what the law recognizes as a fraud; and we think that it does. The uses to which the plaintiff intended to put the property were not unlawful. We do not think that at this period, in this country, a court is justified in pronouncing any form of religious belief superstitious, or contrary to public policy, when not followed by acts which are recognized as hurtful to society. From a legal point of view, therefore, the intentions of plaintiff are entitled to as much consideration as if she had designed to establish a hospital or endow a seminary or build an hotel. This being so, the case is that Smith, who knew the views of the plaintiff, for the purpose of deceiving her to her injury, falsely pretended that he was of the same religious belief as she was, and that if she would sell him the property he would carry out her views, and held out a prospect of a "little nook" for herself. She was justified in believing him, for she could not look into his mind, and see the falsehood lurking there. The representations were material; for it is admitted by the demurrer that she was induced by them to enter into the contract which she would not otherwise have done. And they operated to her damage; for she was induced by them to agree to sell the property for $4,000 less than its value. The case is as if she had been induced to sign an obligation by representations that it was for the purpose of establishing a free college, which never was the intention. See Elsass v. Institute, 77 Ind. 72. It makes no difference that the representations took the form of a promise. A promise made without any intention of performing it is fraud, (Civil Code, § 1710; Id. § 1572;) and, if by means of it a party has been induced to alter his position to his injury, is ground for relief in equity, (Brisson v. Brisson, 17 Pac. Rep. 690.) As was said in Mitchell v. Kintzer, (in reasoning to a different point:) "It may safely be averred that all deceitful practices, in depriving or endeavoring to deprive another of his known right by means of some artful device or plan contrary to the rules of common honesty, is fraud." 5 Pa. St. 216. It is hardly necessary to say that there must be what the law considers to be a fraudulent intent. The mere failure to perform an oral promise would not be fraud. There is a great difference between a fraudulent and a non-fraudulent representation. Pol. Cont. 461. It is the dishonest intention which taints the transaction. But this, according to the complaint, existed from the start. The South Riverside Company is alleged to have been a participant in the fraud. But, if Smith was its agent, it would make no difference if this were not so; for a principal cannot reap the fruits of its agent's fraud while repudiating the fraud.

The objection that the precise time at which the plaintiff offered to return the payment which had been made to her is not alleged, should have been taken by special demurrer.

The respondents contend, however, that the demurrer should have been sustained on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action. The basis for this is that the complaint attempts to claim damages for the "anxiety, worry, and harassment arising from the facts hereinbefore alleged," and for expenses in taking care of the property, and in remaining away from her home. It is sufficient to say that she has no right of action for these things. We do not say that a demurrer on this ground should be overruled because one of the causes of action is defectively stated; but where, as here, it appears that by no possibility can she recover for these things, we think the allegations on the subject should be treated as surplusage. We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer, with leave to answer.

I concur: FOOTE, C.

BELCHER, C. C., took no part in this opinion.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, with direction to overrule the demurrer, with leave to answer.

In re CASTLE DOME MINING & SMELTING CO. (No. 11,130.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1888.)

INSOLVENCY—JURISDICTION—FOREIGN CORPORATION.

Under the California insolvency act of 1880, which provides, in section 8, that the petition shall be filed in the county where the debtor resides, or has his place of business; and, in section 21, makes certain provisions in case of a non-resident debtor, the California courts have jurisdiction of proceedings in involuntary insolvency against a foreign corporation which has property and a place of business in the state.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; N. HAMILTON, Judge.

Olney, Chickering & Thomas, for appellants. Clunie & Knight and Wm. H. Sharp, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of Alameda county dismissing proceedings in involuntary insolvency for want of jurisdiction. The corporation against which the proceedings were commenced, was organized under the laws of New York, and had its principal place of business there. Its mine was in Arizona, but its smelting works were situated and operated in Alameda county. No question arises, on this appeal, as to the validity of a discharge in case one shall be granted. The primary object of proceedings in involuntary insolvency is to have the proceeds of the property of the insolvent within the state distributed among the creditors in the manner pointed out in the statute. The granting of a discharge to the insolvent is a separate matter. The property may be taken, and its proceeds distributed among the creditors, although the insolvent be found to be not entitled to a discharge, and never gets it. If, therefore, the court had jurisdiction to distribute the proceeds of the property, its order was erroneous, irrespective of the question whether it could grant a discharge which would be valid out of the state. Now, in the first place, we think there can be no question as to the power of the state to pass a law to the effect that upon the insolvency of a corporation, domestic or foreign, its property within the state shall be taken, after due service of process, and the proceeds distributed among its creditors. It certainly has as much power to do that as it has to provide that the proceeds of the property shall be given to the creditor or creditors who shall have succeeded in getting an attachment. It is a mere question as to the remedy for the enforcement of the insolvent's obligations. As a matter of course, there must be due service of process. But the insolvency act provides for such service, and it is not disputed that due service was had in this case; the order to show cause having been served upon the president and upon the general manager within this state. In the second place, we think that the insolvency act of 1880 is such an act. The position of the respondents in this regard is not that the act does not apply to corporations. Such a position could not be taken, because the act is expressly made applicable to corporations. Section 36. The argument is that, upon a proper construction of the act, it must be held to apply only to residents of the state, and that a foreign corporation having its principal place of business elsewhere is not a resident of the state. However this may be with respect to voluntary, we do not think it so as to involuntary, insolvency. The provision relied upon is that the petition "must be filed in the superior court of the county, or city and county, in which the debtor resides, or has his place of business." Section 8. It will be observed of this provision that residence is not the only condition mentioned. The petition may be filed where the debtor "has his place of business." And, when this provision is read in connection with subdivision 3 of section 21, (which speaks of certain things which may be done "in case of a non-resident * * * debtor,") it seems plain that the proceedings may be commenced against a non-resident, at all events if he has a place of business here. The corporation has a place of business in Alameda county; and, as this place of business is its only one in the state, it must be considered its principal place of business, so far as this state is concerned. In the language of one of the papers introduced in evidence by the respondents, it was "a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of New York, and whose principal place of business, within the limits of said state of California, is located in said county of Alameda." No question is made as to the regularity of the record on appeal. We therefore advise that the order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

I concur. FOOTE, C.

BELCHER, C. C., took no part in this opinion.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

SMITH v. TALBOT. (No. 12,515.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1888.)

HIGHWAYS—OBSTRUCTION—ACTION BY ROAD OVERSEER.

Pol. Code Cal. §§ 2731, 2734, providing that the district road overseer may require encroachments upon "any highway duly laid out or erected" to be removed, and authorizing him, on the refusal of the owner of such encroachments to remove them or permit their removal, to bring an action to abate them, and to recover a certain penalty for their continuance after notice to remove them, contemplates only encroachments which come into existence after the highway is laid out; and no action lies under these sections for an alleged encroachment upon land claimed as a highway, which was erected before the highway was laid out, a remedy for this being given by Pol. Code Cal. § 2695.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; WILLIAM W. CROSS, Judge.

The facts sufficiently appear from the opinion.

Brown & Daggett, for appellant. Lambertson & Taylor, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This action was brought by a road overseer to recover a penalty of $10 for each day upon which the defendant was alleged to have violated the statute in maintaining an encroachment upon a public highway, and to cause a removal thereof. Judgment was given against the defendant that the encroachment complained of be removed, and that he pay the sum of $1,630 as penalty in maintaining it for 163 days after legal notice to remove it. From that and an order denying a new trial the defendant has appealed. He claims that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The complaint was evidently framed upon the supposition that the cause of action accrued under sections 2731 and 2734 of the Political Code, which are as follows: Sec. 2731. "If any highway duly laid out or erected is encroached upon by fences, buildings, or otherwise, the road overseer of the district may, orally or in writing, require the encroachment to be removed from the highway." Sec. 2734. "If the encroachment is denied, and the owner, occupant, or person controlling the matter or thing charged with being an encroachment refuses either to remove, or permit the removal thereof, the road overseer must commence in the proper court an action to abate the same as a nuisance; and, if he recovers judgment, he may, in addition to having the same abated, recover $10 for every day such nuisance remained after notice, and also his costs in said action." These sections evidently contemplate that when an action is brought to recover penalties inflicted under section 2734, supra, and the removal of the obstruction, that the facts shall show that it is a case where the encroachment or obstruction has not come into existence until after the highway is laid out or completed. In this case, according to the complaint, the defendant had erected his alleged encroachment upon the land claimed as a highway before the board of supervisors of the county had laid it out or erected it into a public highway.

As it seems to us, the remedy to which the road overseer is relegated is to be found in section 2695 of the Political Code, which is as follows: Sec. 2695, "When the alteration of an old or the opening of a new road makes it necessary to remove fences on land given, purchased, or condemned by order of a court for road or highway purposes, notice to remove the fences must be given by the road overseer to the owner, his occupant, or agent, or by posting the same on the fence; and, if the same is not done within ten days thereafter, or commenced and prosecuted with due diligence, the road overseer may cause it to be carefully removed at the expense of the owner, and recover of him the cost of such removal; and the fence material may be sold to satisfy the judgment." It is evident that the legislative intent was to make a difference in dealing with the man who, without claim or right, willfully encroaches upon the highway, and refuses to remove his obstruction on due notice, and the one who constructs a fence, or makes some other encroachment upon land which at that time is not a public highway, but after the placing of the obstruction becomes such a highway, the encroachment still remaining after due notice to remove it. It is to meet the inconveniences to the public arising from these two different classes of encroachments upon highways that the sections supra have been enacted. The facts set out in the complaint show no cause of action sufficient to support the judgment, which was evidently given under section 2734, supra.

It is unnecessary to notice the other points made, and we advise that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded.

BELCHER, C. C., took no part in this decision.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

WEBB v. TRESCONY. (No. 9,936.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 20, 1888.)

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—COMPENSATION—WRONGFUL DISCHARGE—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Where an attorney at law is employed to defend a suit at an agreed compensation, and fully performs his agreement until discharged without cause, the measure of his damages is the compensation named in the contract.

2. SAME—PARTNERSHIP.

Though plaintiff, in an action to recover for his services as an attorney, had a partner at the time of making the contract with defendant, a motion for nonsuit on that ground is properly denied where it appears that his copartner was not interested in such contract.

3. ACTIONS—CONSOLIDATION—PRESUMPTION.

Where the record does not disclose the nature of another action pending between the same parties, it will be presumed that a refusal to consolidate was proper.

4. APPEAL—REQUISITES—BOND.

Where there is in the same transcript and notice an appeal from a judgment, with an appeal from an order denying a motion for new trial, one undertaking is sufficient.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; JOHN K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

Hiram D. Tuttle, for appellant. R. M. F. Soto and Dorn & Parker, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The appeal is from the judgment, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. Where there are several appeals in the same transcript, it is the general rule that there should be an undertaking on appeal for each order or judgment appealed from, and each appeal should be cited in the undertaking; but where there is, in the same transcript and notice, an appeal from a judgment, with an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, one $300 undertaking is sufficient. Corcoran v. Desmond, 71 Cal. 102, 11 Pac. Rep. 815. The motion to dismiss the appeal is therefore denied.

The plaintiff is an attorney and counselor at law, and the complaint alleges that about May 1, 1882, the defendant employed him to defend certain suits in which the defendant herein was defendant, for which the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff the sum of $950, and "that, in pursuance of the contract, plaintiff appeared for the defendant in each of said actions, and did all things necessary or proper for the defense of said actions, and each of them, up to the 21st day of May, A. D. 1883, on which date, without any cause whatever, the defendant discharged plaintiff from each of said actions, and took such proceedings that the above-entitled court duly made and gave an order discharging the plaintiff from each of said actions, and that, by reason of the breach of said contract by the defendant, the plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $950, the said contract price." The plaintiff recovered a judgment for the sum of $950, and costs. The court instructed the jury as follows: "If you find from the evidence that the plaintiff and defendant entered into said contract as alleged in the complaint, and that plaintiff fully performed the covenants on his part until removed and discharged by defendant, and that plaintiff was not in fault, but was discharged without cause, then, and in such case, the measure of damages is deemed to be the full contract price agreed upon by the parties." It will be observed that in the allegation and in the instruction the plaintiff's right of recovery is based upon the fact that he was discharged without cause. In Baldwin v. Bennett, 4 Cal. 392, it was said: "The general rule as to the measure of damages in an action for a breach of contract is not the whole price agreed to be paid, but the actual loss sustained, which will consist of the value of the services rendered, and the damage sustained by the refusal to allow performance of the rest of the contract. To this rule there are, however, some exceptions. Where, from the nature of the contract, as in this case, no possible mode is left for ascertaining the damage, we will have presented the anomalous case of a wrong without a remedy, unless we adopt the only measure of damages which remains, and that is the price agreed to be paid. Without this, justice would be defeated, and parties encouraged to violate other contracts of similar character. The defendant not only breaks his contract, but also deprives the plaintiff of showing the amount of injury under the general rule. He cannot complain that a different rule is invoked, when it is the only one left to make him responsible for his want of good faith." See, also, Coffee v. Meliggs, 9 Cal. 364; Kersey v. Garten, 16 Cent. Law J. 472; Weeks, A'tys. 582, 583, and cases cited; section 3302, Civil Code. It is claimed that the court below erred in not consolidating this action with another action then pending between plaintiff and defendant. Conceding that section 1048 is mandatory, there is nothing in the record before us to show the nature of the cause of action in the case referred to. The presumption is, of course, that the court below, with the record in that case before it, ruled correctly.

Defendant's motion for a nonsuit was properly denied. Although the plaintiff had a partner at the time he entered into the contract with the defendant, it appears that his copartner was in no way interested in the contract with defendant. Judgment and order affirmed.

BRALY v. HENRY. (No. 12,402.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1888.)

1. NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action on a note, where the question is whether or not plaintiff is an innocent holder for value, interrogatories whose evident purpose is to show that plaintiff took the note with notice of a partial failure of consideration, it having been held on a former appeal of the case that such partial failure of consideration was a defense pro tanto, are allowable, although defendant is precluded from questioning plaintiff's ownership of the note by the fact that the pleadings admit that it was indorsed and delivered to him.

2. APPEAL—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

An order of the trial court denying a motion for new trial, which forms part of the record on appeal, and recites that notice of such motion was given, sufficiently shows that there was such notice.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; J. B. CAMPBELL, Judge.

Action on a promissory note by J. H. Braly against S. W. Henry. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals, after denial of his motion for new trial. For former appeal, see 11 Pac. Rep. 385. For affirmance of the decision on that appeal, on rehearing, see 12 Pac. Rep. 623.

W. D. Grady and Goucher & Geis, for appellant. Geo. A. Nourse, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. Upon the former appeal it was held that the partial failure of consideration was a defense pro tanto. 71 Cal. 481, 11 Pac. Rep. 385. When the case went back for trial, one of the principal questions was whether the plaintiff had purchased the note with notice of the partial failure of consideration, or, in other words, whether he was an innocent holder for value. On the retrial the plaintiff, on cross-examination, was asked whether he purchased the note, which question was objected to and excluded. He was also asked the following question: "Do you know anything about the consideration for which this note was given?" which question was objected to and excluded. He was also asked the following: "You knew all about the facts of this note having been executed for a stack of hay, at the time it was transferred to you, did you not?" which question was objected to and excluded. He was also asked the following: "You were a party in interest to the contract for the sale of the hay for which the note was executed, were you not?" which question was excluded on objection. He was also asked the following: "At the time the note was given, did you know what it was given for?" which question was excluded on objection. We think that the court committed error in not allowing the questions to be propounded to the witness and answered. It is evident that under the pleadings it was admitted that the note in controversy was indorsed and delivered to the plaintiff, and that, therefore, the defendant could not be allowed to show by evidence that plaintiff was not the owner of the note. Nevertheless, whether he was or not a purchaser for value, or took it with notice of the partial failure of consideration, which it was the evident purpose of the defendant to elicit by his questions put to the plaintiff, was a material matter to the defendant's defense, and should have been allowed to be shown. While the interrogatories were not skillfully framed, yet their purpose is manifest, and they should have been allowed to be put. The order denying the motion for a new trial is part of the record on appeal, and this order recites that a notice of intention had been given. This sufficiently showed that there was such notice. We think the judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

I concur: HAYNE, C.

BELCHER, C. C., did not take part in this opinion.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

PEOPLE v. BENTLEY. (No. 20,400.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 20, 1888.)

1. ROBBERY—FORMER CONVICTION OF ANOTHER OFFENSE.

A conviction of assault with a deadly weapon is not a bar to a prosecution for an attempt to commit robbery committed at the same time.¹

2. SAME—CONSPIRACY—DECLARATIONS OF ACCOMPLICE.

On a trial for attempt to commit robbery, the acts and declarations of a third party, tending to show a conspiracy between him and defendant to commit the crime, are admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ. Following 17 Pac. Rep. 436.²

3. SAME—EVIDENCE.

On a trial for attempt to commit robbery the question asked a witness whether a third person lived in the same town with defendant at the time of the alleged crime is immaterial, where it is not attempted to be shown that such person could by any possibility have been the culprit, instead of defendant.

4. WITNESS—CREDIBILITY—CRIMINAL LAW.

Testimony as to defendant's character for truth and veracity by a witness knowing his general reputation in that regard is admissible to impeach his testimony.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; WILLIAM W. CROSS, Judge.

W. A. Gray and Oregon Sanders, for appellant. George H. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

FOOTE, C. The defendant was tried and convicted of an attempt to commit robbery. From the judgment given in the premises, and an order refusing a new trial, he appeals. He contends that he has been formerly convicted of the same offense, which is alleged to be a bar to this prosecution. It was attempted, in his behalf, to introduce evidence to show that such was the fact, but it was ruled out by the trial court, and exception taken. The evidence offered tended to show that he had been convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon, under an information charging an assault with intent to commit murder. It is plain that the defendant had not formerly been convicted of an offense for which he could have been or was tried and convicted on the information charging the offense of which he here stands convicted. "It is believed that no well-considered case can be found where a putting in jeopardy for one act," or a conviction for one act, "was held to bar a prosecution for another separate and distinct one, merely because they were so closely connected in point of time that it was impossible to separate the evidence relating to them." Teat v. State, 53 Miss. 456. According to the testimony in this case, the first thing done by the defendant and his confederate was an attempt to intimidate and rob; the next was to attack with a deadly weapon. It cannot be the law that a man having assaulted another with a deadly weapon, and having also attempted, before that, to rob him, can escape punishment for the attempt to rob because of conviction for assault with a deadly weapon. If the offenses do not possess the same elements, although both relate to the same transaction, it would seem that both may be punished. This view of the law seems to have been taken by the supreme court of this state in the case of People v. Majors, 65 Cal. 138, 3 Pac. Rep. 597, where many authorities bearing upon the matter in hand are cited and discussed. The offense of which the defendant was first convicted, was an effort to injure the person of the prosecutor with a deadly weapon. That of which he was last convicted, was an attempt to take away the goods of the prosecutor from his person by intimidation or violence. The essential elements of the two offenses are not the same.

² As to what constitutes a conspiracy, and as to the admissibility in evidence of the declarations of co-conspirators, see the Anarchists' Case, (Ill.) 12 N.E. Rep. 865, and note; Spencer v. State, (Ga.) 3 S. E. Rep. 661; Crump v. Com., (Va.) 6 S.E. Rep. 620; Cortez v. State, (Tex.) 6 S. W. Rep. 546.

The admissibility of the evidence of Moore, a witness for the prosecution, to prove a conspiracy to commit a felony, which was objected to by the defendant, but allowed by the court to go to the jury, has been determined heretofore against the defendant's contention in case People v. Bentley, 17 Pac. Rep. 436, (No. 20,364, decided by the supreme court, March 28, 1888,) where the facts surrounding the transaction are fully stated.

The question asked Evans, a witness, whether George Sevier lived in the same town with the defendant at the time of the alleged attempt to commit robbery, was immaterial. It was not shown, or attempted to be shown, that Sevier was anywhere in the immediate vicinity of Ridgway, the accomplice of the defendant, on the night when the offense was charged to have been committed, or that by any possibility Sevier might have been the culprit instead of the defendant.

The testimony of R. P. Grant as to the character of the defendant for truth, or the contrary, was admissible in impeachment of the defendant's testimony. The witness evidently knew the general reputation of the defendant in that regard.

The defendant emphatically denied all complicity or knowledge of the offense charged against him when he testified in his own behalf. The cross-examination to which he was subjected, was fairly directed to the rebuttal of the entire innocence which he thus proclaimed, and was legitimate and proper. There does not appear to be any merit in the defendant's points made upon appeal, and we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PEOPLE v. FARMER. (No. 20,390.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 20, 1883.)

1. HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—DYING DECLARATIONS.

The dying declarations of deceased are admissible upon trial for murder where it appears that, a few moments after receiving the fatal wound, deceased stated repeatedly that he was killed, that he never could get well, and that he would die; it appearing that he was told that the doctor in attendance said that he was sinking fast, and that, if he made any statement, he must make it soon, which he seemed to believe, and that at no time after he was shot, either before or after the declaration, did he express any hope of recovery; though the scribe who wrote down the declaration, which was in the form of questions and answers, appended thereto the conclusion, "In view of the probability of my dying, I make the above statement as my dying declaration,"—as, upon all the facts, the declaration appeared to have been made when the deceased believed he was about to die.¹

3. SAME.—DYING DECLARATIONS.—STRIKING OUT IRRELEVANT PORTIONS.

Though a portion of a dying declaration may not be admissible because referring to distinct and past transactions, the declaration, if otherwise proper, should be received, and the objection to the incompetent portion called to the attention of the court below by motion to strike out, or some other appropriate method.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Lake county; R. J. HUDSON, Judge.

Indictment against Wright J. Farmer for murder. Verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, and defendant appealed.

F. E. Johnson and R. C. Home, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Johnson, for the People.

McFARLAND, J. The defendant was convicted of murder in the second degree, and appeals from the judgment. The only ground relied on for a reversal is error in admitting in evidence the dying declaration of the deceased; the contention being that the declaration was not made under a solemn sense of impending dissolution. Two witnesses, W. C. Goldsmith and William Newman, testified as to the condition of the deceased. Goldsmith testified that he knew the deceased, Thomas G. Christie, in his life-time; that he was shot, according to his information, a little after midnight; that witness saw him shortly afterwards; and that the statement offered in evidence as a dying declaration was made at 1:35 o'clock A. M. of the same night. His subsequent testimony was as follows: "Question. Do you know, and, if so, how do you know, whether Mr. Christie, at the time he made that statement, had any belief upon the subject whether he would die from the effect of that wound? Answer. He told me that he was killed; that he would die. I went in to see him, and I said: 'Are you hurt, Tommy, bad?' 'Oh!' said he, 'Mr. Goldsmith, I am killed.' I said: 'I guess not. Where are you hurt?' He put his hand to his side, and showed me." After some matters not material here, the testimony proceeds as follows: "A. He said he believed it would kill him. He said: 'It's no use; I can't get well.' When I first came in from supper, he told me that. There was no anticipation of taking this statement at that time. It was more than an hour before he gave the statement. Q. Then what did he say about that afterwards, just before the statement was made? A. He said he didn't believe he would get well. Q. He believed he would die? A. Yes, sir. Q. And he made a statement? A. Yes, sir; he made a statement, and said it was his dying statement. He was in his right mind, he declared, himself. I asked him, and he said he knew me and all the parties around there. He was in his right mind. I talked with him about other matters, and my opinion is that he was in his right mind. Q. by the Court. You think he saw things clearly, and, so far as his mind was concerned, saw things clearly, and was able to give it correctly? A. Yes, sir; he said he was in too much pain to give a statement, but he would give answers to questions, and what questions were asked him he answered them." After some discussion between the court and counsel, the testimony proceeds as follows: "Q. Now, what was it the dying man said, Mr. Witness? A. He said he could not get well. Q. What else did he say? A. He said,—I came out, and spoke to him, and I said, 'How are you hurt, Tommy?' Q. by the Court. What time was that? A. It was after 12 o'clock, I think. He said he was shot. I said, 'Where?' He said, 'Here.' I said, 'Who done it?' He said, 'Farmer.'

¹As to what must be shown in order to render a dying declaration admissible in evidence, see Bryant v. State, (Ga.) 4 S. E. Rep. 853, and note; Walton v. State, (Ga.) 5 S. E. Rep. 203; Peak v. State, (N. J.) 12 Atl. Rep. 701.

I said, 'Are you hurt bad?' He said, 'I am killed; I never can get well.' He said, 'I will die.' I said, 'Where are you hit?' He pulled his shirt down, and showed me where he was shot. Q. by the Court. How long was that before you took the statement? A. It was over an hour. Q. by the Court. Now, I wish you would detail everything that Mr. Christie said at the time he was going to make that dying statement? A. I asked the doctors— Q. They were present? A. Yes, sir." Here follows a description of the attempt of the doctors to probe the wound. The witness then proceeds as follows: "Then I says, 'Doctor, do you think there is any chance for him?' 'No,' he said, 'there is no possible show; he is sinking very fast.' Q. That was in the presence of the deceased? A. Yes, sir. Q. He could hear it? A. Yes, 'f he was listening. It was about five feet from him, in the same room, at the far end of the table that was setting there. So I went out in the other room, and stayed there a few minutes, and came back, and asked him how he was feeling,—if he did not want to send for some of his folks. He said, 'Yes;' for William and his mother. I believe he told me to send for his mother, and some boy sitting around there volunteered to go, and he said he would go after his brother, and he went, and during that time he was gone I saw him all the time. [The mother lived and was at Lakeport, a distance of 32 miles from where the deceased was at that time.] He complained that he was getting worse, that he did not think that he could live, and wondered how long it would be until William came. [William, the brother, only lived a short distance—a few miles—from where deceased then was.] I told him to keep up good courage; that was half the battle. I said, 'You may pull through.' He said, 'No; I can't.' He expressed the opinion,— 'No, I can't get well,' he said. I went in the room, and the doctor said, 'Ain't you a justice of the peace?' I said, 'Yes.' They said, 'I think you had better go and have him make an ante-mortem statement, for he can't live much longer, and he is sinking very rapidly.' Several persons were sitting there,—George Minstrell and others, and they said, 'Let's go right along.' We went in, and I told him the doctors said he could not live; that it was almost certain that he would die. Q. by the Court. You told Christie that? A. Yes, sir; that it was necessary to make a statement now if he wished to make any. He said that he could not; that he could not talk enough; it hurt him too bad to talk. I asked him if he could answer questions. He said, 'Yes.' I said, 'You know who I am?' 'Oh, yes,' he said, 'I know who you are, and I know everybody, and I know everything.' I said, 'You can answer questions?' He said, 'Yes.' So George W. Minstrell took a pencil, and I asked him the questions that are propounded in that instrument, just as they are there. That is the way it was done, and how it came to be done. He said, 'I am shot, and I never can get well.' It appeared to me that he thought he was almost in dissolution. It impressed me that he thought he would die right then when he said, 'I never can get well.' He died the next day. I took my watch out, and it was 1:35 o'clock A. M. when he made this statement, and I so had it written on the statement. I don't know exactly when he was brought in there, [the place where he was when the statement was made.] I went to supper; and when I came back it was ten or fifteen minutes to 12 o'clock midnight. He was brought in there while I was gone to supper. The Court, to the District Attorney. If you have other testimony upon this point, I would like to hear it." Thereupon the prosecution called one William Newman, who, being first duly sworn, testified: "Question by Mr. Crump. Were you present about the time Christie made that dying statement? Answer. I was present at the time,—most of the time,—and up to the time of his death. Q. About the time, or just before the time of that dying declaration, state, if anything, what you heard Tom say about his belief that he would die? A. As soon as I saw him, immediately after he was shot,—not more than two or three minutes after they took him out of the court,—he said, 'Billy, I am killed; for God's sake send for mother.' We carried him inside, and he said: 'Send for Billy, too;' and we got Frank Adams to go for Billy, and his mother was sent for. Every few minutes he would say, 'Send for mother, for God's sake. I am going to die.' He spoke several times about his dying. That is the only way he talked. He did not talk as if he had any hope of recovery. I was with him when he made the statement. He said to send for his mother; that he wanted to see her before he died. Q. by the Court. He said he knew he was bound to die? A. Yes, sir."

This was all the evidence upon the point. It would serve to no good purpose to restate here the rules which govern the admissibility of dying declarations. They are well established and generally understood, and the difficulty always is in applying them to particular cases. It is sufficient to say, in the case at bar, that, in our opinion, the circumstances in proof warranted the court in admitting the declaration. And we do not think, as argued by counsel for appellant, that the correctness of the ruling is impeached by the fact that the scribe who reduced the statement to writing concluded it with these words: "In view of the probability of my dying, I make the above statement as my dying declaration." The deceased was in too much pain to make a statement in a narrative form. It was taken by question and answer. It is quite as likely that the word "probability" was suggested by the person who wrote it as that it originated with the deceased. At all events, the condition of the declarant's mind as to his apprehension of death must be determined from all that was said and done, and all the circumstances surrounding him, and not from a critical consideration of the exact meaning of a word used only once during all the conversations. And, taking all the evidence into consideration, we think that it sufficiently appears that, when the statement was made, the deceased believed that he was about to die.

Counsel contends here, for the first time, that the statement was erroneously admitted because it contains the following: "Question. What did he shoot you for? Answer. He had no reason whatever." This contention, of course, rests upon the rule that a dying declaration is admissible only as evidence of the circumstances under which the mortal injury was received,—the facts of the res gestæ,—and not as evidence of former and distinct transactions, or when it is mere expression of an opinion. It is doubtful if this contention could be sustained, even if the point had been properly presented. A fair construction of the matter complained of is that it referred solely to the time of the homicide, and the circumstances immediately surrounding it, and merely meant that at that time deceased had attempted no violence towards defendant. "Where, in making a dying declaration, the declarant, in speaking of the fatal wound, said it was done without any provocation on his part, it has been held that this declaration is not incompetent; it relating to fact, not opinion." Whart. Crim. Ev. § 294, and cases there cited. But, in any view, this specific objection to a part of the declaration should have been called to the attention of the court below by a motion to strike out, or by some other appropriate method. The judgment is affirmed.

MORITZ v. LAVELLE. (No. 12,230.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 20, 1888.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF—AGREEMENT TO CONVEY INTEREST IN MINES—WHEN STATUTE APPLIES.

An agreement was entered into between plaintiff and defendant to occupy and relocate a mine, plaintiff agreeing to pay the expense of defendant in examining the mine, and, if it was determined to open it, to join him there, the mine to be for the joint use and benefit of both; which agreement plaintiff performed on his part.

After locating and staking off the mine together, notices were posted, as required by law, in the name of defendant as locator, with plaintiff as a witness. They commenced operating the mine together, when defendant refused to convey to plaintiff one-half interest therein, and expelled him therefrom. Held, that the case did not fall within the statute of frauds, and that the defendant should be compelled to convey to plaintiff an undivided one-half interest in said mine.

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—PLEADING—CITIZENSHIP OF PLAINTIFF.

In such case, a complaint for specific performance of the contract need not allege the citizenship of plaintiff.

3. PLEADING—ALLEGING PERFORMANCE OF CONDITIONS—WHEN SUFFICIENT.

The allegation in a pleading in relation to the performance of a condition precedent, that "plaintiff has performed all and singular his agreements and covenants with defendant," is sufficient on demurrer.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; WILLIAM W. CROSS, Judge.

Action by Frank Moritz against A. Lavelle for specific performance of contract. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

W. A. Gray and Oregon Sanders, for appellant. W. B. Wallace, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The plaintiff and defendant entered into a verbal agreement to occupy and relocate a mine in Tulare county for their joint use and benefit. The plaintiff promised to pay all the expenses of the defendant, and furnish him with an outfit necessary to make the trip from Calaveras county to Tulare county, and to make the necessary examination of the mine; to pay the defendant's board for a certain time, and furnish him with provisions, clothing, and blankets. It was agreed that if the mine had been abandoned, the plaintiff should join the defendant at the mine, and assist in working the same. Pursuant to the agreement, the plaintiff furnished the defendant with all he had promised to furnish him. The defendant visited the mine, found that it was abandoned, notified the plaintiff of the fact, and the plaintiff joined him thereafter at the mine. The parties staked off the mine, erected the necessary monuments, completed the relocation of the mine by placing notices of relocation thereon, as required by law. These notices were signed by the defendant alone as locator, and by plaintiff as a witness, with the express oral agreement between them that, in consideration of the agreement which we have referred to, the defendant would transfer and deed to the plaintiff the undivided one-half interest in and to the mine. The parties thereafter commenced working the mine, and the plaintiff demanded a transfer to him of the undivided one-half interest which the defendant had promised to convey. The defendant refused to make a conveyance of any interest, and denied that plaintiff owned any interest therein, and forcibly expelled him from the mine. The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, as prayed for, namely, that defendant execute and deliver to the plaintiff a deed transferring the undivided one-half interest in and to the mine.

It is claimed that there having been no agreement in writing, and no such part performance as will take the case out of the statute of frauds, the contract cannot be enforced. But the statute of frauds has no application in cases of this kind. In Gore v. McBrayer, 18 Cal. 582, Gore, McBrayer and others entered into an oral agreement to prospect for quartz. The court there held that the statute of frauds, which requires an instrument in writing to create an interest in land, does not apply to the taking up of mining claims. In Settembre v. Putnam, 30 Cal. 450, it was held that where mining partners, under a verbal agreement, claim and develop a lode upon the land of another, and authorize one of their number to buy the claim for the benefit of all, and he procures a deed in his own name, he holds the legal title to the interest of his partners in trust for them. See, also, Sandfoss v. Jones, 35 Cal. 487; Hirbour v. Reedling, 3 Mont. 13; Murley v. Ennis, 2 Colo. 300; Welland v. Huber, 8 Nev. 205.

It was not necessary for the plaintiff to allege citizenship in his complaint. Thompson v. Spray, 14 Pac. Rep. 182.

The complaint alleges "that plaintiff has performed all and singular his agreements and covenants with defendant." This allegation is sufficient, we think, as to the performance of conditions on his part. Navigation Co. v. Wright, 6 Cal. 258.

The demurrer to the complaint, therefore, was properly overruled, and the plaintiff was entitled to judgment. Judgment affirmed.

In re BURDICK'S ESTATE. (No. 12,573.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 21, 1888.)

HOMESTEAD—RIGHT OF WIDOW.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1474, which provides that a homestead selected from community property shall, on the death of the husband or wife, vest absolutely in the survivor, and Id. § 1476, which provides that if the value of such homestead, at the time of its selection, exceeds $5,000, it may be divided or sold, and the excess over $5,000 distributed, a homestead of less value than $5,000, when selected, will, as against the heirs of the husband, vest in the wife absolutely upon his death, although at that time worth much more than that amount. SEARLS, C. J., and THORNTON, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. P. GARDINER, Judge.

Frank B. Daley, for appellant. Lee & Scott, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Kate Burdick is the surviving wife of Horace Burdick, deceased; and during his life-time said Horace Burdick executed in due form, and had recorded, a declaration of homestead upon the land involved herein. This land, at the time said declaration was made, was community property; and it remained the valid homestead of the husband and wife, who resided on it with their minor children, until the death of said Horace, which occurred May 7, 1887. On June 16, 1887, Frederick Eaton was appointed administrator of the estate of said Horace; and on October 6th the surviving wife, Kate Burdick, filed her petition in the superior court asking that the said homestead premises be set apart to her. On the filing of this petition the court made an order appointing appraisers and directing that, if said homestead premises be returned in the inventory appraised at more than $5,000, the appraisers should ascertain and appraise the value thereof at the time the homestead was selected, on October 7, 1870. The appraisers filed an inventory, in which the present value of the premises was put at $45,000, and reported the value of the same at the time of the selection of the homestead as $4,000. Thereupon the court made an order denying the petition of the widow, and from this order she appeals to this court.

It does not appear that the estate was at all in debt; and in its opinion the court below says that "the facts of the present case doubtless are that there are no creditors to suffer." At all events, there are no creditors opposing the petition of appellant. Indeed, it does not appear from the record that any one opposed it. We think the court erred in denying appellant's petition. A homestead, under the Codes, is impressed with two main qualities—First, exemption from execution; and, second, the right of survivorship, by which, upon the death of husband or wife, it goes to the survivor, and not to the heirs. It is with the latter quality alone that we have to deal with in the case at bar, as the contest here, if with any one, is with heirs, and not creditors.

Section 1474, Code Civil Proc., provides that "if the homestead selected by the husband and wife, or either of them, during their coverture, and recorded while both were living, was selected from the community property, * * * it vests, on the death of the husband or wife, absolutely in the survivor." And the "homestead" here mentioned is defined in the Codes as follows: "The homestead consists of the dwelling-house in which the claimant resides, and the land on which the same is situated, selected as in this title provided." Assuming, therefore, that a homestead is in every way valid,—that is, that it does not cover an unreasonably large amount of land, or is not in any way fraudulent, or sham, and has been the bona fide residence of the parties, and has been executed and recorded in the manner provided by law,—then, it goes, —that is, the dwelling-house and land go,—absolutely to the survivor, except in the cases where this right of survivorship is modified by some other provision of the Codes. And there is no such provision limiting the right of ownership where the value of the homestead at the time of its selection was less than $5,000. It is provided in section 1476 of the Code of Civil Procedure that if the value at the time of the selection of the homestead "exceeded five thousand dollars," or if it had been appraised as provided in the Civil Code and its appraised value exceeded that sum, (which was not the case here,) then it may be divided or sold, and the excess over $5,000 distributed. But there is no such provision as to a homestead of less value than $5,000 at the time of its selection. In the latter case it goes absolutely to the survivor, although at the time of the death of the husband its value may exceed $5,000. Some early decisions of this court, relied on by respondents, were made under statutory provisions materially different from those now in force.

The judgment and order of the court below are reversed, with instructions to set aside the homestead to petitioner, as prayed for in her petition.

I dissent: SEARLS, C. J.

THORNTON, J. I dissent. In the life-time of Horace Burdick, deceased, and during his intermarriage with the petitioner, Kate Burdick, he selected as a homestead the parcel of land involved herein. A proper declaration of homestead as to the parcel of land was duly made and filed by the decedent, on the 7th day of October, 1870. At the time of making and filing this declaration, the decedent, with his family, consisting of his wife, above mentioned, and his minor children, resided on the premises. The parcel of land so selected as a homestead was, at the time of such selection, community property. The decedent died on the 7th of May, 1887, and on the 16th day of June, in the same year, letters of administration on the estate of decedent were issued to Frederick Eaton. On the 6th of October, 1887, Kate Burdick, widow of deceased, filed in the superior court a petition asking that the premises above mentioned be set apart to her. On the filing of this petition the court made an order appointing appraisers of the estate of decedent, and by said order directed that, if the homestead premises above mentioned be returned in the inventory appraised at more than $5,000, the appraisers, before they make their return, ascertain and appraise the value of said homestead at the time it was selected, on the 7th of October, 1870, etc. On the 29th of October, 1887, the appraisers filed an inventory, in which the said premises were appraised at the sum of $45,000, and reported the appraised value of the same at the time of the selection as a homestead at the sum of $4,000. The court below denied the petition of the widow, who reserved an exception to the ruling of the court, and brings the case to this court on appeal.

Whether the estate of decedent is indebted does not appear. But it is so rare that persons die without being indebted that we may properly assume, in our reasoning on the question presented, that there are creditors of the estate whose claims are to be paid. It is pertinent here to remark that the inventory and appraisement, which are inserted in the bill of exceptions, make the whole estate $51,096.18, and this on a request that the court declare that property amounting to $45,000 be withdrawn from the payment of the claims of creditors. Of such a proposition it may be justly said that the law must be very clear which would justify a court in coming to such a conclusion. It would be a most extraordinary exemption law which would require such a thing to be done. It would be almost as extraordinary to withdraw from the participation of the heirs, even to the extent allowed of the homestead of the value of $5,000, so large a portion of the estate as is here required. While the constitution allows, and, in fact, enjoins, legislation to protect from forced sale a certain portion of the homestead, it certainly was not intended to authorize an exemption so unreasonable as to include four-fifths of the property of an estate. "The homestead [we give here the definition of the Civil Code] consists of the dwelling-house in which the claimant resides, and the land on which the same is situated, selected as in this title provided." Civil Code, § 1237. The mode of selection is pointed out in sections 1262 and 1263 of the Civil Code. The declaration required by the section 1262 must contain "an estimate of" the "actual cash value" of the premises. Now, while it is not declared in the foregoing sections that the homestead shall not exceed $5,000 in value, still it is evident that the law was passed in pursuance of the provision of the constitution above quoted, and that it was intended as a law of exemption from forced sale to an amount to be fixed by the legislature. The amount of exemption is fixed in section 1260, in the case of any head of a family who is married, at $5,000. This sum cannot be exceeded. This, then, in the case of the married head of a family, is the homestead spoken of in all the laws on the subject; that is, the residence of the family not exceeding in value the aforementioned sum of $5,000. We think the above is the homestead spoken of in section 1265 of the Civil Code, and in the various sections of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is clear from the last clause in section 1265 that the excess above $5,000 is in all cases subject to the debts of the deceased. Now, it is said that where the premises when selected are less in value than $5,000 that no provision is made by law, on the death of the husband or wife, for cutting down or limiting the homestead to that sum, and section 1476 is cited to that effect. This seems to be correct of that section, and from this it is argued that, as no provision is made for thus limiting the homestead in the case just mentioned, therefore the whole property used as a homestead during the life of one of the spouses passes to the survivor, although at the time of such death it may be of a value greatly exceeding $5,000. Section 1476 clearly provides for the case of limiting the homestead on the decease of one of the spouses to $5,000 in value, where the premises at the date of their selection exceeded $5,000. The construction urged leads to this result: That when one of the spouses departs this life, and the homestead at its date of its selection was of a value exceeding $5,000, it may be cut down to $5,000, but where it was, at the date of its selection, of a value less than $5,000, it cannot be limited or cut down, but passes to the survivor of the married pair, irrespective of value. In the case last supposed the survivor must have the homestead, though it be of a value exceeding $100,000, and constitutes the entire estate, thus leaving the creditors unpaid, and depriving the heirs of all share in the estate of their ancestor. Such a result savors of a solecism. If there is no method provided by statute for cutting down and limiting the homestead to $5,000 in the case such as is presented herein, we think that the superior court, under section 187, Code Civil Proc., may adopt a method. We think the court below has the power and jurisdiction to limit the homestead as above; and, having such power and jurisdiction, it is vested, by section 187, supra, with all necessary and appropriate means to carry out and execute such power. Such is the doctrine laid down in Mawson v. Mawson, 50 Cal. 539, which is applicable herein. I think the order should be affirmed.

77 Cal. 54

BULL v. COE et al. (No. 12,955.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 27, 1888.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE—WIFE'S SEPARATE ESTATE—ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF DEED.

A deed is duly acknowledged by a married woman when the notary certifies, in accordance with the Civil Code Cal. § 1191, that he "made her acquainted with the contents of the instrument," although the deed shows that it is subject to conditions contained in another instrument not signed by her, and not executed in fact at that time, and the contents whereof were unknown to the notary.

2. SAME—EQUITABLE MORTGAGE.

A married woman executing a deed absolute in form, but intended as a mortgage to secure advances to be made to her husband, according to the terms of another instrument fixing the amount of such advances referred to in the deed which her husband delivered by her authority, such deed is security for the advances made in pursuance of said instrument, although the latter was not actually executed until after the deed, and although the amount of advances made was greater than the wife intended or supposed it would be, no fraud being shown.

3. PARTNERSHIP—ACTION BETWEEN PARTNERS.

One partner lent his copartner the means to pay in his share of the partnership capital, advancing it as required, and taking security therefor. Held, that this was not a partnership transaction, and an action to enforce the security would lie before settlement of the partnership accounts.

4. MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE.

A mortgage executed by one person to secure the debt of another may be enforced against the mortgaged property after the debtor's death, although the holder of the note fails to present it as a claim against his estate.

5. SAME.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 726, providing that there can be but one action for the recovery of any debt, or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage, does not prevent a mortgagee, who also has the title to property purchased jointly with his debtor, but conveyed to the mortgagee separately as further security for the same debt, from foreclosing the mortgage, waiving, if he chooses, the security of the other property.

6. HOMESTEAD—MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE—PRESENTATION OF CLAIM AGAINST DECEDENT'S ESTATE.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1475, providing that claims secured by liens or incumbrances "on the homestead" must be presented and allowed as other claims against the estate, a deed absolute, intended as a mortgage, executed by a husband and wife upon the wife's separate property, which has been declared a homestead, to secure the debt of the husband, can be foreclosed after the death of the husband, although no claim has been presented against the estate, upon which the creditor has waived all demands for the mortgage debt. Overruling 15 Pac. Rep. 123.

7. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY—RELEASE OF SURETY—PLEADING.

If a surety would defend on the ground that the creditor has released his principal, whereby he is discharged, he must plead such new matter specially; and although evidence is introduced tending to establish such defense, if the case is not tried on that theory the question cannot be raised on appeal.

Commissioner's decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. BRUNSON, Judge.

On rehearing. For former opinion, see 15 Pac. Rep. 123.

Wells, Van Dyke & Lee and Wm. H. Sharp, for appellant. Chapman & Hendrick, Bicknell & White, and W. C. Belcher, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. Suit to foreclose a mortgage. The material facts are as follows: Charles L. Strong, John O. Earl, and Alpheus Bull agreed together to purchase and operate a certain mine. Each was to furnish one-third of the capital, and be interested in that proportion. Strong had no money, and Bull agreed to advance his share, taking as security a mortgage upon a piece of real property of which Mrs. Strong was the owner, and upon which a homestead had been declared, and taking, also, the title to the mine in his own name as additional security. The mortgage was by a deed absolute in form, duly signed and acknowledged by the Strong's. The terms of the contract were in a separate paper signed by Bull only. The money was advanced by Bull, as required from time to time, in accordance with the terms of his contract. After a time the mine proved a failure, and Strong died. The defendant Coe was appointed administrator of his estate, and gave notice to the creditors to present their claims. Bull did not present any claim against the estate, but commenced his action of foreclosure upon the property mortgaged by Mrs. Strong, under section 1500 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court below gave judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals. The following are the only questions which, we think, require notice:

1. It is contended that there was no proper acknowledgment of the deed by Mrs. Strong. The argument is that this deed expressly declares that the property is conveyed "in trust, the conditions of which are stated in a separate instrument;" that it appears from the evidence that this separate instrument was not signed until the next day, and that, therefore, its contents could not have been explained to her; that, where one contract refers to another, the two are considered as one, and that therefore she was not made acquainted by the notary with the contents of the instrument, as the law requires. We are not prepared to say that the certificate of the notary can be contradicted, in the absence of proper allegations of fraud. We express no opinion upon that point. But assuming in favor of respondent that the certificate can be contradicted, we nevertheless do not think the point well taken. The statute requires that the notary shall certify that he "made her acquainted with the contents of the instrument." Civil Code, § 1191. What instrument? Manifestly the one which the married woman has signed, and which the notary has before him. It would be absurd to say that he is to explain the contents of a document which he has not before him, and knows nothing about. It is perfectly true that for certain purposes two instruments which refer to each other are considered as one. But this is merely a fiction of law, which is not to be extended to a case like this. We think the notary did his whole duty if he explained that the instrument was a deed of the property to the grantee named therein, subject to the conditions appearing in the document referred to, which conditions and document were not before him. Any other construction would not only be unwarranted by the language of the statute, but would be dangerous to the security of business transactions.

2. It is argued that Mrs. Strong never authorized the mortgage for so large a sum. She does not deny that she executed and acknowledged the deed; nor does she deny that her husband had authority to deliver it. Her answer admits that the deed was given to secure advances to the amount of $3,000, but denies that it was given for any other purpose. The husband, therefore, had authority to deliver the deed. Furthermore, he had authority to deliver it "in accordance with its terms and manifest purpose." Arnaz v. Escandon, 59 Cal. 498. And by its terms it was a conveyance "in trust, the conditions of which are stated in a separate instrument in hands of the parties of the first part." If that separate instrument had been in the hands of parties of the first part there could be no doubt but that she would have been bound by it, whether she knew its contents or not. It was not, in fact, signed until the next day. Its terms appear to have been agreed upon by the husband and Bull. It is not pretended that there ever was any other instrument agreed upon, or in the hands of the parties of the first part, or that there was not the most perfect good faith on the part of Bull. Nor is any imputation expressly made upon the good faith of the husband. There is no evidence that he was limited to any particular amount. Mrs. Strong does not say that she so limited him. She says: "I never pledged the ranch myself for any such amount. I was never informed that any one else had, until I was writing these letters for information." This is not inconsistent with the fact that she put the deed in the hands of her husband, to be used by him as he thought best, or without inquiry as to what was to be done with it. Under the circumstances, we think Strong was the ostensible agent of his wife.

3. It is contended that the action cannot be maintained because there was no settlement of the partnership accounts. The court finds that "the entire claim of plaintiff, whatever may be its amount, or the balance due, grows out of the purchase and working of the said mine by the said Earl, Bull, and Strong as mining partners, and not otherwise, and no accounting was ever had between the partners during the life-time of the said Strong, nor any balance struck between them." In other words, the court found that the loan by Bull to Strong was a partnership transaction. So far as this involves a conclusion of law, the conclusion is erroneous; and so far as it is a finding of fact, it is not sustained by the evidence. The uncontradicted evidence shows that the transaction as to the loan was entirely between Strong and Bull. Earl had nothing to do with it. Strong had obtained information concerning the mine; and he came to Earl and Bull to get them to go in with him. He had no money to pay for his share, and he borrowed it from Bull, giving the mortgage above mentioned as security. The character of the transaction is not changed by the fact that the money was not paid down at once, but was advanced by Bull as required. The mortgage was to cover future advances; and the transaction was purely and simply a loan from Bull to Strong. It is well settled in this state, as elsewhere, that one partner cannot sue another upon a demand arising out of the partnership transactions, in the absence of a settlement of the accounts. But by the terms of this rule it does not apply where the transaction is not a partnership matter. And it seems plain that a loan from one partner to another is not a partnership transaction, notwithstanding the fact that the borrower intends to put the money into the firm and does so. Accordingly it is well settled that the lender in such a case can maintain an action for the recovery of the money, although there has been no settlement of the partnership accounts. Currier v. Webster, 45 N. H. 226; Crater v. Bininger, 45 N. Y. 545; Morgan v. Nunes, 54 Miss. 312, 313; Scott v. Campbell, 30 Ala. 730; Grigsby v. Nance, 3 Ala. (N. S.) 350, 351; Terrell v. Richards, 1 Nott & McC. 20.

4. The title to the mine was taken in the name of Bull as additional security for the loan. And it is argued that, under the provision that "there can be but one action for the recovery of any debt or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage" (Code Civil Proc. § 726) the plaintiff cannot foreclose the mortgage upon Mrs. Strong's property without at the same time foreclosing on the mine. But the plaintiff has commenced only one action. The fact that he has omitted some of the security would, under the decisions, be a waiver of the mortgage upon the omitted portion. Mascarel v. Raffour, 51 Cal. 242. And (aside from the question of suretyship, which is considered below) the mortgagee is free to make such waiver if he chooses. The chief argument of the respondent in this regard is that the mortgaged property constitutes a fund which must first be exhausted before a personal judgment can be had against the mortgagor; and this proposition seems to be established by the decisions. See Bartlett v. Cottle, 63 Cal. 366; Biddell v. Brizzolara, 64 Cal. 362. But the plaintiff here does not seek a personal judgment against any one; and hence the rule has no application.

5. It is contended for the respondent that Mrs. Strong was a mere surety, and was discharged, for two reasons: (a) Because no claim was presented against the estate of the principal debtor. If we assume that the fact of suretyship sufficiently appears, the point is, nevertheless, not well taken. The precise point was decided in favor of the appellant in Sichel v. Carrillo, 42 Cal. 500. The only argument made by respondent in this regard is that the decision is incorrect in principle, and unsupported by authority. But to this we cannot agree. It was well settled in this state, as elsewhere, that mere delay of the creditor to proceed against the principal would not discharge the surety. Humphreys v. Crane, 5 Cal. 173; Kritzer v. Mills, 9 Cal. 22, 23; Hartman v. Burlingame, Id. 557; Williams v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 419; Peoplo v. Jenkins, 17 Cal. 500. And this is still the law. Preston v. Hood, 64

Cal. 408, 1 Pac. Rep. 487; Civil Code, § 2823. In extension of this principle it was held that the surety was not discharged even if the delay of the creditor was such that his remedy against the principal became barred by limitation. Whiting v. Clark, 17 Cal. 407. And it was but a short step from this to the position that the loss of the creditor's remedy against the estate of the principal by non-action as to presentation of the claim did not discharge the surety. This was the decision in Sichel v. Carrillo. And the point has been ruled the same way in other states. Johnson v. Bank, 4 Smedes & M. 165; McBroom v. Governor, 6 Port. (Ala.) 32; Villars v. Palmer, 67 Ill. 204. And see Banks v. State, 62 Md. 88. (b) It is claimed that the surety was discharged because the plaintiff, in his complaint in this action, expressly released his claim against the estate of the principal. The statement in the complaint in this regard is that the plaintiff "hereby expressly waives all recourse against any of the property or estate of said Charles L. Strong, deceased, not included in the aforesaid deed; and he relies solely on his lien on the premises described in said deed for the repayment of his said advances." In making this waiver the learned counsel for the plaintiff must have proceeded upon the theory that both of the Strong's were principal debtors. If, however, Strong was alone the principal, and his wife was the sole owner of the property, and was a mere surety for him, it is a very grave question whether she was not discharged by this act of the plaintiff. Was she a mere surety? There can be no doubt but that the debt was the debt of the husband alone. The complaint expressly alleges that the mortgage was given to secure money advanced and to be advanced "to and for account of said Charles L. Strong;" and the evidence accords with this allegation. The appellant says in his reply brief that "the money advanced by the plaintiff was as much for her benefit as that of her husband;" but there is nothing in either the pleadings or the evidence to justify this remark. The only possible sense in which, upon this record, she can be said to have been interested, is that in which every wife may be said to be interested in her husband's transactions; and it is hardly necessary to say that this general interest does not make her separate property liable for his debts. The debt being the debt of the husband alone, if the property mortgaged was the separate property of the wife, she was a surety so far as the property is concerned. Spear v. Ward, 20 Cal. 674; Hassey v. Wilke, 55 Cal. 528. The court finds that it was her separate property; and, while the evidence upon the question is meager, we cannot say from the record that the finding of fact ought not to stand. The difficulty about the defense is that it is not pleaded. The release of a surety by discharge of the principal is new matter, and must be pleaded. Mulford v. Estudillo, 23 Cal. 100; Bostwick v. McEvoy, 62 Cal. 502, 503. And there is nothing either in the complaint or in Mrs. Strong's answer which states either that she was a surety or that the property was her separate property. From some of the phraseology of the answer the contrary inference is to be drawn. Nor can it be said that the cause was tried upon the theory that any such defense was set up. The evidence as to the ownership of the property may have come in with reference to the homestead. Wherever the course of the parties at the trial is allowed to supply omissions in pleading, such course must appear clearly, and be beyond all controversy. This defense, therefore, cannot be considered.

6. It is argued that there was a valid homestead upon the property, and that for this reason a claim ought to have been presented against the estate. When the case was here before we were of opinion that the case of Camp v. Grider, 62 Cal. 21, required claims upon the homestead to be presented; and that it made no difference that the homestead was upon the separate property of the survivor. With reference to the latter proposition, further examination and reflection, after rehearing, have convinced us that we erred, and the fact that the homestead was upon the separate property of the survivor takes it out of the rule laid down in Camp v. Grider. Except for the homestead it is clear that the separate property of the survivor is not a part of the estate of the decedent, and that (all demands against the estate being waived) it is not necessary or proper to present a mortgage upon such separate property as a claim against the estate. Now, whatever may be the nature of the interest which the husband acquired in his wife's separate property by virtue of the homestead, it vested in the wife at his death. In re Burdick's Estate, ante, 805, (No. 12,573, filed June 20, 1888.) It was not a part of his estate, and since the plaintiff made no claim against the estate, nor against property which was a part of the estate, it was not necessary to present a claim to the administrator. See, generally, Shadt v. Heppe, 45 Cal. 437. We think the somewhat general language of the statute is not to be construed so as to cover such a case.

It cannot be contended that the failure to present a claim as to the debt extinguished it, and that the lien, being a mere incident to the debt, expired with it; because, although a claim which is not presented becomes "barred," it is not "extinguished." Whitmore v. Savings Union, 50 Cal. 149.

No question as to the rights of general creditors of the estate is involved here, because the plaintiff, having waived all claim against the estate, is not such a creditor. And we desire what is said above to be understood with reference to the precise facts of the case before us, viz., where the homestead is upon the separate property of the survivor. We neither express nor intimate any opinion as to what would be the rule where the homestead is upon the separate property of the decedent, or upon the community property.

The positions as to the power of the court to grant a rehearing, and the sufficiency of the order granting it, do not require special notice.

We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

I concur: FOOTE, C.

BELCHER, C. C., took no part in this opinion.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

OFFICE AND OFFICER—PILOT COMMISSIONERS—TENURE OF OFFICE.

Pol. Code Cal. § 368, subd. 3, provides for the appointment of pilot commissioners by the governor, with the consent of the senate. * Id. § 369, provides that the officers enumerated in said subdivision 3 shall hold their offices during the governor's pleasure. Id. § 2440, provides: "There must be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice of the senate, * * * a board of pilot commissioners for the ports of San Francisco, Mare Island, and Benicia." And Id. § 2442, provides: "The commissioners hold their offices during the pleasure of the power appointing them, not exceeding four years from the date of their commissions." Held, that the appointment and tenure of the commissioners of the above ports are controlled by sections 2440 and 2442, and under the latter section they cannot be removed by the governor without the concurrence of the senate. PATERSON and MCFARLAND, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; W. T. WALLACE, Judge.

Pol. Code Cal. § 2440, provides that "there must be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice of the senate, * * * a board of pilot commissioners for the ports of San Francisco, Mare Island, and Benicia." Id. § 2442, provides that "the commissioners hold their offices during the pleasure of the power appointing them, not exceeding four years from the date of their commissions."

George A. Johnson, Atty. Gen. Page & Eells, Geo. A. Knight, and Oliver P. Evans, for the People. Stanly, Stoney & Hayes, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action in the nature of quo warranto, to oust the defendant from the office of pilot commissioner for the ports of San Francisco, Benicia, and Mare Island, and to instate the relator therein. The defendant was nominated by Gov. Bartlett, and confirmed by the senate in January, 1887. In February following he duly qualified, and has ever since continued to discharge the duties of the office. On September 28, 1887, Gov. Waterman, who had in the mean time succeeded Gov. Bartlett, issued to the relator a commission appointing him to the office, "vice A. C. Freese, removed." The relator, Travers, therewith qualified, and on the 3d of October, 1887, presented to the board of pilot commissioners, defendant being present, his commission from the governor, and demanded that he be let into the possession and enjoyment of the office in place of the defendant. Members of the board, defendant included, refused to recognize the relator as a pilot commissioner, or to let him into possession or enjoyment of the office. The legislature has not been in session at any time since the appointment of the relator.

Section 368 of the Political Code provides: "The following executive officers are appointed by the governor, with the consent of the senate: (1) The inspector of gas-meters; * * * (2) directors of the insane asylum; * * * (3) pilot commissioners. * * *" Section 369 of the Political Code provides: "The officers enumerated in the first subdivision of the last section hold their offices for the term of two years; those in the second subdivision for the term of four years; and those in the third subdivision during the governor's pleasure." Section 2440 of the Political Code provides: "There must be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice of the senate, three experienced and competent ship-masters or nautical men, * * * a board of pilot commissioners for the ports of San Francisco, Mare Island, and Benicia." Section 2442 provides: "The commissioners hold their offices during the pleasure of the power appointing them, not exceeding four years from the date of their commission." Under section 369 the governor may remove a pilot commissioner at his pleasure, but under section 2442 such commissioner can be removed only by the joint act of the governor and the senate; for where an appointment is made by the chief executive, by and with the advice or consent of the senate, the former alone is not the "appointing power." People v. Cazneau, 20 Cal. 507; People v. Tilton, 37 Cal. 619. Sections 368 and 2440 of the Political Code agree that the appointment of pilot commissioner must be by the governor, by and with the consent or advice of the senate; but the question for solution here is whether such commissioners hold their offices "during the governor's pleasure," as provided in section 369, or "during the pleasure of the power appointing them," as provided in section 2442. Which of these two sections shall control? Section 369 is found in part 3, tit. 1, art. 2, Pol. Code. This part of the Code provides for the government of the state. Title 1 provides for "the mode of election and appointment and term of office of civil executive officers." It consists of seven chapters, treating of the classification of public officers, legislative officers, judicial officers, salaries of judicial, ministerial and other officers, and general provisions relating to different classes of officers. The board of pilot commissioners for the ports of San Francisco, Mare Island, and Benicia was created by section 2440, art. 5, c. 1, tit. 6, pt. 3, Pol. Code. The board acquires all its powers from articles 5 and 6 of this chapter. It prescribes the duties, compensation of the members thereof, and regulates their proceedings. If sections 368 and 369 were repealed, the board would not be affected thereby. Section 368 refers generally to the power of the commissioners, and a special provision, like section 2442, applicable to a particular board, would seem to operate as an exception to the general rule. Section 2442 is almost identically the same as section 3 of the act of the legislature approved March 22, 1870, entitled "An act to establish pilots and pilot regulations for the ports of San Francisco, Mare Island, Vallejo, and Benicia," and must be construed as a continuation thereof. Section 5 of the Political Code provides: "The provisions of this Code, so far as they are substantially the same as existing statutes, must be construed as continuations thereof, and not as new enactments."

We see nothing in the provisions of section 4481 of the Political Code inconsistent with this view. The subject-matter of a title should be ascertained not so much from the head-lines as from its contents. The qualifications, appointment, term of office, organization, compensation, and powers and duties of pilot commissioners are the subject-matters of articles 5, 6, and 7 of chapter 1, tit. 6. The term of office and appointment of pilot commissioners, it is true, is a part of the subject-matter of sections 368 and 369 of title 1, but the provisions of title 6 as to such appointment and term of office are parts of the subject-matter of a subdivision of the Code which applies especially and exclusively to the board of pilot commissioners for the ports of San Francisco, Mare Island, and Benicia, and the board of pilot commissioners for Humboldt bay and bar, and the officers composing said board. The term of office of these commissioners is a part of the subject-matter of title 6. Title 1 names 69 civil executive offices. It contains an enumeration and classification of officers whose election, appointment, term, organization, powers, and duties are in nearly all cases provided for elsewhere in the Code. It does not legislate comprehensively upon the subjects referred to in its title, but seems to be rather of the nature of an index to the subject-matter of offices. Judgment affirmed.

PATERSON and McFARLAND, JJ., (dissenting.) We dissent. Sections 2440 and 2442 are a portion of title 6, pt. 3. This title relates to "public ways," and is divided into six chapters, which provide respectively for public waters, highways, toll-roads, toll-bridges, and ferries, wharves, chutes, and piers,—miscellaneous provisions relating to public ways. The rules for the construction of the Codes and the provisions thereof are given in sections 4478-4484 of the Political Code. It is there provided, among other rules: "If the provisions of any title conflict with or contravene the provisions of another title, the provisions of each title must prevail as to all matters and questions arising out of the subject-matter of such title." In the case at bar the conflict is not between the provisions of different chapters in the same title, or of different articles in the same chapter, or of different sections in the same chapter or article, but it occurs between provisions of different titles. It seems to us, therefore, that the rule prescribed by section 4481 must prevail in determining which of these sections shall stand as the law in this case. The provision of the Code is so clear that no other rule of construction can be applied. Article 1 deals almost exclusively with the election and appointment of officers, terms of office, the compensation and manner of removal, while article 6 is devoted largely to the construction and management of public ways. In article 1 nearly every state officer is referred to, and, where the term of office and mode of appointment is not given, the fact is stated that those matters have been elsewhere legislated on. In fact, the officers named in section 368 are about the only officers whose appointment and terms of office are regulated without reference to some other provision in the Code. The manner in which the election, appointment, term of office, etc., of the various offices, were prescribed by the legislature in that article, indicates grave consideration and deliberation. While it is true that "the subject-matter of a title does not depend so much upon the head-note as upon the contents of the title," still we think that the appointment of pilot commissioners, among other officers, is more naturally dealt with in that portion of the Code which provides specifically and only for the appointment, election, term of service, etc., of public officers of the state than in that portion of the Code which is devoted to the construction and maintenance of highways, etc. Title

1 deals with public officers to the exclusion of all other subjects. The object of all rules for the construction of statutes is to ascertain the intention of the law-maker. The rule prescribed by section 4481 is not only clear and applicable, but is founded in reason. It is intended to ascertain which of the conflicting provisions is the one to which the attention of the legislature was probably called. The appointment of the officers of the state was mere incidental matter in the establishment of the rules for the government of public ways. Any member of the legislature, desiring to review, change, or amend the law with respect to the appointment or term of office of any public officer, would naturally look first at that title which relates exclusively to such matters. We think that the court below erred in its decision that the governor had not the right of appointment.

It is claimed that the governor did not in fact remove the respondent; that the statement in the commission, "vice A. C. Freese, removed," the demand of the relator to be let into possession of the office, and the refusal of the defendant to comply therewith, do not show the removal, and therefore there was no vacancy to be filled. We think, however, that the appointment of a successor in office when an officer is removable at pleasure is a sufficient act of removal. "The mere appointment of a successor would, per se, be a removal of the prior incumbent." Ex parte Hennen, 13 Pet. 261; Blake v. U. S., 103 U. S. 237; Keenan v. Perry, 24 Tex. 253.

PEOPLE v. AH BEAN. (No. 20,361.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 23, 1883.)

PERJURY—INDICTMENT.

An information for perjury, charging that defendant was duly sworn in a certain case "then and there at issue, to-wit, the case of The People v. Martine," and setting out defendant's testimony therein, with an averment of its materiality, sufficiently "sets forth the substance of the controversy in respect to which the offense was committed," as required by Pen. Code Cal. § 966.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; JAMES A. GIBSON, Judge.

Information for perjury against Ah Bean. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction.

Wallace Leach and Harris & Gregg, for appellant. George A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

SEARLS, C. J. Defendant was informed against for perjury, charged to have been committed on the 21st day of May, 1887, at the county of San Bernardino. The appeal is from a judgment of conviction. Defendant demurred to the information, which demurrer was overruled, and this action is assigned as error. The information, so far as essential to the present inquiry, is as follows: "The said Ah Bean, on the 21st day of May, A. D. 1887, at the said county of San Bernardino, state of California, having taken an oath before the superior court of the aforesaid county, Hon. H. M. WILLIS, Judge, presiding, that he would testify truly in said court, in a case then and there at issue, to-wit, the case of The People v. Martine, a Chinaman, said oath being and having been administered by George L. Hisom, the clerk of said superior court, who then and there had authority to administer such oath, did, in a matter material to such issue, he, the said Ah Bean, defendant, having taken such oath as aforesaid, willfully, corruptly, falsely, and feloniously state, declare, and testify the truth to be that Martine, the defendant in the above-mentioned case, was at his, the defendant's, house for supper on the evening or February 18, 1887, and from 8 o'clock of that evening all night; and that said Martine did not leave his, defendant's, house,—all of which was false, the defendant well knowing such statement to be false." The contention of the defendant is that the information fails to set forth the substance of the controversy in respect to which the offense was committed as required by the Penal Code. Section 966 is in the following language: "In an indictment or information for perjury, or subornation of perjury, it is sufficient to set forth the substance of the controversy or matter in respect to which the offense was committed, and in what court and before whom the oath alleged to be false was taken, and that the court or the person before whom it was taken, had authority to administer it, with proper allegations of the falsity of the matter on which the perjury is assigned; but the indictment or information need not set forth the pleadings, record, or proceedings with which the oath is connected, nor the commission or authority of the court or person before whom the perjury was committed." The controversy, in respect of which the offense was committed, in this case was the case of People v. Martine. At common law it was necessary, in a case like the present, to set out in the indictment for perjury the pleadings in law or equity in the case in which the perjury is alleged to have been committed. The prolixity and technicality required in an indictment of this kind led to frequent failures of justice, by reason of mere formal defects; and to obviate the difficulty the statute of 14 & 15 Vict. was enacted by section 20 of chapter C, of which it was provided that only the substance of the offense charged upon the defendant need be set forth. Our statute is practically to the same effect. The information here shows the pendency of an action, to-wit, the case of People v. Martine, in the superior court, which case was then and there at issue; that defendant was sworn by the clerk, who was authorized to administer oaths; and that, in a matter material to such issue he willfully, corruptly, and feloniously testified as in the information specified. There are two modes by which the materiality of the alleged false statement may be shown in criminal pleading: First, by setting forth the nature of the issue, and the evidence given thereon, so that, as a matter of law, it may be said the testimony upon which the perjury is assigned is material to the issue; second, by showing an action at issue in a court of competent jurisdiction, the testimony given, its willful and felonious falsity, coupled with the averment that it was material to the issue. The difference in the two methods consists in showing the materiality of the testimony in the one case and merely averring it in the other. In People v. Kelly, 59 Cal. 372, it was held the materiality of the evidence need not be expressly averred, where it appears from facts stated; and in People v. Brilliant, 58 Cal. 214, it was held that an express averment of materiality is sufficient, unless the contrary appears from other averments. The information being certain and specific as to time and place, as to the court and person by whom the oath was administered, together with his authority to administer such oath, having shown the cause, and that it was at issue, the evidence given and its known falsity, as well as an averment of its materiality, the information was sufficient in law, and the demurrer and motion in arrest of judgment were properly overruled. The judgment and order are affirmed.

FURNISH v. MULLAN et al. (No. 12,432.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 21, 1888.)

1. WRIT—SUMMONS—PUBLICATION—AFFIDAVIT.

An affidavit for publication of summons sufficiently shows the non-residence of the defendant in stating that "the person on whom service is to be made formerly resided in this state, but has departed from this state, and now resides in the city of Washington, D. C."

2. SAME.

An affidavit for publication of summons is sufficient, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 412, which provides that summons may be served by publication when the person to be served resides out of the state, or cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state, when it shows that the person on whom service is to be made resides out of the state, without also showing acts constituting due diligence to find him in the state.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; WILLIAM W. CROSS, Judge.

Action by G. N. Furnish against John Mullan, J. M. Johnson, and two defendants whose names were not known to plaintiff. Defendant Mullan appeals. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 412, provides that summons may be served by publication when the person to be served "resides out of the state, or has departed from the state, or cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state."

Frederick S. Stratton, for appellant. Chas. G. Lamberson, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The affidavit upon which the order of publication of summons was made, states that "said defendant John Mullan is a proper and necessary party to the action; * * * that the person on whom the service is to be made formerly resided at the city and county of San Francisco, in this state, but has departed from this state, and now resides in the city of Washington, D. C." The order for publication of summons states, "And it further appearing that the residence of said defendant John Mullan is at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, it is ordered and directed that a copy of the summons and complaint in this suit be forthwith deposited in the United States post-office, postpaid, directed to said defendant at his said place of residence." The motion to set aside the judgment in the court below was based upon the ground—First, that the affidavit for publication did not disclose the residence of defendant Mullan, or that he was a non-resident; and, second, that the affidavit for publication did not show that due diligence had been used to find defendant Mullan in this state, or that he could not, after due diligence, be found within this state. It was sufficient, under section 412, Code Civil Proc., to show that the person on whom the service was to be made resided out of the state. This was done. The further statement, made in the affidavit, "that affiant has made diligent inquiry to find said defendant, but cannot after due diligence find him within this state, and personal service of summons cannot be made on the defendant in this state," was immaterial, and it was not necessary for the plaintiff to show acts constituting "due diligence." Order affirmed.

HOLLISTER et al. v. CORDERO et al. (No. 12,519.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 22, 1888.)

1. EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTION—SURVIVORSHIP.

Husband and wife were both murdered, and their house, in which their bodies were left, set on fire, and burned, and there was no proof as to which had actually expired first. Held, that Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1963, subd. 40, providing that where two persons of different sex perish in the same calamity, both being over 15 and under 60 years of age, (as in this case,) the male will be presumed to have survived, is applicable, and the trial court properly adjudged that the entire community property belonged to the heirs of the husband.

2. SAME—HEARSAY—VERDICT OF CORONER'S JURY.

Where husband and wife were murdered on the same occasion, and their bodies placed in their dwelling, and burned, the verdict of the coroner's jury, not purporting to contain a statement of any facts as to the time or manner of their death, is inadmissible on the question of survivorship. It is mere hearsay.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; B. T. WILLIAMS, Judge of Superior Court of Ventura County, presiding.

Action by Hannah A. Hollister, W. W. Hollister, and Ellwood Cooper, executors and trustees of the estate of William W. Hollister, deceased, against Estanislao S. Cordero, Ella A. Corliss-French, and others, for partition of the Rancho Los Cruces, situate in the county of Santa Barbara, and to adjudicate the claims of the several defendants to various shares and interests therein. Plaintiffs, among other interests, claimed an undivided one-ninth thereof, formerly owned and held by George W. Corliss and Lucretia A. Corliss, his wife, as community property, through an administrator's sale and grant from the heirs at law of Lucretia, the wife. Defendant Ella A. Corliss-French claimed the same interest by grant from the heirs of George W. Corliss. From that part of the decree adjudging said interest to Ella A. Corliss plaintiffs appeal.

Fernald, Cope & Boyce, for appellants. W. C. Stratton, Paul R. Wright, and Hall & Taggart, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. On January 9, 1864, G. W. Corliss and Lucretia, his wife, were murdered at their home on the Los Cruces rancho, in the county of Santa Barbara, and the house in which their bodies were left was set on fire, and burned, by the parties who killed them. The land in controversy, and sought to be partitioned herein, was the community property of said G. W. and Lucretia Corliss, and the rights of the parties depend entirely upon the question which one of the spouses died first, George W. or Lucretia? The law then provided—as it does now—that upon the death of the husband one-half of the community property should go to the wife, and upon the death of the wife the entire community property to the husband. Plaintiffs claim that the wife, Lucretia, survived her husband, and inherited one-half of the property. The court below found that George W. survived his wife, and gave judgment for defendant. The evidence is without conflict. The witnesses testify that they arrived at the scene of the murder on the morning after the killing. The body of the woman lay near the door. The hoops of her crinoline lay over her head, showing that she had been dragged into the house by the feet. There were small foot-tracks around a large rock a few yards from the house, and blood upon the rock. There was a mark upon the ground indicating that the body of the woman had been dragged from the rock to the house, and there was the blood-mark of a small hand on the stone door-step, showing that she had clutched the door-step as she was being dragged into the house. The body of George W. lay in the middle of the floor near the fire-place, with several large wounds upon it. Both bodies were badly burned. The remains of the servant,—a shepherd,—were found several days later in the bottom of a stream several rods from the house. This is substantially all of the testimony upon the issue of survivorship. We cannot agree with counsel for appellant in saying that the evidence "points clearly and unmistakably to the conclusion that the husband was first slain within their dwelling on the ranch, and that the wife was afterwards pursued, seized outside of their habitation, murdered, and dragged by the feet over the threshold of the door, and the building then set on fire." It may be that such was the fact, but there is nothing to show which one expired first. The husband may have been wounded, and left on the floor of the house while they were pursuing the wife, and may have been alive when the latter was dragged into the house. No one can say from the evidence which one died first. Both may have been living while the house was burning. The court below, we think, properly indulged the presumption authorized by subdivision 40, § 1963, Code Civ'l Proc., which reads as follows: "When two persons perish in the same calamity, such as a wreck, a battle, or a conflagration, and it is not shown who died first, and there are no particular circumstances from which it can be inferred, survivorship is presumed, from the probabilities resulting from the strength, age, and sex, according to the following rules: * * * If both be over fifteen and under sixty, and the sexes be different, the male is presumed to have survived. If the sexes be the same, then the elder." Both were between the ages of 15 and 60. Both perished in the same calamity. The murder, perpetrated as it was, was a calamity, within the meaning of section 1963, supra,—as much so as would be a shipwreck or a battle; and the court found that there were no particular circumstances from which it could infer who died first. We think the decision of the court upon this issue was right.

The court did not err in striking out portions of the testimony. They were mere matters of opinion. All of the facts were fully stated by the witnesses.

There was no error in excluding the verdict of the coroner's jury. It does not purport to contain a statement of any facts within the knowledge of the coroner, or any juror, as to the time or manner of the death of Corliss and his wife. It is a matter of mere opinion and hearsay. Judgment and order affirmed.

PEOPLE v. O'LEARY. (No. 20,358.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 26, 1888.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—PLEAS—FORM.

Pen. Code Cal. § 1017, provides that every plea must be oral, and entered upon the minutes of the court; that a plea of former conviction or acquittal should be entered in substantially the following form: "The defendant pleads that he has already been convicted (or acquitted) of the offense charged by the judgment of the court of —;," and that a plea of former jeopardy should be substantially: "The defendant pleads that he has been once in jeopardy for the offense charged, (specifying the time, place, and court.)" The pleas as actually entered on the minutes of the court were as follows: "First, defendant pleads not guilty of the offense charged; second, a former acquittal; third, once in jeopardy." Held, that these pleas of former jeopardy and acquittal were not in the form required by the Code, and the defect could not be supplied by reference to written pleas filed at the time the pleas were entered by the clerk.

2. SAME—TRIAL—VERDICT ON DEFECTIVE PLEAS.

It is not necessary for the jury to find upon pleas of acquittal and former jeopardy which are not entered upon the minutes of the court in the form required by the Code.

3. SAME—JUDGMENT ON DEMURRER.

Pen. Code Cal. § 1008, provides that, if a demurrer to an indictment or information is allowed, the judgment is final, and a bar to another prosecution, unless the court, being of the opinion that the objection on which the demurrer is allowed may be avoided in a new indictment or information, directs the case to be submitted to a new grand jury, or directs a new information to be filed. Held, that it is not necessary for the judge to render an opinion that the objection to the information can be overcome by filing another, but it is sufficient if he directs a new information to be filed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county; C. H. GAROUFFE, Judge.

On rehearing. For former opinion, see 16 Pac. Rep. 884. Pen. Code Cal. § 1008, referred to in the opinion, provides: "If the demurrer is allowed, the judgment is final upon the indictment or information demurred to, and a bar to another prosecution for the same offense, unless the court, being of opinion that the objection on which the demurrer is allowed may be avoided in a new indictment or information, directs the case to be submitted to another grand jury, or directs a new information to be filed."

R. Clark, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

PATERSON, J. The defendant was charged in the information with having practiced medicine without having first obtained a certificate authorizing him to do so, as required by the "Act to regulate the practice of medicine in the state of California." Deer. Pen. Code, 625-629. The language of the information is sufficiently full and explicit in charging the offense, and we think that the court did not err in overruling the demurrer. The appeal is from the judgment only. The bill of exceptions contains none of the evidence. We cannot say, therefore, that the court erred in refusing certain instructions referred to in appellant's brief.

In the former decision filed herein, (16 Pac. Rep. 884,) it was held that "the pleas of former acquittal and once in jeopardy, as the defendant asked to have them entered, were in substantially the form required by the Code." In support of this proposition, there was quoted in the opinion a portion of the contents of a written plea offered by defendant's counsel, and it was said: "If the clerk failed to make the entry as full as he ought to have done, the defendant cannot be made to suffer for that failure." The pleas actually entered upon the minutes of the court were as follows: "First, defendant pleads not guilty of the offense charged; second, a former acquittal; third, once in jeopardy." The jury found the defendant guilty, but did not find on the issues of former acquittal and once in jeopardy. The pleas, as entered upon the minutes, were insufficient. Section 1017, Pen. Code, prescribes the form for such pleas. If the defendant plead a former conviction or acquittal, the form is as follows: "The defendant pleads that he has already been convicted (or acquitted) of the offense charged, by the judgment of the court of — (naming it,) rendered at —, (naming the place,) on the — day of —." If he plead once in jeopardy, the form is as follows: "The defendant pleads that he has been once in jeopardy for the offense charged, (specifying the time, place, and court.)" The object of these forms is plain. The people should be informed of the circumstances as to time, place, and court. None of these circumstances are named in the plea actually entered upon the minutes of the court below; and we cannot resort to the written document, which it is claimed was filed at the time the plea was entered, in aid of the plea actually entered. Section 1017, supra, provides that "every plea must be oral, and entered upon the minutes of the court in substantially the following form." The bill of exceptions in the record before us was prepared for and used only upon the motion in arrest of judgment. The bill of exceptions does not purport to be a bill prepared to present exceptions to the rulings of the court upon any other matter than that of the motion in arrest of judgment. The written plea referred to is not properly in the bill of exceptions. Section 1185, Pen. Code, prescribes the grounds upon which a motion in arrest of judgment may be made. It is "founded on any defects in the indictment or information mentioned in section 1004." There was no error in the ruling of the court below upon the defendant's motion in arrest of judgment, and, the pleas referred to not being in the form required by the Code, it was not necessary for the jury to find on them.

We see no merit in the contention that the defendant should have been discharged from custody because the court below failed to render an opinion that the objection to the information to which the demurrer had been sustained, could be overcome by filing another. The court directed the district attorney to file a new information, and this was a sufficient compliance with section 1008 of the Penal Code. It was not said in People v. Jordan, 63 Cal. 219, that the court must, in addition to directing the district attorney to file a new information, render an opinion that the objection to the information could be overcome by filing another. Judgment and order affirmed.

MALONE v. CRESCENT CITY M. & T. Co. (No. 11,121.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 27, 1888.)

1. CORPORATIONS—ACTIONS—PLEADING CONTRACT.

A complaint which alleges a contract made by defendant, a corporation, which contract is set out in hæc verba, and purports to be signed by the president of the company, need not aver the authority of the president to make the contract, as want of such authority is matter of defense.

2. CONTRACT—INTERPRETATION—NOVATION.

Plaintiff, a creditor of M., and defendant, a corporation engaged in the lumbering business, entered into a contract whereby defendant, which was getting logs of M., agreed to pay plaintiff $100 on his debt on every run of logs M. delivered to defendant out of the amount due him on such run, which sum was to have preference over any other order or indebtedness on the amount due M. on each run. Held, that this contract bound defendant to pay plaintiff the sum of $100 on each run of logs, if it amounted to so much, whether defendant owed M. anything or not.

3. SAME.

Said contract is not a continuing guaranty, and so liable to be revoked by defendant, but an absolute promise to pay plaintiff the sum of $100 upon the delivery of each raft, and defendant cannot continue to receive the logs, and at the same time revoke or rescind the contract.

4. SAME—CONSIDERATION.

The delivery of logs from time to time by M. under said contract was a sufficient consideration for the promise of defendant to plaintiff, and plaintiff could maintain an action thereon.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Del Norte county; JAMES E. MURPHY, Judge.

This was an action by John Malone against the Crescent City Mill & Transportation Company and Charles F. Murray, to recover the sum of $600. The action was brought on the following contract: "CRESCENT CITY, December 19, 1883. Whereas, C. F. Murray, of Del Norte county, Cal., is indebted to John Malone, of the same place, in the sum of one thousand dollars, and is desirous of paying the same; and whereas, he, Murray, is engaged in running logs for the Crescent City Mill and Transportation Company, of said county, to their mill on Lake Earl: Now, said Murray agrees to pay said Malone the sum of $100 on each raft of logs run by him for said company until the above sum of $1,000 is fully paid; and the said Crescent City Mill and Transportation Company are hereby requested to pay the said sum of $100 to said Malone on each run of logs made by him for them, out of the amount due him on said run; and the Crescent City Mill and Transportation Company, in consideration of the premises, hereby agrees to retain out of the amount due or to be due said Murray on each run of logs, as aforesaid, $100, and pay the same to said Malone, until the said sum of $1,000 is fully paid; and it is further understood and agreed between the parties hereto that the orders contained herein by said Murray to said C. C. Mill and T. Co. shall have precedence, to the extent thereof, on amt. due said Murray by said company, on each run of said logs, over any other order or indebtedness whatsoever. CHAS. F. MURRAY. THE CRESCENT CITY MILL AND TRANSPORTATION COMPANY, By J. WENGER, President." The complaint alleged that, after the contract was made, Murray made nine runs of logs, and delivered them to the company, which had paid plaintiff $300. A trial by jury resulted in a verdict for plaintiff of $600, from the judgment on which verdict the defendant corporation appealed.

L. F. Coburn and Sawyer & Burnett, for appellant. R. G. Knox, Wm. H. H. Hart, and Aylett R. Cotton, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The demurrer was properly overruled. The complaint alleges that the defendant (by its president, J. Wenger) made and entered into the agreement set forth therein. The contract is signed, "THE CRESCENT CITY MILL AND TRANSPORTATION COMPANY, By J. WENGER, President." If the president, as such, had no authority to enter into the contract, it was a matter of defense. The allegation that the defendant made the contract is sufficient, certainly, as against a general demurrer. In other respects we think the complaint was sufficient. A copy of the contract is set forth therein. It is assumed by the terms of the contract that there would be at least $100 due Murray on each run of logs. Under the peculiar language used, if it be conceded that there was not an absolute promise to pay $100 on each run of logs, the burden was upon the defendant to show that there was less than $100 due Murray on any raft.

There are no assignments of error in the record. The only points made as to the insufficiency of the evidence are: First, there is no evidence to show that there is or was anything due from the defendant corporation to the defendant Murray, or to the plaintiff, since the payment of the said $300; second, that the evidence is undisputed and uncontradicted that there was no consideration for the said agreement; and, third, that the agreement was revoked prior to the delivery of the fourth raft. The contract provides that the payments of $100 on each run of logs "shall have precedence, to the extent thereof, on amount due said Murray by said company on each run of said logs, over any other order or indebtedness whatsoever." The evidence showed that the smallest raft contained 189,447 feet of lumber, and that the price to be paid Murray by the defendant corporation was $4 per 1,000 feet. The amount to be paid Murray for the smallest raft, therefore, was nearly $800. The evidence does not show what expenses were to be deducted from that amount, if any, and the contract, as before stated, expressly provides that the $100 to be paid the plaintiff on each raft should have precedence over any other order or indebtedness whatsoever. The fact that there was nothing due Murray from the defendant corporation when the rafts were delivered does not alone determine the liability of the defendant in this action. If the defendant chose to pay Murray in full for each raft in cash, or by filling orders in advance of the delivery of the rafts, it did so at its peril, for the contract expressly stipulated against such a contingency.

The written instrument imports a consideration, and there was, in fact, a consideration passing from Murray to the defendant. He continued to deliver logs to it at the prices agreed upon. This was sufficient. In McLaren v. Hutchinson, 18 Cal. 80, it was held that where A. owes B., and B. owes C., and A. and B., without consulting C., agree that A. shall pay to C. the amount which A. owes B., an action could not be maintained by C. against A., for want of privity; but this decision was practically overruled in Lewis v. Couvillaud, 21 Cal. 178, and McLaren v. Hutchinson, 22 Cal. 190. Such a promise, although the party for whose benefit it was made was not cognizant of it when made, is, if adopted by him, deemed to have been made to him, and he may sue upon the promise thus made without a consideration passing from him to the promisor, (Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268; Anthony v. Herman, 14 Kan. 497; Kollock v. Parcher, 52 Wis. 393, 9 N.W. Rep. 67; Pom. Rem. & Rem. Rights, § 139;) and it is no objection to the maintenance of a suit by him for whose benefit the promise is made that an action might be brought also against the one to whom the promise was made. Mason v. Hall, 30 Ala. 601.

The contract was not revoked or rescinded as claimed by appellant. It was not a contract of guaranty, continuing or otherwise. By its agreement and its acceptance of the rafts from Murray, the defendant corporation became indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $100 for each raft, unless, perhaps, it could show that there was not that amount due Murray on any raft after deducting whatever expense the defendant was entitled to deduct from the price to be paid Murray therefor, and without giving precedence to "any other order or indebtedness." The defendant could not continue to receive logs from Murray and at the same time repudiate the payment of $100 on each run. So long as the defendant continued to receive the runs of logs, it continued to receive the consideration passing from Murray to it, and could not, under such circumstances revoke the agreement.

No exceptions were taken to any of the instructions given to the jury, and, as stated before, there are no specifications of errors in the bill of exceptions. Judgment and order affirmed.

CAMPBELL v. HAYES. (No. 11,063.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 27, 1883.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—PRESUMPTION.

Where the objection is first raised in the appellate court that the action being an equitable one, the verdict of the jury cannot support the judgment because there were no written findings by the court, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, statement, or other method whereby the question is presented on the record, such findings, if necessary, will be deemed to have been waived, and the certificate of the clerk that they were not waived cannot be considered.

2. SAME—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where there is some evidence on every point necessary to support the verdict, the judgment will not be disturbed on appeal, although the evidence is not entirely satisfactory.

3. SCHOOL LAND—ACTION BETWEEN APPLICANTS TO PURCHASE.

The action to try the question as to which of two applicants is entitled to purchase school lands, provided for in Pol. Code Cal. § 3495, is strictly statutory, and involves no equitable doctrine.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Del Norte county; JAMES E. MURPHY, Judge.

L. F. Cooper and Sawyer & Burnett, for appellant. R. W. Miller, Wm. H. H. Hart, and Aylett R. Cotton, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. Plaintiff and defendant were both applicants to purchase from the state of California the E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of section 16, in township 18 N., of range 1 E., Humboldt meridian. A contest having arisen in the office of the surveyor general of the state as to which of the applicants was entitled to purchase the land, that officer referred the matter to the court for adjudication, and this action was brought to determine the question. The case was tried by a jury, and resulted in a verdict in favor of plaintiff, upon which judgment was entered. Defendant, Hayes, appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial. The first point made by appellant is that the judgment should be reversed for want of findings by the court. This contention proceeds upon the theory that the case at bar is on the equity side of the court, and therefore the verdict of the jury is insufficient to support a judgment without some affirmative action approving it, and without written findings.

1. Both plaintiff and defendant were applicants for the purchase of the land in question under section 3495 of the Political Code, it being school land. The action provided for upon a reference by the surveyor general to the courts is a statutory action. It does not involve the title to the land, for that is in the state, but the right to purchase and procure such title. This right depends upon the establishment of the facts essential, under the statute, to give the right, and the application of the law thereto. It involves no equitable doctrine. The frigid rules of the statute are to be applied, and form the basis upon which the parties must stand or fall.

2. The objection does not seem to have been made in the court below, but is raised here for the first time, and is not supported by any bill of exceptions or statement. Where written findings are necessary, and do not appear in the record, they will be deemed to have been waived; and, if they were not, the error must be shown by a bill of exceptions, statement, or other appropriate method whereby the record presents the question. Mulcahy v. Glazier, 51 Cal. 626; Reynolds v. Brumagin, 54 Cal. 254; Glenn v. Arnold, 56 Cal. 631. The certificate of the clerk that written findings were not waived, forms no part of the record which we can notice. It forms no part of the judgment roll, and has no more verity than would the testimony of witnesses given at the trial, certified in like manner. Except as to matters made a part of the record by statute, the verification of the judge is essential to give validity to the proceedings. The office of a bill of exceptions or statement is to make a record of that without which it would not constitute a record. For these reasons we are of opinion the error is not well assigned.

The evidence in favor of plaintiff at the trial was not altogether satisfactory; but, as there seems to have been some evidence upon every point necessary to support the verdict, we are not warranted in disturbing the judgment. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. McCARTHY. (No. 20,396.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 30, 1888.)

EMBEZZLEMENT—DEFENDANT AS WITNESS—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

On trial for embezzling $550 received by defendant on a certain state warrant, it is not error to cross-examine him as to whether he had received money on other state warrants. MCFARLAND, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

John W. McCarthy was indicted for embezzling $550, received by him on warrant No. 7,999 while clerk of the supreme court of California. Having testified in his own behalf, he was cross-examined as follows: "Did you receive that warrant from the treasurer,—No, 8,706? Is that your signature on the back of that warrant?" The defendant objected to the question on the ground that it was not proper cross-examination, it is not the warrant of the state, and it is irrelevant and immaterial. The court overruled the objection, and allowed the question, to which ruling the defendant then and there excepted; and, the question being repeated, the defendant declined to answer on the ground that the answer would tend to convict him of a felony, under instructions of his counsel, and his statement that if witness answered the question he would leave the case. The court permitted the witness to decline to answer on the grounds given, and on no other grounds. The district attorney, subject to the same objection, ruling, and exception, and the further objection that it is improper to ask a question lumping all the warrants together, asked the following question: "Did you receive the money on each one of these warrants, 1,692, 3,181, 1,233, 4,000, and 4,727?" The witness declined to answer, for the same reason given above. "Question by District Attorney. How much money did you owe to Mr. Hellman, of Los Angeles? How is it that you did not pay them all? Mr. Baggett, for Defendant. You can take the benefit of the instruction given you by counsel, and not answer that 'question.' The Court. I will allow the question. By Mr. Graves, Dist. Atty. You decline to answer the question? A. Yes, sir. Q. On the ground that it would tend to criminate you? A. Yes, sir; of another crime. Q. I notice that in the month of October, 1885, here, which corresponds to the voucher here, you have got eleven of them marked 'Paid,' and fourteen, 'Unpaid.' What did you do with the balance of that money? Mr. Ferral. We object, as not being cross-examination at all. The Court. I think it comes under the line of cross-examination. The objection is overruled. Mr. Ferral. Note an exception. Q. Where did you get that money? Mr. Ferral. That is the same thing. This is not cross-examination, but in furtherance of their own examination."

W. T. Baggett, W. W. Foote, and T. C. Coogan, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The court is of opinion that the cross-examination of defendant was without error. We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

REQUA et al. v. SNOW. (No. 12,524.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 16, 1888.)

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—LACHES.

Where the vendee, in an agreement for the sale of land, tenders the purchase money, more than three years after maturity of the note given for the land, and more than two years after the last payment of interest, the latter being payable monthly, in advance, without any excuse for the delay, the land having in the mean time increased in value, equity will not decree specific performance.¹

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; R. M. DILLARD, Judge.

Action by J. L. Requa and Helen Requa against S. P. Snow, to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of land. Judgment for defendant on cross-complaint, and plaintiffs appeal.

W. C. Stratton, for appellants. B. F. Thomas, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This action was brought to enforce the specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate. Defendant filed a cross-complaint praying affirmative relief, and judgment was rendered for him for possession of the property and cancellation of the contract. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment, and insist that it is not supported by the findings. The findings are that on the 17th day of July, 1882, the defendant made to plaintiff J. L. Requa an offer in writing in the following words and figures: "I will take Requa's note for eighteen hundred dollars for one year from the 20th day of September next for the part of my block 88 on which Judge E. B. Hall now resides, on the corner of Sala and Garden streets, in the city and county of Santa Barbara, Cal.; I to execute a good and sufficient deed for it on the payment of said note; possession August prox.; the said Requa to pay me for the rent, and the interest on the said note, and house and lot; Requa to have until the 20th inst., all day, to inform acceptance or not of the foregoing proposition, at his office. [Signed] S. P. SNOW. July 17, 1882." The plaintiff J. L. Requa accepted the above offer in the following words and figures: "I hereby accept the foregoing offer, and execute herewith my promissory note accordingly: SANTA BARBARA, September 20, 1882. $1,800. One year after date, for value received in house and lot, as aforesaid, I promise to pay $1,800, with interest,—$12 per month for each and every month, in advance. J. L. REQUA." The acceptance and promise to pay was delivered to defendant, and accepted by him. At or about the same time plaintiffs went into possession of the premises, and have ever since remained in possession thereof. Plaintiff J. L. Requa paid the interest or rent specified in said contract up to and including June 20, 1884, but no other or further payment has been made on said contract, either of principal, interest, or rent. On the 20th of September, 1882, plaintiff J. L. Requa assigned said contract to the plaintiff Helen Requa, of which defendant was not aware before the commencement of this action. "On the 13th day of September, 1886, plaintiff Helen Requa wrote to the defendant that she desired to know the amount due on the land, and the defendant replied that he did not and had not for a long time considered that anything was due him upon said land and house." The last-above finding, and the following, are copied in full from the transcript: "That in the month of December, 1884, the plaintiffs thinking they had found a purchaser for said parcel of land at an advance, and the defendant wanting his money to buy a ranch in Carpinteria, directed the defendant to make out a deed for said land, leaving the name of the grantee blank until it should be ascertained if the deed should be made in the name of the vendee or his wife; that the defendant did on the ——— day of December, 1884, sign a deed conveying said land, the name of the grantee being left blank, and the defendant placed said deed in the hands of his agent, with instructions that when the name of the grantee should be ascertained said agent should insert the same, and, upon payment of the money due on said contract, deliver said deed. Said money was not paid or tendered, and the defendant resumed the control of said deed. No certificate of acknowledgment was attached to said deed." On the 20th day of February, 1887, plaintiffs tendered the amount due under said contract, and demanded a deed of said premises. Defendant refused to accept said tender, or to execute a deed. By the terms of the agreement, of which specific performance is prayed, the plaintiff J. L. Requa promised to pay the sum specified for the premises on the 20th of September, 1883. No part of that sum was paid or tendered until the 20th day of February, 1887, and the interest or rent which plaintiff agreed to pay monthly in advance was paid up to and including June, 1884, and not after that date. The tender was made more than three years after the maturity of the note, and no interest or rent was paid for more than two years before the tender was made and a deed demanded.

It is well settled in this state that delay to comply with his agreement to pay for such a length of time, without rendering a reasonable excuse for it, is an insuperable objection to enforcing, in his favor, a specific performance of the contract to convey land. In Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 317, the court says: "Will a court of equity enforce a specific performance of an agreement to convey lands when the plaintiff shows no compliance or offer of compliance on his part with the agreement, nor any excuse therefor, for the period of 21 or 22 months from the time he bound himself to perform? And this question, too, is decided in effect by Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 568, from which opinion the negative of the proposition results as a logical necessity." Here the court finds that between the 1st day of March, 1886, and the commencement of this action, the land in controversy enhanced in value, so as to be worth $5,000 when the action was commenced. This is more than double the sum which plaintiff agreed to pay for it. The rental value for the two years next preceding the trial of the action is found to have been from $20 to $25 per month, and $15 per month from the date of the contract up to two years before the commencement of this action. The equities appear to us to be wholly on the side of the defendant, and we think the relief awarded him in the judgment appealed from not in excess of what he is justly entitled to upon the findings before us. Judgment affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. June 5, 1888.)

BOUNDARIES—ACQUESCENCE IN BOUNDARY LINE—ESTOPPEL TO DENY.

Plaintiff, having allowed defendant, who owned the adjoining tract of land, to build a fence between the two, and to occupy, improve, and cultivate the land up to such fence, without any objection, for a period of 16 or more years, cannot contend that such fence is not the true boundary line.¹

Action of ejectment by William and Elizabeth Burris against Mary A. Fitch and Wallace B. Fitch. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal.

R. B. Tappan and Van Duzer & Teake, for appellants. George Pearce, for respondents.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This appeal is from a judgment recovered by the plaintiffs against the defendants in an action of ejectment. The contention of appellants here is that the findings of fact do not justify the conclusion of law or the judgment. The controversy is as to the boundary line between two tracts of land, one of which is owned by plaintiffs, and the other by defendants. The plaintiffs settled upon the tract claimed by them in the year 1851, and procured a conveyance of it in 1858. Defendants' grantors procured a conveyance of the tract claimed by them in 1851. Both conveyances are from the town or city of Sonoma. The lot conveyed to defendants' grantors is described as lot No. 554, which is bounded on the east by a line known as the "Trancas Line," an indeterminate line, run by O'Farrell and Hudspeth in 1847. Defendants' grantors, Lyon & Sneed, to whom said town or city of Sonoma conveyed said lot 554, inclosed with it a small strip of land east of said Trancas line, on which they had previously hauled a small dwelling-house. Between 1855 and 1858, Lyon built a small barn to the eastward of his dwelling, and east of the fence built by him and Sneed, and inclosed about half an acre, on which the barn stood. In January, 1868, one Stanley purchased said lot No. 554, and built a fence on the easterly line of the demanded premises, and occupied said premises from the date of his purchase until 1873, but never claimed eastward beyond the Trancas line. Stanley built the fence at his own expense, without saying anything to the plaintiffs on the subject. After completing the fence, he requested plaintiffs to convey to him (Stanley) the demanded premises, which they refused to do. In 1873, Stanley, when about to sell lot No. 554 to one Yates, pointed out to Yates the situation as he (Stanley) understood it, but told Yates that he (Stanley) did not know where the true east line of lot No. 554 was; but he supposed, from what he had been told, that it ran between the dwelling-house and the barn; that none of the deeds of conveyance to the defendants or their grantors purport on their face to convey any land except lot No. 554. In 1860, plaintiffs filed a declaration of homestead, covering the entire tract conveyed to them by the city or town of Sonoma. The following findings are copied literally from the transcript: "(9) That valuable permanent improvements were put on the strip of land in controversy after the division fence was built, in 1868, consisting of an addition to the dwelling-house, (which was made after the issue of the United States patent for said pueblo lands,) the planting of fruit trees, grape-vines, and the building of outhouses. (10) That said Lyon tract, lot No. 554, has been owned, possessed, and occupied by five or six different persons since the construction of the division fence built by Stanley, and the land in dispute has been occupied by said claimants and owners of lot No. 554. (11) That neither of said plaintiffs ever made any objections to the construction or continuance of said fence built by Stanley, and never claimed or intimated to any one of the numerous successive owners and occupants, except J. J. and A. G. Lyon, and also except Stanley, when he held the land, that they, or either of them, had any claim or right to any part of the land embraced in said Lyon tract as inclosed until about the 1st of January, 1884, and after the said defendant, Mary A. Fitch, had become the purchaser thereof. (12) That plaintiffs frequently visited the Lyon tract during a period of sixteen or eighteen years before the commencement of this action, and witnessed the progress of the improvements that were made,—the addition to the dwelling-house, the planting of grape-vines and fruit trees in and upon the strip of land in controversy; and permitted said improvements to be made without objection. (13) That the defendant, Mary A. Fitch, purchased said premises, as inclosed, in good faith, and without any actual knowledge of any claim of the plaintiffs to any part of said tract of land in controversy. (14) That a portion of the present dwelling-house on the tract of land in controversy was built more than thirty years before the commencement of this action, and that a barn has been on said land for a like period." The salient facts found are that in 1868 the owners of lot No. 554 constructed a fence which inclosed the demanded premises with said lot, and that said owners of said lot 554 occupied, cultivated, and improved said demanded premises, as a part of said lot, for a period of 16 or 18 years, with the knowledge of the plaintiffs, who made no objection to such occupancy, cultivation, and improvement of said demanded premises up to the time of bringing this action.

We think this shows an acquiescence by plaintiffs, for a period of at least 16 years, in the location of that fence as the division line between the lots of the plaintiffs and defendants. There was a silent assent or submission, with apparent consent, as distinguished from avowed consent and from opposition or open discontent. In Columbet v. Pacheco, 48 Cal. 395, it was laid down that acquiescence in the location of a fence as a dividing line between two lots for a period of 16 years estopped the defendants from controverting the correctness of the location. In Sneed v. Osborn, 25 Cal. 619, the court said: "The authorities are abundant to the point that when the owners of adjoining lands have acquiesced for a considerable time in the location of a division line between their lands, although it may not be the true line according to the calls in their deeds, they are thereafter precluded from saying it is not the true line. The better opinion is that the considerable time mentioned in the cases must at least equal the length of time prescribed by the statute of limitations to bar a right of entry." We have nowhere seen the doctrine of all the cases more clearly stated than it was by Senator MAISON in the late court for the correction of errors of the state of New York. He said: "To deprive a man of his absolute right to the unquestioned fee of his land, according to the doctrine of the courts, regardless of or according to the construction which they have given to the statute for the prevention of frauds and perjuries, it should appear most clear and distinct, without the shadow of a doubt, and by testimony the most convincing and satisfactory, that there was an express agreement made between the owners of the adjoining lands, deliberately settling the exact, precise line or boundary or location between them, and an acquiescence therein for a considerable length of time; or, in the absence of proof of such agreement, it should be as clearly, distinctly, and satisfactorily shown that the party claiming has had possession of the lands claimed, up to a certain, visible, known line, with the express knowledge and assent of the owner of the adjoining land, and his acquiescence in such possession, adverse to and in defiance of his right; and this for a considerable time." Adams v. Rockwell, 16 Wend. 285. The findings here are of the probative rather than of the ultimate facts. In that respect they are unsatisfactory; and, while they manifestly do not justify the judgment, we are not satisfied that they would justify a judgment for the defendants. Instead, therefore, of reversing the judgment, and directing that one be entered for the defendants, we have concluded to reverse the judgment and order a new trial. In this way we think a more satisfactory result may be reached. Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

Cal. § 337, limiting actions upon contracts founded upon instruments in writing to four years, and by the general limitation of four years of section 343 for all actions not otherwise provided for; there being no trust relation between the parties to the contract, since plaintiff never was in possession of the land.

2. TRIAL BY COURT—FINDINGS—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

Where the answer avers that the cause of action stated in the complaint is barred by the provisions of Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 337, 343, a finding by the court that the cause of action was barred by those sections before the commencement of the action is not insufficient on the ground that it states mere conclusions of law.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; THOMAS H. BUSH, Judge.

Action for partition by Juan M. Luco against Juan De Toro. The court gave judgment for defendant, Toro; and plaintiff, Luco, appeals. Finding 5, referred to in the opinion, is as follows: "That, immediately after the execution of the agreement between Agustin Olvera and Isaac Hartman, said Hartman entered upon the performance of the stipulations in said agreement contained on his part to be performed; and after his sale to plaintiff, Luco, as found in finding 2, said Luco and Hartman continued in the performance of said stipulations, and did so continue by themselves, or their agents and attorneys, to prosecute to a final conclusion the agreements and stipulations in said agreement contained on the part of said Hartman to be performed; that owing to a quarrel between Hartman and Olvera, about the year 1874. Olvera became dissatisfied with Hartman, and on behalf of himself and the heirs of Santiago Arguello, the confirmee of said Ex-Mission rancho, employed one A. St. Clair Denver, an attorney at law, of Washington city, D. C., to prosecute the claims of said heirs, and of the interest of said Agustin Olvera, in and to the Rancho Ex-Mission of San Diego, before the proper department at Washington city aforesaid, and thereafter, by the joint exertions of said A. St. Clair Denver and the Honorable Cornelius Cole, acting as attorney for Hartman and Luco, a patent was duly obtained, as alleged in the complaint, on the 1st day of September, 1876; that, owing to the death of the principal parties to the said agreement, to-wit, Hartman and Olvera, the great lapse of time, and uncertainty of recollection of surviving witnesses, under the evidence in this case it is impossible to determine and measure the extent of performance of plaintiff or his vendor, Hartman, under the agreement aforesaid; and the court finds only that, up to the time of the issuance of the patent aforesaid, there had not been a full and complete or substantial performance of said agreement on the part of Hartman or Luco as vendee, but only a partial performance thereof." Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 337 provides that "an action upon any contract, obligation, or liability founded upon an instrument in writing executed in this state," must be begun within four years; and section 343 provides that "an action for relief not hereinbefore provided for must be commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued."

Lee & Scott, for appellant. Henry M. Smith and Harry L. Titus, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. This is an action for the partition of the Rancho Mission (or Ex-Mission) of San Diego. There were originally a great many parties, both plaintiff and defendant, to the action; but as the interlocutory decree was satisfactory to all the parties except the plaintiff, Luco, and the defendant, Toro, it was stipulated that a final decree should be entered, with permission to said Luco and Toro to further litigate between themselves. The case was thus ended as to all the other parties; the only question left being whether Luco or Toro was entitled to a certain specific segregated tract of 5,053 acres of the rancho. This tract was set apart to Luco upon the theory that a commissioner's deed to him, in pursuance of a decree of the superior court of San Francisco, passed the legal title. This decree was in an action brought by Luco against one Carlos Olvera, as executor of the estate of Augustin Olvera, deceased, to compel the execution of a deed for the land in controversy according to the terms of a certain contract made between said Augustin Olvera, deceased, and one Isaac Hartman. In that action, Carlos Olvera made default; but, upon appeal, in the case at bar, this court reversed that part of the decree which awarded the land to Luco, upon the ground that Carlos Olvera was not the executor of said estate when said action was commenced, or during its pendency. Luco v. Bank, 70 Cal. 339, 11 Pac. Rep. 650. Upon the return of the cause to the court below, Luco filed an amendment to the complaint, in which he set up for the first time the said contract between said Augustin Olvera, deceased, and said Hartman, and the conveyance by Hartman of his interest, under said contract, to Luco, and claimed an equitable interest in the land. The court gave judgment for defendant, Toro; and the plaintiff, Luco, appeals. The amendment to the complaint was filed December 13, 1886, and the original complaint was filed August 8, 1882. On the 3d day of February, 1869, Agustin Olvera was the owner and in possession of an undivided interest of more than one-half of said Rancho of the Ex-Mission of San Diego. On that day he entered into a written contract with Isaac Hartman, who was an attorney at law, by which Hartman undertook and agreed "to procure a patent from the United States for the lands of the Ex-Mission of San Diego, county of San Diego," etc.; and Olvera agreed to pay certain moneys for expenses, and also, when the patent had been obtained, to convey to Hartman a certain undivided interest in said lands. On the 23d day of March, 1879, Hartman assigned and conveyed all his right which he obtained under said contract, to said lands, to the plaintiff herein, Juan M. Luco. The patent was issued by the United States on the 1st day of September, 1876; and if plaintiff, Luco, by virtue of said contract, and said conveyance from Hartman, is entitled to any interest in said lands, he is entitled to the quantity first set apart to him by the court below. Neither Hartman nor Luco was ever in possession of any part of said rancho under said contract. Leaving minor matters out of view, there are two main questions in this case; and the correct decision of either of them in favor of the respondent must be followed by an affirmance of the judgment. And these questions are: First, did Hartman and his assignee, Luco, comply with their agreement in said contract to procure a patent for said lands? and, second, if they did, then was appellant's cause of action under said contract barred by the statute of limitations?

1. It is contended by appellant that finding 5 is to the effect that the contract was complied with; and respondent contends that in said finding the court finds that the contract was not complied with. If we were compelled to decide this point, we would probably have to hold that the finding is contradictory and insufficient; but, with our view of the second main question in the case, it is unnecessary to determine the character and effect of said finding 5.

2. The court found, and found correctly, that appellant's cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations. The contention of appellant that the findings of the court on the subject of limitation are insufficient, because mere conclusions of law, cannot be maintained. The averments of the answer are that the cause of action stated in the complaint is barred by the provisions of section 337 and also by the provisions of section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and the finding of the court is that said cause of action was barred, by the provisions of said sections, before the commencement of the action. The finding "is as broad and specific as the plea," and is therefore sufficient. Gas Co. v. Dameron, 67 Cal. 663, 8 Pac. Rep. 595; Duff v. Duff, 71 Cal. 513, 12 Pac. Rep. 570. And we think that the finding is sustained by the evidence and correct in law. Assuming that the right set up by appellant can be considered and adjudicated in an action for the partition of real property, still it is, in its nature and essence, only a right to enforce the specific performance of a naked agreement to convey land. We do not see how the contract between Olvera and Hartman established these continuing—and, we might say, eternal—trust relations so strenuously contended for by counsel for appellant. By that contract no special trust was placed by one of the parties in the other. The property of one was not given to the other to be used by the latter for the benefit of the former. It was a mere covenant by Olvera that, if Hartman would perform certain services, he (Olvera) would, in consideration of such services, convey to Hartman a certain interest in certain lands. If, therefore, there was ever a performance of the services by Hartman, (or his grantee, Luco,) he had a right to the conveyance at the time of that performance; and at that time his cause of action accrued. But, if he performed those services at all, (that is, if he procured a patent for the rancho,) he must have done so on or prior to the 1st day of September, 1876; for on that day the patent for the rancho was issued. His cause of action, therefore, accrued on September 1, 1876; and this action was not commenced until August 8, 1882, nearly six years afterwards. But the action was barred in four years under either section 337 or section 343 of the Code. Moreover, if a demand for a conveyance had been necessary,—and no such demand was necessary,—it is found that on November 5, 1877, appellant demanded of the executor of Agustin Olvera, deceased, that he convey to appellant the said interest in said lands claimed under said contract, and that said executor refused to do so. That was more than four years before the commencement of this action. (And it may be remarked that appellant's cause of action, founded upon his alleged equitable interest in the land, was not set up until the time of the amendment to the complaint, which was December 13, 1886.) And, again, if the relation between Olvera and Hartman could be considered in any sense a trust, the court finds, and we think upon sufficient evidence, that from the year 1874 said "Agustin Olvera in his life-time, and his representatives after his death, always repudiated any obligation under said contract to Hartman or his assignee, Luco, and claimed to have and hold the whole of the interest to which he (Olvera) held the legal title when he died, adversely to Hartman or his assignee, free from any claim on the part of either under said contract." The cases relied on by appellant are cases where the vendee was in possession, and where it was held that the statute does not run so long as the vendee remains in possession with the acquiescence of the vendor. Such was the case of Love v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 548, and others cited. But in these cases a very different principle came into play. In the case at bar neither Hartman nor Luco was in possession of any land under the contract; and there was nothing for respondent or his decedent to acquiesce in. Judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed.

PEOPLE v. OTTO et al. (No. 11,202.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 27, 1888.)

1. SHERIFFS—LIABILITY FOR ACT OF DEPUTY—PLEADING.

Pol. Code Cal. § 4114, provides that "whenever the official name of any principal officer is used in any law conferring power, imposing duties or liabilities, it includes his deputies." Section 865 provides that, "in all cases not otherwise provided for, each deputy possesses the powers, and may perform the duties, attached by law to the office of his principal." Held, in an action on the bond of a sheriff in a county where he was by law ex officio tax collector, for failure to pay over a certain amount of taxes collected, where the answer of defendants denies generally all the material allegations of the complaint "except such as are hereinafter admitted," a subsequent allegation that a third person, "acting as under-sheriff," collected the amount of taxes charged, is an admission qualifying the general denials of the answer, and rendering defendants liable, where their answer, though denying that their principal has collected and withheld the sum charged, does not aver that he paid over, or deny that he withheld, the amount collected by the party acting as under-sheriff,—a person acting as a public officer being presumed to have been regularly appointed, and official duty being presumed to have been regularly performed, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1963, subds. 14, 15, and an under-sheriff being a general deputy; and it is immaterial that the answer also alleges that the person acting as under-sheriff receipted for the taxes collected by him in the name of the sheriff by himself as "under-sheriff," "without right or authority of law so to do."

2. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY—OFFICIAL BONDS—DISCHARGE OF SURETY.

Under Pol. Code Cal. § 977, providing that the "discharge * * * of a surety on any official bond does not affect the bond as to the remaining sureties thereon," it is no defense to an action against the sureties on the official bond of a tax collector that a co-surety has been discharged therefrom on his own application, as provided by statute, without notice to the other sureties, though at that time the principal was not indebted as tax collector, and by such discharge the official bond was reduced to a less amount than that required by law, and the clerk failed to publish notice of the co-surety's withdrawal, or of the filing of a supplemental bond, as required in such cases by Pol. Code Cal. § 979, although there was a newspaper published in the county.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Del Norte county; JAMES E. MURPHY, Judge.

Pol. Code Cal. § 979, referred to in the opinion, provides that, after the withdrawal of a surety from an official bond, and the filing and approving of a supplemental bond, "the officer with whom the bond is filed * * * must give ten days' notice, by publication in some paper published in the county, * * * of the fact of the filing of the bond," etc.

Wm. H. H. Hart and Aylett R. Cotton, for appellants. L. F. Coburn and L. F. Cooper, for the People.

SEARLS, C. J. This is an appeal by the defendants, William M. Waggle, J. L. Lake, and James K. Johnson, sureties on the bond of William H. Otto, sheriff and ex officio tax collector of the county of Del Norte, from a judgment against them for $1,769.31 on account of taxes collected by said Otto for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1885. Judgment was rendered upon the findings as to the appellants, and upon the default of defendant Otto. The complaint is not verified. The answer sets out by denying generally all the material allegations of the complaint "except such allegations as are herein-after admitted, stated, or qualified." It is admitted that Otto was tax collector, and that defendants executed jointly and severally with one Hamilton the bond in question. A material part of the answer is in the following language: "(14) Defendants allege that they are informed and believe, and therefore aver the same to be true, that subsequent to the 15th day of November, 1884, and prior to the 2d day of January, 1885, one Robert Jenkins, acting as under-sheriff of said county, did collect a large amount of state and county taxes from divers persons, tax-payers in said county, for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1885, to-wit, the amount of $1,769.31, and receipted for the same by signing the name of William H. Otto, tax collector, 'by ROBERT JENKINS, Under-Sheriff,' without right or authority of law so to do." As Robert Jenkins is averred to have acted as under-sheriff, and there being no allegation that he wrongfully acted as such, it may properly be inferred that he was de jure as well as de facto the under-sheriff of defendant Otto. "That a person acting as a public officer was regularly appointed to it" is one of the presumptions of law established by Code Civil Proc. § 1963, subd. 15. "That official duty has been regularly performed" is another presumption established by subdivision 14 of the same section. The question, then, is, had Jenkins, as under-sheriff, authority to collect the taxes in question, and receipt for the same in the name of Otto, the tax collector, so as to bind the latter and his bondsmen. Sections 4176 to 4192 of the Political Code enumerate many of the duties of sheriffs. Section 4173 provides that "the sheriff must perform such other duties as are required by law." In Del Norte county the sheriff is ex officio tax collector, and all the duties of that office devolve upon him by law, and must be performed by him. "Whenever the official name of any principal officer is used in any law conferring power, imposing duties or liabilities, it includes his deputies." Pol. Code, § 4114. "In all cases not otherwise provided for, each deputy possesses the powers, and may perform the duties, attached by law to the office of his principal." Id. § 865. All county officers except judges, supervisors, and justices of the peace may appoint deputies at pleasure, and without limitation as to number. Id. § 4112.

The under-sheriff is a general deputy. He performs all the duties of a deputy, has like powers and authority, and his principal is bound by his acts in like manner as by those of other parties. In addition to this, the under-sheriff has certain powers, in case of the absence or sickness of his principal, not possessed by an ordinary deputy. He may be termed a vice-sheriff, who acts in certain contingencies in place of the sheriff, and who, in addition, performs the duties of a deputy. Under such circumstances, and in view of the various provisions of the law, the tax collector is liable for his acts in collecting taxes, and, he being liable, the sureties on his official bond as such tax collector are equally liable. It is true, the clause of the answer set out supra avers that Jenkins collected and receipted for the taxes "without right or authority of law so to do;" but this is the statement of a mere conclusion of law. His authority depended upon the fact of his being the under-sheriff, which is not denied. We find nothing in the answer altering or modifying the effect of the admission under consideration. There is no denial of all the allegations of the complaint, but, as before stated, a denial of all the allegations "except such allegations as are hereinafter admitted, stated, or qualified." The statement that Jenkins acted as under-sheriff, and collected $1,769.31, is an admission which qualifies the general denials of the answer. The answer further specifically denies that Otto, the tax collector, has collected and withheld from the treasury of the county the sum of $1,769.31, but does not aver that he paid over, or deny that he withheld, the money collected by Jenkins. Again, in the thirteenth subdivision of the answer, defendants aver that Otto, as tax collector, collected $20,711.85, and that he paid it over, etc., "and that he did not withhold from the said treasury of said county the sum of $1,769.31, taxes collected by him," etc., or any other sum or sums whatever, as wrongfully alleged in plaintiff's complaint. There is nothing in these denials upon which perjury could be assigned, upon a showing that a sum of $1,769.31 was collected by Jenkins, and never paid over by Otto. The only other denials are of conclusions of law, which need not be noticed.

The further defense cannot be maintained. It is founded upon the statement that Hamilton, one of the sureties on the official bond, was, upon his own application, discharged therefrom as provided by statute, but without any notice to the other sureties, or any notice that, at the date of such release, Otto was not indebted as tax collector, that, by the release of Hamilton, the official bond of Otto was reduced in amount to a sum less than that required by law; that the clerk has neglected and refused to publish notice of the withdrawal of Hamilton from the bond, or of the filing of a supplemental bond, etc., although there is and was a newspaper published in the county, etc. Pol. Code, §§ 972-980, both inclusive, provide the manner in which sureties may be released from official bonds, additional sureties obtained, and the effect thereof. Section 977 expressly provides that "the release, discharge, voluntary withdrawal, or incompetency of a surety on any official bond does not affect the bond as to the remaining sureties thereon, or alter or change their liability in any respect." Official bonds in this state are joint and several, and the discharge of one or more of the sureties under our law does not operate as a discharge of the others. Supervisors v. Bird, 31 Cal. 67. The questions presented in the answer are in the main the same as those raised by the demurrer, which was properly overruled. The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. OTTO et al. (No. 11,269.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 27, 1888.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—MATTERS NOT APPARENT ON RECORD.

Where plaintiffs moved, "upon all the papers on file in this action," to strike out defendants' answer, and give judgment as by default upon the pleadings, and it does not appear that any order striking out the answer was made, but judgment was rendered for plaintiffs for a certain amount, held, on appeal from such judgment by plaintiffs, who claim a larger amount, where the record contains only the judgment roll, but there is sufficient in the papers on file to warrant judgment for the amount specified, that such judgment should be affirmed.

Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., L. F. Coburn, and L. F. Cooper, (Sawyer & Burnett, of counsel,) for the People. R. W. Miller and R. G. Knox, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. J. This is an appeal by the people from a judgment in their favor for $1,769.31, and interest and costs. In the complaint, plaintiffs demand judgment for a further sum of $632.62, making an aggregate of $2,401.93. After the answer of defendants was filed, plaintiffs moved, "upon all the papers on file in this action," to strike out, as sham and irrelevant, the answer of defendants, and for judgment as by default on the pleadings in said action. No order seems to have been made striking out the answer, but judgment was rendered in favor of the people, and against defendants, as above stated. The case comes before us on an appeal from the judgment. There is no statement or bill of exceptions. As the motion was based on all the papers on file in the case, and as the record contains only the judgment roll, non constat but there was something in the papers on file, and which are not a part of the judgment roll, which warranted the court in awarding judgment for the amount specified in such judgment. The judgment is affirmed.

LEARNED et al. v. CASTLE et al. (No. 12,244.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 28, 1888.)

1. JUDGMENT—EFFECT—RES ADJUDICATA.

The decision of the supreme court on a former appeal, to the effect that the action which was to prevent, abate, and recover damages for a nuisance to land, was a case in equity, is conclusive that the complaint shows a right in plaintiffs to resort to a court of equity for relief.

2. NUISANCE—WHAT CONSTITUTES—FLOODING LAND.

A complaint averred a nuisance to land by cutting a levee constructed across a canal, and by creating and maintaining an obstruction to certain natural sloughs which drained the canal, whereby plaintiffs' land was submerged by water from the canal. The facts found were that plaintiffs constructed, and defendants soon after removed, the levee, and that defendants obstructed and still maintain an obstruction in the slough, but that the levee would not have prevented the overflow, nor would it have been avoided had the slough been clear; that waters from the canal did, with other waters, flow over plaintiffs' land, but did not materially affect it, and did not damage it as charged in the complaint, nor to any extent greater than one dollar,—the other waters being the proximate cause of the injury. Held, that the facts did not show a nuisance to plaintiffs' land, as charged in the complaint.

3. APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In such case, the court having correctly found that there was no nuisance, it becomes immaterial whether the grantor of plaintiffs acquiesced in the acts through which the alleged nuisance was committed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; A. VAN R. PATTERSON, Judge.

Action by James M. Learned and Sabin Harris against C. C. Castle, Charles Christian, and Elnathan Williams, to restrain and abate a nuisance to real estate.

Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The jury found that Yoland, plaintiffs' grantor, acquiesced in the acts of defendants for which the action was brought. For opinion on former appeal, see 7 Pac. Rep. 34.

W. L. Dudley, D. S. Terry, and Garber, Thornton & Bishop, for appellants. J. B. Hall, J. C. Campbell, and A. P. Catlin, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. This action was brought to recover damage alleged to have been caused by defendants to plaintiffs' grain crops, and for the abatement of nuisances averred to have been produced and maintained by defendants. The plaintiffs aver, in their complaint, that they are the owners of certain lands situate in the county of San Joaquin, (describing them,) and that there is to the north-east of these lands a stream or slough known as "Stone Slough," or "Bear Creek," which carries in the rainy season a large body of water running in a south-westerly direction; that this stream, at a point easterly from said land, connects with a canal or ditch which was constructed by defendant Christian and others; that the canal carries the waters of Stone slough, or Bear creek, in a westerly direction, to certain natural sloughs on the south side of the canal, which are of sufficient size, if unobstructed, to take and carry the waters running down this canal off and away from the lands of plaintiffs, or that this canal runs past and by the natural sloughs above mentioned, westerly, to a point known as the "Davis Road," at which place there was, in April, 1876, thrown across the canal a levee or embankment, in part built by the plaintiffs and was sufficient to protect all of plaintiffs' lands, described in the complaint, from overflow by the waters of Stone slough, or Bear creek, and did protect them until it was cut away, and the natural sloughs aforementioned, connecting with the canal, were obstructed by the acts of defendants. It is then averred that the defendants, without right and against the protest of plaintiffs, cut away the embankment, and filled up and obstructed the sloughs above mentioned on the south side of the canal. In consequence of the removal of the embankment, and the obstructions put in in the months of January and February, 1878, the waters of Stone slough came down the canal, flowed over and submerged plaintiffs' lands, remained there a long space of time, and completely drowned out, rotted, and destroyed the grain growing on the lands, and otherwise injured them. It is further averred that the obstructions above referred to were kept up and maintained by defendants, and that the embankment was never rebuilt after its destruction. It is further averred that the obstructions above referred to, so kept up and maintained by defendants, in the natural sloughs mentioned, are an obstruction to the free use and enjoyment of plaintiffs' property, and are a nuisance; that the removal of the embankment prevents plaintiffs from the free use and enjoyment of their property, and is a nuisance. The findings of the court cover all the issues; and, as a conclusion of law, the court holds that the matters complained of were not nuisances, and rendered judgment for defendants.

It is urged now, on behalf of respondents, that the judgment ought not to be disturbed, for the reason that the demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained. It is said that the suit is a bill in equity to abate the alleged nuisances by mandatory injunction, to which the statute (section 731, Code Civil Proc.) annexes as an incident the right to recover damages; and that the matters averred in the complaint are not sufficient to show a right in the plaintiffs to resort to a court of equity for relief. Without entering into the particular reasons urged by respondents why the demurrer should have been sustained, we think it enough to say that, in our opinion, this question was determined adversely to their contention when this cause was here on a former appeal. See 67 Cal. 41, 7 Pac. Rep. 34. It was there held that this was a case in equity. This conclusion could not have been reached without holding the facts averred in the complaint to have been sufficient to give a court of equity jurisdiction; and where, on an appeal to this court, the judgment announced could not have been rendered without expressly or impliedly deciding the questions presented on a second appeal, the judgment will be conclusive; and such questions will not be again considered. Forgerson v. Smith, 3 N. E. Rep. 866. The conclusion thus reached constitutes the law of the case in all its stages.

It is contended by appellants that the findings do not support the judgment. The court found that the obstruction in the natural sloughs is not an obstruction to the free use of plaintiffs' property, and does not interfere with the enjoyment thereof; and that the removal of the embankment across the canal in the Davis road did not prevent the free use and enjoyment by plaintiffs of their property. It also found, as conclusions of law, that the acts complained of are not nuisances. The principal question in the case is whether the facts found show any nuisance done, committed, or maintained by the defendants. The following facts are found: That in the month of April, 1876, the plaintiffs filled the canal with the embankment mentioned, which was in the following December cut away and removed by the defendants; that the defendant Christian, long prior to December, 1876, obstructed the natural sloughs on the south side of the canal, and maintained and kept them in place until the commencement of this action; that the embankment in the canal at the Davis road did not protect, and would not have protected if it had remained in place, all or any part of lands of plaintiffs from overflow by the waters of Stone slough in the months of January or February, 1878, and it would not have protected such lands from overflow from these waters although the obstruction to the natural sloughs to the east of the embankment on Christian's land had not existed during the months aforesaid. It is further found that in the months of January and February, 1878, some of the waters of Stone slough reached the head of the canal at its junction with the slough, (referring to the slough on the south side of the canal,) and a part of those waters flowed down the canal, and of the waters so flowing down a part flowed upon the lands of the plaintiffs; that in the months aforesaid the lands of the plaintiffs were submerged, but the waters of Stone slough, which at that time came down said canal, did not materially contribute to said submersion, or materially contribute to the injury, damage, and loss which the plaintiffs and their property sustained by reason of this submersion, and the plaintiffs were not damaged by the waters then diverted by this canal in any way or manner stated in the complaint, or to any extent greater than the sum of one dollar; that none of the waters diverted by the canal would have flowed upon the plaintiffs' lands if allowed, without interruption, to take their natural south-west course to the river, and the embankments on the south side of the canal on Christian's and other lands cause waters to flow upon plaintiffs' lands which would not flow there if the embankments were removed; that, except to the immaterial extent stated above, the overflow of the lands of plaintiffs in January and February, 1878, and the damage therefrom, were caused by waters which did not come down the canal, but which came from other sources, and were the predominant and proximate cause of said overflow, and the damage sustained by plaintiffs at the time; that, at the commencement of this action, the obstruction in the natural sloughs mentioned above was not maintained or kept up by the defendants Castle and Williams, or either of them. We conclude, from the facts found as above, that the removal of the embankment across the canal did not prevent the plaintiffs from the free use and enjoyment of their property, as the court below came to the conclusion and found that this embankment did not protect, and would not have protected if it had remained in place, all or any part of the lands of plaintiffs from overflow in January or February, 1878, and it would have afforded no protection from overflow though there had been at that time no obstructions to the sloughs on Christian's lands. We cannot perceive how its removal prevented the free use and enjoyment by the plaintiffs of their property. The facts found do, in our opinion, sustain the conclusion that the removal of the embankment was not and produced no nuisance. As to the obstructions to the sloughs on Christian's land, it appears, as set forth above, that some of the waters which came down the canal did contribute to the submersion of the lands of plaintiffs; that obstructions or embankments to the sloughs erected by Christian on the south side of the canal, with other embankments on other lands, did cause water to flow upon plaintiffs' lands which would not flow there if the embankments were removed; and that none of the water diverted by the canal would have flowed on plaintiffs' lands if allowed, without interruption, to take their natural south-west course to the river. The court does also find that the water which came from Stone slough through the canal did not materially contribute to the submersion, or materially contribute to the damage or loss to plaintiffs' property sustained by the submersion, and that plaintiffs were not damaged by the waters diverted in any manner stated in the complaint, or to any extent greater than in the sum of one dollar. There is in fact no finding that the land has been damaged, within the issue made by the complaint, at all. The damage is plainly negatived in the finding that plaintiffs were not damaged in any way or manner stated in the complaint. The finding of one dollar damage we regard as something outside of the case. The court having already disposed of the issue of damage raised by the pleadings, and having held that there was no such damage, anything additional on such issue must be looked on as something outside of it, and therefore to be disregarded. Or, if we regard it as a finding that the land was damaged to the extent of one dollar, it must be that the court below looked on it as a damage resulting from unforeseen causes, as from an extraordinary flood which could not be anticipated, for which there would be no responsibility by Christian,—at any rate no such responsibility as would render him liable to an injunction. For the foregoing reasons we cannot concur in the contention that the judgment is not supported by the findings.

The court is of opinion that the acquiescence of Yolland did not constitute a defense to the action of plaintiffs for an injunction, if they were otherwise entitled to one, and that the findings as to such acquiescence, in the view this court takes of the cause, are immaterial. On an examination of the evidence the court is of opinion that the findings are justified by it. The judgment and order must be affirmed. So ordered.

CLEVELAND v. CHOATE et al. (No. 12,549.

(Supreme Court of California. June 29, 1888.)

DEEDS—DESCRIPTION—PAROL EVIDENCE.

Where the description in a title deed refers to a map, and also describes the property by metes and bounds, starting from a certain stake, and it is shown that the map is inaccurate, that it was not made from an actual survey, that it has no scale or starting point, and cannot be made to represent the territory which it purports to include, parol evidence may be introduced to show the true location of the land which the grantor intended to convey and the grantee to purchase; the reference to the map being treated as surplusage.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; THOMAS H. BUSH, Judge.

Action by Daniel Cleveland against Daniel Choate et al. to quiet title to certain property situate in the city of San Diego. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal.

M. A. Luce and Levi Chase, for appellants. Chapman & Hendricks and Works & Titus, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action to quiet title to certain property situate in the city of San Diego. The principal question involved, relates to the admissibility of parol testimony. There was evidence to show that the Poole map was inaccurate; that it had no scale or starting point; and that a surveyor could not, by using the map, locate any of the pueblo lots. The map cannot be made to represent the territory which it purports to include. It was intended to cover all pueblo lands. Afterwards one Pascoe made a survey which demonstrated that there was a strip of land half a mile wide between New San Diego and Mission Valley, which was not shown on the Poole map. Poole's map did not show his starting point, and the witnesses at the trial could not agree as to what was the proper starting point. Poole's map was not made from an actual survey, but was compiled from other maps. The land is described in the deed as follows: "Being that lot of land, and west half of lot 1123, bounded as follows: Commencing at a stake being the south-west corner of said lot No. 1123, running thence north forty chains, to a stake; thence east twenty chains, to a stake; thence south forty chains, to a stake, thence west twenty chains, to the place of beginning,—containing eighty acres of land according to the official map of said city made by Charles H. Poole, A. D. 1856." The evidence shows that the city required the purchasers to survey the land before deeds were made. The lands in controversy were surveyed, and trees planted thereon by the grantees. The surveys were returned to the city trustees before any deeds were executed. These surveys were before the board of trustees when the deeds were made. One of the trustees, who signed all the deeds in controversy, went upon the lands before the deeds were executed, and procured lot 1132 to be surveyed, took possession of the same, and planted trees thereon. The applications of Cleveland and Cassidy for lot 1123, and of Searl and Estiñillo for lot 1132, were granted by the same resolution. The same surveyor acted for all parties, and the surveys were made at the same time, and all included in one set of field-notes. The surveyor, Wheeler, filed his field-notes and diagram for the city trustees, and upon these the city trustees acted in making the deeds. The parties, respectively, took possession of their lands as surveyed, and planted trees upon the same. The stake named in the description in the deed as the beginning point of the survey was fully identified by the surveyor who made the survey. In July, 1868, a public park was laid out, and marked with stakes. The tract thus laid out as a park has been maintained as such to this time, and has been well known, and designated upon all the maps as the "City Park." At the time Wheeler made his survey there was a stake at the north-west corner of the park, marked "North-West Corner of Pueblo Lot 1131," the north-east corner of lot 1132, and the south-east corner of lot 1123, and south-west corner of lot 1134. Lot 1123 was located so that the south-east corner thereof was identical with the north-west corner of the park. The surveyor located lot 1132 at the same time he located lot 1123, and he made the north-east corner of 1132 identical with the north-west corner of the park. According to the Poole map, lot 1132 lies directly west of lot 1131; the west line of 1131 corresponding with the east line of 1132. According to the same map, lot 1123 lies immediately adjoining 1132 on the north; the southern line of 1123 being the northern boundary line of 1132. The north-west corner of lot 1131, therefore, is identical with the south-east corner of lot 1123 according to the Poole map.

In view of the fact that the Poole map is inaccurate, that it is not a map made from an actual survey, that the country which it purports to map was really one-half mile longer from north to south than the surveyor believed it to be, and the fact that the map represents no starting point and no place of commencement for an actual survey,—being simply a compilation,—we think the court did not err in admitting parol testimony to prove the location of the tract of land which the city intended to sell, and which Cleveland intended to buy, and to prove that that tract of land had been staked off and definitely located. Widbur v. Washburn, 47 Cal. 67. There is in the deed a description by reference to a stake set in a certain place, and the location of that stake is made certain by the person who placed it, and made the survey. By commencing at this stake, named as the starting point of the survey, and by following the courses and distances named in the deed, the lot is located with certainty. The reference to the Poole map, we think, may be treated as surplusage. It is only where a map can be used in aid of a description that it is taken as a part of the deed; and, where there is a conflict between the map and the survey, the survey controls. O'Farrel v. Harney, 51 Cal. 125. Of course, the reference in the deed to a stake as the beginning point of the survey cannot be taken to mean a stake set by Poole, and according to the official map made by Poole, because Poole made no survey and set no stakes. The stakes were set by Wheeler at the time he made the survey, which was returned to the board of trustees. In the deed from Horton to Choate and others, under which they claim in this action, the property is described as lot 1123, according to the official map made by Pascoe in May, 1870, and excepts from its operation a portion of the same lot previously conveyed, and described according to the Poole map. There was, therefore, some evidence showing that lot 1123 by the Poole map had been regarded by the parties as the identical lot described in the Pascoe map as lot 1123. Judgment and order affirmed.

VAN EMON et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF TULARE COUNTY. (No. 12,622.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 16, 1888.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—PAYMENT OF FUNERAL EXPENSES—TOMBSTONE.

Expenses of erection of a monument at the grave of a deceased person are funeral expenses, within the meaning of a statute of California authorizing payment of funeral expenses out of the estates of deceased persons.

In bank. Original proceedings on application for writ of review.

Brown & Daggett, for petitioners. Frederick & Stratton and N. O. Bradley, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This is an application for a writ of review. The respondent in a probate proceeding made an order authorizing Robert Baker, administrator of the estate of John W. Miller, deceased, to cause a monument to be erected at the grave of deceased at an expense not exceeding $1,500. Petitioners, who are heirs of deceased, asked to have said order annulled on the ground of want of jurisdiction in the court to make it. The contention of petitioners is that the jurisdiction of superior courts in matters of probate is defined by statute, and that the statute does not authorize the erection of monuments at the graves of deceased persons at the expense of their estates. It authorizes the payment of funeral expenses; but petitioners insist that the cost of the erection of a monument is not any part of the funeral expenses. The answer to this is that courts and law writers have so treated it. In case of Appeal of McGlinsey, 14 Serg. & R. 64, the orphans' court struck out a credit claimed for funeral expenses of the deceased. The appellate court said: "A handsome tombstone was erected over the vault in which the body was interred, and this was the principal article of expense." The court held that that should have been allowed. In Bendall v. Bendall, 24 Ala. 295, the court said: "They [the vouchers] all relate to a box tomb of marble, lettered and inscribed, which the administrator caused to be erected over the grave of the deceased. * * * This may well be classed under the head of funeral expenses." In Ferrin v. Myrick, 41 N. Y. 325, the court, after saying it was the duty of the executor to pay funeral expenses, added: "And it has been well held that suitable grave-stones are a part of such expenses." In Fairman's Appeal, 30 Conn. 209, the court said that the sums paid for tombstones "should be considered a part of the funeral expenses." We think the court had jurisdiction to authorize the erection of a monument, and that is the only question which we can consider on the application for a writ of review. The demurrer to the petition is sustained, and the proceeding dismissed.

IRVING v. CUNNINGHAM et al. (No. 11,067.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 27, 1883.)

EJECTMENT—DELIVERY OF POSSESSION.

Persons who entered into possession of premises after the institution of an action of ejectment, but were not in privity with the defendants therein, and did not enter under them, either in good faith or collusively, and were not parties to the action, cannot be turned out of possession under the judgment obtained in that suit, whether their title be good or worthless.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. GREENE, Judge.

Henry P. Irving, having obtained a judgment in ejectment, was proceeding to the execution thereof by a writ of possession, when John Long, B. Van Wyman, and Lewis Hellans moved the court for an order restraining the sheriff from so executing the writ as to remove them from certain portions of the premises, which order was granted, and this appeal taken by Irving.

Moore & Reed, for appellant. Ayleth R. Cotton, W. H. H. Hart, W. W. Allen, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. This is an appeal from an order restraining the sheriff of Alameda county from executing a writ of possession for certain lands, so as to remove therefrom John Long, B. Van Wyman, and Lewis Hellans. It appears that on the 26th day of June, 1883, Henry P. Irving obtained a judgment in ejectment for the lands occupied by the moving parties herein, but it is claimed that they were not parties to the action in which the judgment was obtained, and did not claim title thereto under the defendants therein, either in good faith or collusively; that the possession of the moving parties was adverse to the whole world. The claim of title set up by them is based upon a tax deed to one J. P. Dameron. The evidence is clear that those in whose favor the restraining order was made, were not parties to the action in which the judgment in ejectment was obtained; and that they did not enter under the defendants, either in good faith or collusively. The court was warranted, we think, in holding that their possession was adverse to that of all the parties to the action. These facts existing, it made no difference whether the moving parties entered before or after suit brought, or whether the adverse title which they claimed to have was worthless or good. They could not be removed from the possession of premises under a writ of ejectment in a suit to which they were in no manner privy, and where their title could not have been determined. To grant the appellant's contention would be to say that one who enters, after suit brought, under claim of title, must not only show that he is not in privity with the defendant who has lost in an action of ejectment, is not in collusion with him, and is not a party to the suit, but he must further show that the possession of which it is sought to deprive him is under a title paramount to that of the plaintiff in the action where recovery is had; thus trying a second action of ejectment between the same plaintiff and another defendant, under a motion to restrain the execution of a writ of habere facias issuing under the judgment obtained in the first action. The lis pendens filed could not affect the rights of the moving parties here. They were not compelled, for that cause, to become parties to an action where they were not sued. Not being parties, they could not be affected except to the extent that they might be unable to acquire title to the property in dispute through the defendants, which they were attempting to do. Persons not parties to an action of ejectment cannot be put out of possession of the premises involved, unless they entered under the defendant either in good faith or collusively. Tevis v. Ellis, 25 Cal. 516; Watson v. Dowling, 26 Cal. 127; Le Roy v. Rogers, 30 Cal. 234; Long v. Neville, 36 Cal. 459; Ford v. Doyle, 37 Cal. 348. In Mayo v. Sprout, 45 Cal. 100, it was said: "The authorities of the city were turned out of possession of the premises by means of a writ of habere facias issued in this action, to which they were not parties. It is true, they had entered only after the action of Mayo v. Sprout had been commenced, but it is clearly shown that they did not go in under Sprout, or by collusion with him. Under such circumstances, it was an abuse of the process of the court to disturb them." If it was an abuse of the process of the court to disturb a possession held in that case, the court in this case did not commit error in issuing the restraining order, and we advise that it be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

GOULD v. STAFFORD. (No. 12,524.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 28, 1888.)

1. RIPARIAN RIGHTS—TAKING WATER FROM STREAM—INJUNCTION—EVIDENCE.

In an action to enjoin an upper riparian proprietor from diverting water from a creek, evidence that persons other than defendant have also diverted water from the stream is admissible only on the issue as to the amount of damages.

2. SAME—IRRIGATION—EXTENT OF RIGHT.

An upper riparian proprietor may use a reasonable amount of the water of a natural stream to irrigate his riparian land, but cannot use all of it for that purpose, nor can he use any of the water for the purpose of irrigating land not riparian.

3. SAME—RETURNING WATER AFTER USE.

An upper riparian owner must return to the stream all surplus of water after use.

4. APPEAL—REVIEW—FINDINGS.

Where the findings of the court are insufficient, contradictory, and not specific on the issue presented, and some are in conflict with the admissions of the pleadings, the judgment will be reversed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; R. M. DILLARD, Judge.

Action by Frederic S. Gould to enjoin O. A. Stafford, an upper riparian proprietor, from diverting water from a creek. Injunction denied, and plaintiff appeals.

John J. Boyce, for appellant. B. F. Thomas, for respondent.

MCCARLAND, J. The judgment will have to be reversed because the findings are insufficient. They are not pointed and specific on the issues presented, some of them are contradictory of each other, and some of them are in conflict with the admissions of the pleadings. As there will probably be another trial of the case, it is proper to notice some of the questions which the court below will again have to consider. Plaintiff is the owner of land on a natural stream of water called "Montecito Creek," and this action is brought to enjoin defendant, an upper riparian proprietor, from diverting water from a main branch of said creek, called "Cold Spring Branch," at a point a short distance above plaintiff's land, and to recover damages for the diversion.

1. Evidence that persons other than defendant also diverted water from the stream was admissible only on the issue as to the amount of damages. If de-defendant's diversion of water was wrongful, he could have no defense, as against the injunction, in the fact that others were guilty of a similar wrong; and evidence offered to prove the latter fact would be irrelevant and inadmissible. And, as plaintiff waived all claim to damages, (except nominal,) we think that it was error to admit evidence of diversions of water by third parties.

2. Assuming that in this state an upper riparian proprietor has the right to use a reasonable amount of the water of a natural stream running through his premises for irrigating his riparian land, still he has not the right, for that purpose, to take all the water which flows in the stream at the point where he diverts it; and, if the defendant did (as the evidence tends to show) thus take all the water flowing at the point where it was diverted, his act in so doing was wrongful. What would be a reasonable amount of water for irrigation is a question that must depend upon the particular circumstances of each case in which it arises, and it is a question which will often be of difficult solution; but it is clear that in no case can he, for that purpose, as against a lower proprietor, use all the water of the stream. That could be done, if at all, only where the whole of the water was absolutely necessary for strictly domestic purposes, and to furnish drink for man and beast.

3. Whatever may be the right of an upper proprietor to use a part of the water of the stream to irrigate his riparian land, he has no right to take any of it away to other lands not riparian, which seems to have been done by defendant in this case. Moreover, he must see to it that the surplus after use be returned to the stream, which it appears was not done in this case.

4. Defendant by his answer admits most of the averments of the complaint, except the wrongfulness of the diversion, the amount diverted, etc., and assumes the responsibility of the diversion, and justifies under his own right. Many of the findings, therefore,—as, for instance, the agreement between defendant and one Gutierrez, and the acts of certain Chinamen, which tend to take the responsibility away from defendant,—were irrelevant, erroneous, and against the admissions of the answer. The findings and the evidence should be confined to the issues made by the pleadings. The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO. v. PURSELL. (No. 12,548.)*(Supreme Court of California. June 28, 1888.)1. EJECTMENT—EVIDENCE—PATENT—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Where, in ejectment, plaintiff shows title by patent from the United States issued in pursuance of a legislative grant, it is not necessary to show that the preliminary conditions necessary to a valid patent had been fulfilled. That will be presumed.

2. SAME—DEFENSES—FORMER RECOVERY.

The fact that plaintiff had recovered a judgment in ejectment for the same land against the same defendant several years before the institution of the present action is no defense; the first judgment not having been obeyed, and the rents and profits claimed as damages in the two actions being for different periods.

3. SAME—OBJECTIONS TO PLAINTIFF'S RIGHT TO SUE—PLEADING.

4. PUBLIC LANDS—RAILROAD GRANTS—EXCEPTIONS—HOMESTEAD—EVIDENCE.

Where a legislative grant to a railroad company excepts from its operation lands to which pre-emption or homestead claims were attached "at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed," and defendant shows that he settled on and improved certain land within the grant, with the intention of homesteading it, and was in possession thereof at the time stated, and afterwards applied to the register of the land-office to make claim of homestead entry thereon, but was not allowed to do so, this does not show that a "homestead claim" had attached, as it did not appear that he offered to pay the register's fees, and to make the necessary affidavit required by law.

5. APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

Defendant is not prejudiced by the refusal of the trial court to permit an amendment to the answer, where the record shows that evidence was introduced by both parties just as if the answer was perfect in the particulars as to which the amendment was desired.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; WILLIAM W. CROSS, Judge.

Ejectment by Southern Pacific Railroad Company against John D. Pursell. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

Jacobs & Burns, for appellant. P. D. Wigginton, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Ejectment. The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals.

1. The plaintiff introduced a patent from the United States made in pursuance of a legislative grant. The defendant made a series of objections, all of which were based upon the ground that certain matters necessary to the validity of the patent had not been shown, and these objections are urged as reasons for the reversal of the judgment. The objections are not well taken. A patent, whether conclusive or not, is at least prima facie valid, and is presumptive evidence that all preliminary conditions had been fulfilled. Minster v. Crommelin, 18 How. 88; Leviston v. Ryan, 17 Pac. Rep. 239; Whitney v. Morrow, 112 U. S. 695, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 333.

2. The legislative grant excepts from its operation, among other things, lands to which pre-emption or homestead claims were attached "at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed;" and the defendant contends that he is within the exception. The basis for this contention is that he gave evidence showing that he was in possession before and at the time the line of the road was fixed; that he was a citizen of the United States, over 21 years, and had made no homestead entry; that he settled upon the land for the purpose and with the intention of homesteading it; and that he "went to the land-office at Visalia, and asked the register of the office to be allowed to file a homestead entry for this land." He further testified: "The offer of filing was rejected. I was not allowed to file homestead entry on the land." This did not bring him within the exception. Nothing is said about his paying, or offering to pay, the register's fees, or about his making or tendering the necessary affidavit. Rev. St. § 2290. It may be that the register refused to allow his entry because these conditions were not fulfilled. If such was not the fact, the defendant should have proved it, as the burden in this regard was clearly upon him. So far as is shown, he appears not to have taken any further step. He, therefore, did not show that a "homestead claim" had attached to the land, and therefore did not bring himself within the terms of the exception. So far as is shown by the record, he was a mere occupant of the land; and it is well settled that mere occupancy of public land does not, of itself, give the occupant any right to the land, or prevent the government from disposing of it as it pleases. Yosemite Valley Case, 15 Wall. 86; Sparks v. Pierce, 115 U. S. 408, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102.

3. The defendant pleaded a former recovery by the company against him for the same land. The proof was that an action of ejectment to recover the same property, and damages for its detention, had been commenced by the plaintiff herein against the defendant herein in the circuit court of the United States, and that judgment was entered for the plaintiff in January, 1880. So far as the damages are concerned, the cause of action is different; for the judgment in the present case is for "rents and profits of said premises from May 1, 1882." With reference to the title to the land, it would seem to have been the same as that adjudicated in the former suit; and we do not see why it could not have been relied upon by plaintiff here as an estoppel against defendant. It most certainly does not aid the defendant in any way. The counsel asks: "Are the courts to be called upon to render two judgments for the same cause of action?" We do not see why not, if the first judgment has not been obeyed. If the second action had been commenced while the first was pending, the pendency of another action might have been a defense. But, as the first suit resulted in a judgment several years before the second was commenced, we are at a loss to see how it can avail defendant in any way.

4. It is contended that the evidence shows title in defendant by adverse possession. The evidence as to possession, however, is vague, and we cannot say that the finding of the court, which, as we take it, is that there was no adverse possession, is not supported by the evidence.

5. It is objected that there was no proof that the plaintiff had filed a copy of its articles of incorporation in the county where the property is situated. The statute provides that unless it is so filed the corporation "shall not maintain or defend any action or proceeding in relation to such property." Civil Code, § 299. An analogous provision is made with reference to certain partnerships, (Id. § 2468;) and the construction which the latter has received is that the want of a certificate must be set up in the answer, (see Phillips v. Goldtree, 15 Pac. Rep. 451, 13 Pac. Rep. 313.) And upon the same reasoning we think that the want of the filing of a copy of the articles of incorporation in the county where the property is situated should have been set up by the answer. Neither the answer nor the proposed amended answer sets up this. The latter denies the existence of the corporation. But this is a different matter. If the plaintiff was not a corporation, there was no grantee, and the grant from the government was void. But the patent recites that the plaintiff was "a corporation existing under the laws of the state;" and this, we think, was sufficient proof, in the absence of countervailing circumstances, to show that the plaintiff had capacity to take the property.

6. It is urged that the defendant should have been allowed to amend his answer. There were defects in the answer on file which we think the defendant should have been allowed to remedy. For example, the answer failed to deny the allegation that the plaintiff was the owner of the property. And, except for the reason stated below, we should be inclined to advise that the judgment be reversed for an abuse of discretion in refusing to allow the amendment. But the record shows that both parties introduced evidence just as if the answer were perfect in the particulars in which it was sought to be amended. We have considered the case, and the objections urged by the appellant, as if the proposed amended answer had been allowed to be filed; and, so treating the case, we think the points made are not well taken. The appellant, therefore, was not injured by the refusal to allow the amendment. The other matters do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

CARTER v. PAIGE. (No. 12,637.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 27, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—DISMISSAL—FAILURE TO FILE TRANSCRIPT.

Under rule 3, Sup. Ct. Cal., providing that, if a transcript be on file at the time notice was given of a motion to dismiss an appeal because the transcript was not filed within the required time, such fact shall be a sufficient answer to the motion, failure to have the transcript on file at the time the notice was given will not preclude appellant from answering the motion, but he may set up matters excusing his default.

2. SAME—FAILURE TO FILE TRANSCRIPT—WHAT IS SUFFICIENT EXCUSE.

On the hearing of a motion to dismiss an appeal for failure of appellant's attorney to file a transcript within the required time, it appeared that such failure was caused by such attorney relying on the statement of another that the latter had caused two copies of the printed transcript to be left at the office of respondent's attorney, which statement was erroneous; such copies, by mistake, never having been delivered. Held, that such circumstances were sufficient to excuse the default.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county; CHARLES H. MARKS, Judge. On motion to dismiss.

The appeal in this case was perfected March 4, 1888, by filing an undertaking on appeal, the notice having been filed and served on the 5th. Afterwards appellant's attorney applied to the clerk of the court for a transcript, which he secured on March 28th. The transcript was printed at Stockton, which was the residence of the attorney for plaintiff and respondent. It was completed on the 12th of April, 1888, and was delivered by the printer to P. W. Bennett, Esq., who had been requested by the attorney for appellant, who resided in Fresno, over a hundred miles from Stockton, to procure the certificate of respondent's attorney, and who had promised to do so. On the 12th of April, Mr. Bennett wrote to appellant's attorney that he had caused two copies of the printed transcript to be left at the office of S. L. Carter, respondent's attorney, with his law partner, F. H. Smith, who had informed the person leaving them that Mr. Carter was then absent from Stockton; that he (Smith) was not concerned in the case, and could not certify to the transcript, but would, as soon as Mr. Carter returned, call his attention to them. This letter was received in due course of mail by appellant's attorney at Fresno, his place of residence, and at the same time he received a number of copies of the printed transcript. Subsequently it appeared that Mr. Bennett was mistaken as to the fact that copies of the printed transcript had been left at Mr. Carter's office on the 12th of April. He had requested a student in his office to deliver the copies of transcript to Mr. Carter; and the student, instead of going to the office, communicated with it by telephone, and reported to Mr. Bennett the conversation which he had with Mr. Smith. Mr. Bennett thought that the copies had been delivered, and the conversation had at the office of Messrs. Carter & Smith, and so wrote to Terry.

D. S. Terry, for appellant. Stanton L. Carter, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Rule 3 of this court provides simply that, if a transcript be on file at the time the notice of motion was given, that fact shall be sufficient answer to the motion to dismiss; but it does not follow that no answer can be made at any subsequent time. The mere fact that the transcript is on file at the time the notice of motion was given is all the showing the appellant is required to make to defeat the motion to dismiss; but, if the transcript be not filed until after the notice of motion has been given, something more is required. The filing of the transcript does not cure the default, or bar the relief sought by the motion. Circumstances going to excuse the appellant's default may be shown by the appellant by affidavit, the sufficiency of which must be determined by the court. The rule was thus construed in Welch v. Kenney, 47 Cal. 414. On the 17th of April, 1883, respondent's counsel served upon counsel for appellant a notice that he would, on Friday, the 4th day of May, 1888, or as soon thereafter as he could be heard, move this court to dismiss the appeal herein. At the time said motion to dismiss was heard, the transcript was on file herein, together with affidavits on behalf of respondent and appellant. The circumstances shown, we think, are sufficient to excuse the default of counsel for appellant in preparing and serving and filing the transcript on appeal, as required by the rules of this court. The transcript was left with Mr. Bennett in time to be served, and the statement of the latter undoubtedly misled counsel for appellant, who believed that the transcript had been left at the office of counsel for respondent for his certificate of its correctness. Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

PATERSON, J., did not participate in the decision of the motion.

GAGE et al. v. DOWNEY et al. (No. 12,377)

(Supreme Court of California. August 20, 1888.)

1. JUDGMENT—EFFECT—RES ADJUDICATA.

Plaintiff alleged, in an action against her husband's administrator for certain land, that her husband, who owned no property, acquired title to the land in question under a mortgage which he took to secure a loan of her money. It appeared that he acquired title to part of the land under the mortgage, and to the remainder by deed. Held, that a decree in plaintiff's favor for the entire tract is conclusive of her right thereto as against her husband's estate.

2. JUDGE—DISQUALIFICATION—REMOVAL OF CAUSE—VALIDITY OF JUDGMENT.

Where a case is transferred, because of the disqualification of the judge, to an adjoining judicial district, such court acquires jurisdiction, the judge having had authority under the statute to make the transfer, though the county was not the nearest one to which the case might have been transferred; and its judgment cannot be collaterally attacked.

3. EJECTMENT—DEFENSES—AGREEMENT TO CONVEY PART OF LAND TO ATTORNEY.

An agreement by plaintiff to transfer part of the land sued for, when recovered, to his attorneys, for their services, is not a defense to such action, even if within the prohibition of the statute forbidding attorneys to buy any thing in action.

4. APPEAL—REVIEW—OBJECTIONS NOT RAISED BELOW.

Where it is not objected, at the time a motion for a new trial was passed on, that notice of motion was not given, it will be presumed on appeal that the notice was given.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. T. McNEALY, Judge.

Action by Henry T. Gage and Cornelia Rains de Foley against John G. Downey and the Merchants' Exchange Bank of San Francisco to recover certain land. There was a judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. The contract between plaintiffs and Glassell, Smith & Patton, referred to in the opinion, was that plaintiffs should convey a portion of the lands sued for, when recovered, to said Glassell, Smith & Patton for their services as attorneys in the action. Pen. Code, § 161, forbids any attorney to buy or be interested in buying any evidence of debt or thing in action.

Glassell, Smith & Patton and Henry T. Gage, for appellants. Levi Chase, Bicknell & White, and O'Brien & Morrisson, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. We see no ground to dismiss the appeals herein or either of them. Admitting that the notice of intention to move for a new trial is no part of the record, because not made such by bill of exceptions or statement, still it is evident that the motion was submitted and denied by the court, at which time the respondents (defendants in the court below) were represented by their attorney, Levi Chase, Esq. This is shown by the order denying the motion for a new trial, entered in the minutes of the court on the 29th of August, 1887, which is as follows: "The defendants being present by L. Chase, Esq., their attorney, the plaintiff's motion for a new trial being now submitted is at this time denied by the court." The record shows no objection to the submission of this motion on the ground that no notice so to move was served and filed in time. Under these circumstances, it would be manifestly unjust to hold that the court below did not acquire jurisdiction of the motion, or to dismiss the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial. Every intendment sustains the action of the court. The failure to object, and the action of the court in passing on the motion and not dismissing it, afford an irresistible presumption that all things were regularly done; that the proper notice of intention had been given, and the statement regularly prepared. It follows from the foregoing that the motion to dismiss either appeal must be denied.

The plaintiffs in this cause are Henry T. Gage and Cornelia Rains de Foley, and the defendants are John G. Downey and the Merchants' Exchange Bank of San Francisco. The action is ejectment to recover possession of an undivided one-half of a tract of land situate in San Diego county, known as the "Rancho Valle de San José," for which a patent was issued by the United States on the 10th of January, 1880, to Sylvestre de la Portilla, and also an undivided twelve twenty-fifths of a tract of land situate in the same county, known as the "Rancho Valle de San José," for which a patent was, on January 16, 1880, issued by the United States to J. J. Warner. Judgment was rendered for the defendants. The plaintiffs moved for a new trial, which was denied. The latter prosecute the appeals herein from the judgment and order denying a new trial.

v.19p.nos.3-5-8

On the 16th of April, 1836, a grant was made to Sylvestre de la Portilla by N. Guiterrez, political chief, of the place called "Valle de San José," containing four square leagues. On the 8th day of June, 1840, a grant was made to José Antonio Pico by Juan B. Alvarado, governor of California, of the place called "Agua Caliente," to the extent mentioned in the plan accompanying the expediente. On the 28th day of November, 1841, a grant was made to J. J. Warner by Manuel Micheltorena, governor of California, of the place called "Valle de San José," containing six square leagues, more or less. The grants to Portilla and Warner were confirmed, and patents were issued to them severally, as above set forth. The grant to Pico was rejected. On the 6th of November, 1858, Portilla conveyed all his interest in the rancho to one Vicente S. de Carillo. Some time prior to 1856, say in 1854, J. J. Warner mortgaged his rancho Valley of San José to J. Mora Moss. Suit was brought to foreclose this mortgage in the district court for San Diego county. In this action a homestead was set apart by the court to Warner and wife. This place called tract is described in the decree, and is a portion of the south-western part of the ranch, a tract said to be a league, and was directed to be sold under this decree to satisfy Moss' mortgage. This latter tract is described in the decree. It does not appear that the league was ever sold. This decree seems to have been entered in 1856. Surely, in the absence of proof, it may be conclusively presumed that Moss' debt was paid to Warner, and that this league was never sold. The homestead set apart included the whole of Warner's ranch except the league above mentioned. This is manifest from the report of the commissioners who set apart the homestead, and the order of the court confirming it. Surely, if the homestead did not include the whole ranch except the Moss league, the part ordered to be sold would have exceeded one league. On the 20th of November, 1858, the above-named Warner and his wife, Anita Warner, executed a mortgage to John Rains of all their interest in the land granted to him. The description of the land included in this mortgage is as follows: "All the right, title, and interest of the parties of the first part of, in, and to that certain tract of land lying, being, and situate in the county of San Diego, Cal., known as the 'Valley of San José and Agua Caliente,' and being the lands granted to Jose Antonio Pico by Juan B. Alvarado, governor of the department of the Californias, by deed of grant of date of June 8, 1840, and to Juan J. Warner by Manuel Micheltorena, governor as aforesaid, by deed of grant of date of November 28, 1844, reference being had for a more particular description to the several grants, expedientes, maps, and other papers on file in the office of the surveyor general of the United States for California, in the city of San Francisco, and in the office of the clerk of the district court of the United States for the Southern district of California, in the city of Los Angeles, forming the record of case No. 254 on the docket of the United States land commission, and of case No. 218 on the land docket of said district court; together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments, and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining." On the 5th of July, 1861, the above-named Carillo conveyed to John Rains the undivided one-half of the (Portilla) rancho, previously conveyed to him by Portilla. The mortgage of Warner and wife to Rains was subsequently foreclosed, and the mortgaged premises sold under the decree of foreclosure by George Lyons, sheriff of the county of San Diego, to Rains; and on the 18th of November, 1861, the sheriff aforesaid, in pursuance of the decree and sale to Rains, executed to him a deed of the mortgaged premises above mentioned. The description in the sheriff's deed of the property conveyed is as follows: "All the right, title, and interest of said defendants of, in, and to that certain tract of land lying and being situate in the county of San Diego, state of California, known as the 'Valle de San José and Agua Caliente,' and being the land granted to José Antonio Pico by Juan B. Alvarado, governor of department of the Californias, by deed of grant of date January 8, 1840, and to John J. Warner by Manuel Micheltorena, governor as aforesaid, by deed of grant of date November 28, 1844; reference being had for a more particular description to the several grants, expedientes, maps, and other papers on file in the office of the surveyor general of the United States for California, in the city of San Francisco, and in the office of the clerk of the district court of the United States for the Southern district of California, in the city of Los Angeles, forming the record of case No. 254 on the docket of the late United States land commission, and of case No. 218 on the land docket of said district court; together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments, and appurtenances thereunto belonging. * * *

The mortgage of Warner and wife to Rains included the whole ranch granted to Warner; and Rains, under the decree of foreclosure, acquired title to the whole of it, and of this we have no doubt. The decree directed the whole to be sold and conveyed by the sheriff. The description in the mortgage and sheriff's deed are given above. The Moss league also passed to him under this mortgage, decree, and deed. At the time of the making of the foregoing documents, the Moss league had not been sold, and Rains took the title to Warner's ranch, presumably incumbered as to this league. As this was paid off he took title to the whole of Warner's ranch. By the deed from Carillo and wife he was invested with the title to the undivided one-half of the Portilla ranch, and the legal title to Warner's ranch and the above one-half of the Portilla grant was in him when he died, in November, 1862. These interests descended to his wife and children, unless the latter were divested of them by proceedings which will be hereafter referred to.

Before Rains took the mortgage above mentioned from Warner and wife, he had, on the 16th of September, 1856, intermarried with Maria Merced de Williams. He died on the 17th of November, 1862, leaving surviving him his wife above named, and five children, named Cornelia, (who is one of the plaintiffs,) Isaac, Robert, John, and Francisca, the latter born after the death of her father. Isaac died in 1877 intestate, unmarried, and without issue. On the 21st of February, 1863, Maria Merced, the above-named widow of John Rains, commenced an action in the district court of the county of San Bernardino against E. K. Dunlap, administrator of John Rains, deceased, and her children above named and others, in which she set forth her marriage with John Rains on the 16th of September, 1856; that Rains then had but an inconsiderable amount of property, which he afterwards expended; that Rains acquired money by the sale of her separate property; that on the 29th of November, 1858, he lent to J. J. Warner the sum of $1,800, to secure the payment of which he received from Warner and his wife a mortgage of certain property, describing it as follows: "All their right, title, and interest in and to that certain tract of land lying and being situate in the county of San Diego, Cal., known as the 'Valle de San José and Agua Caliente,' and being the lands granted to José Antonio Pico by Juan B. Alvarado, governor of the department of the Californias, by deed of grant of June 8, 1840, and to John J. Warner by Manuel Micheltorena, governor as aforesaid, by deed of grant of date November 28, 1844;" the property and right included in said mortgage being all that part of said rancho "Valle de San José and Agua Caliente," lying to the north and east of the east and west and north and south lines drawn from the tree marked "W," mentioned in the complaint, instead of the one square league lying to the south and west of said two lines. The line referred to marked "W" is described as an oak, standing on the east and in contact with the rocks, forming the first rocky point on the south side of the meadow valley, which extends eastwardly from the rocky hill at San José Indian village to Buena Vista. (The above description is combined from the original and amended complaint, in accordance with what appears in the transcript.) Other property is mentioned in the complaints which it is not necessary to describe. The complaint further avers that Rains proceeded in due course of law to foreclose this mortgage against Warner and the heirs of his wife, then deceased; that at the sale under the decree of foreclosure Rains became the purchaser, and thereafter in due time received the sheriff's deed for such premises. It was further averred that the money lent by Rains to Warner, and for which the mortgage was taken from Warner and wife, was the separate property of the then plaintiff, Maria M. Williams de Rains; that Rains paid no money for the property purchased at the sheriff's sale above mentioned; and that the amount paid was the amount found by the court due on the mortgage foreclosed; that no part of this money had ever been given to Rains by the plaintiff, his then widow, or did it belong to him in any way; that she was informed by Rains that the sheriff's deed for the mortgaged property aforesaid had been executed to her as grantee. She avers that the property became her separate property, and asks that the court decree the property included in the aforesaid deed of the sheriff of San Diego county to be hers, as against the defendants, with the common general prayer for all other and further relief to which she may be entitled. The district court for San Bernardino county found the facts as alleged by plaintiff in regard to this property, and decreed it to be her separate property. And it was further adjudged by same decree that defendant E. K. Dunlap, administrator of John Rains, deceased, execute and deliver to the plaintiff all necessary deeds, etc., to carry the decree into full effect. This decree was entered and filed on the 13th of March, 1863. On the next day the deed of the property described in the complaint was executed to plaintiff Maria Merced, by the administrator, as required by the decree. On the 14th of March, 1863, the above-named Maria Merced conveyed to her children, Cornelia, Isaac, Robert, John Scott, and Francisca Rains, by deed, all of the estate above mentioned, conveyed to her by deed of Dunlap, administrator, just above set forth. On the 2d of April, 1864, the aforesaid Maria Merced, widow of John Rains, commenced an action in the district court for the county of Los Angeles against Dunlap, in his individual capacity, and also as administrator of John Rains, deceased, Robert S. Carlisle, individually and as trustee, Cornelia Rains, Isaac Rains, Robert Rains, John Scott Rains, Francisca V. Rains, and others as defendants. On the 26th day of November, 1864, on the affidavit of plaintiff's attorney that the judge of the district court for the First judicial district, of which the county of Los Angeles formed a part, was disqualified from acting in the case by reason of consanguinity, on motion of said attorney the cause was removed for trial to the district court of the Third judicial district for Santa Clara county. No objection was made to this order. The papers in the cause were thereafter transmitted to the district court for the county last-named, and filed therein on the 4th of January, 1865. No motion was made to remand this cause to the district court for Los Angeles county, and it remained for trial, and was tried in the court to which it had been by the order transferred. On the 9th of May, 1865, an amended complaint was filed by the plaintiff, who had, since the commencement of the action, intermarried with José C. Carillo. The object of this suit was to have set aside the conveyance to her children as having been procured from her by fraud and undue influence, and also to set aside a power of attorney, executed to Robert S. Carlisle, which she had revoked, and for an account from Carlisle, etc., and for general relief. The property averred to have been conveyed by the deed sought to be set aside by this suit is set forth in the complaint, and is described in full. It consists—First, of the Cucamonga ranch, situate in the county of San Bernardino; second, the Bella Union Hotel, situate in the city of Los Angeles; third, a lot in the city just mentioned, which was conveyed to Rains by Alice Flashner by deed dated August 11, 1862; and, fourth, (we here insert the description in same words as in complaint,) “all that certain tract of land situate in the county of San Diego, state aforesaid, known as ‘San José del Valle and Agua Caliente,’ same set apart as a homestead for Jonathan J. Warner and wife, by decree of the district court of San Diego county on September 24, 1856, and known also as ‘Warner’s Rancho;’” fifth, certain personal property. The above is alleged in the complaint to have been decreed to be her separate property by the decree in the San Bernardino action. Dunlap, Carlisle, and the infant children of said plaintiff, by their guardian ad litem, all answered the complaint. The case was tried, and on the 27th day of May, 1867, a decree was made and entered setting aside the deed above mentioned made by plaintiff to her children as having been obtained by fraud, and it was ordered that the same should be delivered up and canceled, also setting aside the power of attorney to Carlisle. The decree then proceeds to distribute the property in the action between the plaintiff and her children, defendants above named. Certain property is distributed to the children, and adjudged to belong to them, and certain other property to the plaintiff as hers. The respective interests are clearly designated and described in the decree, and possession is awarded to each of the parcels so decreed to them. Among other parcels of land awarded to the plaintiff is one designated in the decree in words following: “Second. And also all that tract of land situate in the county of San Diego, state of California, and known as the ‘Rancho San José del Valle’ (or ‘Warner’s Ranch,’) being the same rancho finally confirmed to J. J. Warner, and surveyed under instructions from the United States surveyor general of California by John C. Hayes, in July, 1859, and said survey was approved March 3, 1860, by T. W. Manderville, United States surveyor general of California.” On the 3d of December, 1868, Maria Merced Williams de Carillo executed to C. V. Howard, P. Beaudry, M. F. Coronel, J. S. Downey, and J. S. Garcia, a deed of “all that certain tract of land or rancho situate in the county of San Diego, state of California, known by the name of ‘San José del Valle,’ or ‘Warner Ranch,’ and also known by the name of ‘San José o Tagui,’ and being the same tract of land or rancho confirmed by the United States land commission and United States district court to J. J. Warner, in the case of J. J. Warner vs. The United States, to the papers in which case reference is hereby made for a more particular description.”

It is admitted that defendants succeeded to an undivided half of the Portilla grant by deed of V. S. de Carillo, executed on the 20th of February, 1869, to C. V. Howard et al., and is not involved in this suit. Of the children of Maria M. W. de Rains above mentioned, Isaac died in 1877, intestate, unmarried, and without issue. It is said by counsel for plaintiffs that the interests of Robert, John, and Francisca, who married the plaintiff Gage, if any they had, became vested before the beginning of this action in the plaintiff just above named. Defendants claim title under the decrees above set forth, rendered in the San Bernardino and Santa Clara cases, and conveyances subsequently made.

It is averred by plaintiffs that the title under the Portilla grant was not embraced in the San Bernardino case. In this contention we cannot concur. The claim preferred by Mrs. Rains in this suit was for the whole of the Warner ranch, except the Moss league, which league, in the final survey, was not awarded to Warner. The reference to the grant to Warner and the homestead set off to him in the action of Moss v. Warner and Wife was mere matter of description, to identify the land which she claimed. There was no intention to do what is most unusual and entirely unnecessary to deraign and set forth her chain of title in the complaint. The complaint means that John Rains bought this land with money which was part of plaintiff's separate estate; that it belonged to her in fee, and should be conveyed to her. It states that the property included in the mortgage to John Rains is a certain part, viz., that set off as a homestead in the action of Moss v. Warner. That is the tract claimed by her in the action and so declared in the complaint. The word "right," connected with "property," in the complaint, does not give a different meaning to what is claimed by the complaint. The language used amounts to stating that the right involved and claimed here is the right to the tract set apart as a homestead, described in the pleading. The decree of the court, and the deed of Dunlap, administrator, accord with this view, as will be seen by the reference to them. The complaint intended to challenge John Rain's right and title to this land, and to bring them to judicature, and this we think was done by the pleader. So that the parties claiming under Rains might deny by their answer her right to the land, and offer in evidence any title, whether derived from Portilla or any one else, to the land, which would show the land to be a part of his estate. The title to the land was in controversy in this suit as between the personal representative and the children of John Rains on the one hand, and his widow on the other, and it was determined in favor of the widow, (plaintiff.) John Rains acquired his interest in the Portilla grant after his foreclosure at the sheriff's sale under the decree of foreclosure in the action to foreclose his mortgage taken from Warner and wife; and if, after Mrs. Rains obtained the deed of the administrator under the decree in the San Bernardino case, she had brought an action against John Rains to recover the land embraced in the decree, and he had set up against her his Portilla title, she might have defeated it, if not by the decree just above mentioned, by showing that the Portilla interest was acquired by him with money belonging to her as her separate estate; and we are of opinion that the defendants could, in this action, do the same against the plaintiffs to defeat their right to any portion of the land included in the Warner patent. In our judgment the decree under consideration conclusively determined that the land embraced in it belonged to Mrs. Rains, and that the estate of Rains had no title to it acquired from any source, whether Portilla, or Pico, or any one else. Under this decree in Mrs. Rains' favor, she executed the deed to her children, under which plaintiffs herein claim.

It is contended on their part that the judgment in the case tried in Santa Clara, setting aside this deed, is void for want of jurisdiction in the district court of Santa Clara county. This contention we propose now to consider. The objection made to the jurisdiction of the court is put on the ground that the judge had transferred the cause to the district court of a county—Santa Clara—which court was not the nearest court to Los Angeles county, where the like cause or objection for making the order did not exist. The same cause and objection here existed as to every county in the First judicial district; therefore it would have been error to transfer it to a court in a county in that district. The judge then had to select a court of a county not of the First district. The nearest district courts then were in the Third judicial district, at that time composed of the counties of Monterey, Santa Cruz, Santa Clara, and Alameda. Conceding that the county-seats of Monterey and Santa Cruz were nearer to Los Angeles county in a straight course than that of Santa Clara county, still, as the county-seat of the latter was nearer by the usually traveled route, or more accessible, might it not be reasonably concluded that the district court of Santa Clara was the nearest? But waiving this, we are of opinion that, conceding that the county-seat of Monterey or Santa Cruz was nearer than that of Santa Clara to Los Angeles county, that the order sending it to the district court of the latter county was only error. We cannot see how it can be law that a judgment can be impeached collaterally and held void, because a judge has made an inconsiderable mistake in computing distances, or had selected a county-seat more readily accessible than the others in coming from Los Angeles, and holding it to be really the nearer on that account. The judge had jurisdiction to make this order, under the statute then in force. He must determine what is the nearest court in administering the law. This determination was undoubtedly within his power, (St. May 6, 1854; St. 1864, p. 153; Hitt. Gen. Laws, par. 5600;) and if he sent it to a county some distance further than another by error of a miscalculation of distances, it would be nothing more than an error, and should not render the judgment void. Conceding that this judgment might have been reversed on appeal, still it would not be void on collateral attack. The cases cited by the counsel for plaintiffs, (appellants here,) Burton v. Covarrubias, decided at the April term, 1865, (not reported;) People v. De la Guerra, 24 Cal. 73; Livermore v. Brundage, 64 Cal. 299; and People v. McGarvey, 56 Cal. 327,—are not at all in point. They are all on appeal or direct attack. No collateral attack was attempted in either case, and in every case except People v. McGarvey they were orders not of transfer, but orders in the cause, involving judicial action of different kind than that of transfer, which the judge was expressly forbidden by statute from making. People v. McGarvey related to a criminal case transferred under a state of facts not allowed by the statute relating to such cases,—a statute entirely different from the act under which the judge proceeded in this case, as is apparent from the opinion in the case. There was no appeal in the Santa Clara case. In fact, the adverse parties therein did not object to the order, did not move to vacate it, nor to remand the cause in the Santa Clara court, but acquiesced in the judgment. We do not think the contention of the appellants is sustainable. The judgment is not open to attack for the reason urged by them.

The plaintiff in the case tried in Santa Clara county relied on the judgment recovered in the San Bernardino case, which, as we have seen, determined that the whole of the Warner ranch, except the Moss league, was hers, as against any title derived from any source or any one else, and the decree in the Santa Clara case set aside the deed to her children and determined certain land to belong in fee to the plaintiff therein, Mrs. Carillo, formerly Rains. It makes no difference that the decree assumed the form of a partition of the property involved in the cause between the plaintiff and her children. It set aside the deed to the children, and, conceding that the decree in other respects was void, it was not void so far as it set aside this deed. The Warner ranch, except the Moss league, then remained in her under the San Bernardino decree, and the administrator's deed made in pursuance thereof. We do not think that it is averred in the complaint in the Santa Clara cause that the judgment in the San Bernardino cause was obtained and entered by collusion of any kind. The arrangement between Scott and Dunlap had relation to the deed executed after the judgment in the San Bernardino case to Mrs. Rains' children and the power of attorney to Carlisle, and not to the judgment. The findings in the Santa Clara case, if there were any, are not in the transcript, and the judgment therein makes no reference to any agreement between Scott and Dunlap. The point that this was averred to have been a collusive judgment is not well taken. The defendants acquired, before the commencement of the action, the title to an undivided one-half of the land patented to Portilla. This does not include the half conveyed to John Rains by Carillo and wife, by deed dated July 5, 1861. The above appears by stipulation. It was admitted on the trial that there is a league (the Moss league) of the land patented to Portilla which is not included in the patent to Warner. All the other land included in the patent to Portilla is included in the patent to Warner. As to the land included in the Warner patent, the defendants are entitled to recover it. This follows from what has been stated above.

The question as to that part of the land sued for outside of the patent to Warner, and embraced in the Portilla patent, demands further consideration. The Moss league, it is admitted by stipulation, is not included in the patent to Warner. Such is the meaning of the stipulation on page 362 of the transcript. We do not know that the defendants ever acquired more than the above half of the league. The other half passed to John Rains, and he died intestate as to it. This half was acquired during the coverture with his wife, Maria Merced, and was, therefore, community property, and on his death passed, subject to the payment of debts of the community, one-half to Maria M., his relict, and the other half to his descendants, (children.) See act of May 8, 1861, (St. 1861, p. 310.) Rains left four children, one of whom, Isaac, died in 1877, intestate, unmarried, and without issue. His portion, an undivided one-fifth, descended to his mother, Maria Merced. The other four-fifths descended to the other children. The title to one-fifth of this half, or one-twentieth, of the Moss league, was in Mrs. Foley when the action was brought, and she is entitled to recover it. Isaac's interest in this land passed by descent to Mrs. Rains or Carillo on his dying intestate in 1877, unmarried and without issue. The portions of Robert, John, and Victoria of this league remained in them when the action was commenced. The record does not show that they were ever conveyed to the plaintiffs, or either of them. Nor does it show that Mrs. Carillo ever conveyed her interest in this league to the plaintiff Foley or Gage. We have searched the record with the greatest care, and can find in it no deed to plaintiff Gage from any one, and the only deed to the plaintiff Foley is that executed by her mother (Mrs. Rains) to her children on the 14th of March, 1863, which was set aside. As the record shows no conveyance of any kind to plaintiff Gage, it is free from error as to him. We have said nothing as to the interest which appears to have been acquired by Mrs. Rains or Carillo from Mrs. Carlisle by the deed of the latter. So far as it affects the land in the Warner patent, it inured, under the Howard deed, to the benefit of the defendants. As to any interest in the Portilla, it still remains in her, and can cut no figure in this suit, as she is not a party seeking any relief.

Conceding that the contracts between Glassell, Smith & Patton and the plaintiffs (which are found by the court) are void, they are of no material significance in this action. If they were void, they cannot and have no effect on the title of plaintiffs. The plaintiffs may set them up against Glassell, Smith & Patton, if they should so elect, when the former make any claim against them. We cannot see that defendant's rights are in any way enlarged by these contracts. If such contracts are void, they are no more than so much blank paper between the parties. They take away nothing from the plaintiffs, and add nothing to the rights of defendants. The contention of defendants on this point need not be further considered. It is dismissed from further notice as untenable.

As this action is brought to recover lands embraced in the Portilla and Warner patents, and as it clearly appears that the plaintiff, Mrs. Foley, is entitled to recover a portion of the lands embraced in the Portilla patent, viz., one-twentieth of the Moss league, and of any portion of the Portilla patent not included in the Warner patent, as to her there must be a new trial. The order denying a new trial to plaintiff Gage is without error. The judgment and order are reversed as to plaintiff Foley, and the cause remanded for a new trial as to her. As to the plaintiff Gage, the judgment and order must be affirmed. So ordered.

PEOPLE v. AH JAKE. (No. 20,404.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 18, 1888.)

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sierra county; F. D. SOWARD, Judge.

Bert Schlessinger and A. J. Howe, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. We have examined all the points made by counsel for appellant in this cause and cannot perceive that the court below committed any error in its rulings herein. Judgment and order affirmed.

BATES v. SCHROEDER. (No. 12,712.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 20, 1888.)

APPEAL—REQUISITES—FAILURE TO FILE TRANSCRIPT.

A clerk of appellant's attorney, during the illness of his employer and against his directions, took the appeal, but failed to file a transcript. Appellant's attorney was first apprised that appeal had been taken by respondent's notice of motion to dismiss, when he served and filed a transcript. Held, that the appeal would not be dismissed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county; E. F. HEAD, Judge.

Motion to dismiss appeal, on the ground that no transcript was filed in time. The affidavit of appellant's attorney, heard upon the motion, alleged that appellant, defendant below, interposed a demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled, and judgment rendered for plaintiff; that within 10 days after rendition of the judgment deponent was taken sick, and confined to his bed and room for about a month, being unable to attend to any business; that, while so confined, he was informed that defendant had requested one of deponent's clerks to take an appeal in the cause, but that he had directed the clerk not to take the appeal, and supposed his directions had been obeyed; that he was first apprised that appeal had been taken by respondent's notice of motion to dismiss; that, upon receiving such notice, he caused a transcript on appeal to be made out, served, and filed in this court, and that it was his intention in good faith to prosecute the appeal; that the judgment appealed from is, in his opinion, manifestly erroneous.

D. M. Delmas, for appellant. J. C. Bates, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. On an examination of the papers herein the court is of opinion that the appeal should not be dismissed, and the motion must be denied.

PEOPLE v. GOLDENSON. (No. 20,349.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 25, 1888.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—VENUE—CHANGE—POPULAR EXCITEMENT.

On a motion for a change of venue on the ground of popular prejudice against defendant, where the occurrences showing "popular excitement," on which affidavits for defendant base their belief that a fair and impartial trial could not be had, transpired within a few days after the crime, and the counter-affidavits show that the excitement had actually subsided, and had not prevailed for three weeks prior to the application, it is no abuse of discretion for the trial court to deny the motion.¹

¹As to when a change of venue should be granted on a trial for murder, on the ground of popular excitement and prejudice, see Seams v. State, (Ala.) 4 South. Rep. 521.

2. SAME—DENIAL OF MOTION TEMPORARILY.

Where such motion is denied temporarily, with permission to renew the application, it is the duty of the defendant to renew the application, if a change of venue is desired.

3. SAME—CONTINUANCE—TO OBTAIN RETURN OF DEPOSITION.

A motion for a continuance, in order to obtain the return of certain depositions, is properly denied, where the interrogatories relate solely to facts which are not denied.

4. SAME—ABSENCE OF COUNSEL—ATTENDANCE ON OTHER COURT.

Defendant's plea of not guilty was entered on November 23, 1886, and the case set for trial December 6th, and continued to February 14, 1887, at the request of defendant's counsel, to enable him to prepare for trial. On December 17, 1886, the professional services of defendant's senior counsel were engaged in a civil case, the trial of which was begun on January 18, 1887, and was in progress February 14, 1887, when defendant's case was called for trial. Held, that it was not error to refuse a continuance until defendant's counsel had concluded his engagement in the civil suit, there being no certainty when that case would be concluded.

5. SAME—ATTENDANCE ON LEGISLATURE.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 595, providing that a trial shall be postponed when it appears that the attorney of record is attending on the legislature as a member thereof, refers only to those who become attorneys before the commencement of the session of the legislature; and a defendant in a criminal case is not entitled to a continuance because his junior counsel is a member of the legislature, when it does not appear from the record that he was engaged in the defense when the session began.

6. SAME—APPOINTING ATTORNEY TO REPRESENT DEFENDANT.

After overruling defendant's motion for a continuance to suit the convenience of the attorney whom he had employed, the court appointed attorneys to defend him, although he neither desired nor was he unable to pay for another attorney. Held no error, the question being who should represent the defendant, who was represented by the defense as insane, and relied upon insanity as his defense.

7. SAME—FORMATION OF GRAND JURY—WAIVER OF DEFECTS.

Irregularities in the formation of a grand jury cannot be considered on motion to set aside the indictment. Such motion can be addressed only to the proceedings of a grand jury.

8. SAME—COMMITMENT—SETTING ASIDE INDICTMENT.

The provision of Pen. Code Cal. § 995, that an information may be set aside when the defendant has not been legally committed by a magistrate before the filing thereof, does not apply in cases of indictment.

9. SAME—RIGHT OF DEFENDANT TO BE HEARD BEFORE GRAND JURY.

The defendant is not entitled to notice that the grand jury is investigating a charge against him, nor is he entitled to be heard or have witnesses sworn and examined by that body, unless the jury calls for the same.

10. SAME—JURY—CHALLENGES—BIAS AGAINST CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

Under Pen. Code Cal. § 1074, providing for challenges of jurors for implied bias in a trial for murder, when the court becomes satisfied that a juror entertains conscientious scruples against convictions when the penalty is death, it is the court's duty to excuse him, and it is not error to refuse to allow further examination by the defendant.

11. SAME—BIAS OF JUROR—REVIEW.

The decision of the court, upon a challenge to a juror for actual bias, is final.

12. SAME—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where it appears that defendant had the benefit of all the peremptory challenges to which he was entitled, the omission of the court to inform the defendant that, if he intends to challenge a juror, he must do so when the juror appears, and before he is sworn, as required by Pen. Code, § 1066, is not prejudicial error.

13. SAME—RETRIAL OF CHALLENGES.

It is not error for the court to deny defendant's motion for a retrial of certain challenges, after the jury has been completed and sworn.

14. SAME—ARRAIGNMENT—COPY OF INDICTMENT.

When defendant on arraignment is given a copy of the indictment, it is not error to refuse a second copy to counsel appointed to defend him, as it is the defendant who is entitled to a copy, and not all who are his counsel.

15. SAME—TRIAL—COMPELLING DEFENDANT TO STAND UP FOR IDENTIFICATION.

To order the defendant to stand up during the trial for identification by one of the witnesses, is not compelling him to become a witness against himself, within the meaning of the constitutional provision that "no person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself."

16. SAME—OPENING STATEMENT BY COUNSEL—COMMENTS.
It is not error for the trial judge to stop defendant's counsel from commenting to the jury on the action of the court in matters of law, and it is not error to refuse to allow counsel in his opening statement to refer to other cases or to read law in illustration of his argument.
17. SAME—OPENING STATEMENT—EXTENT.
It is not error to require counsel for the defendant in his opening statement to confine himself to a statement of facts, and his conclusions therefrom, without any argument upon the evidence introduced by the state.
18. SAME—NUMBER OF OPENING STATEMENTS.
It is within the discretion of the trial court to refuse to allow both of the attorneys for the defendant to make opening statements to the jury, under Pen. Code, § 1093, providing that "counsel may open the defense."
19. SAME—EVIDENCE—MEDICAL TREATISES.
Medical treatises are not admissible in evidence, except to discredit a witness who bases his testimony upon them; and on a trial for murder, the defense being insanity, when an expert is asked to name the circumstances of the cases he had read when violence accompanied hysterical mania, the question is properly overruled, it being an attempt to introduce medical works in evidence.¹
20. SAME—CHARACTER OF DEFENDANT—BIASED WITNESS.
In a trial for murder, when the mother of deceased testifies, on her cross-examination: "I heard the Goldensons [the family of defendant] were of such a character that I did not wish my daughter to go to their house,"—it is not error to disallow a question by defendant as to the nature of the character referred to. The testimony of the witness showed that she was prejudiced against defendant's family, and the reason therefor was immaterial.
21. SAME—WITNESS—LEADING QUESTIONS.
It is within the discretion of the trial court to allow the prosecuting attorney to ask leading questions of the state witnesses.
22. SAME—EVIDENCE—CONFESSIONS.
The confession of defendant is admissible, when freely and voluntarily given, without inducements or threats.²
23. SAME—CONFESSION—PRELIMINARY PROOF.
In a trial for murder, when a detective, referring to a confession made by defendant, testifies: "He made it freely; no inducements held out to him, or promise or expectation; no threats made,"—it is not error to refuse to strike out the testimony as a conclusion of law; the court thereupon informing the defendant's counsel: "You have the privilege now of examining the witness upon the question or whether or not it was a free and voluntary statement."³
24. SAME—DEPOSITIONS—HEARSAY.
It is not error for the court on its own motion, and with or without an objection from the prosecution, to exclude portions of depositions, on behalf of the defense, which are hearsay.
25. SAME—EXPERT WITNESS—HYPOTHETICAL QUESTION.
It is not error to refuse to permit all the testimony given in the case to be read as a hypothetical question to a medical expert, when defendant's counsel are informed by the court that they might assume certain facts, and put the usual hypothetical question.³
26. SAME—COMMENTS OF COUNSEL.
It is not error to prevent counsel for defendant from commenting upon the actions of juries in other local homicide cases, and to state that the case before the court should be tried upon the evidence given in court, and the law applicable thereto.
27. SAME—BILLS OF EXCEPTION—SETTLING DURING TRIAL.
It is not error for the trial court to refuse to settle bills of exceptions during the trial. It is within the court's discretion to delay such settlement beyond the statutory time, and it is its duty to see that the record is correct, whether any objections are made by the prosecuting attorney to the proposed bill of exceptions or not.

¹That medical and scientific works are not admissible in evidence, except for the purpose of impeaching expert witnesses who have cited them, see People v. Vanderhoof, (Mich.) 39 N. W. Rep. 28, and note.

²As to when confessions are admissible in evidence, and the preliminary proof required, see Mitchell v. State, (Ga.) 5 S. E. Rep. 130, and note; State v. Lewis, (La.) 3 South. Rep. 343, and note; People v. Yeaton, (Cal.) 17 Pac. Rep. 544, and note; Banks v. State, (Ala.) 4 South. Rep. 382, and note; Wilson v. State, Id. 383.

³Concerning what should properly be included in hypothetical questions, see People v. Vanderhoof, (Mich.) 39 N. W. Rep. 28, and note.

28. SAME—NECESSARY CONTENTS—EXAMINATION OF JUROR.

The trial court certified that, in the examination of proposed jurors, no question as to their competency was disallowed, no evidence rejected, no objection to the admission or rejection of any testimony sustained, and no objection or exception to the allowing or disallowing of any question, evidence, or testimony on said examination was made or saved, except as herein set forth. Held, upon an intimation that the court, in settling the bill of exceptions, had eliminated material matters, that the court properly declined to incorporate into the bill the testimony of the jurors in their examination on their voir dire.

29. SAME—MISCONDUCT OF JURY—AFFIDAVITS OF JURY.

When a new trial is asked on the ground of the misconduct of the jury in disobeying the admonition of the court about reading newspapers, the affidavits of the jurors, denying the charges of misconduct, are allowable, and are conclusive.¹

30. SAME—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

A new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, where such evidence is merely impeaching and cumulative in character.²

31. SAME—CONDUCT OF TRIAL JUDGE.

Where the language of the court, as used in his rulings and questions and remarks, and set out in the record, does not show anything from which it can be said the jurors were prejudiced, an exception, based on the ground that the jurors were prejudiced by the conduct of the judge, cannot be sustained.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco;
D. J. MURPHY, Judge.

Eugene N. Deuprey and Wm. H. Jordan, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Geo. A. Johnson, for the People.

PATERSON, J. The defendant is under sentence of death for having willfully, unlawfully, and of his malice aforethought killed one Mary Elizabeth Kelly, in the city and county of San Francisco, on the 10th day of November, 1886. It appears that Goldenson and the deceased—who was only fourteen years of age—had been acquainted for two or three years, and during that time lived with their parents, in adjoining houses. The girl was returning home from school on the day of the homicide, when the defendant met her, and said, "Come here, Mamie, I want to see you." Leaving her school-mate—with whom she was walking—she joined the defendant, and had proceeded about half a block with him, when he suddenly turned towards her, and saying, "Take that and go," pointed a pistol at her, and shot her; killing her instantly. He then ran to the nearest police station, throwing his pistol away in his flight, and gave himself into the custody of the officers, saying, "I have shot my girl." On his way to the office of the chief of police, soon after he had delivered himself up to the officers, he stated that he had shot the deceased because she became an annoyance to him; that they had been "keeping company" and had corresponded clandestinely; that when he met her she had a letter in her hand which he had sent her that morning; and that she had called him "a damned Jew," whereupon he shot her. Upon his arrival at the office of the chief of police, at his own request, he was permitted to make a written statement about the homicide. The substance of this statement is that the deceased had been constantly annoying and following him; had been continually seeking his company against his wishes; and that just before he shot her she had called him "a damned Jew."

¹On the subject of the admissibility of jurors' affidavits, on a motion for a new trial, based on misconduct of the jury, see Com. v. White, (Mass.) 16 N. E. Rep. 707, and note; Clark v. Manchester, (N. H.) 13 Atl. Rep. 867; State v. Rush, (Mo.) 8 S. W. Rep. 221; Griffin v. Harriman, (Iowa,) 38 N. W. Rep. 139; Grottkau v. State, (Wis.) 36 N. W. Rep. 31.

²That a new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, merely impeaching and cumulative in its character, see Hunt v. State, (Ga.) 7 S. E. Rep. 142, and note; Gilmore v. Brost, (Minn.) 39 N. W. Rep. 139, and note.

There seems to be very little controversy about the facts of the case; the defense relying, so far as the merits go, apparently upon the insanity of the defendant, under his plea of not guilty. In support of their contention, that the judgment should be reversed, counsel for the defendant have filed elaborate briefs, in which more than a hundred points are made against the regularity of the proceedings in the court below.

The points which seem to be urged with the most zeal and confidence are that the court erred in denying the motions for a change of venue and for a continuance. In support of their motion for a change of venue, counsel for defendant made what appears to be a very strong showing. It appears from the affidavits that, "within a few days after the homicide had occurred, a crowd of people assembled in front of the house of said defendant, and some of them cried out, 'Close him up!' 'Make the Jew close up!' 'Hang him!' 'Lynch him!' That a guard of police was necessary at that time to protect the property of defendant's family. That for several days defendant's relatives feared to leave their home. That the shutters and windows of affiant's store were broken by some of the excited people gathered there, and that on the occasion of the attempted removal of defendant's family some of their property had been injured, and that for several days succeeding November 10, 1886, many people remained continuously in the vicinity of defendant's home, uttering threats of violence against defendant and his family. That the newspapers in said city and county were daily denouncing said defendant, and demanding his immediate execution, and that for the reasons given it was impossible for defendant to receive a fair and impartial trial in said city and county. Mrs. Goldenson, the mother of defendant, incorporated in her affidavit clippings from the newspapers describing a meeting which took place at Metropolitan Hall on November 12, 1886. It appears from said articles that said meeting was held for the purpose of raising money for the mother and grandmother of the deceased, and to engage counsel to assist in the prosecution of the defendant, but that many turbulent acts and threats of mob violence were indulged in by members of said meeting. That on the night of said meeting the sheriff and chief of police had the jail, where the defendant was confined, guarded by a large force of men, well armed, and precautions had been taken against any unlawful assault or attack. That about 8:30 o'clock of the night in question several thousand people assembled in front of said jail, and many appeals were made for immediate violence; and that finally the crowd was driven away and dispersed by a determined effort of a large force of police, but not until many blows had been given and interchanged." It further appears, from the affidavit first quoted, "that an attempt to remove their property on November 13th was frustrated by the offer of violence; that on November 16th, under the protection of the police, a removal was effected; that affiant had read highly inflammatory articles in the papers calling for the speedy trial and execution of defendant, and had heard many bitter and hostile expressions of opinion by citizens towards said defendant."

If this condition of affairs existed at the time of the trial, it must be admitted that the city of San Francisco was not a proper community from which to attempt to select a fair and impartial jury for the trial of the defendant. When the public mind is wrought into such frenzy, and the public press sustains enraged citizens, organized for avenging crime, in their unlawful attempts to overcome the duly-constituted officers of the law, and only the superior force of the latter prevents mob execution, no man whose blood is thus demanded can hope to secure the rights guaranteed to him by the constitution. It is impossible, under such conditions, to secure an equal, exact, and impartial interpretation and execution of the laws, which is not only the right of every person, but which is essential to the welfare of all and the conservation of good government. But, while the facts stated in the affidavits on behalf of the defendant are admitted to be true substantially, there are two sufficient reasons why the order of the court below, denying the motion for change of venue, should not be disturbed: First. Because the principal occurrences upon which affiants for defendant based their belief that a fair and impartial trial could not be had, transpired within a few days after the homicide, and the counter-affidavits filed by the prosecution tended to show that the excitement which had been aroused by the homicide had entirely subsided, and had not prevailed for three weeks prior to the time of the application for a change of venue. We cannot say that, under the showings made by the respective parties, the court abused its discretion in denying the motion. Such applications are addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and, where error is assigned, a clear case should be shown by the record, or this court will not interfere. The court below was then in a better position to weigh the statements of the parties and to determine the truth than this court is now. People v. Fisher, 6 Cal. 155; People v. Congleton, 44 Cal. 92. In People v. Yoakum, 53 Cal. 570, upon which appellant relies, there was no counter-showing made by the prosecution, and, as stated by WALLACE, C. J., "so bitter, indeed, was the public feeling against the prisoner, that its manifestation could not be wholly repressed, even in the presence of the court, when the trial was about to commence." Second. The motion was denied temporarily only, and, although permission was given to renew the application, no effort was afterwards made to procure a change of venue. The motion was denied conditionally on December 7, 1886. The impanelment of the jury did not commence until February 21, 1887. At several sessions of the court, including that held on the last-named date, the defendant was represented by counsel of his own selection, and by those appointed by the court, all of whom made various motions, but none of whom renewed the application for change of venue. The order of the court was proper. Between the time of the application for a change of venue and the date of trial, when a jury is to be selected, great changes may occur in the opinions of the public touching the guilt of the defendant; and it was the duty of the defense, if a change of venue was desired, to renew the application at the time suggested by the court. People v. Plummer, 9 Cal. 309.

The motions for a continuance were made on February 14, 16, and 21, and on March 7, 1887. The grounds of the motions in each instance were: First, that certain commissions for the depositions of foreign witnesses had not been returned; second, that the senior counsel for defendant was engaged in the trial of a civil case in another department of the superior court; and, third, that the junior counsel was a member of the state legislature, then in session.

We are unable to see how the defendant could be prejudiced by the absence of the depositions referred to, conceding that the production of them was not waived by the stipulation of defendant's counsel at the time the commissions were issued, and conceding that the great lapse of time between the issuance of the commissions and the date of the trial did not operate as a legal excuse for going on with the trial without them; for it appears from the bill of exceptions that the interrogatories propounded to the witnesses named in the depositions related solely to the insanity of defendant's grandfather, and the fact that the grandfather was insane was not denied or in any way controverted. Witnesses on behalf of the defendant gave evidence of the fact; it was established by uncontroverted evidence; and the court would have been bound, at the defendant's request, to instruct the jury that the fact was so established, and must be taken as true.

The fact that one of defendant's counsel was engaged in a civil case in another department of the superior court was no ground for a continuance. The defendant's plea of not guilty was entered on November 23, 1886. The case was set for trial on December 6th, and by successive continuances it went over until February 21, 1887, when the trial commenced. The case was continued from December 7th to February 14th at the request of defendant's counsel, and to enable him to prepare for trial. On December 17, 1886, the professional services of the senior counsel were engaged for the Tiffany will contest, the trial of which was begun on January 18, 1887, and was in progress on February 14th, the day defendant's case was set for trial. When defendant's case was called for trial his counsel were unable to say when the will contest would be concluded, but it was conceded that it would take several weeks. Was it error to refuse a postponement, under these circumstances, until counsel had concluded his other engagement? It seems to us that the facts stated are a sufficient answer to the proposition. There was no certainty that the will contest referred to would be concluded within months of time after the motion was made. To hold that a defendant charged with crime has an absolute right to counsel of his own selection, with unlimited right to insist upon continuances of his trial, and that the court, jury, and witnesses must await the convenience of his counsel in fulfilling other engagements, would be subversive of the prompt administration and execution of the laws,—upon which depends largely their effectiveness,—and subject the time and service of citizens serving the state gratuitously, as jurors and witnesses, to the wishes and interest of the attorney engaged in the defense. It is too apparent for argument that the court below must, in the nature of things, have some control over such matters; and, if it has any discretion, it is equally apparent that it was not abused in this particular instance. Pen. Code, § 1052, Deering's notes. The attorney for the defendant was bound to know whether the case, in which he became engaged after the defendant's case was set for trial, would be concluded in time to enable him to fill both engagements, and the responsibility for the loss or prejudice to defendant's cause, if any there was, by reason of the inability or refusal of his counsel to proceed with the defense of his client when his case was regularly called, was properly placed by the court below when he stated to the attorney, as he left the court-room, that it rested upon the latter alone.

The junior counsel was a member of the legislature and speaker of the assembly when the case was tried; but it does not appear that he was engaged in the defense herein when the session began, or before February 14, 1887. An inquiry was made by the court as to how long he had been engaged for the defense, but the senior counsel declined to inform the court further than by the affidavits, which did not show the time. The court was justified, therefore, in believing that the employment began not earlier than February 14th, when said counsel's name first appeared in the proceedings. Prior to that time he was not known in the case. Section 595 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "a trial shall be postponed when it appears to the court that the attorney of record, party, or principal witness is actually engaged in attendance upon a session of the legislature of this state as a member thereof." If this section of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to the Penal Code, (which is doubtful, in view of section 1052, Pen. Code,) it refers, we think, only to those who become attorneys of record before the commencement of the session of the legislature. The object of the statute was to protect clients whose attorneys, after employment, had been called to their legislative duties, and to secure lawyers in the legislature from loss to their private business which might be caused by attention to their public duties.

On February 16, 1887, when counsel for defendant withdrew, stating that he could not proceed with the trial, the court informed the defendant that he might name any attorney in the city to defend him, and he would be sent for and appointed, and that he would be given a reasonable time to prepare for trial. The offer was declined, whereupon the court appointed two members of the bar to defend him, and the cause was continued five days, to enable the defendant to prepare for trial. In his affidavit for continuance the senior counsel for defendant set forth "that affiant in particular has prepared the defense of defendant with sedulous care, and has made a very thorough examination of the law governing the facts of said defense, and is thoroughly acquainted with all the facts of the defense." We must assume that said counsel, notwithstanding the fact that the court ruled against him and appointed other counsel to look after the interests of the defendant, gave to counsel actually engaged in the defense of the defendant all the information which he possessed, and which would in his opinion aid them in their unpaid effort to secure an acquittal of his client. No attorney, under the circumstances, would be likely to feel himself so fortified in his contention that the court had committed a fatal error as to risk a conviction upon his opinion rather than give those appointed by the court the information he possessed, when called upon by them to do so. That they made a vigilant, vigorous, and an able defense the record bears ample evidence, and there is nothing to show—except the presumption which may follow the fact of a longer employment—that the defense was less effective than it would have been if conducted by counsel of the defendant's own selection.

It is claimed by appellant that the court had no authority to appoint attorneys to defend the defendant, because he had already employed, and had acting for him, an attorney of his own choice, and because he neither desired nor was he unable to employ another; that it is only when the prisoner desires counsel, and is unable to employ one, that the court is authorized to appoint, and it is error if it does appoint one. But it was not a question whether he desired an attorney and had the means to employ one. The question was, who should represent him? He insisted upon having the case continued to suit the convenience of the attorney he had employed. This could not be done,—at least, that was the ruling, and all were bound to respect it. It was then and still is claimed in his defense, by his relatives and his retained attorneys, that he was insane. Whatever may be the right of a defendant, where there is no question of insanity, the court acted, we think, in accordance with every principle of law, justice, and humanity in this case in selecting attorneys to look after the interests of the prisoner, who at that time, by all the affidavits, was represented as demented and unable to know right from wrong. The spectacle of sending a prisoner charged with murder to trial without counsel, in a case where the defense is insanity,—and especially under our practice, allowing that issue to be tried under the plea of not guilty,—would be a singular one in the enlightened jurisprudence of this age, and in violation of the constitutional guaranty that "in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, * * * and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense." Const. U. S. Amend. 6; Const. Cal. art. 1, § 13.

The defendant moved to set aside the indictment under subdivisions 1 and 2 of section 995, and subdivisions 2 and 6 of section 896, Pen. Code. The defendant moved, also, to strike the said indictment from the files, upon the grounds that previous to its filing the defendant was not examined before any magistrate, and had no opportunity to send for any counsel; that he had no notice of the said investigation by the grand jury, and was not confronted by any witnesses; that the testimony of the witnesses examined against him was not reduced to writing, and he was not committed for trial by any magistrate; that the indictment was invalid and void, because found by a body of men calling themselves a "grand jury," who had not been selected according to the requirements of law; and for that reason the court had no jurisdiction of the alleged crime or of the defendant. We think that the proceedings had by the judges of the superior court for the selection of grand jurors, and the certificates thereof, were substantially in compliance with the provisions of the statute regulating the same; but, whether this be so or not, irregularities in the formation of a grand jury cannot be considered on motion to set aside an indictment. Such motion can be addressed only to irregularities in the proceedings of a grand jury. People v. Southwell, 46 Cal. 142.

The defendant was not entitled to notice that the grand jury was investigating a charge against him, nor was he entitled to be heard or have witnesses sworn and examined by that body, unless it called for the same. State v. Wolcott, 21 Conn. 272; section 920, Pen. Code. The objection that no examination was held before a committing magistrate does not apply in cases of indictment, although good in case of an information. Section 995, Id. As to the other grounds of the motion to set aside and strike out, it is sufficient to say that the evidence introduced at the hearing of the motions was adverse to the defendant.

It was not error to direct the officers of the court to amend the return of service so as to conform to the facts. Gavitt v. Doub, 23 Cal. 81; Hewell v. Lane, 53 Cal. 217; Rousset v. Boyle, 45 Cal. 64; People v. Murback, 64 Cal. 370; 1 Bish. Crim. Proc. §§ 1298, 1341-1345.

The court disallowed a challenge to the first, second, and third panels of jurors specially summoned by the sheriff, under section 1064 of the Penal Code, on the ground of bias against the defendant by the sheriff and his deputies. The examinations of the officers showed that there was no foundation in fact for the charge.

There was no error in the refusal of the court to allow further examination of the jurors who stated that they entertained conscientious scruples against conviction where the penalty is death. When the court became satisfied that such opinions existed, it was its duty to excuse the jurors. Section 1074, Pen. Code. We cannot say that discretion was abused in refusing further examination.

A challenge to the entire panel of trial jurors was made by the attorneys for defendant, but we are unable to find in the transcript any evidence offered in support thereof. If the denial was error, it should be affirmatively shown in the record. People v. Sing Lum, 61 Cal. 539. Unless there were exceptions reserved to the rulings of the court, the judge properly refused to incorporate in the bill of exceptions the evidence given by the jurors when examined upon their voir dire. The decision of the court upon a challenge to a juror for actual bias is final. The bill of exceptions does not contain the rulings of the court on the challenges to the jurors for actual bias. People v. Vasquez, 49 Cal. 560; People v. Cotta, Id. 166.

The court refused to allow the defendant to exercise peremptory challenges after he had exhausted the 20 challenges allowed by statute. It is claimed that this was error, because of the failure of the court to comply with section 1066 of the Penal Code, which provides that "before a juror is called the defendant must be informed by the court or under its direction that, if he intends to challenge an individual juror, he must do so when the juror appears, and before he is sworn." It does not appear affirmatively whether the defendant was informed of his rights in this regard or not; but the defendant certainly had the full benefit of all the peremptory challenges to which he was entitled, and was not in any manner prejudiced by the error complained of. People v. Mortier, 58 Cal. 262.

It was not error for the court to deny defendant's motion for a retrial of certain challenges after the jury had been completed and sworn to try the case. Section 1068, Pen. Code.

The defendant on the arraignment was given a copy of the indictment. When the court appointed counsel to defend him, said counsel requested a copy of the indictment, which request was refused. The court was not bound to supply the defendant with a second copy of the indictment. It is the defendant who is entitled to a copy, and not all who are his counsel. Section 988, Id.

The contention is urged with much force that the court erred in ordering the defendant to stand up during the trial for identification by one of the witnesses. The witness had stated that he went into the station-house, and there found this young man, (meaning the defendant.) It is claimed that this act was violative of the constitutional provision that "no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself." The defendant was in court, and it was proper for the jury, in identifying the person whom the witness had seen, to know whom the witness meant by the expression "this young man." He was not compelled to exhibit any part of his person, which the jurors could not see as he walked in and out every day. It was not compelling the defendant to become a witness against himself in any respect, within the meaning of the constitutional provision above quoted. State v. Ah Chuey, 14 Nev. 79.

In his opening statement to the jury one of the counsel in effect accused the presiding judge of having crowded the case on to trial when the defendant was not ready. The court promptly and properly directed him to cease commenting or reflecting on the action of the court in that regard; saying that, if any error had been committed, the prisoner had the benefit of an exception. The court, furthermore, did not err in refusing to allow counsel in his opening statement to refer to other cases, or read law in illustration of his argument. People v. Williams, 43 Cal. 344.

It was insisted at the trial that both of the attorneys for the defendant were entitled to make opening statements to the jury. The court refused to allow more than one statement. In this there was no error. "Where the offense charged is punishable with death, two counsel on each side may argue the case to the jury," (section 1095, Pen. Code;) but section 1093 of the Penal Code provides simply that "counsel may open the defense." It was within the discretion of the court to limit the statement to one counsel.

Several assignments of error are made respecting the rulings of the court upon expert testimony offered, and the right to introduce medical works in rebuttal of the testimony of witnesses called on behalf of the people. It has been held here that medical treatises are not admissible in evidence, whether proved to be standard works or not, except to discredit a witness who based his testimony upon them. Gallagher v. Railway Co., 67 Cal. 13, 6 Pac. Rep. 869. Dr. Woolsey, one of the experts called by the defense, was asked to name the circumstances of the cases he had read where violence accompanied hysterical mania, and the court sustained an objection to the question. If allowed, the examination would have been in effect the introduction of medical works in evidence, and therefore it was properly rejected. People v. Wheeler, 60 Cal. 581.

The court refused to allow counsel for defense to read in surrebuttal certain portions of a medical treatise by Dr. Maudsley, which were offered to discredit and contradict Dr. Clark, a witness for the people; but offered to allow any portion relevant to the testimony given by Dr. Clark, and which tended to contradict him, to be read in evidence. If the portions which were excluded had any tendency to discredit or contradict the witness upon any matter about which he had testified, they ought to have been incorporated into the bill of exceptions, so that we might determine whether they were pertinent. They are not in the bill. Furthermore, it does not appear that the witness predicated his opinion upon the authority of Dr. Maudsley's works. There was, therefor, no error in the ruling of the court in that matter.

The court did not err in requiring the counsel for the defendant in his opening statement to confine himself to a statement of the facts, the effect thereof, and his conclusions therefrom, without any argument upon the evidence introduced by the prosecution. People v. Bezy, 67 Cal. 223, 7 Pac. Rep. 643; People v. Williams, 43 Cal. 349; Pen. Code, § 1093, subds. 3, 5.

Mrs. Kelly, mother of the deceased, testified in her cross-examination: "I heard the Goldensons were of such a character that I did not wish my daughter to go to their house." Defendant's counsel then inquired: "What was the character that you speak about?" An objection thereto was sustained on the ground that it was immaterial and irrelevant. We see no prejudicial error in this ruling. The testimony of the witness showed that she was prejudiced against the Goldenson's; the particular reason therefor is immaterial.

Several errors are assigned, based upon the rulings of the court in permitting the district attorney to put leading questions to his own witness. This is a matter within the discretion of the court. Section 2046, Code Civil Proc.; People v. Ah Fook, 64 Cal. 381, 1 Pac. Rep. 347.

There was no error in the admission of the declaration or confession of the defendant. The evidence in the transcript shows clearly that the statement was freely and voluntarily given, no inducements having been offered him or threats made. People v. Rodundo, 44 Cal. 538.

One of the detectives examined as a witness, referring to the statement made by the defendant, said: "He made it freely; no inducements held out to him, or promise, or expectation; no threats made." Counsel for defendant moved to strike out this testimony on the ground that it was a conclusion of law. The motion was denied, the court saying: "You have the privilege now of examining the witness upon the question whether or not it was a free and voluntary statement." There was no error here. People v. Rodundo, supra.

Portions of the deposition of one Louis Rosenthal, on behalf of the defendant, were excluded by the court of its own motion. The portions thus excluded appear to be clearly hearsay,—the relation of matters which occurred between third persons,—and it was not error, with or without an objection from the prosecution, to exclude the same.

The court did not err in refusing to permit all the testimony given in the case to be read as a hypothetical question to Dr. Simon. Reg. v. Frances, 4 Cox, Crim. Cas. 57. Counsel were told that they might assume certain facts, and put the usual hypothetical question, and this was finally done, and was proper. 2 Bish. Crim. Proc. § 685.

It was not error for the court to prevent counsel for the defendant from commenting upon the actions of the juries in the Gunn, Gardiner, and other homicide cases which had been tried in San Francisco, and in stating that the case before the court should be tried upon the evidence given in the court, and the law applicable thereto. People v. Anderson, 44 Cal. 70.

Many other errors are assigned which we do not deem it necessary to consider. Some of them are already covered by the propositions which we have discussed herein; others are too frivolous to be worthy of consideration, such as the following: That it was error to permit counsel for the defense to ask Dr. Hayne, "What is the first question that a doctor puts to his patient?" and that the court erred in refusing to hear one of the counsel for the defendant, immediately upon the conclusion of the statement to the jury, discuss before the court and the jury certain questions of law which he anticipated would arise during the trial.

No attempt has been made to point out any errors in the instructions. They seem to be fair and correct.

It was not error in the court to refuse to settle bills of exceptions during the trial. They are all included in the bill of exceptions before us, and the errors claimed have been reviewed. It was within the discretion of the court to delay the settlement of the bill of exceptions beyond the statutory time, and it was its duty to see that the record was correct, whether any objections were made by the district attorney to the proposed bill of exceptions or not. People v. Sprague, 53 Cal. 424; People v. Lee, 14 Cal. 510; Pen. Code, § 1175.

An intimation is made that the court, in settling the bill, eliminated certain material matters, to prevent the defendant from having the benefit of a full defense herein. But we must take the statement in the bill as one of absolute verity. The judge certifies that, "in the examination of proposed jurors, no question as to their competency was disallowed, no evidence was rejected, no objection to the admission or rejection of any testimony sustained, and no objection or exception to the allowing or disallowing of any question, evidence, or testimony on said examination was made or saved, except as herein and now particularly set forth." Then follow three exceptions: Counsel for the people were permitted to put this question to a proposed juror: "I suppose what you mean to say is this, that you object to the abuse of the plea of insanity, and not to the plea of insanity itself." No objection was made to this question, except as to the form thereof. The second exception was taken to the refusal of the court to hear an argument from one of the counsel for the defense upon a challenge for actual bias after the trial thereof had been concluded. The third objection is that the court erred in allowing the district attorney to propound a certain question to a juror after he had been examined and passed by counsel for the defendant and for the people. It is clear that there was no error in any of these three rulings, and we think that the court properly declined to incorporate into the bill of exceptions the testimony of the jurors given in their examination on their voir dire.

One of the grounds upon which defendant asked for a new trial was that the jury had been guilty of misconduct, by which a fair consideration of the case had been prevented. The substance of the misconduct charged consisted in the jurors having disobeyed the admonition of the court about reading newspaper articles during the trial which reflected on the defendant. All of the jurors filed affidavits denying fully the charges of misconduct preferred, and insisting that no admonition of the court had been disobeyed, and that no newspaper articles or anything else, save the evidence and the charge, influenced them in finding their verdict. These affidavits were allowable, and are conclusive upon the point made. People v. Hunt, 59 Cal. 430; People v. Dye, 62 Cal. 523. Another ground of the motion for a new trial was that new evidence had been discovered material to the defendant; but it appears from the affidavits filed in respect thereto that the newly-discovered evidence was simply impeaching or cumulative in character. It was therefore insufficient to support the ground for a new trial. Stoakes v. Monroe, 36 Cal. 585; People v. Anthony, 56 Cal. 397.

Counsel for defendant in their briefs complain bitterly of the manner and conduct of the presiding judge during the trial, claiming that they were clearly indicative of a strong feeling of hostility against the defendant, and prejudice against his defense; that this feeling was repeatedly manifested in the many severe interruptions of counsel's arguments, and the interjection of questions and objections without any motion or desire therefor on the part of the prosecuting officers; and that such conduct of the judge must necessarily have prejudiced the minds of the jurors against the defendant and his cause, and contributed to his conviction. But, as we have intimated in other cases, these are matters which cannot be shown by the record, unless there is in the language used by the judge in his rulings, and questions and remarks, something from which this court can say the jurors were prejudiced. The trial judge holds a great trust and responsibility in this regard, which can be controlled only, except in cases of palpable abuse of the power, by his own conscience, and a desire to see equal and exact justice done between the people and the defendant. People v. Lee Sare Bo, 14 Pac. Rep. 310.

During the trial it appears that several inflammatory articles were published in some of the newspapers tending to prejudice the defendant's cause, and which may have been read by the jurors. While the affidavits of the jurors are, of course, taken as true, and it appears therefrom that no prejudice was created in any way in this case, yet the court below cannot be too careful in guarding itself and the jury from all suspicion of prejudice by refraining from making remarks which may appear adverse to either party; and should see to it, by proceedings in contempt, if necessary, that no such newspaper articles reach the jury. Judgment and order affirmed.

WEIDEKIND v. TUOLUMNE COUNTY WATER CO. (No. 12,149.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 23, 1887.)

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—ATTORNEY FOR PLAINTIFF IN FORMER TRIAL ACTING FOR DEFENDANT—NEW TRIAL.

It is error to allow an attorney and counselor at law, who had formerly acted for the plaintiff in the trial of a cause, to appear and act on behalf of the defendant at a subsequent trial of the same cause; his avowed intention being to assist the defendant with all the knowledge and secrets he had gained from plaintiff.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; J. F. ROONEY, Judge.

Frank W. Street, for appellant. Edwin A. Rodgers, for appellee.

FOOTE, C. This is an action to recover damages alleged to have been done to the plaintiff's mining claim, as is asserted, by the negligence of the defendant, which eventuated in the breaking of a dam, and the overflow of the water which it had confined. The jury trying the cause returned a verdict for the defendant, upon which the court rendered judgment, from which and an order overruling a motion for a new trial the plaintiff has appealed.

The plaintiff assigns for error that the court, against his objection, allowed an attorney and counselor at law, who had formerly acted for the plaintiff in this very case, when it was previously tried, to appear and act on behalf of the defendant on the trial of the cause last had. That attorney made this statement regarding the matter in the presence of the court, while the trial was progressing: "As the court well knows, Mr. Weidekind, [the plaintiff] in the first trial of this case, did retain Mr. Dorsey and myself. I drew the complaint, and participated in the first trial of this case, in this court. My compensation was to depend upon my success. As soon as I had earned that by our success, this plaintiff saw fit to discharge me and retain other counsel. With that act of his I have never found fault. I have never been paid a cent by him for my services. An appeal was taken from the judgment in that trial entered. A new trial was granted by our supreme court. A new trial was had. Judgment was entered against plaintiff. An appeal was again taken, and another reversal followed. In each of these trials plaintiff has had other counsel than myself. I am here to assist Mr. Rodgers in the trial of this case, with all the knowledge I have gained in the three trials." Thereupon he did act as an attorney and counselor on the trial, sitting by and assisting the attorney of record, arguing disputed points before the court, and examining witnesses; the court having overruled the repeated objection of plaintiff's counsel. This action of the court is contended to be such an irregularity on its part as prevented the plaintiff from having a fair trial. It was within the power of the court, if satisfied that the attorney in question had acted on the plaintiff's side of the case on the former trial, to prohibit his acting on the other side in another trial. Weeks, Attys. § 120. There can be no doubt, from the statement of the attorney to the court, that he proposed to act, and it is also certain that he did act, as an attorney and counselor for the defendant in the trial of a cause where he had formerly acted for the plaintiff. The trial court had a right, and it was its duty, to have forbidden the attorney from changing sides in the same suit, though at different trials; for to do otherwise was "to defeat the very purpose for which courts were organized, viz., the administration of justice." Wilson v. State, 16 Ind. 392. The evidence in this case and the statement of the attorney himself was sufficient to show the court that his intention was, for the benefit of the defendant, to use at that time all the knowledge and secrets he had gained from his former client in preparing for and conducting one trial, and observing and watching the developments of two others. This court, speaking to such a question, says: "We are of opinion that the court in that case would have restrained him, even had he been unjustly discharged, and he was allowed, as contended, to be employed by the adverse party. The law secures the client the privilege of objecting at all times and forever to an attorney, solicitor, or counselor from disclosing information in a cause confidentially given while the relation exists. The client alone can release the attorney, solicitor, or counsel from this obligation. The latter cannot discharge himself from the duty imposed on him by law." In re Cowdery, 69 Cal. 50, 10 Pac. Rep. 47. The attorney himself boldly avowed his intention so to act. The court permitted him to do it, notwithstanding the plaintiff's objection. This we think was an error, and, in the absence of any proof to the contrary, injury must be presumed to have resulted to the plaintiff, whereby he was prevented from having a fair trial of his case. We perceive no further prejudicial error, but for the reasons indicated the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

CARPENTER et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY.
(No. 12,395.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 21, 1888.)

1. INFANCY—GUARDIAN AD LITEM—PROBATE PROCEEDINGS.

Code Civil Proc. Cal., in the chapter on "Parties to Civil Actions," section 372, provides that a guardian ad litem shall be appointed to represent infants; section 1718 provides for the appointment of an attorney to represent infants in probate proceedings. Held, that such provisions being for two representatives, neither of whom is subordinate to the other, the former section does not apply to probate proceedings.

2. SAME—WILLS—CONTEST—APPOINTMENT OF ATTORNEY—JUDGMENT—VALIDITY.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 372, requiring a guardian ad litem to be appointed to represent infant defendants, and section 373, allowing the infant, if 14 years old, 10 days after service of summons to appear and make choice, the appointment of an attorney to represent the infant in a proceeding to contest a will is sufficient, though he is not designated as guardian ad litem; and though it does not appear at whose instance the appointment was made, or that 10 days elapsed prior thereto, it appearing to have been made after service, judgment is not so invalid as to authorize the court to set it aside after motion for new trial had been made and denied.

3. SAME—AMENDMENT OF PETITION—REAPPOINTMENT OF ATTORNEY.

Reappointment of an attorney for a minor, or of a guardian ad litem, after demurrer to petition and amendment thereof, is not necessary.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Petition by Carpenter and others for writ of certiorari to the superior court of San Joaquin county. Demurrer to petition. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 373, allows infants for whom guardians ad litem are appointed, if 14 years old, 10 days after service of summons to appear and make choice.

Sawyer & Burnett, for petitioners. Carter & Smith and S. D. Woods, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. Demurrer to a petition for a writ of certiorari. The facts shown by the petition are substantially as follows: A document purporting to be the will of Charles W. Carpenter, deceased, was admitted to probate, and letters testamentary were issued to the executor named therein. Subsequently, and within the year, the petitioners commenced proceedings to contest the validity of the will. A trial was had. The jury found against the validity of the will, and the court entered judgment accordingly. A motion for a new trial was made and denied. After all this had occurred, certain minors, for whom an attorney had been appointed by the court, through which attorney they had appeared and taken part in the proceedings, made a motion to have all the proceedings set aside, mainly on the ground that they had not been represented by a guardian ad litem. The court granted this motion, and set aside the verdict and judgment, and the application is for a writ to annul such action. The demurrer is on the ground that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

After judgment upon the verdict had been entered, and a motion for a new trial had been regularly made and denied, the court below was not authorized to set aside its action for mere error. Coombs v. Hibberd, 43 Cal. 452; People v. Center, 61 Cal. 194; Bank v. Deuprey, 66 Cal. 169, 4 Pac. Rep. 1173; Dorland v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 484, 6 Pac. Rep. 135; Lang v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 491, 12 Pac. Rep. 306. The foundation of this rule is that the modes in which a decision may be reviewed are prescribed by statute, and the courts are not at liberty to substitute other modes in their place. Such being the foundation of the rule, it is not affected by the fact that terms of court are abolished, and the decision in Estate of Langan, 16 Pac. Rep. 188, has no application. That case has reference to proceedings taken and orders made irregularly and through inadvertence. To such misprisions and inadvertencies the rule in question has no application. Thus, where a motion for new trial was granted without any submission of the motion, and before the record upon the motion was completed, it was held to be proper for the aggrieved party to move to have the order granting the new trial set aside. Morris v. De Celis, 41 Cal. 331; and see, also, De Gaze v. Lynch, 42 Cal. 363, and Hall v. Polack, 42 Cal. 218. In such cases the fact that the order was irregularly and improvidently made takes it out of the general rule. Compare Rousset v. Boyle, 45 Cal. 69. Such a state of things being of rare occurrence, is not presumed, but must be affirmatively shown. The objection that the court has acted in an unauthorized mode goes to the power of the court, and hence its action may be reviewed on certiorari; for which the case of Lang v. Superior Court, above cited, is a precedent. It is true that a decision which is absolutely void may be brushed aside at any time and in any mode. People v. Greene, 16 Pac. Rep. 197. But nothing short of such invalidity would justify such action. The question, therefore, is whether the verdict and judgment against the will were absolutely void.

The notice of motion to set them aside states several grounds upon which the motion was to be made, viz.: (1) That they were "against law." This is too vague to mean anything more than that they were erroneous, which, as we have seen, is not a question which the court was authorized to consider on such an application. (2) That "there never was any service of citation in said matter, contest, and cause had or made upon said proponent." This is expressly negated by the allegations of the petition for the writ, which must be assumed to be true. And (3) that no guardian ad litem was appointed for the minors, and that, therefore, the appearance for them was unauthorized.

The last ground is the one upon which the counsel for respondents rely. The position is based upon the proposition that the provisions in relation to guardians ad litem in the chapter on "Parties to Civil Actions" apply to probate proceedings. But, in the first place, we do not think that the provisions referred to apply to probate proceedings. It has been held that for some purposes probate proceedings are not "civil actions." Estate of Scott, 15 Cal. 220; Ex parte Smith, 53 Cal. 204. And we do not think they are to be considered civil actions or proceedings within the meaning of the said provisions. If these general provisions were intended to apply to probate proceedings, what was the use of making special provisions in reference to the appointment of attorneys for minors in such proceedings? Is it not to be inferred that the special provisions were put in because the general ones were not intended to apply? This inference is strengthened when the provisions are considered together. The thing which a guardian ad litem is appointed to do is to "represent" the infant in the action or proceeding, (Code Civil Proc. § 372,) by which we understand that he is to conduct and control the proceedings on behalf of the infant. Now, the attorney for minors in probate proceedings is to "represent" the minor, (Id. § 1718,) and, so far as he is concerned, to conduct and control the proceedings; so that, if the general provisions apply, it would be possible to have two representatives of the minor in the same contest, neither of whom would be subordinate to the other. We do not think such a result could have been intended.

But if the provisions in the chapter on parties to civil actions are assumed to have been intended to apply to probate proceedings, we think they were substantially complied with. The petition shows that on the filing of the papers for contestant "a citation was issued to the said executor and all the said legatees and devisees; * * * that said citation was immediately served by the sheriff upon each of said legatees and devisees and said executor, by delivering, etc.; * * * that thereafter, on the 31st day of January, the said superior court duly made an order, etc." The order referred to appointed an attorney "to represent in all the proceedings in this court" the said minors, (naming them.) The term "guardian ad litem" is not used; but the attorney was appointed to perform the functions of a guardian ad litem, and the neglect to call him by a certain name is unimportant. It is true that it does not appear at whose instance the appointment was made, nor whether there was an interval of 10 days between the service and the appointment. But it appears that the appointment was after the service. And that is sufficient to prevent the proceedings from being absolutely void; for, as observed by the learned counsel for the respondents, "there is a vast difference between an erroneous appointment of a guardian and no appointment at all."

Nor is it material that there was no reappointment of the attorney after the sustaining of his demurrer and the amendment of the petition. It is not necessary that there should be a new guardian ad litem every time a pleading is amended. We think, therefore, that the verdict and judgment against the validity of the will were not void. It results that the court had no power to set them aside, and, there being no appeal, (Estate of Calahan, 60 Cal. 233; Estate of Sbarboro, 70 Cal. 147, 11 Pac. Rep. 563,) the party is entitled to the writ. We therefore advise that the demurrer to the petition be overruled, with leave to answer within 20 days.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the demurrer to the petition is overruled, with leave to answer within 20 days.

THOMAS v. JAMESON. (No. 12,410.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 22, 1888.)

1. TRUSTS—RESULTING TRUSTS—LOAN OF PURCHASE MONEY—EXTENT OF TRUST.

Plaintiff purchased real estate for which he was to pay $950, $200 in cash, and the balance to be secured by mortgage on the property; and, to enable him to make the cash payment, procured a loan of $200 from defendant. As security for its payment, title to the property was taken in defendant, he executing the mortgage back, and verbally agreeing to convey to plaintiff on payment of the $200, and being secured on account of his liability on the mortgage. Held, that defendant held the entire property in trust for plaintiff.¹

2. SAME—PLEADING—VARIANCE.

Plaintiff alleged, and the court found, that the contract for the purchase of the property was made on June 11th. The deed to defendant bore date June 9th, and was acknowledged the next day, but the testimony showed that the contract was made before the deed was executed. Held, that the discrepancy in dates should have been corrected, but did not show error requiring reversal.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; WILLIAM A. CHENEY, Judge.

Will D. Gould, for appellant. H. M. Smith and W. H. Clark, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The plaintiff claimed that the defendant held the title to certain real property in trust for him, and he brought this action to have the trust declared, and a conveyance enforced. The material facts of the case, as shown by the evidence and found by the court, are substantially as follows: Mrs. Thompson owned two lots in East Los Angeles, and agreed to sell them to the plaintiff for $950, $200 of the money to be paid on the execution of the deed, and the balance in one year thereafter, with interest thereon at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. The plaintiff agreed to purchase the lots on the terms named, but, not having the $200 at hand, applied to the defendant for a loan of that amount. The defendant agreed to loan him the money, to be repaid in a year, with 10 per cent. interest, and to give his note for the $750, and a mortgage on the lots, to secure the same, provided the title should be taken in his name to secure him. The plaintiff agreed to this, and thereupon received the $200 from defendant, and paid it to Mrs. Thompson; telling her at the same time, in the defendant's presence, that he had borrowed the money of defendant, and that she was to make the deed to him. She accordingly made a deed of the lots to defendant, and he executed and delivered to her his note and mortgage for the $750. It was further understood and agreed between the parties that, on the plaintiff's paying the $200 and the interest thereon, and securing the defendant from all liability on his note and mortgage to Mrs. Thompson, defendant would convey the lots to plaintiff. The plaintiff complied with all his agreements, and, when the $200 became due, tendered that amount, with the interest which had accrued thereon, to defendant, and also tendered to him the said note and mortgage, with a full written satisfaction and discharge thereof. The transactions were all verbal ones, and the proof of them was objected to on that ground, but the objections were overruled and exceptions reserved. Upon the findings the court gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff, from which and from an order denying a new trial the defendant appealed.

1. The complaint stated a cause of action, and the evidence, if admissible, was sufficient to justify the findings and judgment.

2. A resulting trust arises by operation of law, and the facts creating it may be shown by parol. The court did not err, therefore, in admitting the plaintiff's evidence, and in refusing afterwards to strike it out.

3. The rule is well settled that when real property is purchased, and one party pays the purchase money and another party takes the title, a resulting trust immediately arises in favor of the party paying the money, and the other party becomes his trustee; and, also, that if the one party pays only a part of the purchase money, the party taking the title becomes the trustee for the other party pro tanto. And the same rule applies if the money is paid by the party taking the title, provided it is advanced by him as a loan to the other party, and the title is taken to secure its repayment. Millard v. Hathaway, 27 Cal. 140, 142; Sandfoss v. Jones, 35 Cal. 481; Somers v. Overhulser, 67 Cal. 237, 7 Pac. Rep. 645; Hellman v. Messmer, 16 Pac. Rep. 766.

4. It is claimed for the appellant that the court erred in deciding that defendant held the title to the whole property in trust for the plaintiff; that at most a trust arose, and could be enforced as to such proportion of the property only as was paid for by the $200 loaned by defendant to plaintiff; and that there was no trust as to that part of the property which was paid for by the note and mortgage of defendant. A similar question arose in Hidden v. Jordan, 21 Cal. 92, and it was there held that a trust arose as to the whole property. We think that case correctly decided, and, upon the point in hand, decisive of this.

5. It is alleged in the complaint, and found by the court, that the plaintiff contracted with Mrs. Thompson for the purchase of the lots on the 11th day of June, 1885. The deed for the lots from Mrs. Thompson to defendant, which was introduced in evidence, was dated June 9, 1885, and acknowledged on the next day. It is urged for appellant that this discrepancy in dates conclusively shows error, and necessitates a reversal of the judgment. But it clearly appears from the testimony that the contract was made early in June, and before the execution of the deed. The dates referred to in the complaint and finding were evidently erroneous, and might and should have been corrected. The error was, however, harmless, and for such errors judgments are never reversed. Code Civil Proc. § 475. We find no material error in the record, and therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

MONTGOMERY v. KEPPEL et al. (No. 12,266.)

(Supreme Court of California. February 16, 1888.)

1. MORTGAGES—PRIORITY—NOTICE.

During the negotiations for a loan, to secure which a mortgage was given by the mortgagor to the plaintiff, it became known to plaintiff that the title to the land which was offered for security was in the defendant, and that the mortgagor was then negotiating for its purchase. This purchase was consummated, a deed delivered to the mortgagor by defendant, and a purchase-money mortgage executed by the mortgagor to defendant. Plaintiff's mortgage was recorded a few days before the execution and record of the deed by the defendant to the mortgagor, and before the execution and record of the purchase-money mortgage. Held, that plaintiff must be charged with knowledge that part of the purchase money had not been paid when the deed was executed to the mortgagor, and that he had notice of defendant's mortgage, and his mortgage must be postponed to that of defendant.

2. SAME—ESTOPPEL—IN PAIS—CORPORATIONS—OFFICERS.

During said negotiations, plaintiff's attorney informed the secretary of the defendant corporation that he was examining the title to the land, and inquired on behalf of plaintiff how much money plaintiff would have to pay defendant for the land in order to get a perfect title, as he was taking a mortgage,—to which said officer replied, "$12,978;" and the attorney informed said secretary that, if he found the title all right in other respects, he would put plaintiff's mortgage on record, and pay said sum to defendant, and take the deed of defendant to the mortgagor. Subsequently, said sum was paid by the attorney to the defendant. Held, that the defendant was not estopped from setting up the priority of its mortgage by the conduct of the secretary; there being no intention on the secretary's part to deceive, and plaintiff could not have been misled by the secretary's statement.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Butte county; LEON FREER, Judge.

Hundley & Gale, for appellant. W. F. Goad and Arthur Rodgers, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. The plaintiff brought this action to foreclose a mortgage against the mortgagor, Garret Keppel, and the Spring Valley Mining & Irrigating Company. Other persons were made parties, which need not be here especially mentioned. As to all these defendants, except Keppel, the general allegation is made that they have, or claim to have, some interest in or claim upon said lands, or some part thereof, as purchasers, mortgagees, judgment creditors, or otherwise, which interests or claims are subsequent to and subject to the lien of plaintiff's mortgage. The defendant corporation above named set up a mortgage upon a portion of the land covered by the plaintiff's mortgage executed by Keppel to it; and which of these mortgages was prior in right, as appears from the transcript, was the principal question tried and determined by the court. It appears from the findings of fact that the mortgage to the corporation defendant was executed on the 22d day of November, 1883, acknowledged by the mortgagor on the same day, and filed for record in the office of the county recorder of Butte county (where the mortgaged property was situate) at 10:25 o'clock on the 26th day of November, 1883. It further appears that the land mortgaged to the corporation was conveyed by it to the common mortgagor on the same day on which the mortgagor executed to the defendant above named, the mortgage just mentioned; that the mortgage was executed to secure to the defendant a part of the purchase money of the said land, the other portion having been paid by Keppel, the purchaser, in cash prior to the delivery of the conveyance to him by the defendant; that on the 24th of November, 1883, the deed of conveyance of the land sold to Keppel was delivered to him by defendant, and was recorded in the proper office in Butte county, on the 26th day of November, 1883. The mortgage to plaintiff was executed on the 22d of November, 1883, and was recorded in the proper office in Butte county on the 22d day of November, 1883. This last mortgage was executed to secure a loan of a large sum of money made by plaintiff to Keppel. While Keppel was negotiating with plaintiff for this loan, it became known to plaintiff that the title of a portion of the land which he (Keppel) offered as security was in the corporation defendant, for the purchase of which Keppel was then negotiating with the corporation. This purchase was consummated by the delivery of the deed above mentioned, executed to Keppel by the corporation, a payment of a portion of the purchase money by Keppel, and, concurrently with the execution of the deed, the execution to the corporation by Keppel of the mortgage above mentioned to secure the payment of the remainder of the purchase money. All the above constituted parts of the transaction of purchase by Keppel of the corporation of the land above referred to. Of this negotiation of Keppel to purchase, the plaintiff at the time of making the loan to him, was aware; and he must be held to have known that the mortgage conveyed to him no interest in this land until the delivering of the deed by the corporation to Keppel. Being aware of the purchase by Keppel of this land of the defendant, plaintiff must be held to have known of the terms of the purchase, and all of them; and, if he did not know them, he must have deliberately abstained from knowing. The evidence shows that the plaintiff was in communication with Keppel all the time that the purchase was pending, knew all the terms of it, and it would be most strange if they were not communicated to plaintiff by Keppel. Having readily accessible means of acquiring knowledge of a fact, which he might have ascertained by inquiry, is equivalent to notice and knowledge of it. This is well settled by repeated decisions of this court. Fair v. Stevenot, 29 Cal. 486; Smith v. Yule, 31 Cal. 184; Pell v. McElroy, 36 Cal. 272; Thompson v. Pioche, 44 Cal. 516. Under these circumstances we must hold that plaintiff knew that a part of the purchase money was not paid when the deed was executed to Keppel by the corporation, and that a mortgage was executed by Keppel to the corporation to secure this unpaid portion of the purchase money at the same time that the deed was executed. This being the state of the case, we must hold that the plaintiff had notice of defendant's mortgage when the mortgage to him on the land mentioned became operative, and that, therefore, his mortgage as to this land must be postponed to that of the corporation defendant. The finding to the contrary of the above is not sustained by the evidence.

But it is urged that the corporation is by the conduct of one of its officers estopped from setting up the priority of its mortgage to that of plaintiff. This contention is based on the following facts found by the court below: "That in making said loan of $80,000 to defendant Garret Keppel, and during the time negotiations and granting of said loan, W. F. Goad, Esq., was the agent and attorney for plaintiff, and was authorized to examine into the title of the land described in plaintiff's mortgage; that said Goad was informed that the legal title to the land described in said deed, dated October 23, 1883, from defendant Spring Valley Mining & Irrigating Company to defendant Garret Keppel, was in said defendant corporation grantor; that said Goad, as such agent and attorney, after obtaining said information, and on or about the 10th day of November, 1883, with defendant Garret Keppel, called at the principal office of said corporation defendant, which was in San Francisco; that said Goad there met Willis E. Davis, the secretary of the Spring Valley Mining & Irrigating Company, and told said secretary that plaintiff, A. Montgomery, had employed him to examine the title to said land to see whether it was satisfactory; that he (said Goad) was employed to do so by said plaintiff, and was plaintiff's agent in such matters; that he wanted to see that the title was perfect; that plaintiff, A. Montgomery, wanted to know how much money he would have to pay the defendant Spring Valley Mining & Irrigating Company in order to get a perfect title, as plaintiff was taking a mortgage; that said secretary then gave as such sum $12,978; that said Goad then informed said secretary that if he found the title perfect in other respects at Oroville, where he was going, he should put plaintiff's mortgage on record, and, upon his return to San Francisco, would pay the $12,978,—give a check for it,—and take the deed of the Spring Valley Mining & Irrigating Company, which deed, being that hereinbefore referred to, had been prepared in form, and was shown to said Goad by said secretary; that said Goad went to Oroville on or about the 19th day of November, 1883, and stayed until the 22d, when plaintiff's mortgage was acknowledged and recorded; that said Goad returned to San Francisco, and on his way back, on the 23d, paid, at the request of defendant Garret Keppel, to the Marysville Savings Bank, $61,-138.70; that upon his return to San Francisco, and upon the 24th day of November, 1883, said Goad, at his office, delivered a check in payment of said sum, $12,978, in the presence of defendant Garret Keppel to said Davis, the secretary of the corporation defendant, of which check the following is a copy: 'No. ——. SAN FRANCISCO, November 24, 1883. The Bank of California pay to Spring Valley Mining & Irrigating Company, or order, twelve thousand nine hundred and seventy-eight ($12,978) dollars. A. MONTGOMERY. Per W. F. GOAD. Indorsed: SPRING VALLEY MINING & IRRIGATING COMPANY, By WILLIS E. DAVIS, Secretary.' That said check was paid; that, upon the delivery of said check, said secretary, Davis, delivered said deed of said corporation, executed and acknowledged by the president and secretary, to defendant Garret Keppel, and said Goad; that said Goad thereupon sent said deed to the office of the county recorder of Butte county, where the same was filed for record on the 26th day of November, 1888, as aforesaid."

We cannot see how an estoppel can grow out of these facts. In the first place, admitting that Davis was the secretary of the corporation, it does not appear that he had authority to bind or affect the corporation by any statement he might make in regard to Keppel's purchase. Conceding that he had authority to affect the corporation by the statement of a fact, the question put to him was not as to a fact, but as to a question of law. Further, that a statement shall operate as an estoppel, it must be made with the express intention to deceive, or with such carelessness, or culpable negligence as to amount to constructive fraud. Boggs v. Mining Co., 14 Cal. 367, 368; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 40, 41. We see here no intention of Davis to deceive, nor can we perceive that plaintiff was or could be misled by anything which Davis stated to his attorney. That the plaintiff was not without the means of acquiring the knowledge which he sought is too plain for argument. He might have ascertained it from the mortgagor, with whom he was communicating all the time, that the negotiation for the loan was going on; or, if he had inquired of the company as to the terms of its transactions with Keppel, he would, no doubt, have ascertained what they were. There is no estoppel shown by the evidence or the finding. Davis v. Davis, supra. The mortgage of the corporation must be held prior and superior to that of plaintiff on the land above mentioned, and therefore the judgment and order denying a new trial must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. Ordered accordingly.

EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF—PETITION TO SETTLE.

A petition to settle a bill of exceptions, which avers that the bill does not state sufficient of the testimony of witnesses to explain the questions to which objections are taken, but which does not set forth the statements of the bill which are alleged to be contrary to the facts, together with the facts and the point of exception, is insufficient.

Jas. L. Crittenden, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. This is an application to settle a bill of exceptions. The petition is insufficient. Its averments should show the mode in which the bill of exceptions is settled by the judge of the superior court, so that this court can see whether the statements of the bill are contrary to the facts. To illustrate: The petition should set forth the statements of the bill which are alleged to be contrary to the facts, together with a statement of the facts. The point of the exception should also be stated. The court can then, by comparing the bill of exceptions as settled or proposed to be settled by the judge with the facts as stated, determine whether or not its statements are contrary to the facts. The averments in relation to the bill of exceptions do not conform to the above, which we understand to be the rule. Averments that the bill of exceptions does not state sufficient of the testimony of witnesses to explain the questions to which objections or exceptions are taken, will not do. The petition must contain allegations, the terms of which show this to be the case. The application is therefore denied, and the petition dismissed without prejudice.

SCHULTZ v. NOBLE. (No. 11,039.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 13, 1888.)

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF—PROMISE TO PAY DEBT OF ANOTHER—EXECUTED PROMISE.

In an action based on a note signed by defendant and indorsed by plaintiff, evidence that the note was made and sold to raise money to reimburse defendant for losses incurred by him for plaintiff; that defendant signed as principal at plaintiff's request, the latter not wishing to injure his own credit; and that plaintiff promised to pay the note when due,—is not incompetent on the ground that under the statute of frauds an oral promise to pay the debt of another cannot be enforced, as, such promise being executed by the promisor, he cannot afterwards dispute its validity.¹

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

T. C. Van Ness, for appellant. Lloyd & Wood, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment and an order denying him a new trial. The action was based upon a promissory note, which was signed by the defendant, indorsed by the plaintiff, and made payable to the order of Boyd & Davis. The answer denied the material allegations of the complaint, and, by way of affirmative defense, alleged that the note was in fact the note of plaintiff; that it was executed with defendant as apparent maker and plaintiff as apparent indorser at the request of plaintiff, and was given to defendant that he might negotiate it, and thereby raise money to satisfy an antecedent indebtedness to defendant, which plaintiff was obligated to pay; that plaintiff promised to pay the note at or before its maturity, and that it was negotiated for $9,000, and the proceeds applied in satisfaction of his indebtedness.

At the trial the defendant called witnesses to prove that he was a stockbroker, and that plaintiff requested him as such to purchase certain mining stocks for a Mrs. Theall, and verbally promised to guaranty him against any loss that might result from the purchase; that he purchased the stocks, paying for them with his own money, and held them at the request of plaintiff, till they had depreciated in value more than $10,000, and then on the order of plaintiff sold them; that plaintiff promised to give defendant his note for the $10,000, payable in 60 days, but, when asked to execute it, said it would hurt his credit to give his note for $10,000, but he would indorse defendant's note for that sum, and would certainly pay it at its maturity; that defendant accepted this offer, and thereupon the note in suit was executed and sold, and the amount of it was placed to plaintiff's credit. The plaintiff objected to this evidence, and, after it was given, asked to have it stricken out, upon the ground that a verbal promise to answer for the debt or default of another is void, and parol evidence of such promise is inadmissible. The court overruled the objection, and denied the motion, and afterwards refused, at the request of plaintiff, to instruct the jury that the evidence did not constitute any defense. The appellant insists that these rulings were erroneous, and whether they were or not is the only question presented for decision.

We think the evidence admissible, and the rulings proper. It is true that a verbal promise to answer for the debt or default of another cannot be enforced, except in the cases mentioned in section 2794 of the Civil Code; still, if such a promise be executed by the promisor, he cannot afterwards raise the question of its validity. It has been held, where an action was brought to enforce a contract required by the statute of frauds to be in writing, and parol proof of the contract was admitted without objection, that the contracting party could not have the proofs stricken out because it subsequently appeared that the contract was only a verbal one. Livermore v. Stine, 43 Cal. 274; Sweetland v. Shattuck, 66 Cal. 31, 4 Pac. Rep. 885. It was proper to show the circumstances under which the note was made; and, if the facts were as claimed by defendant and found by the jury, then the plaintiff's parol contract was executed, and the note paid and satisfied, when he took it up. Cohen v. Goux, 48 Cal. 97; Treadwell v. Himmelmann, 50 Cal. 9; Howard v. Stratton, 64 Cal. 487, 2 Pac. Rep. 263. In our opinion the judgment and order should be affirmed.

WOOD v. PENDOLA. (No. 12,618.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 20, 1888.)

APPEAL—BOND—FILING AFTER MOTION TO DISMISS—APPROVAL OF COURT.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 954, providing that no appeal can be dismissed for insufficiency of the undertaking, if a good and sufficient undertaking, approved by a justice of the supreme court, shall be filed in that court before hearing upon the motion to dismiss, failure to file a sufficient undertaking within the required time, and to have indorsed thereon the approval of a justice, renders the appeal ineffectual.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Calaveras county; C. V. GOTTSCHALK, Judge.

Frank W. Street and Ira H. Reed, for appellant. Reddick & Solinsky, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The notice of appeal specifies that the defendant appeals from the judgment rendered against him on September 27, 1887, and also from the order made January 13, 1888, denying defendant's motion for a new trial. In the undertaking, on appeal, no reference is made to the order. It recites simply that "the said defendant has appealed to the supreme court of the state of California from said judgment, and from the whole thereof." Section 954, Code Civil Proc., provides: "If the appellant fails to furnish the requisite papers, the appeal may be dismissed; but no appeal can be dismissed for insufficiency of the undertaking thereon, if a good and sufficient undertaking, approved by a justice of this court, be filed in the supreme court before the hearing upon motion to dismiss the appeal." The motion to dismiss was submitted at the May term, in Sacramento, upon briefs to be thereafter filed. Several weeks thereafter another undertaking was filed, but it has never been approved by a justice of the supreme court. Therefore, if the undertaking be considered as simply irregular and insufficient, under section 954, supra, the failure to file a good and sufficient undertaking within the time allowed by that section, and to have indorsed thereon the approval of a justice of this court, renders the appeal ineffectual. The appeal from the order denying the new trial is dismissed.

PRACTICE IN CIVIL CASES—DISMISSAL—REQUISITES.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 581, requiring, in the dismissal of actions, an entry of such dismissal in the clerk's register, and also an entry of the judgment, an action is not dismissed until the judgment is entered as required, though the dismissal be properly entered in the register. Following Page v. Superior Court, 18 Pac. Rep. 385.

Cal. Rep. 16-19 P.—57

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. GREENE, Judge.

Action for divorce by William M. Page against Emily C. Page. To an order setting aside a former order, the nature of which appears in this opinion, plaintiff took a certiorari, which was dismissed. 18 Pac. Rep. 385. Thereupon he took this appeal from the same order.

S. B. McKee, Jr., for appellant. Flournoy & Mhoon, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. In a suit for divorce, the trial court made an order that the plaintiff pay to the defendant a certain sum as alimony and counsel fees, pendente lite. About three weeks afterwards the court made a second order, setting aside the first. Thereupon the plaintiff took certain steps, which, it is claimed, constituted a dismissal of the suit. A few weeks after this the court made a third order, wherein it is recited that the second order, setting aside the order for alimony and counsel fees, was "obtained by means of an artifice and trick practiced upon this court." The plaintiff attempted to have this third order annulled on certiorari, but, failing in this, took the present appeal, which is from the third order. The contention on the part of the appellant is that at the time the third order was made the suit was dismissed, and the court had no jurisdiction to take any further steps therein. And the question is whether said action was dismissed as contended.

There was a proper entry of dismissal in the clerk's register, but no judgment entered thereon. The statute provides that "the dismissal * * * is made by entry in the clerk's register; judgment may thereupon be entered accordingly." Code Civil Proc. § 581. The entry of judgment seems to be the final step in the process of dismissal. And it was held upon the application for certiorari that until judgment was entered the action was not dismissed, the court saying: "It was for the legislature to declare what should constitute the evidence of dismissal, and the statute requires both the entry in the register and the entry of a judgment." Page v. Superior Court, 18 Pac. Rep. 385. That case determined the precise question involved here. It may be that as against the plaintiff himself the action would, for some purposes, be considered dismissed upon a proper entry in the register. We express no opinion as to that. But we think the dismissal is not complete in the sense that the control of the court over the cause is terminated until the judgment is entered. Taking that to be the case, it cannot be doubted that the court had ample power to set aside an order obtained as this appears to have been. The other positions do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. September 22, 1888.)

EJECTMENT—TITLE TO MAINTAIN ACTION.

In ejectment, the plaintiff proving no title, but relying on prior possession, of which, as well as of his ouster, the evidence was vague and unsatisfactory, there being nothing to show definitely that either plaintiff or defendant was in possession of any definite portion of the land in dispute, neither having any inclosure thereon, judgment given by the court for defendant will not be disturbed.

Ejectment by J. C. Garner against John Doe Wright for certain land in Fresno county. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

W. D. Grady, for appellant. Wharton & Short, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action of ejectment. The plaintiff did not prove any title, but endeavored to show a prior possession. He had no inclosure, and his evidence generally was vague and unsatisfactory, both as to his possession and as to an ouster. The defendant did not show any title, but relied upon possession of a portion of the tract. This portion, according to his counsel, was all he claimed. He had no inclosure, and his evidence also was extremely vague. It is difficult to say that either party was in possession of any definite portion, or that there was an ouster of plaintiff from any definite portion. The court below gave judgment for defendant, and we cannot say, upon the record, that its judgment should be disturbed. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

APPEAL—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—NEW TRIAL—APPLICATION.

An application for a new trial is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and, in the absence of a clear showing to the contrary, the appellate court will presume that the discretion was properly exercised, and will refuse to disturb the ruling.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; J. B. CAMPBELL, Judge.

W. D. Grady, for appellant. J. K. Law and Atwell & Bradley, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from an order granting the defendant a new trial. The motion was made upon the grounds, among others, that the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision, and that errors in law were committed at the trial, and excepted to by the defendant. It does not appear upon what ground the motion was granted, but, as has frequently been held, if it might properly have been granted upon any one of the grounds specified, the order cannot be reversed here. There was a conflict of evidence upon some material points, and it is conceded by counsel for respondent that the court erred in admitting some of the evidence offered by the plaintiff. It is claimed, however, that the errors were harmless. The application was addressed to the sound, legal discretion of the court, and in the absence of a clear showing to the contrary it will be presumed that its discretion was properly exercised. Looking at the whole record, we cannot say that the court abused its discretion, and we therefore advise that the order be affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. September 22, 1888.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE—WIFE'S ESTATE—LEASE—ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

A lease is a "grant or instrument" within the meaning of Civil Code Cal. § 1093, providing that no estate in the real property of a married woman passes by any grant purporting to be acknowledged by her, unless the grant or instrument is acknowledged by her, etc.

2. SAME—RATIFICATION—ACCEPTANCE OF RENT.

The fact that rent was accepted under the lease does not validate it, but at most creates a tenancy terminable by notice.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; JOHN D. WORKS, Judge.

Civil Code Cal. § 1093, provides that "no estate in the real property of a married woman passes by any grant purporting to be executed or acknowledged by her, unless the grant or instrument is acknowledged by her in the manner," etc. Appellants contended that a lease was not included in the statute.

Collier & Mulford, for appellant. Hunsaker & Britt, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action of ejectment. The defendant claims the right to the possession under a lease. The lease was from a married woman, and was not acknowledged. The argument is that a lease by a married woman is not one of the instruments which are required to be acknowledged. We see no merit whatever in the argument. The fact that rent was accepted did not validate the lease, but at most created a tenancy terminable by proper notice, and it was so terminated. The findings are sufficient. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed, with $50 damages.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

(Supreme Court of California. September 22, 1888)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—WHEN RELATION EXISTS.

In an action for rent, evidence for plaintiff showed that defendant occupied and used the land; that he refused to allow others, to whom plaintiff leased part of the land, to enter upon it, claiming to have leased the land of another, and to have paid rent on it; and that a written lease had been made out from plaintiff to defendant for the preceding year, during which defendant had also occupied the land, but was never executed. Held, that defendant's possession was adverse to plaintiff, and the latter could not recover.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. BRUNSON, Judge.

Action for rent. The plaintiff offered testimony that defendant occupied his lands, and used them, refusing to allow others, to whom plaintiff leased part of the land, to enter upon it; that defendant had entered the land the year before with the intention of leasing of plaintiff; and that a written lease had been made, but not executed. The court, upon this evidence alone, found for defendant, holding that the latter's possession was adverse to plaintiff. Plaintiff appeals.

Howards & Scott, for appellant. S. Haley, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action to recover rent of certain real property for the year 1882. It was admitted that there was no agreement for that year. The theory of plaintiff was that defendant was formerly his tenant and held over. The court found that there was no relation of landlord and tenant between the parties, and we think the evidence shows that the possession of defendant was adverse to the plaintiff. There was no error in law or abuse of discretion. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

PENDERGRASS v. BURRIS. (No. 12,509.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 22, 1883.)

MORTGAGES—WHAT CONSTITUTES—DEED ABSOLUTE.

Plaintiff's intestate owed defendant and others large amounts of money which he was unable to pay, and in consideration of the release of defendant's and payment of other debts conveyed a ranch to him, defendant surrendering intestate's notes, and taking possession of the land. Intestate remained on the land, boarding with the tenants, until his death, four years after; collected rents, sold crops, and cultivated a portion for one year himself. There was evidence that the intestate was agent and tenant of defendant, and did not claim ownership of the land. Defendant testified that the sale was absolute, but that shortly afterwards he agreed, in writing, that if intestate could within a year find a purchaser, he would convey the land, taking the amount of the debts and interest, and allowing intestate to retain the residue. Admissions of defendant of facts from which a mortgage, instead of a sale, might be inferred, were explained. Some other circumstances were proved for and against the theory that the transaction was intended only as security for a debt. Held, that the finding of the trial court, that the intention of the parties was to make an absolute sale, should not be disturbed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; WILLIAM W. CROSS, Judge.

Ejectment by T. W. Pendergrass, administrator of the estate of G. T. Thornton, deceased, against David Burris, to recover the possession of certain lands in Tulare county. At the trial it was shown that plaintiff's intestate at one time owned the land, but conveyed it to defendant by deed absolute in form, but which plaintiff claimed to be in fact security for a debt. There was evidence that before the execution of the deed the grantor owed the grantee and others large amounts which he was unable to pay, and which drew more than the legal rate of interest, and conveyed the land in consideration of the release of defendant's debt and the payment by him of the other debts. When the deed was made intestate's notes were surrendered to him, and defendant took possession of the land, although intestate lived on it until his death, four years after, boarding with the tenants. Defendant testified that the transaction was an absolute sale, and that intestate owed him nothing after the deed was made. He also testified that all intestate had to do with the land after the sale was as his agent in renting it out, collecting rent, selling crops, etc., and that one year he cultivated a part of the land as defendant's tenant. Defendant further testified that, shortly after the deed was made, intestate, thinking the land could be sold for more money, requested defendant to allow him to sell the land and pay him back the amount of the debts, with interest, to which defendant consented, and signed a writing to that effect, giving intestate one year in which to find such purchaser, the agreement stating that time was of the essence of the contract. Defendant and intestate never had a settlement of their transactions after the sale during the time intestate was collecting the rents and selling the crops from the land. Some of the money derived from the rents intestate used, with defendant's consent, to pay some debts he still owed. There was evidence of conversations of intestate in which he acknowledged the land to be defendant's, and that he was only acting as his agent; and of conversations in which defendant admitted intestate's right to the land upon payment of the debts and interest. Defendant told creditors of intestate after his death that he was a creditor of intestate's to a large amount, and that if they did not allow him to be appointed administrator he would put his claim in, which would consume the estate, so that they would get very little, but if he was appointed he would pay them 75 cents on the dollar of their debts, to which they agreed, and he paid them that amount. Afterwards the present plaintiff was appointed administrator in defendant's place. Defendant explained this on the ground that intestate owed him a large sum for money collected from tenants, crops sold, etc., while acting as agent for defendant. Defendant paid all the taxes on the land after the deed was made. The finding and judgment of the court (without a jury) was for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

Sidney V. Smith and M. S. Babcock, (Stanly, Stony & Hays, of counsel,) for appellant. Brown & Daggett and Atwell & Bradley, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This case turns upon the question whether or not a certain deed was intended to be a mortgage. The court below found that it was not a mortgage. The ingenious argument of counsel for the appellant has cast some doubt upon the correctness of this conclusion. Nevertheless, upon the evidence in the record, we do not feel warranted to declare that the court below erred in its decision. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

ESPINOSA v. PHELAN. (No. 12,557.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 22, 1883.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—TITLE FROM STATE—CONTEST—ORDER OF REFERENCE.

Under Pol. Code Cal. § 3414, providing that, when a demand shall be made upon the surveyor general or register of the land-office by one of the parties to a contest for land pending in his office for a trial in the courts, such officer shall make an order referring such contest to the district court of the county wherein the land is, an order of reference is sufficient if it appear from it that such contest has arisen, and that upon the demand of one of the parties a reference is made, although by a clerical omission the order does not recite that such reference was made upon such demand.

2. SAME—ORDER OF REFERENCE—AUTHORITY OF DEPUTY.

Whether a contest for land is pending before the surveyor general or the register of the land-office, an order of reference to a court for trial under Pol. Code Cal. § 3414, may be made by the deputy of the former, as, by Pol. Code Cal. §§ 350 and 497, the surveyor general and his deputy are ex officio register and deputy-register.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. W. HUTTON, Judge.

Action to determine contest for land, referred for trial by the surveyor general, brought by Refugio Espinosa against Thomas Phelan. From an order dismissing the action plaintiff appealed. Pol. Code Cal. §§ 350, 497, make the surveyor general and his deputy ex officio register of the land-office and deputy-register. Section 3414 makes it the duty of the surveyor general or register, upon demand of a party to a contest pending in his office, to refer the matter to the district court of the county wherein the land lies for trial.

Lee & Scott, for appellant. Stephen M. White, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action to determine a contest as to which of the parties has a better right to purchase certain school land from the state. The court below dismissed the action upon the ground that it did not have jurisdiction to try it, being of opinion that there was no valid order of reference on file. The order of reference, among other things, contained this recital: "On October 14, 1886, a duly-verified protest against the issuance of a patent to said Thomas Phelan or his assigns of said land, and a demand that all conflicting claims to purchase said land was filed in the office of the state surveyor general by said Refugio Espinosa. It is therefore ordered and directed that the contest as set forth between the above-named parties be, and the same is hereby, referred to the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles, state of California, for adjudication." From this and the other portions of the order in question it is evident to us that a contest had arisen in the office of the surveyor general, and ex officio register of the state land-office, between Espinosa and Phelan as to who had the better legal right to purchase the land therein mentioned from the state, and that the order of reference was made in consequence of a demand made by Espinosa. It is true there is evidently, by clerical error, an omission in the order to write, after the word "demand," "be referred to the proper court of the state for trial," but nevertheless it is plain that the order was not made upon his own motion by the surveyor general, ex officio register, but was made upon the demand of Espinosa. The words, "it is therefore ordered," refer to the "demand" previously recited as having been made by Espinosa, and must mean that the surveyor general and ex officio register made the order of reference to the superior court of Los Angeles county because of the demand of Espinosa that he should do so. Nothing in the statute requires that such a demand should be made in writing. Whether the contest was initiated by the protest and demand in the office of the register or surveyor general, under section 3414 of the Political Code, did not affect the validity of the order which was made by the deputy who acted in that capacity, and signed and sealed the order for both register and surveyor general. Pol. Code, §§ 350, 497; Cunningham v. Crowley, 51 Cal. 132. We are of opinion that the court had jurisdiction to try the action, and that it should not have been dismissed. We therefore advise that the judgment and order be reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

MCLEOD v. MEADE. (No. 12,325.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 22, 1888.)

REWARD—ACTION FOR—PLEADING—GENERAL DEMURRER.

A complaint alleging that defendant "offered a reward of $500 for the arrest of the murderer of L. T." avers that defendant himself offered to pay the reward, and not that another person would pay it, and is, on general demurrer, sufficient.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; J. B. CAMPBELL, Judge.

Action by A. C. McLeod against O. J. Meade for a reward for arresting an alleged murderer. Judgment for defendant, on demurrer to the complaint, and plaintiff appeals.

Graves, Turner & Graves and R. T. Terry, for appellant. Tupper & Tupper, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Final judgment in favor of the defendant was given on demurrer to the complaint, and the plaintiff appeals. The complaint alleges that "the defendant * * * offered a reward of $500, in the manner following, to-wit: '$500 reward for the arrest of the murderer of Louis Trabucco, committed,' " etc.; that said offer was signed by defendant, as sheriff, and sent to the plaintiff, and that, relying upon the same, he arrested the murderer, and delivered him up to the sheriff, and complied with all the terms of the offer. The argument in support of the demurrer is that the above is not to be construed as a reward offered by the sheriff himself, but merely as information that some one not named had offered a reward. Possibly a demurrer specifically pointing out the supposed ambiguity should have been sustained. We express no opinion as to that, but we think the objection cannot be made on a general demurrer. The complaint expressly alleges that "defendant * * * offered" the reward, and in the face of this allegation we do not see how it can be said that the reward was offered by somebody else. If this be the proper construction of the pleading, it stated a cause of action.

Ryer v. Stockwell, 14 Cal. 134. We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

MORRILL et al. v. EVERSON. (No. 12,465.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 22, 1888.)

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE—CONSIDERATION.

A contract for a lease of property, then worth $1,600, and with a rental value of $12 a month, for a term of nine months, at a rent of $10 a month, with a right of purchase at $1,300, is, as to the right of purchase, without adequate consideration within the meaning of Civil Code Cal. § 3391, providing that specific performance cannot be enforced against a person who has not received an adequate consideration.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; JOHN D. WORKS, Judge.

Suit for specific performance by Charles L. Morrill and Arthur G. Nason, appellants, against Melstine Z. Everson, respondent.

Puterbaugh, Leovy & Humes and Houghton, Silent & Campbell, for appellants. John M. Lucas, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Suit for specific performance of a contract in relation to a lot in the city of San Diego. The plaintiffs were real-estate brokers, and the defendant was a somewhat weak-minded and excitable woman of not much business knowledge. The property, at the time of the contract, was of the value of $1,600, and of the rental value of $12 per month. The contract was that the plaintiffs rented the property for the term of nine months, at a rental of $10 a month, to be paid in advance, and had the right of purchasing at any time during the term for the sum of $1,300. During the latter part of the term the value of the property was $4,000, and the plaintiffs then sought to buy. The court below declined to enforce the contract, and the plaintiffs appeal.

The respondent's position that there was no mutuality cannot be sustained. Hall v. Center, 40 Cal. 63. But we think that while there was a consideration sufficient to support the contract at law, yet that, so far as the right of purchase is concerned, there was no adequate consideration, and that, consequently, a court of equity will not specifically enforce it. Before the Code the preponderance of authority seems to have been that mere inadequacy of consideration, not amounting to evidence of fraud, was not ground for refusing specific performance. Pom. Spec. Perf. § 194. But the Civil Code contains the following provision: "Sec. 3391. Specific performance cannot be enforced against a party to a contract in any of the following cases: (1) If he has not received an adequate consideration for the contract. (2) If it is not, as to him, just and reasonable. * * *" Here the inadequacy of consideration seems to be mentioned as a distinct ground from the injustice and unreasonableness, and the provision seems to be explicit and absolute. We do not doubt that the point of time, to which the question of adequacy must relate, is the time of the formation of the contract, and it is safe to say that it is not necessary that there be the highest possible price, but only a consideration which is adequate under all the circumstances. But we think that there was no such consideration for the contract which is sought to be enforced. The lease was a comparatively unimportant part of the contract. The rent for the entire term amounted to only $90. The real thing which the plaintiffs wanted was the right to purchase, which, under the circumstances of the market, was extremely valuable. They got this right, without any corresponding obligation to purchase, for the insignificant rent paid for the use of the premises, which rent was less even than the rental value of the property. This being the case, we think that, while there was a consideration which was sufficient to render the contract binding at law, yet that, so far as the right of purchase was concerned, there was no "adequate" consideration within the meaning of the provision of the Civil Code above referred to. The criticisms upon the findings do not seem to require a reversal. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

PEEK v. PEEK. (No. 12,315.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 22, 1888.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF—AGREEMENTS RELATING TO LAND—PART PERFORMANCE—FRAUD.
In an action of ejectment a cross-complaint was filed praying specific performance and conveyance. It appeared that defendant had been induced to marry plaintiff's father solely upon his oral promise to convey the land to her, which he never intended to do, but on the morning of the marriage conveyed the land to plaintiff, without consideration, and shortly afterwards deserted defendant. Held that, the grantor having fraudulently induced defendant irretrievably to alter her situation, the statute of frauds did not apply.¹
2. SAME—PART PERFORMANCE—MARRIAGE.
Marriage is not in itself sufficient part performance of an oral promise to avoid the operation of the statute of frauds.¹
3. SAME—JOINT RESIDENCE.
Joint residence by husband and wife, after marriage, on land which the husband orally promised to convey to her in consideration of marriage, will not take such promise out of the statute of frauds.¹
4. DEED—CONSIDERATION.
That a husband promised his wife, on her death-bed, that their son should have certain property, will not constitute a valuable consideration for a conveyance by the father to the son, and the latter is only a volunteer.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; HENRY M. WILLIS, Judge.

Ejectment by Lee Peek, a minor, by Jerry McNew, his guardian, against Nettie A. Peek, for land in San Bernardino county. Defendant filed a cross-complaint, asking a conveyance of the legal title to the land. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

Rowell & Rowell, Harris & Allen, and Wells, Van Dyke & Lee, for appellant. H. C. Rolfe, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Ejectment, with a cross-complaint by defendant praying for a conveyance of the legal title. The facts are as follows: One L. R. Peek orally promised the defendant that if she would marry him, he would, on or before the marriage, convey to her the property in controversy. She relied upon this promise, and married him "for no other reason or consideration." The conveyance was not made. He put it off by excuses and protestations, and on the morning of the marriage, without the knowledge of defendant, conveyed the property to his son by a former marriage, who was then a boy about 10 years old. The marriage with defendant did not prove a happy one, and after a year's residence upon the property Peek deserted the defendant, and the son, Lee Peek, brought the present action to recover possession of the property. The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals.

The foundation of the defendant's claim being the promise of L. R. Peek, the first question to be considered is whether such promise was of any validity. It is clear that it was within the statute of frauds. But it is contended that there was such part performance and fraud as would induce a court of equity to give relief, notwithstanding the statute. We think that if the actual fraud of L. R. Peek be left out of view, there was no such part performance as would take the case out of the statute. There may undoubtedly be cases of a part performance of oral antenuptial agreements sufficient to warrant their enforcement in equity. See Neale v. Neales, 9 Wall. 1. But it seems to be generally agreed that the marriage alone does not amount to such part performance. See Ath. Mar. Sett. 90; Browne, St. Frauds, (4th Ed.) § 459; ¹As to what is a sufficient part performance to take a parol agreement relating to land out of the statute of frauds, see Martin v. Patterson, (S. C.) 2 S. E. Rep. 859, and note; Slingerland v. Slingerland, (Minn.) 39 N. W. Rep. 146, and note.

Henry v. Henry, 27 Ohio St. 121. With reference to this subject, Story says: "The subsequent marriage is not deemed a part performance, taking the case out of the statute, contrary to the rule which prevails in other cases of contract. In this respect it is always treated as a peculiar case, standing on its own grounds." 2 Eq. Jur. § 768. Nor does the fact that the defendant resided with her husband upon the property make any difference. The reason assigned for holding possession to be part performance is that, unless validity be given to the agreement, the vendee would be a trespasser. But it is manifest that this reason would not apply where the vendor was the husband and the vendee the wife, living with him upon the property. The possession which is referred to by the cases which hold it to be sufficient part performance is a possession exclusive of the vendor. Browne, St. Frauds, (4th Ed.) § 474. But the fact that the marriage was brought about by the actual fraud of L. R. Peek seems to us to make a difference. There can be little doubt upon the record that there was actual fraud on his part. He denies that he made any promise to convey the property in controversy. But the court finds that he did make it, and, taking this to be the fact, we think that the defendant's account as to the time of the promise, and of the reason she married him without the conveyance, must be accepted as the true one. According to her testimony, the promise was repeated up to the time of the marriage, and she was induced to have the ceremony performed before the conveyance was executed by means of excuses and protestations, which must have been made for the purpose of deceiving her. On the day before the marriage, he pretended that he was going to have the deed executed at once. He said to the defendant: "The officers are in town that are required to draw up the papers. Come to-night, and I will have the place deeded to you, and the $15,000 put in your name. He left me in the hotel, and in a few minutes he came and told me that Mr. Frank McKenny was out of town, and it could not be attended to that evening." The next day "he said he would have the deeds drawn, and he went up and said that they were all busy at the court-house, and he couldn't have it done at that time; and he called on me again with the same story, that the gentlemen at the court-house were busy, and that he could not have the deeds fixed, and that I could rest contented." He, however, succeeded in inducing the defendant to marry him that evening by protesting that the papers should be executed as soon as practicable. After the marriage he kept up for a short time the pretense that he was going to fulfill his promise, but never did so. It seems clear that he never intended to have the deed executed. The story that he could not have it done because the officers at the court-house were busy is ridiculous. On the very day that he was making this excuse he got a deed executed conveying the property to his son. And the fact that he induced the defendant to marry him by promising to convey the property to her, when at that very time he was conveying it to somebody else, seems conclusive as to his fraudulent intent. We think, therefore, that the conclusion of the court below, that the deed was not made "with any fraudulent intent whatever," is not sustained by the facts. This fraud on the part of L. R. Peek, by which he induced the defendant to irretrievably change her condition, seems to us to be ground for relief in equity. It has been laid down that if the agreement was intended to be reduced to writing, but was prevented from being so by the fraudulent contrivance of the party to be bound by it, equity will compel its specific performance. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 768; Ath. Mar. Sett. 85. And the recent case of Green v. Green, 34 Kan. 740, 10 Pac. Rep. 156, is exactly in point. In that case a widow, owning 160 acres of land, orally promised a man that if he would marry her, she would devote the proceeds of the land to their joint support. Relying upon this promise, he married her, but subsequently ascertained that on the eve of the marriage she had conveyed the property to her children by former marriage, "in consideration of love and affection." The court held that he could maintain an action to have the deed set aside on the ground of fraud. Compare, also, Petty v. Petty, 4 B. Mon. 215.

We do not say that the mere fraudulent omission to have an agreement reduced to writing would of itself be ground for specifically enforcing the agreement. But where the fraudulent contrivance induces an irretrievable change of position, equity will enforce the agreement; and the marriage brought about by the fraudulent contrivance is a change of position, within the meaning of the rule. In Glass v. Hulbert, 102 Mass. 24, in reasoning, upon somewhat different facts, to the conclusion that, in order to be ground for the enforcement of the oral contract, the fraudulent contrivance must have induced some irretrievable change of position, the court said: "The cases most frequently referred to are those arising out of agreements for marriage settlements. In such cases, the marriage, although not regarded as a part performance of the agreement for a marriage settlement, is such an irretrievable change of situation that, if procured by artifice, upon the faith that the settlement had been made, or the assurance that it would be executed, the other party is held to make good the agreement, and not permitted to defeat it by pleading the statute." This, we think, is a correct statement of the law.

It is argued, however, that the plaintiff knew nothing of the fraud, and therefore is not affected by it. But it is very clear that a mere volunteer, however innocent, cannot retain the fruits of the fraud, and we think that with reference to at least a portion of the property the plaintiff was a mere volunteer. There are two grounds upon which it is urged that he was a purchaser for valuable consideration. In the first place, it is said that his father was his guardian, and as such owed the plaintiff a balance of $148, and that this sum was part of the consideration of the deed. But there was no consent of the ward to such an application of the sum due him. His testimony is as follows: "I never paid my papa any money for the deed that he showed me. I do not know anything about how much money was mentioned in the deed as being the consideration for it. I never knew anything about that. Nothing of that kind passed between us. No property or money or anything. I did not have any property at that time to give him. If I had any, I didn't know it." So that, even if the ward could have consented to such an appropriation of his funds without the sanction of the probate court, there was no such consent. Nor was there any sanction of the probate court. It may be that upon a proper settlement of the guardian's accounts a much larger sum will be found to be due from him. He cannot get rid of liability to his ward in that way. In the next place, it is said that L. R. Peek promised his first wife upon her deathbed that the son should have the property. But it is clear that such promise was a mere moral, and not a valuable, consideration. It did not prevent the plaintiff from being a volunteer. See, generally, Lloyd v. Fulton, 91 U. S. 484, 485. Finally, it is argued that the first wife furnished half of the money with which the property was purchased, and that a trust resulted to her in consequence. This was the view taken by the trial court. But, conceding that a trust did result, it did not affect the whole property, but at most only a portion corresponding to the proportion of the price which she furnished; and the portion which it did affect was in no sense a consideration for the deed which is involved here. Upon the theory that a trust resulted to the first wife, the plaintiff must claim as her successor in interest. It does not appear that she left a valid will in his favor, and if not he could succeed to a portion only of her interest. Furthermore, it might become a question as to whether the defendant took with notice of the son's equitable interest, and as to how she would be affected thereby. These latter questions have not been argued, and we think they should be left open upon the retrial. It is deserving of serious consideration whether L. R. Peek, who was a party to the contract which the defendant relies upon, should not have been joined as a party to the cross-suit. But the objection as to his non-joinder as a defendant to the cross-complaint was not taken by demurrer, and is not argued in the respondent's brief, and for these reasons we express no opinion concerning it. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

SHARON v. SHARON. (No. 11,087.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 22, 1888.)

1. DIVORCE—PLEADINGS—AMENDMENT.

To allow defendant in an action for divorce and division of property to amend his answer, by making a denial of an allegation concerning the property more specific, is not an abuse of the discretion given trial courts regarding amendments.

2. APPEAL—REVIEW—INTERMEDIATE ORDERS.

Where the judgment appealed from decides only as to the divorce, leaving the division of property sought for future decree, the appeal does not bring up for review a ruling upon an amendment of pleadings affecting the property only; as under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 956, an intermediate order can be reviewed, on an appeal from the judgment, only when it involves the merits or necessarily affects the judgment.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

Action for divorce and division of property by Sarah Althea Sharon against William Sharon. Divorce granted, and cause retained for action as to property. Plaintiff appeals. For opinion on former appeal, see 16 Pac. Rep. 345.

D. S. Terry, for appellant. W. H. L. Barnes and Wm. F. Herrin, (R. S. Mesick, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was commenced to have an alleged marriage of plaintiff and defendant declared legal and valid, and for a divorce and a division of the community property. After a protracted trial upon the main issue presented, namely, as to whether the parties were husband and wife, the court ordered findings to be drawn in favor of the plaintiff. Thereupon the defendant asked, and, against the objection and exception of plaintiff, obtained leave to amend his answer so as more particularly and specifically to deny that there was any community property. This order was made and entered on the 9th day of January, 1885. Subsequently, on the 19th day of February, 1885, findings were filed and judgment entered. The court found that the plaintiff and defendant were husband and wife, and that defendant had been guilty of willful desertion; and it decreed that the marriage existing between the parties be dissolved, and that they and each of them be freed from the obligations thereof. A referee was then appointed to take an account of the community property, and to report the same to the court with all convenient dispatch; and it was "further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the question of property be and the same is hereby reserved for future consideration, and, upon the coming in of the referee's report, plaintiff has leave to apply for a further and final decree, settling the matter of property, as between the parties," etc. The plaintiff appealed from the judgment, and in support of her appeal insists—and this is the only point made—that the court erred in allowing the defendant to amend his answer, and that the order should be reviewed and reversed.

This contention of the appellant cannot be sustained, for two reasons:

1. On an appeal from a judgment an intermediate order can only be reviewed when it "involves the merits or necessarily affects the judgment." Code Civil Proc. § 956. The judgment appealed from declared an alleged marriage to be legal, and granted a divorce, but did not determine as to the property rights of the parties. The plaintiff was entitled to one-half of the community property, but whether there was any such property, and, if any, how much, were questions reserved for further consideration and adjudication. The order complained of in no way involved the merits or necessarily affected the judgment as entered. It is therefore not subject to review on this appeal.

2. Applications to amend pleadings are addressed to the sound legal discretion of the trial court, and this court will not interfere with the exercise of that discretion unless it has been manifestly abused. The authorities to this effect are numerous, and need not be cited. And the fact that the new matter set up by way of amendment was known to the defendant at the time of filing his original answer is no good reason why the amendment should not be permitted. Bank v. Stover, 60 Cal. 395. The application in this case was based upon the affidavits of defendant and his attorney, and after careful examination we are unable to see that the court abused its discretion. Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GALE. (No. 20,418.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 24, 1888.)

EMBEZZLEMENT—BY EXECUTOR—INDICTMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

An indictment charging that defendant, as administrator of P., received of K. $1,794, of which, in his final account, he accounted for but $1,700, and so fraudulently appropriated the sum of $94, of said P.'s estate, does not, without the averment of other inculpatory facts, charge the crime of embezzlement.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county; CHARLES P. BRAINARD, Judge.

Indictment for embezzlement. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer thereto the people appeal.

Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People. Chipman & Carter, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This appeal is taken by the people of the state of California from an order made by the court below sustaining the defendant's demurrer to the indictment filed against him. An inspection of the indictment shows that it was attempted by it to charge the defendant with the crime of embezzlement. After stating that the defendant, as administrator of the estate of one Warren Polly, deceased, had received from one Kingsly the sum of $1,794, but had accounted for but $1,700 of that sum in rendering his final account in said estate to the proper court, it is charged "that, in making and rendering the said final account as aforesaid, in the said county of Tehama, the said Gale did then and there, as such administrator, fraudulently appropriate to his own use and purpose the sum of $94, which said money then and there belonged to the estate of the said Warren Polly, deceased, contrary," etc. The fact, as charged in the indictment, that the defendant received into his hands as administrator the sum of $1,794, but in rendering his final account charged himself with only $1,700, does not, in the absence of all averments of other necessary inculpatory facts, constitute the crime of embezzlement. Therefore we advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

GREGORY v. BOVIER. (No. 12,500.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 25, 1888.)

1. JUDGMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK—JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

A justice's judgment cannot be collaterally attacked by showing that the debt on which it is based was merged in a former judgment rendered in another township.

2. SAME.

Neither can it be collaterally attacked by showing that defendant did not reside in the township in which the judgment was rendered, where the return upon the summons in the action shows that the proper officer served it on defendant in that township.

3. EXECUTION—SALE—TITLE OF PURCHASER—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Nor can the title to land obtained under the judgment be collaterally attacked on the ground that the land was sold en masse, the period for redemption having expired.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; JOHN D. WORKS, Judge.

John M. Lucas, for appellant. Hunsaker & Britt and Hendrick & Younkin, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. Action to quiet title. The court below gave judgment for the defendant as prayed for in the answer and cross-complaint. From that and an order denying a new trial the plaintiff appealed.

It appears that the defendant claimed title, as against the plaintiff, by virtue of an execution sale under a judgment rendered against him by a justice of the peace in San Diego township of the county of San Diego, and one of the plaintiff's contentions was that this judgment was void, because a justice of the peace in Agua Caliente township of the same county, having previously taken jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the contract involved in both actions, and exercising his jurisdiction by merging the same into a judgment, had made it impossible that there could be exercised over the same subject-matter the jurisdiction of another justice's court. It appears to us that in a collateral attack, such as is made in this action, upon the judgment rendered in San Diego township, the trial court properly held that it was not permissible to show that the debt upon which it is based was merged in the former judgment rendered in Agua Caliente township. Freem. Judgm. § 284a; Lewis v. Armstrong, 45 Ga. 131.

It is further urged upon us that the judgment rendered in San Diego township is void because the court did not have jurisdiction to try the action, by reason of the fact, as is claimed, that the defendant did not reside in the township where judgment was rendered against him. In answer to that it is sufficient to say that it was not competent to prove that his residence was not in that township, because the return upon the summons in the action showed that the proper officer had served it upon the defendant in the township where the suit was brought, and this was sufficient proof to authorize the court to determine that it had jurisdiction of his person so as to render its judgment in the premises valid. Fagg v. Clements, 16 Cal. 389. The court having, upon sufficient evidence, as shown affirmatively by the record, obtained jurisdiction, it was not competent in a collateral action, such as this, to disprove the existence of that jurisdiction. The objection should have been taken upon the trial in the justice's court of San Diego township, and it was too late to make it in this action. Id. 389.

Neither was it available for the plaintiff in this collateral action to attack the defendant's title on the ground that the lots of land were sold en masse, the period for redemption having passed. Vigoureux v. Murphy, 54 Cal. 347; Griswold v. Stoughton, 84 Amer. Dec. 409; Hibberd v. Smith, 67 Cal. 565, 4 Pac. Rep. 473, 8 Pac. Rep. 46, citing Blood v. Light, 38 Cal. 657, and other cases.

In his supplemental brief the appellant claims that the judgment should be reversed, because it granted relief outside of any matter presented to the court for decision by the pleadings. And in this connection his argument seems to be that the court gave affirmative relief upon what it denominates a "cross-complaint," which was not in fact such, not containing any allegations warranting affirmative relief. It is not what the pleading is called which determines its character, but facts which it sets up. Holmes v. Richet, 56 Cal. 311. We think the latter part of the answer was a cross-complaint, and that the relief granted was proper under the facts stated and the prayer of the pleadings. No prejudicial error appearing in the record, we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

THORNTON, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment herein for the reason that conceding that the plaintiff had a right to show that the judgment in Allison v. Gregory in the justice's court was of no effect to transfer a right by a sale under an execution issued upon it, on the ground that he was a resident of a township different from that in which he was served, he was on the trial of this cause in the court below allowed to offer evidence on such issue, and the court ruled against him on the question, which was one of fact. The court, in pronouncing judgment against him, must have so ruled in sustaining the jurisdiction of the justice's court in the cause above mentioned. On the other points in the opinion I am of opinion that the judgment of the learned commissioner is correct, and concur in it.

SLOSS v. DE TORO et al. (No. 12,397.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 26, 1888.)

1. VENUE IN CIVIL ACTIONS—EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—SALES UNDER ORDER OF COURT—ACTION TO SET ASIDE.

An action by the owner of an undivided interest in lands to have an administrator's sale of another undivided interest in the same lands set aside as fraudulent, and the title revested in the former owners, involves "the determination, in any form," of a right or interest in real property, within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 392, providing that actions for the determination, in any form, of a right or interest in real property, must be tried in the county in which the subject of the action, or some part thereof, is situated.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; JOHN D. WORKS, Judge.

Wells, Van Dyke & Lee, H. M. Smith, and H. L. Titus, for appellants. H. S. Mulford, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The plaintiff commenced this action in the superior court of San Diego county, and the defendants moved to have the case transferred to the superior court of Los Angeles county for trial. The motion was denied, and the appeal is from that order. The allegations of the complaint are substantially as follows: Augustin Olvera died testate, seized of an undivided interest in a tract of land situate in San Diego county. The tract was afterwards partitioned, and a portion thereof, described as lot 70, and containing 9,238 acres, was allotted to the estate in severalty. The plaintiff was the owner of an undivided interest in lot 70, equal to 488.25 acres, the title to which he acquired by conveyance from the widow of the deceased. In July, 1881, the defendant Juan de Toro was appointed administrator of the estate by the superior court of Los Angeles county, and received letters of administration, which had not been revoked. In September, 1886, De Toro obtained an order from that court, authorizing him, as administrator, to sell an undivided part of lot 70, and in March, 1887, in pursuance of that order, he sold to defendant, Forbes, at private sale, for $5.05 per acre, all the right, title, and interest of the estate in and to a described portion of the lot, containing 4,500 acres; and in April following the sale was approved by the court. The sale was fraudulent. Forbes was the brother-in-law of De Toro, and his business manager and adviser. Prior to the sale, the two connived together, and, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, or the heirs to the estate, or their successors in interest, secretly agreed that the administrator should sell the described land to Forbes for the nominal sum of $5.05 per acre, and that the latter should thereafter resell the land at its market value, which was rapidly increasing, and was then worth not less than $25 per acre, and that the administrator should have a share of the proceeds of such sale. Within a few days after the sale to him, Forbes again sold the land to other parties for $25 per acre. There was no necessity for a sale of the land. The administrator had in his hands personal property sufficient to pay all outstanding indebtedness, and all expenses of administration which had then accrued, and there was no family allowance to be provided for. Moreover, the court never acquired jurisdiction to make the order, for the reason that none of the conditions required by law to authorize such a sale existed, and the petition, therefore, was wholly insufficient. The sale of the land, as made, greatly depreciated the value of the remaining part of the tract, and worked great and irreparable injury to the plaintiff, and to the heirs and their successors and assigns. The prayer was that the order of sale be vacated and annulled; that the sale thereunder be declared void and set aside; and that the defendants be enjoined from disposing of the proceeds thereof until the further order of the court. The defendants demurred to the complaint, and thereupon, upon proper showing, moved to have the place of trial changed to Los Angeles county, upon the ground that both of them were, and had been for more than 10 years, residents of that county. Whether the court erred in denying the defendants' motion or not, must be determined by a consideration of the provisions of the Code in reference to the "place of trial of civil actions." Section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows: "Actions for the following causes must be tried in the county in which the subject of the action, or some part thereof, is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as provided in this Code: (1) For the recovery of real property, or of an estate or interest therein, or for the determination in any form of such right or interest, and for injuries to real property. * * *" And section 395 provides that in all cases not covered by the three preceding sections "the action must be tried in the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action." The question then is, did this action require the determination, in any form, of a right or interest in real property? It seems to us that it did. The main purpose of the action evidently was to have an alleged fraudulent sale of land set aside and the title revested in its former owners. This purpose could only be accomplished by showing—First, that the plaintiff had an estate or interest in the land; and, second, that the defendants had wrongfully tried to deprive him of that interest. If the action had been ejectment, or to quiet title, it would not more clearly have required a determination as to the plaintiff's right or interest in the property. In our opinion the order appealed from was properly made, and should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reason given in the foregoing opinion the order appealed from is affirmed.

THORNTON, J. I concur; but in concurring in the judgment of this court herein, I think it proper to state that I do not intend to say or intimate that the complaint sets forth facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

77 Cal. 94

LOW v. WARDEN. (No. 12,607.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 22, 1888.)

1. NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS—ACTIONS ON—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action on a note made payable to plaintiff and his brother, as partners, and claimed by plaintiff to have been sold to him, which defendant denied, an instruction that, "by the pleadings, defendant admits that he made a note to the plaintiff and his brother," the fact being that he admitted making the note to them as partners, is immaterial, and harmless error, if error at all.

2. SAME—INDORSEMENT—PARTNERSHIP—POWER OF PARTNER.

An instruction that if plaintiff, before the action was brought, with the consent of his brother, wrote across the back of the note the name of the firm, with intent to assign the same to himself, this constituted a sufficient assignment, and plaintiff thereby became the owner, is not erroneous, as taking away from the jury the question whether the note was in fact assigned and delivered to plaintiff or not.

3. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS—OPINION ON MATTERS OF FACT.

Also, under Const. Cal. § 19, art. 6, providing that "judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law," an instruction that "this is a question of fact, and the main question, as it seems to me, is the question of payment," is not error, as taking from the jury the question whether the note had been assigned to plaintiff, there being no conflict as to the assignment, and nearly all the testimony being in relation to payment.

4. SAME—PAYMENT—BANKS AND BANKING—COLLECTION.

An instruction that, if plaintiff instructed a bank to renew or collect the note before maturity, an agreement by the president of the bank for an extension of time was not binding upon plaintiff, and that plaintiff could, at any time before payment to him or to his credit in the bank, bring an action, is not prejudicial error as assuming that the bank president had made an agreement for extension, where the evidence is conflicting as to whether certain money paid by defendant to the bank was intended to discharge the note, since plaintiff could bring the action if the note was not actually paid.

5. SAME—DEPOSIT OF MONEY WITH BANK.

An instruction that if defendant, before the beginning of the action, deposited the amount due on the note, the fact that, after the action was commenced, he drew said money, would cut no figure in the case, and the jury should find for defendant, would be error, as equivalent to stating that, if defendant deposited the money for any purpose whatever, the verdict should be for him.

6. SAME—WITHDRAWAL OF FUND.

Evidence that the money deposited by defendant in the bank was withdrawn by him on his own check, was admissible as tending to show that the money was not deposited to pay the note, but for defendant's own use.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; D. S. GREGORY, Judge.

Graves, Turner & Graves, for appellant. W. H. Spencer, for respondent.

BELCHER, C.C. The plaintiff commenced this action to recover the amount due on a promissory note, which was executed by the defendant, and was made payable to D. Low & Bro., or order. The complaint alleged that at the time the note was executed the plaintiff and his brother, Edward Low, were partners, doing business under the firm name of D. Low & Bro., and that before the commencement of the action the note was sold, assigned, indorsed, and transferred by the payees thereof to the plaintiff. The answer denied the alleged sale, indorsement, and transfer of the note, and alleged that it had been fully paid by the defendant. The case was tried before a jury, and the verdict and judgment were in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant moved for a new trial, and, his motion being denied, appealed from the judgment and order.

In its first instruction the court told the jury that "by the pleadings defendant admits that he made a note to the plaintiff and his brother, Edward Low," etc. This language is claimed by appellant to be outside of the issues in the case, and to be erroneous, because the allegation of the complaint, which was not denied, was that the note was made to the plaintiff and his brother, as partners, and not as individuals. There is nothing in this point, for, conceding all that is claimed, the error, if any, was immaterial and harmless. In the fourth instruction the court told the jury, in substance, that if, before the commencement of the action, the plaintiff, with the consent of his brother, Edward, wrote across the back of the note "D Low & Brother," with the intent to assign the same to himself, that this constituted a sufficient assignment and indorsement of the note, and he thereupon became the owner and holder thereof. We see no error in this instruction. It did not take from the jury the question as to whether the note was in fact assigned and delivered to plaintiff or not, but simply stated to them concisely the law applicable to the facts proved. The fifth instruction is in these words: "If you find that the instructions from the plaintiff to the bank were to renew or collect the note before maturity, then, I charge you, any agreement the president of the bank may have made for extension of time to the defendant was not as agent for plaintiff, and was not binding upon plaintiff, and that plaintiff could, notwithstanding, at any time before the actual payment of the note to him, or to his credit in the bank, commence an action against the defendant on the note." This instruction was not very happily framed, but, in view of the testimony, we are unable to see that the defendant was prejudiced by it. The plaintiff testified: "I authorized Mr. Andrews, the president of the Bank of San Luis Obispo, to collect the note. I told Mr. Warden that he could pay the note to Mr. Andrews, the president of the bank of San Luis Obispo, or give another note." Mr. Andrews, for defendant, testified: "Mr. Low left the note, and asked me to attend to it; look after it; not to let it outlaw. Just before it was to outlaw I spoke to Mr. Warden about it. Mr. Low authorized me either to get another note, or take the money due on it. * * * At the time the money was paid, I told Mr. Warden that if he wanted a week's time to give a satisfactory note in lieu of the money that he could have it. * * * Mr. Low did not say anything to me to give time beyond the outlawing of the note. He told me not to let it outlaw." The money was paid to the bank on the 9th day of December, 1884, the action was commenced on the next day, and on the next day thereafter the note would have become outlawed. The plaintiff had a right to commence the action unless the note had in fact been paid. Upon the question as to whether the note was paid or not the testimony was conflicting. The defendant testified: "I paid the note by leaving the money due on it in the Bank of San Luis Obispo on the 9th day of December, 1884, and took a receipt for the money to be applied on the note. I paid the principal and interest due on the note by leaving the money with the Bank of San Luis Obispo, after having first had an understanding with the plaintiff to that effect. * * * The understanding with the bank when I paid the money to it was that it should be applied on the note in payment of the principal and interest due on it, and I paid it in good faith." On the other hand, the president and cashier of the bank both testified that the defendant deposited the money in the bank in his own name, and to his own credit, and then went away to try to get a new note with which to take up the old one, and that he subsequently drew all of this money out of the bank upon his own check.

The testimony in reference to the withdrawal of the money was objected to by the defendant as irrelevant and immaterial, and the objection overruled. We think the ruling proper. The testimony was admissible as tending to show that the defendant placed the money in the bank in his own name, and for his own use, and not as a payment of his note. The court instructed the jury upon the question of payment very fully and clearly, and in commencing one of its instructions upon this subject used these words: "This is a question of fact; and the main question, as it seems to me, is the question of payment." It is claimed that in so saying the court erred, because it thereby expressed an opinion with respect to a matter of fact, and, in effect, took from the jury the consideration of the question as to whether the note had been assigned or indorsed to the plaintiff or not. We see no merit in this point. There was no conflict in reference to the indorsement and transfer of the note, and nearly all of the testimony was in relation to the question of payment. The words complained of added nothing to the instruction, but they in no way trench, so far as we can see, upon that provision of the constitution which says that "judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law." Section 19, art. 6. The defendant requested the court to give to the jury an instruction which reads as follows: "If you find from the evidence that before the commencement of this action the defendant paid to the Bank of San Luis Obispo the amount due on said note at that time, the fact that the defendant, subsequent to the commencement of this action, drew said money from said bank cuts no figure in the case, and you must find for the defendant." The instruction was written with a pencil, and the court declined to consider it for that reason. Whether the reason assigned for refusing to give the instruction was a valid one or not, it is not necessary to determine. If given, the instruction would have been misleading and erroneous, and it might have been refused on that ground. It would have told the jury, in effect, that if the defendant, before the commencement of the action, paid to the bank the amount of money due on the note, the verdict must be in his favor, whether the money was paid for the use of the plaintiff, and to be applied on his note, or upon his own account, and to be placed to his own credit. This is evidently not law, and it is not true, therefore, that the fact that defendant subsequently drew the money from the bank cut no figure in the case. We find nothing in the record calling for a reversal of the judgment, and therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

77 Cal. 164

Ex parte McNULTY. (No. 20,439.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 28, 1888.)

1. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS—REGULATION OF PRACTICE—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Act Cal. April 1, 1878, entitled "An act supplemental to and amendatory of an act to regulate the practice of medicine in the state of California," and requiring persons practicing medicine and surgery to possess certain qualifications, and to have a certificate from a board of examiners, which certificate may be revoked by the board for unprofessional conduct, is, in toto, constitutional, and valid.

2. SAME—PRACTICING AFTER CERTIFICATE REVOKED—HABEAS CORPUS.

Section 1 of the above act declares the certificate conclusive as to the right of the person named therein to practice in any part of the state. Section 7 prescribes a penalty for practicing "without first having procured a certificate." Held, that the penalty is not prescribed for one who has obtained a certificate, but engaged in practice after the certificate had been revoked for unprofessional conduct; and a conviction on such ground will justify a discharge on habeas corpus.

SEARLS, C. J., dissenting.

In bank. On habeas corpus. From conviction in superior court of city and county of San Francisco; J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

McAllister & Bergin, for petitioner. Taylor & Haight and George E. Harpham, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The petitioner, P. Roscoe McNulty, is imprisoned by force of a judgment of the lower court upon conviction of what is asserted to be a crime under the act of the legislature, entitled, "An act supplemental to and amendatory of an act to regulate the practice of medicine in the state of California," (approved April 3, 1876,) which became a law April 1, 1878. St. 1877-78, p. 918. This act requires, generally, that every person practicing medicine or surgery shall possess certain qualifications, and shall have issued to him a certificate from one of three boards of examiners, each board to be appointed by one of three certain medical societies named in said act. It is provided, also, that a certificate may be revoked by the board granting it, when its holder has been guilty of "unprofessional conduct."

The first contention of counsel for petitioner, that the statute above mentioned is, in toto, unconstitutional, and therefore entirely void, has been determined the other way by this court in Ex parte Frazer, 54 Cal. 94. In that case it was held that the general frame-work of this statute was not in violation of the constitution, although no opinion was expressed as to the validity of certain independent provisions which it contains. The contention that the police court of San Francisco, in which the prosecution was commenced, had no jurisdiction of the offense sought to be charged against petitioner, because it is punishable by imprisonment for 365 days, need not, under the view which we take of another point in the case, be here determined. And the same may be said of the position taken by petitioner that, under the authority of Ex parte Cox, 63 Cal. 21, the legislature could not delegate to the board of examiners the power to declare by rules and regulations what should constitute "unprofessional conduct," and thus, by its own act, establish a crime; and, further, that if such power could be delegated, then, as in this case no rules declaring what should constitute unprofessional conduct had been adopted, petitioner is in the position of one who has been convicted under a void ex post facto law. There are also some other points made by counsel, which we do not think necessary to be here discussed. The complaint upon which petitioner was tried was insufficient, and, in our opinion, the demurrer to it should have been sustained. It is true that, generally, the sufficiency of a complaint, or an indictment, cannot be inquired into on habeas corpus. Where the complaint, though inartificially drawn, shows an evident attempt to state the essential facts which constitute the crime sought to be charged, the defect in the statement would not warrant the discharge of the defendant. It is true, also, that, upon habeas corpus, the court will not, ordinarily, look into the sufficiency of the evidence to prove the facts which constitute the offense. But when the facts charged, or attempted to be charged, in the complaint or indictment, and proved by the evidence, do not constitute any public offense, then the defendant will, upon habeas corpus, be discharged. Ex parte Kearny, 55 Cal. 215. Now, in this case it clearly appears that in the police court and in the superior court, to which an appeal was taken, the case was tried, and the petitioner convicted upon the theory that the complaint stated, or attempted to state, and the evidence showed the following facts, and none other, viz.. The petitioner, having regularly received a diploma from a recognized medical college of Pennsylvania, made application on January 8, 1884, to one of the boards of examiners constituted under said statute above mentioned for a certificate; and on said day said board issued to him a certificate in due form, as provided for in said statute, and he commenced the practice of his profession. Afterwards, on August 25, 1885, the said board made an order revoking said certificate for "unprofessional conduct" on the part of petitioner, consisting in this: That he had in the San Francisco Chronicle newspaper, and in a printed pamphlet, advertised himself as a specialist in certain enumerated diseases. After the action by the board, the petitioner continued to practice medicine; and for thus continuing to practice he was charged, tried, convicted, and punished. But in our opinion this conduct on the part of petitioner did not constitute a criminal offense, or subject him to any punishment under the statute in question. Section 1 of the said act of 1878, after providing for the certificate, declares that "such certificate shall be conclusive as to the right of the person named therein to practice medicine and surgery in any part of the state." And the only penal clause, or clause creating a criminal offense, in the act is contained in section 7, and is as follows: "Any person practicing medicine or surgery in this state, without first having procured a certificate so to do from one of the boards of examiners appointed by one of the societies mentioned in section 2 of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be subject to the penalties provided in section 13 of the act, to which this act is amendatory and supplemental." Nothing is declared in this act to be a crime except practicing "without first having procured a certificate." Practicing after an order of the board revoking the certificate for unprofessional conduct is not declared to be a crime, and no penalty is attached to it. Respondent's position, really, is that the legislature must have intended such conduct to be a criminal offense. It would be vain to inquire what intent lurked in the minds of the persons who happened to be members of the legislature when the act was passed. It certainly would be a forced thing to imagine their intent to be that a man should lose his liberty for the violation of any vague, undefined notion of unprofessional conduct which might, after the fact, be entertained by certain individuals constituting a board of examiners. At all events, the question whether or not the conduct in question is made a crime must be determined from the language used in the statute, and we find there nothing that declares such conduct to be a criminal offense. Nor is there anything in what is left of the act of 1876 (although no reference is made to that act in the complaint) which makes the conduct ascribed to petitioner a crime. Constructive crimes—crimes built up by courts with the aid of inference, implication, and strained interpretation—are repugnant to the spirit and letter of English and American criminal law. Let the petitioner be discharged.

I concur: SHARPSTEIN, J

I dissent: SEARLS, C. J.

THORNTON, J., (concurring.) I concur in the conclusion reached by Justice MCFARLAND, and am inclined to concur in the reasons given by him for such conclusion. But I cannot hold that the legislature has the constitutional power to enact a law punishing a physician who has been decided to be competent to practice, as was the case with the petitioner here, when a certificate was issued to him, for what is styled "unprofessional conduct," and as advertising himself in a newspaper and in a printed pamphlet as a specialist in certain enumerated diseases. This goes beyond the police power, under which power the statute to be considered was enacted. That a rule of professional conduct by a board of medical men prohibiting such advertisements, and declaring them unprofessional, can be declared a misdemeanor, and punished, would extend the police power beyond whatever has been allowed. As well might the board declare that wearing any other hat than one of a white color, by a physician, should be unprofessional conduct, and cause it to be punished as a misdemeanor. The advertisement of the character mentioned does no harm to any one. It may be of benefit to the public, by giving to the subjects of the diseases mentioned information of the existence and residence of a person who has peculiar skill in curing them. Such laws are passed to prevent injury to the community, not to prevent or exclude a benefit to it. We are told that at one time the able and celebrated Hahnemann, a competent and properly licensed physician, was prosecuted and persecuted in a German state for compounding his own medicines, under a law enacted in the interest of apothecaries. I cannot conclude that such a statute here could be regarded as a valid exercise of power under our constitution. Professional etiquette prescribed by a class of men so eminent in standing as the medical practitioners of our state is a matter to be regarded and respected, but it has its limits, and I cannot conceive that a violation of it by a competent physician can ever be by the state made a penal offense. The rules in regard to such etiquette between the members of the medical, as between those of the legal, profession, must find their enforcement from a source other than the state. It is highly proper and just that it should be so. As the state cannot make the conduct of petitioner penal directly, it cannot do so indirectly. To hold as contended here by counsel adverse to the claims of petitioner would be to affirm the validity of a statute in which an attempt is seemingly made to accomplish that indirectly which cannot be directly done. For the reasons given above, the petitioner, in my judgment, should be discharged from custody.

PATERSON, J., (concurring.) There is no doubt that the exercise of the right to practice medicine, or to pursue any other lawful employment, may be regulated by law; but the right is one of the privileges and immunities in which the citizen is entitled to be secured and protected under the constitution and laws of the state. In Ex parte Cox, 63 Cal. 21, it appeared that the petitioner had been convicted of a misdemeanor, consisting of a violation of one of the rules and regulations of the board of state viticultural commissioners. This court there said: "The legislature had no authority to confer on the officer or board the power of declaring what acts should constitute a misdemeanor. The legislative power of the state is vested in the senate and assembly. That power could not, as to the case before us, be delegated to the officer or board." In this case, even if it be conceded that the legislature could delegate to the board of examiners the power to declare by rules and regulations what should constitute unprofessional conduct, and thus by its own act establish a crime, it is sufficient to say that no such rules or regulations have ever been prescribed. Before one can be convicted of a crime there must be some rule of action prescribing with some certainty and expressing intelligibly the sovereign will. Whatever may be said of the right of the board of examiners to revoke the license of the petitioner to practice medicine, and thus cast upon him the odium which must always follow such an expulsion from the ranks of reputable practitioners, the liberty of the petitioner cannot be made to depend upon a thing so vague and uncertain as the undefined views of the members of the board as to what constitutes unprofessional conduct. In every case, to constitute crime, there must be a union of act and intent. How can it be said there is an intent to commit a crime where the law, which it is claimed has been violated, exists only in the minds of individuals? The authorities upon which the respondent relies, namely, State v. Board, 32 Minn. 324, 20 N. W. Rep. 238; In re Smith, 10 Wend. 449, are not in point so far as the question of crime is concerned. The first case cited was a mandamus to compel the state medical examining board to issue to the applicant a certificate. The other was certiorari to annul an order expelling Smith from a medical society, and declaring him incapable of practicing medicine.

PEOPLE v. LEONG SING. (No. 20,384.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 24, 1888.)

HOMICIDE—INDICTMENT—VARIANCE—PRESUMPTION ON APPEAL.

A conviction upon an indictment charging the murder of Leong Chin will not be reversed because the evidence shows deceased's name to have been Leong Chung, where the record does not purport to contain all the evidence, as, in such case, deceased will be presumed to have borne both names.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

Indictment against Leong Sing for the murder of Leong Chin. Verdict of guilty, and judgment thereon, from which defendant appealed.

Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People. Jas. H. Smith, for appellant.

FOOTE, C. The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree. From the judgment rendered against him, and an order denying a new trial, he has appealed. The most important point made by counsel for the reversal of the judgment is, as alleged, that the evidence in the record shows conclusively, without any conflict whatever, that the defendant did not kill and murder one Leong Chin, as charged in the information, but that if he killed and murdered any human being it was one Leong Chung, whose name is not mentioned or referred to in any way in the information or record, so as to be identified as the same person as Leong Chin. Of course, if it affirmatively appeared from the record that the defendant was charged with the murder of one man, and the proof showed that he had murdered another, the defendant could not be there punished, as there he would have been tried for an offense of which the proof showed him not to be guilty. But it seems to us, in this case, that even admitting that the information charges the murder of Leong Chin, and the proof, so far as it appears in the bill of exceptions, shows the murder of Leong Chung, by the defendant, yet he might still have been lawfully convicted of the offense charged in the information. The bill of exceptions nowhere states that the evidence therein set forth is all the evidence which was had at the trial. And it will be presumed in favor of the correctness of the verdict and judgment, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary in the record, that the jury had before them evidence that Leong Chin and Leong Chung were identical; that the man killed and murdered had two names, by either of which he was equally well known. It has been heretofore held by the supreme court, in a case where a defendant was charged with the larceny of the property of one Sang Hop, that proof showing his personal name to be Yup Chin, and his business name Sang Hop, was sufficient to uphold a verdict of guilty of the offense charged. People v. Leong Quong, 60 Cal. 107. Further, it has been said that where the bill of exceptions prepared by the defendant does not affirmatively show that the venue was not proven on the trial, this court will presume that it was proven, and refuse to reverse the judgment. People v. Marks, 72 Cal. 47, 13 Pac. Rep. 149. In the case of People v. Huff, 72 Cal. 118, 13 Pac. Rep. 168, the defendant claimed a reversal of the judgment, because, as he alleged, the record did not show affirmatively that the judge was present at a view by the jury of the premises where the offense charged was committed. The appellate court held that it was incumbent upon the defendant to show affirmatively that the judge was not present at the view, and that, the record being silent as to the matter, it would be presumed he was present. If the venue is not proven, and it affirmatively appears from the bill of exceptions that it was not, of course the defendant could not be legally adjudged guilty. So here, if it affirmatively appeared that the defendant had not killed Leong Chin, but had killed someone else, the verdict and judgment could not stand. But the question arises, are we permitted to say, from the record here, that there was no evidence before the jury which made it evident that Leong Chin and Leong Chung were identical, and the person murdered was called both Leong Chin and Leong Chung? We cannot say that there may not have been evidence of this sort which established the fact that Leong Chin was Leong Chung, and that the defendant was proved to have killed and murdered that person as charged in the information, because the bill of exceptions does not purport to contain all the evidence adduced on the trial. People v. Marks, 72 Cal. 47, 13 Pac. Rep. 149. There is nothing in the record which shows affirmatively that Leong Chin was not identically the same person as Leong Chung. The fact that there may have been omitted from the bill of exceptions proof which showed that the murdered man was called by both names should not avail the defendant, who did not, on his trial in the court below, raise the point of variance between the proof and the allegations of the information to obtain a reversal here. To do that he should show error affirmatively; should show that there was no evidence that the two names were both borne by the murdered man, as all omissions and uncertainties in a bill of exceptions preferred by him are to be construed against him. People v. Williams, 45 Cal. 27.

The other points made by counsel for the appellant do not require discussion. There is no merit in them under the record before us. No prejudicial error appearing, we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

I concur: BELCHER, C. C.

I concur in the conclusion: HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

MALLAGH v. MALLAGH et al. (No. 11,859.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 26, 1888.)

TRUSTS—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS—STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

Plaintiff, who owned two pieces of land, a ranch and a town lot, which were mortgaged, conveyed them to her son without consideration, that he might effect a sale, which he failed to do. The land was sold under the mortgages, the mortgagees becoming the purchasers; but the legality of the sale being questioned, plaintiff continued in possession, the son managing the property till a compromise was effected by which the ranch was sold to a third person, most of the proceeds paid to the mortgagees, and the town lot conveyed by them to the son. Another sum was paid by the son to the mortgagees, the origin of which cannot be accounted for, except as proceeds of the produce of the land. Held, that no express trust existed in the son as to plaintiff's land, but a constructive trust, to which the statute of frauds had no application.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; D. S. GREGORY, Judge.

On motion for rehearing. For former opinion, see 16 Pac. Rep. 535.

Venable & Goodchild and W. H. Spencer, (Garber & Bishop, of counsel,) for appellants. Graves, Turner & Graves, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. Action to declare a trust. The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendants appeal. The facts, as shown by the record, are as follows: In 1877 the plaintiff, who was a Spanish woman, not understanding the English language, owned two pieces of real property, one of which was a ranch of 500 acres, and the other a lot in San Luis Obispo. Both of these were mortgaged, and the interest was eating up the property. In this condition of affairs she conveyed the property to her son David, at his suggestion, in order to enable him to manage the same and try to effect a sale. The court finds, and we think the evidence shows, that no consideration was paid for this deed, and that David was the agent of his mother with respect to the property. He did not succeed in effecting a sale, and the property was sold under foreclosure proceedings to the persons who held the mortgage. It was claimed, however, in behalf of the mortgagor, that the proceedings on the foreclosure sale were void; and the plaintiff and her other children continued in possession of the property, David managing the same and disposing of the produce of the ranch, and receiving the money arising from the sales thereof. A compromise was effected by the sale and conveyance of the ranch to one Graig for $7,000, the payment to the purchasers at the sheriff's sale of $6,700, and the conveyance by them to David of the town lot, which is the property in controversy. This sum of $6,700, as well as a previous payment of $1,701.50, was paid to the mortgagees by David. It affirmatively appears that the payment of $6,700 came from the sale of the ranch to Graig. And while it is not shown whose money the $1,701.50 was, the inference is that it was out of the proceeds of the sales of the produce. The fact of the agency being established, and the money for the produce having been received by the agent, and not accounted for by him, the presumption is that he used that money to make the payment. It cannot be presumed that he used his own funds to make payments in relation to the subject-matter of the agency. But if he did use his own funds for this payment, it would make no difference, for it is clear that an agent cannot acquire his principal's property by using his own funds to make what is in effect a redemption of the subject-matter of the agency.

These being the facts, it would seem that the law is perfectly plain. There was no express trust, but a constructive one, arising from the conduct of David and the confidential relation in which he stood to the plaintiff, and the statute of frauds has no application. Brison v. Brison, 17 Pac. Rep. 689; Wood v. Rabe, 96 N. Y. 426. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BOARD OF SUPERVISORS. (No. 12,786.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 27, 1888.)

TAXATION—TAXABLE PROPERTY—MORTGAGE TO STATE.

Const. Cal. art. 13, § 4, provides that a mortgage shall, for the purpose of taxation, be treated as an interest in the property, and, with certain exceptions, the value of the property so affected, less the value of such security, shall be taxed to the owner. Section 1 provides that property belonging to the state shall be exempt from taxation. Held that the owner of land on which there is a mortgage to the regents of the university is entitled to have the amount of the mortgage deducted from the value of the property for the purposes of taxation, notwithstanding the fact that such amount, as an interest of the state, will not be otherwise taxed.

In bank. On certiorari.

George A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., and Langhorne & Miller, for petitioner.
George Flournoy, Jr., (Flournoy & Mhoon, of counsel,) for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. Mrs. C. L. Tams is, and during the fiscal year 1888 has been, the owner of certain real property of the value of $142,845, situated in the city and county of San Francisco, upon which there was and is a mortgage executed to and held by the regents of the university of California to secure the sum of $63,000. The assessor of said city and county assessed said property to Mrs. Tams for said fiscal year at its full value, viz., $142,845, and refused to deduct therefrom the amount of said mortgage, or any part thereof. Upon application duly made to the respondent, sitting as a board of equalization, the latter ordered the amount of the mortgage ($63,000) to be deducted from the full cash value of the land, thus establishing the value of the latter to be assessed to the mortgagor at $79,845. To review this action of the board this writ of certiorari was sued out, the petitioner contending that the board had no power to deduct the mortgage, because, being held by the regents of the university, it is the property of the state, (as decided in Hollister v. Sherman, 63 Cal. 38,) and therefore not taxable. And, as the point is not made here that the question thus presented cannot be reached on certiorari, we will examine it on the merits.

Section 4 of article 13 of the constitution provides that "a mortgage * * * by which a debt is secured shall, for the purposes of assessment and taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the property affected thereby. Except as to railroad and other quasi public corporations, in case of debts so secured, the value of the property so affected by such mortgage, * * * less the value of such security, shall be assessed and taxed to the owner of the property." Section 1 of the same article provides that the property belonging to the state shall be exempt from taxation. And it is argued by petitioner, as before stated, that, in the case before us, the whole value of the land should be assessed to the mortgagor, because the mortgage is exempt from taxation. But the real question is, not what property is exempt from taxation, but what property is assessable to the mortgagor? Section 4, therefore, governs the case, and not section 1. And the rule established by section 4, that the value of the property, less the value of the mortgage, shall be assessed to the mortgagor, is general, and applies to all mortgages not especially excepted, the only exceptions being those made by railroad and other quasi public corporations. All mortgagors are given the benefit of the rule, except the corporations above named. It is true that section 4 also provides that the value of the mortgage shall be assessed and taxed to the owner thereof; but the fact that the mortgage happens to belong to the state, and is therefore exempt from taxation, does not render nugatory the provision that there shall be assessed to the mortgagor only the value of the land less the value of the mortgage. If the mortgage were held by an individual it would be assessed to him. Being held by the state it is not taxable; but that is the case with every kind of property. If private property, it is taxable; if public property, it is not taxable. And the right of the mortgagor is not affected at all by the circumstance that the mortgage is or is not assessable and taxable. It is urged that under this rule the state will lose a great many taxes. But the state should not expect to collect taxes on her own property; much less should she expect somebody else to pay them. Under the rule contended for by petitioner Mrs. Tams would have to pay taxes on $63,000 belonging to the state. The anticipated losses of the state will therefore simply be like the fancied losses of other people who fail to get what they ought not to have. In our opinion the value of the mortgage to the regents of the university was properly deducted from the full value of the property; and the order of the board of equalization sought to be reviewed is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. JANUARY. (No. 20,168.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 28, 1888.)

CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—RECORD—INSTRUCTIONS. *

Pen. Code Cal. § 1207, provides that the judgment roll consists of (1) the indictment or information and a copy of the minutes of the plea or demurrer; (2) a copy of the minutes of the trial; (3) the charges given or refused, and the indorsements thereon; (4) a copy of the judgment. Section 1176 provides that "when written charges have been presented, given, or refused, or when the charges have been taken down by the reporter, the questions presented in such charges need not be excepted to or embodied in a bill of exceptions; but the written charges on the report, with the indorsements showing the action of the court, form part of the record, and any error in the decision of the court may be taken advantage of, on appeal, in like manner as if presented on a bill of exceptions." By section 1127 the court is required to indorse and sign its decisions upon all written charges presented. Held, that section 1176, by implication, requires like action upon the report of the instructions given by the court upon its own motion, and that a copy of the alleged charge of the court, verified by the short-hand reporter, but upon which was indorsed the trial judge's refusal to certify to its correctness, was not a part of the record. THORNTON, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; W. C. VAN FLEET, Judge.

McKune & George, N. Greene Curtis, and A. L. Hart, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

SEARLS, C. J. Defendant was indicted by the grand jury of the county of Sacramento for the crime of embezzlement, in having fraudulently appropriated to his own use the sum of $39,549.25, the money and property of one W. A. January, intrusted to him as the clerk, agent, and servant of the said W. A. January. A trial was had before a jury, and a verdict finding defendant guilty of the charge set forth in the indictment was rendered. Thereupon a judgment was rendered by the superior court of Sacramento county to the effect that the defendant be imprisoned in the state prison for the term of 10 years. From this judgment an appeal was taken to this court. No bill of exceptions setting forth the evidence in the case was ever settled by the judge of the court below, and hence the appeal is to be heard upon the judgment roll. What purports to be a copy of the charge of the court to the jury is embodied in the transcript, and certified by the clerk, but without authentication by the court, judge, or reporter. The cause was tried in 1885, and the appeal taken to this court in 1886. The only attempt at an authentication of the charge of the court to the jury is found in a statement filed in this court May 16, 1888, containing substantially, but not literally, a copy of the alleged charge of the court, verified by the short-hand reporter on the 2d day of May, 1888, as being a correct transcript of the charge actually given, upon which is indorsed, under date of May 16, 1888, the refusal of the judge who tried the cause to certify to the truthfulness of the charge. It is claimed by respondent that the purported copy of the charge forms no part of the judgment roll, and, not being incorporated in a bill of exceptions, cannot be reviewed by this court. The judgment roll, or "record of the action," consists of "(1) the indictment or information, and a copy of the minutes of the plea or demurrer; (2) a copy of the minutes of the trial; (3) the charges given or refused, and the indorsements thereon; and (4) a copy of the judgment." Pen. Code, § 1207.

Section 1176 of the same Code provides that "when written charges have been presented, given, or refused, or when the charges have been taken down by the reporter, the questions presented in such charges need not be excepted to or embodied in a bill of exceptions, but the written charges or the report, with the indorsements showing the action of the court, form part of the record, and any error in the decision of the court thereon may be taken advantage of, on appeal, in like manner as if presented in a bill of exceptions." By section 1127 the court is required to indorse and sign its decision upon all written charges presented; and section 1176, by implication, requires like action upon the report of the instructions given by the court upon its own motion. There are, then, two methods by which counsel may have the action of the court, in giving or refusing instructions, reviewed: (1) By embodying such instructions in a bill of exceptions to be settled, allowed, and certified by the judge. (2) By filing with the court the written instructions given or refused, with the indorsement of the judge thereon; and as to the instructions given by the court on its own motion, and taken down by the reporter, by having a copy or report thereof in long-hand, with the indorsement of the action of the court thereon, filed with the clerk in like manner. The clerk cannot give verity to what purports to be the instructions given or refused by inserting them in the judgment roll. He is not in a position to know at all times what action the court has taken, and, were it otherwise, the power of verification is not, and should not, for many and weighty reasons, be vested in him. The reasoning of MCKINSTRY, J., in People v. Flahave, 58 Cal. 249, although applied to a case of written instructions, is equally applicable to the case at bar. It is as follows: "The clerk of the superior court is not authorized to insert in the record any paper purporting to set forth instructions, whether headed 'Instructions for the prosecution' or 'for defendant,' or not, unless such instructions are shown, by the court's indorsement, to have been given or refused, in whole or in part. In no other way can that officer be made acquainted with the action of the court with respect to the instructions" as presented by counsel." Like considerations apply to the attempted authentication of the record by the reporter. It is true, the report of the official reporter is to be taken as prima facie evidence of its truth; but we are not considering it as evidence of facts, but as to whether or not it is verity itself, and whether such verity is established in the mode provided by law. To hold that the action of the court is to be measured by the report of the reporter would, in effect, be to transfer the judicial function of the judge to the phonographic reporter for all purposes of review. A most important duty devolves upon a judge in certifying to the accuracy of the record of his proceedings. This duty cannot be discharged by another, or taken from him, except by some direct and specific provision of law. We conclude that as the charges of the court, with "indorsements thereon," form a part of the record, so the charges without such indorsement are not entitled to a place in the record, and neither the action of the reporter nor clerk can make them such without such indorsement by the court or judge; and the report of the charges given by the court is placed by section 1176, Pen. Code, in the same category, and is without force, as a record, unless indorsed in like manner. It follows that what purports to be the instructions of the court cannot be reviewed on this appeal. The demurrer to the indictment was properly overruled. It was drawn for a violation of the provisions of section 508 of the Penal Code, and the facts stated are sufficient to bring the case within that section. People v. Gray, 66 Cal. 271, 5 Pac. Rep. 240; People v. Treadwell, 69 Cal. 227, 10 Pac. Rep. 502. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; McFARLAND, J.; MCKINSTRY, J.

THORNTON, J., (concurring.) I regard the bill of exceptions in this case as a part of the record, and on examining it I find no error in the ruling of the court. I do not concur, but dissent from the views expressed in the above opinion drawn by the chief justice. I concur in the conclusion that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

77 Cal. 139

HABENICHT v. LISSAK. (No. 11,034.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 27, 1888.)

1. PLEDGE—SALE BY PLEDGOR—PRICE TO BE PAID PLEDGEE—EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENT.

A pledgor of goods sold them to defendant, who agreed to pay the purchase money to the pledgee, to be applied to the payment of the debt for which they were pledged, and defendant obtained possession of part of the goods by getting credit from the pledgee. Upon defendant's default, the goods were sold by the pledgee at auction. Held, that a complaint by the pledgor's assignee against defendant, setting forth the above facts, and praying for the difference between the price realized at the auction sale and the price agreed to be paid by defendant, stated a cause of action, and not facts showing an equitable assignment to the pledgee of the debt due by defendant to the pledgor.

2. SAME—PLEADING.

An allegation in the complaint that defendant was indulged for over a year longer than his original agreement allowed him to pay for and receive the goods, is a sufficient averment that a reasonable time was given him to comply with his contract before resale.

3. SAME—EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY.

The transactions between the pledgor and the pledgee were competent evidence, as tending to establish that defendant knew the goods were pledged when he bought them, and that he did not expect to receive them unless he paid for them.

4. SAME—EVIDENCE—PAROL.

Parol evidence is admissible to show that the goods sold by the contract and those offered for delivery by the pledgee were identical.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

Henry E. Highton, for appellant. Pillsbury & Blanding, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action for a breach of contract upon sale of a large number of bags. They were sold to the defendant by Hughes & Co., and were to be delivered by Rogers, Meyer & Co., who held them in pledge for a debt due to them from Hughes & Co. The claim of Hughes & Co. was assigned by them to the plaintiff. The defendant did not pay for the bags as he agreed to do, and they were sold at auction by the firm who held them in pledge. The price they brought was credited upon the debt which Hughes & Co. owed to Rogers, Meyer & Co., and became a payment pro tanto to Hughes & Co., and this suit was instituted to recover from the defendant the difference between the price he had agreed to pay Hughes & Co. for the bags, less the amount he had paid them and the amount of money which they brought at auction. The action appears to have been brought under section 3311 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows: "The detriment caused by the breach of a buyer's agreement to accept and pay for personal property, the title to which is not vested in him, is deemed to be: (1) If the property has been resold, pursuant to section thirty hundred and forty-nine, the excess, if any, of the amount due from the buyer, under the contract, over the net proceeds of the resale." In this instance the property pledged was sold by the pledgee to reimburse himself for the purchase price, and the claim of Hughes & Co. was assigned in writing to the plaintiff, Habenicht. All the steps necessary under the statutes to make a legal and fair sale of the property held in pledge were duly taken, and no unfairness appears in the sale. The plaintiff had judgment as prayed for, and from that and an order refusing a new trial the defendant has appealed.

The facts of the case seem to be that the bags were originally sold by Rogers, Meyer & Co. to Hughes & Co. under a certain written contract. They did not pay for them at once, but did inspect, receive, and accept them in such a way as to make the delivery to them valid, and they then allowed the bags to remain in pledge with Rogers, Meyer & Co., to be given up to them by the latter as they should pay for them. Thereafter Hughes & Co. did make payments to Rogers, Meyer & Co. on account of their debt due for the bags; Hughes & Co. being the owners of the bags, although they had transferred their possession to Rogers, Meyer & Co. in pledge. There is no question but that the title to the bags passed to Hughes & Co., for Mr. Hughes, as a witness, says he "received every consignment of these bags as they arrived, and accepted them. These bags came on a dozen vessels. As each lot arrived I inspected and accepted it. I examined the bags on the wharf as they came out of the ship." Civil Code, § 1141. When the title to the bags passed to Hughes & Co., and they had pledged them to Rogers, Meyer & Co., the defendant, Lissak, with full notice and knowledge that the bags had been thus pledged, agreed to buy them from Hughes & Co., and to pay the price agreed upon into the hands of Rogers, Meyer & Co., for the account of Hughes & Co., upon the delivery to him of the bags as he thus paid for them. The particular bags which are involved in this controversy were not paid for or delivered to the defendant, and he never had title thereto. But it appears to us from the evidence that he could have had possession of them if he had paid for them as he agreed to do. His main defense seems to be that under the warranty, express or implied, the bags sold to him were to be merchantable as "return bags," and that they were not fit for the purpose as warranted. The jury passed upon that question as submitted to them upon the evidence, and we are not prepared to say that they were wrong. The complaint, in our opinion, states facts sufficient for a cause of action for the breach of a buyer's agreement, where the title to personal property has not passed. Nor do we concur in the view of defendant's counsel that the language of the complaint shows that Rogers, Meyer & Co. were the equitable assignees of the claim due from the defendant to Hughes & Co.

The complaint states that Rogers, Meyer & Co. were the pledgees of the goods of Hughes & Co., which they sold to the defendant with his knowledge that they were so pledged, and that he agreed to pay the money he owed for them to Rogers, Meyer & Co., in order that it might be applied to the payment of the price for the goods which Hughes & Co. primarily owed. He was getting credit from Hughes & Co. for so much of the purchase price due them from him, and in that way getting possession of the goods. In other words, knowing when he bought the bags that they were in pledge, he bought them with the understanding that if he got possession of them he must pay for them as delivered to him, and that the money must go through the hands of Rogers, Meyer & Co., to Hughes & Co., their debtor. This was not an assignment to Rogers, Meyer & Co. of the fund or debt he owed Hughes & Co. There was no privity of contract alleged in the complaint or shown in the evidence between the defendant and Rogers, Meyer & Co. All that the defendant had to do with them was to get possession of the goods he bought, knowing them to be in pledge for Hughes & Co.'s debt. To get possession he paid money belonging to Hughes & Co. into the hands of Rogers, Meyer & Co., for Hughes & Co.'s account. We do not perceive anything in the record which would have justified the court below in granting the request asked for. The plaintiff had made out at least a good case as set out in the complaint, there being sufficient evidence to have sustained a verdict, and that evidence corresponded with the allegations of the complaint.

It was necessary to show the transactions of Hughes & Co. with Rogers, Meyer & Co. in order to make it evident that the defendant knew the goods were pledged when he bought them, and that he did not expect to receive them unless he paid for them through Rogers, Meyer & Co. There was no evidence introduced to vary the terms of a written contract.

The bought and sold notes between Hughes & Co. and the defendant did not specify any indeterminate lot of "return grain bags." They specified a lot of 720,000 such bags, i. e., a specific number of a certain quality of bags. All that was necessary was to make it certain that those sold by the contract and those offered for delivery were the identical same lot of bags, and that was admissible by parol evidence. 2 Whart. Ex. § 641, and note 1.

We cannot notice in detail the many exceptions to the introduction of evidence, but after carefully examining all of them we can see no error on the part of the trial court. The instructions as given to the jury were fair and in accordance with the law of the case. We perceive no error on the part of the court below in refusing or modifying instructions.

The complaint shows that the defendant was indebted for over a year longer than his original agreement allowed him to pay for and receive the bags. This is a sufficient averment that a reasonable time was given him to comply with his contract before receipt of the goods, and the proof sustains the averment.

No prejudicial error appears in the record. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C. ; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

YOLO COUNTY v. DUNN, Comptroller. (No. 12,562.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 27, 1888.)

POOR AND POOR-LAWS—SUPPORT—RIGHT OF COUNTY TO STATE AID.

Const. Cal. art. 4, § 12, authorizes the legislature to grant aid to institutions for aged persons in indigent circumstances, in proportion to the number of inmates; and that counties, cities, etc., providing for such persons, shall receive the same pro rata appropriations; the legislature (St. 1883, p. 380) granted to every such institution $100 per annum for each aged person maintained therein, and by the same act provided that "no institution which has less than ten" such persons shall be entitled to the aid. Held, that a county which provides for the maintenance of aged, indigent persons is entitled to the pro rata appropriation, whether or not there be as many as 10 such persons in any one institution within the county.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county; C. H. GAROUTTE, Judge.

George A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for appellant. W. J. McGee, (Robt. T. Devlin, of counsel,) for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The county of Yolo requested the state comptroller to draw his warrant on the state treasurer for an amount of money which had been audited and allowed by the state board of examiners to the county for its support and maintenance of aged persons in indigent circumstances. The comptroller refused to draw the warrant, and thereupon this proceeding was commenced to obtain a writ of mandate compelling him to do so. The court below granted the writ, and hence this appeal. The constitution provides that "the legislature shall have the power to grant aid to institutions conducted for the support and maintenance of minor orphans, or half orphans, or abandoned children, or aged persons in indigent circumstances,—such aid to be granted by a uniform rule, and proportioned to the number of inmates of such respective institutions;" and "that whenever any county, or city and county, or city or town, shall provide for the support of minor orphans, or half orphans, or abandoned children, or aged persons in indigent circumstances, such county, city and county, city or town, shall be entitled to receive the same pro rata appropriations as may be granted to such institutions under church or other control." Art. 4, § 22. In 1883 the legislature passed an act (St. 1883, p. 380) appropriating "to each and every institution in this state, conducted for the support and maintenance of aged persons in indigent circumstances, and either solely for that purpose or in connection with the support and maintenance of minor orphans, half orphans, and abandoned children, aid as follows: For each aged person in indigent circumstances, supported and maintained in any such institution, the sum of $100 per annum." The act then provides how books must be kept, and how claims for aid must be authenticated, and must be presented to and audited and allowed by the state board of examiners. And if a claim be audited and allowed it is made the duty of the comptroller to draw his warrant for the amount thereof, and of the treasurer to pay the warrant on presentation. Section 7 of the act provides as follows: "In order that the provisions of this act shall not be abused, it is hereby declared: First. That no institution which has less than ten aged indigent persons shall be deemed entitled to aid under this act. Second. That no person under the age of sixty years shall be deemed an aged person in indigent circumstances, within the meaning of this act. Third. That no person, for whose specific support there is paid to any such institution the sum of $15 or more per month, shall be entitled to aid under this act," etc.

It appears from the petition filed in this case that during the time for which it asked aid the petitioner had supported and maintained twelve aged persons in indigent circumstances, and that seven of them were kept in its county hospital, and five in other places. It is contended for appellant that all of the provisions of the statute, in reference to private institutions, apply to counties, cities, and towns; and that the latter are not entitled to receive any aid from the state for supporting aged persons in indigent circumstances, unless at least ten such persons are supported and maintained at the same time and in the same institution or place; and it is claimed that, as petitioner supported only seven such persons in its hospital building, the writ was improper.

erly granted. This contention cannot, in our opinion, be sustained. The statute does not in terms make any provision as to counties, cities, and towns, but is confined solely to private institutions. And the constitution, after providing that the legislature may grant aid to private institutions for the support of orphans and aged indigent persons, goes on to say that whenever such aid is granted, then any county, city, or town, for like services, shall be entitled to receive the same pro rata appropriations as may be granted to such institutions. In this, as will be observed, no limitation is found as to the number of persons who must be supported in order to entitle the county, city, or town to receive aid, or as to the place or places where they must be supported. In San Francisco v. Dunn, 69 Cal. 73, 10 Pac. Rep. 191, the same statute and section of the constitution were before the court for consideration, and it was held that, an appropriation having been made by the legislature for the support of aged persons in indigent circumstances by private institutions, the provisions of the constitution as to counties, cities and counties, cities and towns, become self-executing. Said the court: "The evident intent of the constitution is to vest in the legislature the discretion to grant state aid to institutions for support of orphans and indigent aged persons; and upon the exercise of that discretion to appropriate to the aid of counties, cities and counties, cities and towns, for similar purposes, pro rata amounts." The case was submitted upon the petition and a general demurrer thereto, and it was thereby admitted that the county provided for the support of all the indigent aged persons for which it asked aid. In our opinion it was immaterial whether all or any of them were kept in the hospital building. The only material facts were, were they aged persons in indigent circumstances, and did the county provide for their support and maintenance? These questions being answered in the affirmative, it was evident that the county was entitled to the relief sought.

We think the judgment as entered right, and therefore advise that it be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

POPE v. KIRCHNER. (No. 11,043.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 28, 1888.)

1. INSOLVENCY—PROCEDURE—NOTICE OF ADJUDICATION—PUBLICATION—MISNOMER.

Under California insolvency act, § 7, requiring notice of an adjudication of insolvency to be published and served, such notice is sufficient, although by a clerical error a wrong letter is used in the insolvent's name, the name being properly printed in two other places.

2. SAME—NOTICE—AFFIDAVIT OF MAILING.

Nor is the affidavit of mailing such notice defective because written to be sworn to by one person, whose name appears at the beginning, and actually subscribed and sworn to by another.

3. SAME.

Such affidavit is sufficient if it states that the notices were addressed to the creditors at their places of business, as stated in the schedule, although such schedule shows the residence of the creditors instead of the place of business; as, in the absence of proof to the contrary, after granting the discharge, the place of business and residence will be presumed to be the same.

4. SAME—MISNOMER OF CREDITOR.

A slight mistake in the spelling of a creditor's name, as the use of a "c" for an "e," will not vitiate such affidavit.

5. SAME—DISCHARGE—COLLATERAL ATTACK—INSUFFICIENT INVENTORY.

Although said statute requires an accurate description of the insolvent's estate, a statement of "debts due petitioner, $—," is sufficient after discharge, as against collateral attack.

6. SAME—INVENTORY—OMISSION OF WORTHLESS DEBTS.

Nor will it avoid the discharge that debts were omitted from the inventory, it appearing that they were worthless, and barred by limitation.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. LAWLER, Judge.

G. E. Harpman, for appellant. A. Morgenthal, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Action upon a promissory note. Defense, a discharge in insolvency. The points made relate to the validity of such discharge.

1. It is contended that the requisite notice of the adjudication of insolvency was not given. The statute provides that a copy of the order must be published, and in addition that it shall be served either personally or by mail. See section 7 of the Insolvency Act. The appellant objects to the publication, and also to the service. The objection to the publication is as follows: The order which was published is in these words: "In the matter of Herman Kirchner, an Insolvent Debtor. Herman Hirschner having filed in this court his petition, schedule, and inventory in insolvency, by which it appears that he is an insolvent debtor, the said Herman Kirchner is hereby declared," etc. It is perfectly apparent from the foregoing that the name "Hirschner" was a mere clerical error. And this appears upon the face of the order. The objection to the publication, therefore, is not well taken.

There are several grounds of objection to the service by mail: (a) It is said that the affidavit of deposit in the post-office was insufficient, because it was not signed by the person for whom it was drawn up. The affidavit begins as follows: "Herman Kirchner, being duly sworn, says," etc. It was signed by "V. W. GASKILL, Deputy County Clerk," and the certificate is: "Subscribed and sworn to this 20th day of April, 1881. JOHN F. WILLARD, Deputy County Clerk." The affidavit, therefore, was sworn to by the person who subscribed to it, who was Gaskill. And this being the case we think that the recital in the affidavit as to "Herman Kirchner being duly sworn" may be rejected as surplusage, and that the affidavit is to be considered as made by Gaskill. (b) The language of the affidavit is that the notice was addressed "one to each of said creditors at his place of business, as stated in said schedule." The address of the creditor in the schedule is given in a column headed "Residence of creditors;" and it is argued that, since no place of business is given in the schedule, the statement in the affidavit cannot be true. But in the first place, if the address was correctly given, the mistake of styling it a place of "business," when in fact it was a place of "residence," does not seem to be material. And in the second place it may be that the party resided at his place of business. There is no evidence that he did not, and, the certificate of discharge being prima facie evidence of the regularity of the proceedings, it is to be presumed that such was the case, in the absence of a showing to the contrary. The address given does not seem to be a very definite one; but, for all we know to the contrary, it may have been a very well-known place. The slight mistake in the spelling of the creditor's name, "McGilligan & Clark" instead of "Megilligan & Clark," is of no importance.

2. It is contended that the discharge was invalid, because of the insufficiency of the petition and inventory. The position is that the following statement of debts due the insolvent, viz., "Debts due petitioner $274," is not an "accurate description" of the estate, as required by section 4 of the insolvency act. But it seems to have satisfied the insolvency court. If the assignee had not been able to ascertain what the debts were by reason of the vagueness of the description, in all probability the court would not have granted the discharge. While the certificate of discharge is only prima facie evidence, yet we do not understand that upon a collateral attack the creditor can raise objections which amount to a special demurrer to the petition. If there is not a total absence of essential averments, but only an insufficiency in the statement thereof, a collateral attack upon the discharge cannot be made. Mogk v. Peterson, 17 Pac. Rep. 447.

It is argued, however, that some debts were omitted altogether from the inventory. In this regard the insolvent testified at the trial that he had not put in the inventory debts amounting to $650; that these debts were "outlawed," and that he could not get anything on them; and that he had not collected anything on them since. There was no evidence in contradiction of this. Taking the fact to be that the debts mentioned were utterly worthless and barred by limitation, we do not think their omission is ground for a collateral attack on the discharge. It is true that the insolvent should not take upon himself to decide what debts are worthless. And the insolvency courts should require full statements of the debts due to the insolvent. But where it is proven that the omitted debts were in fact worthless and barred by limitation, we are not prepared to say that the discharge can be collaterally attacked on the ground of the omission. The omission of these debts is claimed to amount to fraud and false swearing, but we see no ground for this position. The other matters do not require special notice.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

THORNTON, J., (concurring.) The affidavit of the deposit in the post-office was sufficient. If it was Kirchner's affidavit, it was sufficient, though not signed by him. In Ede v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 53, this was expressly held, and we think correctly held. If it was not Kirchner's affidavit, Deputy County Clerk Gaskill's affidavit was signed by him. It is immaterial that the affidavit commences, "Herman Kirchner being duly sworn," etc. It is evident that this was a clerical error or mistake, from the fact that the words just above quoted are followed by the statement "that he is a deputy clerk of the county of Alameda." It appears that Ryder was the clerk of the county, and Gaskill, the affiant, his deputy, in April, 1881, when the affidavit was made. We cannot perceive any tenable grounds authorizing the ruling that the insolvency court did not have jurisdiction. The facts appearing bring it within the ruling in Bennett v. His Creditors, 22 Cal. 38, which is applicable here.

On the foregoing grounds I concur in the judgment.

PEOPLE v. EASTMAN. (No. 20,436.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 28, 1883.)

LARCENY—INTENT—EVIDENCE.

Defendant was originally the owner of the property alleged to have been stolen, and had pledged it for a debt owing by him to the prosecuting witness. Defendant had worked for the prosecuting witness, and claimed wages for his services, and on refusal of the prosecuting witness to advance him money took the property in the day-time, without any concealment, and pledged it to another. Held, that the refusal to allow defendant to show that the prosecuting witness owed him for the services enough to satisfy the debt for which the property was pledged was reversible error, as it tended to show the intent with which the property was taken.¹

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; ROBERT MCGARVEY, Judge.

Yell & Searwell, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

FOOTE, C. The defendant was convicted of the larceny of a mare. From the judgment and an order denying him a new trial this appeal is taken.

¹That taking property openly, under a bona fide claim of right, is not larceny, see People v. Schultz, (Mich.) 38 N. W. Rep. 306; Howard v. State, (Tex.) 8 S. W. Rep. 306, and note. There must be a fraudulent intent at the time of the taking. Buchanan v. State, (Tex.) 9 S. W. Rep. 57; Bryant v. State, (Tex.) 8 S. W. Rep. 937. In general, as to what must be the character of the taking to constitute larceny, see Frazier v. State, (Ala.) 4 South Rep. 691, and note.

The evidence went to show that the defendant was originally the owner of the mare, and that she was in pledge to McClure, the prosecuting witness, for a debt which the defendant owed him; that the defendant had worked for McClure for two months, and claimed wages for his services; that under this state of facts, McClure declining to advance him some money, the defendant, in the day-time, and without any concealment, took the mare away from McClure's farm, and pledged her to another party for $10. The most important question to be determined by the jury, under the facts of this case, was the intent with which the defendant took and carried the mare off. It, therefore, seems to us that it was a material circumstance in the determining of that question whether the complaining witness owed the defendant wages which would have amounted to the sum of $30, for which the mare was pledged, for, if the defendant had taken the mare off under the honest belief that he had a right to do it, in view of the fact that he might, in good faith, have considered his unpaid claim for wages to have been sufficient to have reimbursed McClure for the amount due him on pledge, the jury would have been warranted in believing that the intention to steal was absent, although a trespass was committed. It is one thing to take and carry off personal property with the intention to steal, and another to take it away under a mistaken idea of legal rights honestly entertained; and any fact or circumstance which tends to throw light upon the actual intent of the party charged with the felonious taking is pertinent evidence, and should be allowed to go to the jury. From the fact that in this case the defendant was not allowed to show whether or not McClure had paid him or owed him for work and labor done for two months, we think he was prejudiced, and advise that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

CRIMINAL LAW—FORMER JEOPARDY—ARREST BY JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

The fact that one has been once arrested and examined before a magistrate and discharged is not a bar to a second arrest and examination on the same charge, as a person has not been once in jeopardy till put upon trial, in a court of competent jurisdiction, on indictment or information sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been charged with his deliverance.¹

In bank. Application for writ of habeas corpus.

Petitioner was arrested on a charge of grand larceny, and discharged on examination in justice's court in Trinity county. Afterwards he was arrested on same charge, and before a justice of a different township was held for trial. He sues out this writ on the ground of "once in jeopardy."

PEOPLE v. TRAVERS. (No. 20,398.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 28, 1888.)

CRIMINAL LAW—FORMER JEOPARDY—REVERSAL OF FORMER JUDGMENT.

A judgment of conviction upon an information for an attempt to commit burglary, which was afterwards, upon appeal by defendant, reversed, and a new trial awarded, will not bar further prosecution thereon, although defendant in his appeal therefrom did not ask a new trial, but only a reversal and his discharge from imprisonment.¹ McFARLAND, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. MURPHY, Judge.

Information for attempt to commit burglary. From a judgment of conviction an appeal was taken by defendant, and the judgment reversed. Upon a second trial defendant was again convicted, and appeals. For opinion on former appeal, see 15 Pac. Rep. 293.

Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People. Garret W. McEnerney, for appellant.

SEARLS, C. J. The defendant was informed against for an attempt to commit burglary, and was convicted. The appeal is taken from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. The only error relied upon is based upon the instruction of the court below, directing the jury to find for the state, upon the defendant's plea of once in jeopardy, and its refusal to instruct the jury to find for the defendant upon that plea. The facts upon which the plea of once in jeopardy is based are as follows: Defendant had been previously tried upon the same information, whereupon a verdict was rendered of "Guilty as charged," but without specifying whether the attempt to commit burglary was of the first degree, (committed in the night-time,) or of the second degree, (in the day-time.) Upon this verdict, so rendered, judgment was entered punishing defendant for a term of two years in the state prison. An appeal was taken from the judgment, and a reversal had, and new trial ordered by this court. On the going down of the remittitur, the defendant filed a supplementary plea of once in jeopardy. The second trial resulted in a verdict finding the defendant guilty of an attempt to commit burglary of the second degree.

The question is, was the defendant, upon these facts, entitled to a verdict in his favor upon his plea of once in jeopardy? "No person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense." Const. Cal. art. 1, § 13. A person is in legal jeopardy when he is put upon trial before a court of competent jurisdiction, upon information or indictment sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction, and a competent jury has been regularly charged with his deliverance. Cooley, Const. Lim. 404. If, however, the court had no jurisdiction of the cause, or if the indictment or information was so defective that no valid judgment could be rendered upon it; or if, by any overruling necessity, the jury are discharged without a verdict, or the jury are discharged with the consent of the defendant, either express or implied; or if, after verdict against the accused, it has been set aside on his motion for a new trial, or on writ of error, or in arrest of judgment,—in all these, and a few other cases which might be enumerated, the accused may again be put upon trial, ¹As to what will sustain a plea of former jeopardy, see Ex parte Fenton, (Cal.) ante, 267, and note.

and the proceedings had will constitute no protection. Id. 405. It is true that, in his former appeal from the judgment, the defendant did not ask for a new trial, but demanded a reversal of the judgment, and that he be discharged. This last prayer was denied by the court, and a new trial ordered in accordance with section 1260, Pen. Code. In People v. Howell, 28 Cal. 456, it was held that if the defendant in a criminal case is convicted and appeals, and the judgment is reversed, the appellate court may order a new trial, even though the defendant does not move for such new trial, and denies the power of the court to grant it, and that where the judgment in such a case is reversed, and a new trial ordered, he cannot successfully set up the former trial in bar of another trial and conviction. People v. Barric, 49 Cal. 342, is to the same effect. When the defendant appealed from the judgment, and procured a reversal, one of the effects of which was the ordering of a new trial, the judgment and verdict in such a case must be assumed to be set aside at the instance of the defendant, upon the theory that he who procures the reversal or affirmance of a judgment impliedly assents to all the consequences legitimately following such reversal or affirmance. 1 Bish. Crim. Law, §§ 1004, 1016. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. FINE. (No. 20,406.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 27, 1883.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—FLIGHT OF ACCUSED.

On a trial for assault, the testimony of the sheriff as to his search for defendant, tending to show flight after the assault, is admissible, as proper to be considered in determining the guilt of the prisoner.¹

2. SAME—INSANITY AS A DEFENSE—OPINION EVIDENCE.

The admission of evidence as to the sanity of the accused, objected to on the ground that the witnesses were not his "intimate acquaintances," as required by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1870, subd. 10, which authorizes as evidence the "opinion of intimate acquaintances as to the sanity of the accused, the reason for the opinion being given," will not be disturbed on appeal, unless it appear that the court abused the discretion vested in it as to such a matter.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county; MINOR, Judge.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1870, subd. 10, authorizes, in criminal prosecutions, the admission in evidence of the opinion of intimate acquaintances, as to the sanity of the accused, the reasons for the opinion being given.

P. J. Hazen, Hatton & Fulkerth and Turner & Maddox, for appellant. Geo A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

FOOTE, C. The defendant was convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon. From the judgment rendered against him and an order denying a new trial he has appealed. The information charged an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder, and was sufficient under sections 950, 951, 959, 960, Pen. Code. People v. Monteith, 73 Cal. 7, 14 Pac. Rep. 373. The testimony of the sheriff relative to his search for the defendant, as tending to show his flight after committing the assault, was properly admitted, because if such flight was proved it was a circumstance which the jury might consider in determining the guilt of the defendant. The instructions for the defendant, refused by the court, were either inapplicable, or were fully given in other portions of the charge. It is objected that the court below permitted witnesses to testify as to the sanity of the accused, when, as alleged, they were not his "intimate acquaintances," and were incompetent under subdivision 10, § 1870, Code Civil Proc. But it does not appear that the court abused the discretion vested in it as to such a matter, hence the appellate court should not interfere. People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 53. Several other errors are claimed to have been committed, on account of which it is urged that the defendant is entitled to a new trial. After a careful examination of the record we are unable to perceive any prejudicial error, and advise that the judgment and orders be affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WASSERVOGLE. (No. 20,426.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 28, 1888.)

1. FALSE PRETENSES—WHAT CONSTITUTES—STATEMENTS AS TO CREDIT.

Pen. Code Cal. § 533, provides that "every person who knowingly and designedly, by false or fraudulent representation or pretense, defrauds any person of money or property, * * * is punishable," etc. Held, that a statement by defendant that he had credit with the firm on which the draft was drawn for its amount, and that the firm would honor the draft, when he knew that he had no credit with the firm, and that the draft would not be honored or paid, was within the statute.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE.

Evidence that defendant before this transaction had drawn other drafts on the same firm, which had not been paid, is admissible, as tending to show that he had no credit with the firm, and must have known that the draft in question would not be honored.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court. Santa Clara county; F. E. SPENCER, Judge.

W. H. Layson, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

BELCHER, C. C. The defendant was charged with obtaining money under false pretenses, and convicted. He moved for a new trial, and has appealed from the judgment and order denying his motion.

1. The demurrer to the information was properly overruled. The offense is charged in the language of section 532 of the Penal Code,¹ and the false pretense is particularly set forth. It is true that, to come within the statute, a representation must be of some fact, past or present; but the statement of defendant that he had credit with the firm named for the amount of the draft, and that the firm would honor the draft, when he knew that he had no credit with the firm, and that the draft would not be honored or paid, was sufficient. Among the definitions of the word "credit" are the following: "Credit is confidence or trust reposed in one's ability to pay what he may promise." Abb. Law Dict. "The ability to borrow on the opinion conceived by the lender that he will be repaid." Bouv. Law Dict. "Credit is the capacity of being trusted." Bank v. Trust Co., 3 N. Y. 356. And a false pretense has been defined to be "a representation of some fact or circumstance, calculated to mislead, which is not true." Com. v. Drew, 19 Pick. 184. After quoting this definition, Mr. Bishop says a fuller and practically better one would be: "A false pretense is such a fraudulent representation of an existing or past fact, by one who knows it not to be true, as is adapted to induce the person to whom it is made to part with something of value." 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 415; and see People v. Jordan, 66 Cal. 10, 4 Pac. Rep. 773. The claim that ¹Penal Code, § 532, provides that "every person who knowingly and designedly, by false or fraudulent representation or pretense, defrauds any person of money or property, * * * is punishable," etc.

"credit" implies only futurity, and not a present fact, cannot be supported.

2. The evidence was sufficient to support the verdict; and the testimony that defendant, before this transaction, had drawn other drafts on the same firm, which had not been paid, was admissible as tending to show that he had no credit with the firm, and must have known that the draft in question would not be honored. The pretense need not be in words; that is, it was not necessary for the defendant to say in so many words that he had funds to his credit with the New York firm. The pretense may be gathered from the acts and conduct of a party. It has been held that the drawing and passing a check on a banker with whom the drawer had no account, and which he knew would not be paid, was a false pretense, within the statute. Rex v. Jackson, 3 Camp. 370; 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 430; People v. Donaldson, 70 Cal. 116, 11 Pac. Rep. 681. It is true, as claimed for appellant, that to constitute the offense charged four things must concur, and four distinct averments must be proved: (1) There must be an intent to defraud; (2) there must be actual fraud committed; (3) false pretenses must be used for the purpose of perpetrating the fraud; and (4) the fraud must be accomplished by means of the false pretenses made use of for the purpose, viz., they must be the cause which induced the owner to part with his property." Com. v. Drew, supra. We think there was testimony tending to establish all of these four requisites, and therefore that the judgment cannot be reversed for want of evidence.

3. We see no material error in the charge of the court, or in the instructions given and refused. The court used the word "funds," and in this it is claimed that it went outside of the record. But we think the word "credit," as used in the information, includes "funds." Looking at the whole record, we find no reason for a reversal of the judgment, and therefore advise that it be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

CHAMBERLIN v. COUNTY OF DEL NORTE. (No. 11,076.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 28, 1888.)

1. JUDGMENT—BY DEFAULT—ON OVERRULING DEMURRER—NOTICE OF DECISION.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 476, providing that when a demurrer to a pleading is sustained or overruled, and time to amend or answer is given, the time begins to run from the service of notice of the decision or order, a default should be vacated where no notice of the overruling of the demurrer has been served on defendant, although the time given to amend has elapsed since the demurrer was overruled.

2. SAME—OPENING DEFAULT—DISCRETION OF COURT.

In an action against a county for legal services, judgment by default being entered, after the overruling of a demurrer to the complaint, defendant moved to set aside the default, filing affidavits to the effect that plaintiff rendered no services and was entitled to nothing; that the only member of the then board of supervisors who knew of the transaction resided 15 miles from the county-seat and the residence of the district attorney, and had no means of communicating with the latter verbally until three days prior to the rendition of the judgment; and that during those three days he, the said district attorney, was busily engaged at the meetings of the board, having an unusual amount of important business to attend to, engaging all his office hours and part of the nights; whereby he did not have time to and did not consult with said member of the board about the defense of the action. Held, that the trial court did not abuse its discretion by vacating the default.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Del Norte county; JAMES E. MURPHY, Judge.

Action by J. D. H. Chamberlin against the county of Del Norte, for money due for legal services. From an order vacating a judgment by default plaintiff appeals. In support of the motion to vacate, it was shown that John N.

McVey, the only member of the board of supervisors who was a member when the transaction in controversy took place, lived at a distance of 15 miles from the county-seat and residence of the district attorney, and had not had an opportunity of consulting with him until three days prior to the entering of the default; during which time the district attorney was engaged during all his office hours, and was even compelled to work nights, at a session of the board at which an unusually large amount of important business was transacted, and did not, therefore, consult with said member until after the default was entered. McVey also made affidavit that the board had a good defense, and in fact owed plaintiff nothing.

J. F. McGowan, R. W. Miller, and J. D. H. Chamberlin, (pro se), for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., L. F. Coburn, Dist. Atty., L. F. Cooper, and Sawyer & Burnett, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was commenced on the 24th day of December, 1884, to recover the sum of $500 for legal services alleged to have been rendered by the plaintiff at the request of defendant, and a general demurrer was interposed to the complaint. The demurrer was overruled on the 15th day of January, 1885, and the defendant was given 20 days from that date in which to file its answer. It does not appear from the record that any notice of this order overruling the demurrer was ever served upon the defendant. No answer was filed up to the 5th day of February, and on that day the clerk of the court entered a default and a judgment against the defendant for the amount prayed for in the complaint, with costs. On the same day, on motion of the district attorney, an order was made by the court giving the defendant 10 days from that date in which to prepare affidavits and move to set aside the default and to vacate the judgment. Within the time allowed the defendant, upon notice and affidavits, moved to have the default set aside and the judgment vacated; and on the 18th day of February the motion was heard and granted by the court, upon condition that defendant pay to plaintiff the sum of $25, and all of the costs which had then accrued. From this order the plaintiff appealed.

1. Section 476 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "when a demurrer to any pleading is sustained or overruled, and time to amend or answer is given, the time so given runs from the service of notice of the decision or order." If the notice required by this section was not given or waived, the time to answer had not expired when the default was entered, and for that reason the motion should have been granted. And if the notice was given or waived the appellant should have made that fact to appear in the record.

2. Applications to set aside defaults are addressed to the sound legal discretion of the trial court, and, if granted, the orders are never disturbed by this court, except in cases of gross abuse. Roland v. Kreyenhagen, 18 Cal. 455; Hove v. Independence Co., 29 Cal. 73; Watson v. Railroad Co., 41 Cal. 20; Cameron v. Carroll, 67 Cal. 500, 8 Pac. Rep. 45. We see no clear abuse of discretion here. The affidavit of merits was sufficient, and the other affidavits show at least plausible reasons why the answer was not filed within the time allowed. We advise that the order be affirmed.

WE concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

77 Cal. 156

Ex parte STERNES. (No. 20,423.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 28, 1888.)

1. CONTEMPT—JUDGMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK—HABEAS CORPUS.

The judgment convicting petitioner of contempt recited that a writ of habeas corpus was duly served upon petitioner, requiring him to produce the body of the person therein named; that petitioner made return that such person was not in his custody at the time of the issuance or service of the writ; whereupon the judge proceeded to take testimony as to said matter; and, it appearing that such person was in his custody, and that it was in his power to produce him when the writ was served, and the hearing having been continued to enable him to produce the body of such person, which he had failed to do, he was therefore adjudged guilty of contempt. Held that, as the court had jurisdiction to render the judgment, it could not be collaterally attacked, in a habeas corpus proceeding, by showing that the person required to be produced was not in petitioner's custody, and that the writ was not duly served on petitioner.

2. SAME—PROCEDURE—AFFIDAVIT OF FACTS SHOWING CONTEMPT.

Failure to produce the required person in obedience to the writ was a contempt committed in the face of the court, and no affidavit of the facts constituting the contempt was necessary to give the court knowledge thereof, and jurisdiction to punish it.

In bank. Application for writ of habeas corpus. Conviction had in superior court, Nevada county; J. M. WALLING, Judge.

E. A. Forbes and A. L. Hart, for petitioner. Hale & Craig, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. From the stipulation filed herein it appears the petitioner could prove, if permitted to do so, that at the time of the issuance of the writ of habeas corpus commanding him to produce the body of one Ah Fong, said Ah Fong was in the actual custody of one W. H. Lee, in the county of Yuba, and that at the time of the service of the writ upon petitioner said Ah Fong was in the actual custody of the sheriff of Yuba county, at Marysville, and therefore out of the jurisdiction of the superior court of Nevada county on a habeas corpus proceeding (article 6, § 5, Const.;) that the original writ was not delivered to petitioner, who is a deputy sheriff of Yuba county, as required by Pen. Code, § 1478; that, after service of an imperfect copy of the writ upon him, he demanded of the sheriff of the county of Yuba the delivery to him of the custody of Ah Fong, that he might comply with the command of the court, but said sheriff refused, and has always refused, to permit him to take said Ah Fong into his custody; and that "the said court adjudged that the said Sternes had the actual custody of the said Ah Fong, and willfully refused to produce him in said court, without any trial of said fact, or any charge upon that subject having been made, or any warrant or attachment, notice or order to show cause having been issued, or any opportunity for the said Sternes to be heard upon the said question, without any trial and without any evidence." The stipulation aforesaid was made at the hearing to aid the court in the dispatch of its business; counsel for respondent objecting, however, that no evidence could be received in this matter to contradict or impeach the recitals and findings contained in the judgment of the superior court. The judgment of conviction, upon which respondent relies as a conclusive answer to the petition and return to the writ herein, sets forth a copy of the petition upon which the writ was issued out of the superior court commanding the production of the body of the said Ah Fong, a copy of the writ, and concludes as follows: "And [said writ] having on said 5th day of April, 1888, been duly served upon George H. Sternes at Nevada township, Nevada county, Cal.; and said matter having on the 6th day of April, 1888, been at the request of said Sternes continued for hearing until 10 o'clock A. M., April 7, 1888; and on said last-named date said Sternes having appeared in said court and made and filed in said court his return to said writ, in which return it was alleged, among other things, that said Sternes was the person named John Doe in said writ; that said Ah Fong was not in his custody or under his control at the time of the issuance of or the service of said writ upon him; and said judge having thereupon proceeded to take testimony as to said matter, and it appearing therefrom to the satisfaction of said judge that said Ah Fong was in the custody and under the control of said Sternes at the time of the issuance and service upon him of said writ, and that it was within the power of said Sternes to produce the body of said Ah Fong in obedience to said writ at the time of service of said writ upon him; and said judge having thereupon continued the further hearing of said matter until Monday, April 9, 1888, at 2 o'clock P. M., at the request of said Sternes, to enable him to produce the body of said Ah Fong before said judge in obedience to said writ: now, on this day last aforesaid, said George H. Sternes having appeared before said judge, and having failed to produce the body of said Ah Fong before said judge in obedience to said writ, it is therefore adjudged that said George H. Sternes is guilty of contempt of said court," etc.

We understand counsel for petitioner to admit that the functions of the writ of habeas corpus issued herein do not extend beyond an inquiry into the jurisdiction of the superior court in which the judgment was rendered, and the validity of the process upon its face; but he contends that we may and should inquire whether at the time the writ of habeas corpus was issued for the production of the body of Ah Fong he, said Ah Fong, was held in actual custody within the jurisdiction of the court issuing it; and, if it be determined that he was not within the jurisdiction of said court, the order made adjudging the petitioner guilty of contempt was beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and therefore null and void. The attack which is made upon the judgment of the superior court involves an examination of evidence de hors the record, and is therefore subject to the rules applicable to collateral assaults upon judgments in other cases. One of the plainest of these rules is that from the time of the service of process upon the parties to the action or proceeding the court acquires such jurisdiction over them that its subsequent proceedings, however irregular, are not void. The first inquiry before the superior court upon the return made by the respondent Sternes therein was to determine the issue as to whether said Ah Fong was or was not in his custody or under his control at the time of the issuance of or service of said writ upon him, said Sternes. It appears from the judgment that the judge proceeded to take testimony as to said matter, and found as a fact that said Ah Fong was in the custody and under the control of said Sternes at the time of the issuance and service upon him of said writ, and that it was within the power of said Sternes to produce the body of said Ah Fong in obedience to the writ at the time of service of the writ upon him. This is the record of the court, acting within its legitimate powers, and that record must be considered as speaking the truth, and as conclusive until it has been in some way set aside or vacated.

No evidence can be received to contradict it. Freem. Judgm. §§ 126, 619; Lewis v. Dutton, 8 How. Pr. 103; Cooley, Const. Lim. 407. "When jurisdiction depends on a fact that is litigated in a suit, and is adjudged in favor of that party who avers jurisdiction, then the question of jurisdiction is judicially decided, and the judgment record is conclusive evidence of jurisdiction until set aside, or reversed by a direct proceeding." (Bloom v. Burdick, 1 Hill, 138;) and it has been held in this state that even "an inferior board may determine conclusively its own jurisdiction or power by adjudicating the existence of facts upon the existence of which its jurisdiction or power depends," (In re Grove Street, 61 Cal. 453. See, also, Segee v. Thomas, 3 Blatchf. 20; Ex parte Cottrell, 59 Cal. 421.) The court further found that the writ issued on the 5th day of April, 1888, had been duly served upon George H. Stermes, at Nevada township, Nevada county, Cal. There being nothing in the record to contradict this finding of the court, it is conclusive, and no evidence can be received to contradict it. If the process, or the manner in which it was served, is irregular, the jurisdictional infirmity can be cured only by some proceeding in the court where action is pending, or by appeal. Dorente v. Sullivan, 7 Cal. 279; Peck v. Strauss, 33 Cal. 685.

The failure of Stermes to produce the body of Ah Fong, as the court found he had the power to do, before the court in obedience to the writ, was a contempt committed in the face of the court, and no affidavit of the facts constituting the contempt was necessary to give the court knowledge thereof. In re Robb, 64 Cal. 431, 1 Pac. Rep. 881. An order to show cause or notice of a motion for an attachment would not have served Stermes any useful purpose. He had an opportunity, as shown by the judgment, to explain the circumstances of his failure to obey the writ, and the court was not in duty bound to accept as true his return to the writ. The court may have erred in its proceedings subsequent to the issuance and service of the writ; and, by a misapprehension of the facts or misconstruction of the evidence, have done the petitioner here a great injustice; but, so long as that court permits its record to remain as it is, other courts must treat it as the action of that court, and as conclusive upon all the matters decided by it, and essential to its judgment. Ellis v. Inhabitants of Madison, 13 Me. 312; Watson v. Balch, 1 Pac. Rep. 775. The petitioner is remanded to the custody of the sheriff.

GOSS et al. v. HELBING et al. (No. 9,795.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 5, 1888.)

1. MECHANIC'S LIEN—LIABILITY OF OWNER—CONTRACT OF AGENT.

Where one in charge of water-works, and having the management thereof, purchases a pump for use in such works, nothing being said as to his acting for any one else, the owners of the water-works are liable for the price of the pump.

2. SAME—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO.

A pump placed in the basement of a building and planted down on the ground, and connected to pipes belonging to water-works, so as to admit steam and water, is sufficiently affixed to the water-works to bring it within the California lien law.

3. SAME—OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY—ADMISSIONS IN PLEADING.

Where certain defendants in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien admit in their answer that they are owners of the property incumbered by the lien, they will be regarded as owners on appeal, though the facts in the findings show that their interest was held merely for security of money.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; M. A. EDMONDS, Judge.

R. Percy Wright, for appellant. C. E. Royce, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiffs brought their action for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien for the price of a certain pump alleged to have been sold and delivered to the defendants, to be used in the Starlight Water-Works, and the court gave judgment accordingly. It appears from the evidence that the defendant Louis Helbing was in charge of the water-works, and had the management thereof. And we think that under the circumstances he must be held to have had authority to make the purchase in question. The pump was sold and delivered to him for use at the works without anything being said as to his acting for anybody else. But if he was in fact acting for somebody else there would be no difficulty in holding the undisclosed principal liable when discovered. For whom, then, was he acting as agent? We think that he must be held to have acted for the owners of the property. The evidence shows that Helbing and his wife were the real owners. The deed to Wright and Winter was merely for the security of money. They do not appear to have been otherwise interested in the property, or to have taken any part in the management of the same. The findings, though not very skillfully drawn, sufficiently show the above facts. Wright and Winter must, for the purposes of this appeal, be taken to have been owners of the property, for their answer admits that fact. So far as the ownership is concerned the findings must be taken to relate to the issues raised by the Helbings. The thing sold, if affixed to the other works, came within the lien law. Donahue v. Cromartie, 21 Cal. 80. And we think upon the evidence it must be considered as so affixed. It was placed in the basement of the building and "planted down on the ground and connected to pipes so as to admit the steam and water." Civil Code, § 660. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

WISE v. HOGAN. (No. 11,147.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. October 4, 1888.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—ACTION AGAINST—UNCERTAINTY—WAIVER OF DEFECTS.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 454, provides that a party suing on an account need not set forth specifically the items of indebtedness, and if the defendant is not satisfied with the general allegation he may, within five days, demand a copy of the plaintiff's account. Held, that a defendant, who has not taken advantage of such provision, cannot object by demurrer that the complaint is insufficient, as not specifying the separate items of indebtedness; and the fact that the defendant is sued as an administrator makes no exception to the rule.

2. SAME—DESCRIPTION OF CLAIM—LIMITATION OF ACTION.

A complaint in an action on an account against an administrator, stating that the services were rendered between two particular dates, is not defective on the ground that a part of the claim might be barred by the statute of limitations, and that an administrator is forbidden by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1499, to allow any claim thus barred; since, the claims not appearing on the face of the complaint to have been barred, the question could be determined on the trial, and the complaint need not state whether or not the claims were barred.

3. SAME—ALLEGATION OF PRESENTMENT.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 1491, 1493, provides that notice of ten or four months, according to the value of the estate, shall be given to creditors of a decedent's estate to present their claims, and all claims not presented within the time shall be barred. Section 1500 makes the proper presentation of the claim necessary to entitle the creditor to maintain an action thereon. Held, that an allegation in a complaint in such an action that the claim was, "on the 25th day of July, 1884, duly presented within ten months next following and succeeding the first publication of notice to creditors," would not be held defective on general demurrer, as failing to state that the claim was presented in time.

4. SAME—PLEADING NON-PAYMENT.

The complaint, having stated that the claim was not paid by deceased, and that it was presented to the administrator and rejected, is not defective for omitting to allege non-payment by the latter, as such fact will be presumed from his rejection of the claim.

¹Reversing Wise v. Hogan, 18 Pac. Rep. 764.

5. SAME—LIMITATION OF ACTION—DEMURRER.

An objection that the claim in a complaint is barred by the statute of limitations cannot be taken by demurrer, unless it appears on the face of the complaint that the claim is thus barred.¹

In bank. On rehearing. For former opinion, see 18 Pac. Rep. 784.

WORKS, J. This cause was affirmed upon an opinion of the commission. A rehearing was granted, and further argument has been heard. In the former opinion the cause was affirmed on the ground, stated in general terms, that the complaint was ambiguous and uncertain, and the demurrer thereto, on that ground, properly sustained. The objection made to the complaint in this respect is in substance that the indebtedness is alleged in general terms, the items and amounts not being specifically stated. Upon further consideration we are of the opinion that this objection was not well taken. It has been repeatedly held by this court that a party suing upon an account need not set forth specifically the items of the indebtedness, and the Code so provides. Code Civil Proc. § 454; Tool Co. v. Prader, 32 Cal. 634; Tompkins v. Mahoney, Id. 231. See, also, McKinney v. McKinney, 12 How. Pr. 23. If the defendant is not satisfied with the general allegation of indebtedness, the Code expressly provides a remedy. He may, within five days, demand a copy of the plaintiff's account. Code Civil Proc. § 454. If he fails to avail himself of the right thus given him, he cannot be heard to say that the complaint is insufficient on the ground of uncertainty in that respect. Tool Co. v. Prader, supra. We know of no reason why an administrator should not be bound by this rule of practice.

It is further urged against the sufficiency of the complaint that it does not show such a claim as the administrator could have allowed, for the reason that the allegation being that the services were rendered "between the 1st day of January, 1870, and the 11th day of October, 1883," the whole or a part of the claim might have been barred by the statute of limitations, at the time the claim was presented for allowance. An administrator is expressly forbidden by statute to allow a claim that is barred by the statute of limitations. Code Civil Proc. § 1499. This claim did not appear on its face to be barred. The administrator might have refused to allow it on the ground that the statute had in fact run against it. If upon suit being brought it appeared that the claim was in fact barred, his refusal to allow it would thus be justified, and the claimant could not recover. But this is a matter to be determined at the trial; the claim not appearing on its face to have been barred when presented. The fact that it did not show whether it was or was not barred would not defeat a recovery. Therefore this objection to the complaint was not well taken.

It is claimed that the complaint is insufficient in that it fails to allege the presentation of the claim in time. The allegation is that the claim was "on the 25th day of July, 1884, duly presented within ten months next following and succeeding the first publication of notice to creditors." It is provided by statute that four or ten months' notice to creditors must be given, depending upon the value of the estate, that all claims must be presented within the time limited in the notice, and that any claim not so presented shall be barred ¹ When it appears on the face of a petition that the cause of action is barred by limitation, a demurrer thereto will be sustained. Merriam v. Miller, (Neb.) 34 N. W. Rep. 625. But unless the facts which render the statute a bar appear in the complaint, they must be stated in the answer, to render the statute available. Paine v. Comstock, (Wis.) 14 N. W. Rep. 910. That a demurrer will not lie to a complaint, on the ground that the cause of action stated therein is barred by limitation, unless the facts constituting the bar appear on the face of the complaint, see Kamm v. Bank, (Cal.) 15 Pac. Rep. 765, and note; Fogg v. Price, (Mass.) 14 N. E. Rep. 741; Gathright v. Wheat, (Tex.) 9 S. W. Rep. 76.

In general, as to how the statute of limitations is available as a defense, see the note to Gathright v. Wheat, supra; note to Merriam v. Miller, supra; Jennings v. Rickard, (Colo.) 15 Pac. Rep. 677; Trebbly v. Simmons, (Minn.) 38 N. W. Rep. 693, and note.

forever. Code Civil Proc. §§ 1491, 1493. The proper presentation of the claim is necessary to entitle the creditor to maintain an action thereon. Id. § 1500; Bank v. Howland, 42 Cal. 129, 132. So far as appears from this complaint, the notice required and given may have been one for four months, the claim may have been presented after the expiration of that time, and may have been properly rejected for that reason. But we are met with the claim, on the part of the appellant, that the objection urged cannot be raised by a general demurrer for want of facts. Although defectively stated, there is an allegation of the presentment of the claim. The later decisions of this court are to the effect that such an allegation is sufficient to withstand a general demurrer, (Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 555; Coleman v. Woodworth, 28 Cal. 567; Bank v. Howland, 42 Cal. 129; Chase v. Evoy, 58 Cal. 343;) and the correctness of the earlier case of Ellissen v. Halleck's Ex'rs, 6 Cal. 386, holding to the contrary, is doubted. Following these cases, we must hold that the complaint was sufficient in this respect as against respondent's demurrer.

It is further urged that the complaint is defective in that it does not allege the non-payment of the claim by the administrator. It is averred that the claim was not paid by the deceased, and that it was presented to the administrator and rejected, but there is no direct allegation of non-payment by him. It is firmly settled in this state that an averment of non-payment is necessary to the sufficiency of a complaint for money claimed to be due on contract. Daranay v. Eggenhoff, 43 Cal. 395; Scroufe v. Clay, 71 Cal. 123, 11 Pac. Rep. 882. This is on the ground that the failure to pay, when due, constitutes the breach of the contract, and gives a right of action. In this class of cases we deem it sufficient to allege non-payment by the deceased, and that the claim has been properly presented to and rejected by the administrator. The non-payment by the debtor is a breach of the contract and gives a cause of action. The subsequent presentation of the claim to the administrator is made necessary by the statute before action can be maintained, but this does not render it necessary to allege that he has not paid the claim. Non-payment by him should be presumed from the alleged fact of his rejection of the claim.

There is the further objection to the complaint that the administrative characters of the plaintiff and defendant are not sufficiently alleged. As to the plaintiff, the death of his intestate is alleged, and, further, "that on the 18th day of June, 1884, a decree was duly given and made in the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, upon which letters of administration upon the estate of said Tully R. Wise, deceased, were issued by the said superior court," etc; and the allegation as to the defendant is in effect the same. Coupled with this is the allegation, as to each, that he duly qualified and entered upon the discharge of his duties as such administrator, and has ever since been, and now is, the duly-qualified and acting administrator, etc. This would seem to be sufficient. Code Civil Proc. § 456; Beans v. Emanuelli, 36 Cal. 118; Judah v. Fredericks, 57 Cal. 389; City of Los Angeles v. Mellus, 59 Cal. 444, 450; Riddell v. Harrell, 12 Pac. Rep. 67.

The complaint is also demurred to on the ground that the claim appears to be barred by section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is sufficient answer to this objection to say that it does not appear upon the face of the complaint that the claim is barred, and that the objection cannot, therefore, be raised by demurrer. Smith v. Richmond, 19 Cal. 476; Harmon v. Page, 62 Cal. 448; Farris v. Merritt, 63 Cal. 118. It will be seen that the complaint in this action is defective in almost all its parts; but while this manner of pleading is objectionable, and should not be encouraged by the courts, we feel compelled, for the reasons stated, to hold it sufficient. Judgment reversed.

PEOPLE v. WARD. (No. 20,414.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 22, 1888.)

1. ROBBERY—EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

A witness on a trial for robbery having testified that he did not know whether defendant knew that the person robbed had all his money together or not; that he might have seen it for all witness knew; that he might have seen more than $10,—the refusal to strike out what the witness testified that defendant "might have seen," if error at all, is harmless, as it was so uncertain as not to be likely to have injured defendant.

2. SAME.

In such case, there being evidence tending to show a conspiracy between defendant and a third party, who actually committed the crime charged, evidence of the wounded condition of the latter, and that he had pistols in his possession the next morning after the robbery, covered with blood, is admissible.

3. JURY—CHALLENGE—APPEAL—REVIEW.

The disallowance of a challenge for cause is not reviewable on appeal.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; WILLIAM W. CROSS, Judge.

Indictment against Edward Ward for an assault with intent to rob one Baker. The principals in the assault were Bently and Ridgeway. Bently was convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon, and an attempt to commit robbery. See 17 Pac. Rep. 436, 18 Pac. Rep. 799. The witness Moore, in relation to whether defendant knew that Baker had money, testified: "I don't know whether he knew Baker had all his money together. He might have seen it for all I know. I don't know whether he did or not. He might have seen more than ten dollars; I don't know." Defendant moved to strike out that portion relative to what defendant "might have seen," which was refused. It was also admitted in evidence that Ridgeway was found to be wounded the next morning, with pistols in his possession covered with blood. The defendant was convicted, and appeals.

George A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People. W. A. Gray and Oregon Saunders, for appellant.

HAYNE, C. The defendant was convicted of an assault with intent to rob.

1. The disallowance of the challenge for cause is not subject to review. People v. Fong Ah Sing, 70 Cal. 11, 11 Pac. Rep. 323. The case of People v. Brown, 72 Cal. 390, 14 Pac. Rep. 90, is not in conflict with this.

2. The denial of the motion to strike out the evidence of the witness Moore was not error. The testimony went to show a motive for the crime. But if it be conceded that there was error, the evidence was of such an uncertain character that it could not have injured the defendant.

3. The evidence of the condition in which Ridgeway was found the next morning was properly admitted. It tended to show that he committed the assault, and there was evidence tending to connect the defendant with him.

4. The instructions were proper, and the evidence sufficient. The defendant was convicted after a fair trial; and we advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SWARBRICK. (No. 20,430.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 25, 1888.)

CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTION—BURGLARY.

On trial for burglary, a charge that the defense, "as attempted to be shown," that defendant was not one of the persons that entered the house, and that the complaining witness was mistaken in the identity of the person she saw there, is for the jury, does not cast discredit on the defense, or characterize it as futile, and is not error.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; N. HAMILTON, Judge.

Information for burglary From a judgment of conviction the defendant Charles Swarbrick appeals.

R. M. Fitzgerald, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHARPSTEIN, J. The only question presented for our consideration by the record on this appeal is whether the court erred in giving the following instruction to the jury: "The defense in this action is, as attempted to be shown by the defense, that the defendant was not one of the parties that entered the house, and that the complaining witness was mistaken as to the identity of the party whom she saw there. Now, that is a matter entirely with you. If the evidence does not satisfy you that he was in fact one of the parties that was in there, then, of course, you cannot find him guilty." Counsel for appellant insists that the court by this instruction "characterized the defendant's defense as an attempted defense." He did not characterize it as a futile defense, nor cast any slur or discredit upon it. He told the jury that the defense, as attempted to be shown, was that the defendant was not one of the parties that entered the house. Whether that was shown was for the jury to determine. In view of the conflicting evidence, it would have been error for the court to have instructed the jury that it had been shown that the defendant did not enter the house. We discover no error in the record. Judgment affirmed.

HEESER v. MILLER et al. (No. 11,562.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 19, 1888.)

QUIETING TITLE—PLEADING—COMPLAINT—CLAIM OF DEFENDANT.

An allegation in a complaint that, by reason of a patent from the state, defendant claims an estate or interest in the land in controversy adverse to plaintiff, is not necessarily inconsistent with the prior allegation that plaintiff is the owner and seized in fee; and, the prayer being that the adverse claim be decreed void, the complaint is good, on general demurrer, as one to quiet title, though it does not expressly aver that defendant's claim is invalid.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; ROBERT MCGARVEY, Judge.

C. C. Hamilton and J. M. Mannon, (Henley & Swift, of counsel,) for appellant. T. L. Carothers, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. This is an appeal from a final judgment for defendants upon demurrer to the complaint. The complaint alleges, among other things, that the "plaintiff was at the commencement of the action, ever since has been, and now is, the owner and seized in fee" of the premises in controversy, and that by reason of a certain patent from the state and certain conveyances "said defendants claim estate or interest in said land adverse to this plaintiff." And the prayer is that such adverse claims be decreed to be void. The allegation that the plaintiff is the owner and seized in fee, etc., is of an ultimate fact, and is a sufficient statement of the right of the plaintiff in an action of ejectment or to quiet title. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 242; Garwood v. Hastings, 38 Cal. 217; Rough v. Simmons, 65 Cal. 227, 3 Pac. Rep. 804; and compare Ferrer v. Insurance Co., 47 Cal. 431. This fact is not stated as a conclusion from other facts, as was the case in Turner v. White, 73 Cal. 300, 14 Pac. Rep. 794. The demurrer admits the truth of the allegation, and hence it is a conceded fact that, at the commencement of the action, the plaintiff was the owner and seized in fee of the premises in controversy. If this fact were necessarily inconsistent with the fact that defendants claim the fee (not merely an interest in the land) by virtue of a patent from the state, the objection could not be raised upon a general demurrer, but would have to be presented by a special demurrer for uncertainty. Blasingame v. Insurance Co., 17 Pac. Rep. 925. But the allegations are not necessarily inconsistent with each other. It may be that the patent was issued without authority of law. See Doolan v. Carr, 125 U. S. 625, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1223. Taking the fact to be that the plaintiff was "the owner and seized" at the commencement of the action, it is impossible that another person could be the owner at such time. And it follows that the defendants' claim to be the owner of the fee (for the patent must purport to be of the fee) adversely to the plaintiff must be without foundation. Hence it is of no importance that the complaint does not expressly allege that the defendants' claim is invalid and void. The complaint is good as a complaint to quiet title; and the general demurrer should have been overruled. We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

CANNING v. FIBUSH et al. (No. 11,709.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 19, 1888.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—LEASE—EXPIRATION OF TERM—POSSESSION

Where plaintiff leased to defendant premises for three months from June 1st, and on August 6th notified defendant that, if he remained after September 1st, the rent would be increased, which increase on September 1st he demanded, and defendant refused to pay, but offered and plaintiff refused, a less sum, and plaintiff "never said or did anything" to allow defendant to occupy after the expiration of the term, plaintiff may recover possession, with damages for detention.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; E. M. GIBSON, Judge.

P. F. Benson, (J. C. Martin, of counsel,) for appellant. Welles Whitmore and H. R. Havens, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of nonsuit. The evidence shows that the plaintiff leased the premises in controversy to the defendants for the term of three months from June 1, 1885. At the time of the agreement there was some talk of leasing them the premises after that at a higher rent, if the parties could agree. But this amounted to nothing more than that the parties would see whether a renewal could not be arranged at the end of the term. On the 6th of August the plaintiff caused the defendants to be served with a notice to the effect that if they occupied the store after September 1st the rent would be $200 per month. On September 1st the plaintiff demanded the $200, but the defendants declined to pay it, and offered to pay $100, which was refused. The plaintiff "never said or did anything to allow these defendants to occupy the premises after the expiration of the three months." The original complaint averred that the rent had been raised by the notice, and was for holding over after the non-payment of such increased rent. At the trial the plaintiff obtained leave to amend the complaint by striking out the averments as to the notice, etc.; and this was done, leaving the complaint to stand for the holding over after the expiration of the lease, and for damages for the same. We think the court erred in granting the nonsuit. The lease, having been for three months only, expired on September 1st. The notice of increased rent could not of itself raise the rent, because the holding was for a fixed period, and not from month to month. Stoppelkamp v. Mangeot, 42 Cal. 316. It did not operate as an agreement, because it was in the nature of a proposal. The defendants, having rejected the proposal, cannot claim that it inured to their benefit. And, inasmuch as the lease expired by its own limitation, there was no necessity of a notice to terminate it. There was no acceptance of rent, or anything from which a renewal could be inferred. This being the case, we do not see how the defendants had any right to continue in possession, and, if they had no such right, why the plaintiff should not recover the premises, with damages for the detention. The other matters do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

MURPHY v. HARRIS. (No. 11,580.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 19, 1888.)

1. EXEMPTIONS—ILLEGAL SEIZURE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 690, subd. 3, exempting from execution "instruments of husbandry; * * * also * * * two horses,"—a debtor is not entitled to an exemption of colts, unless he is engaged in farming; and, in an action for levying on them, a finding that he was not engaged in farming for 18 months prior to the seizure, and a judgment for defendant, will not be disturbed where the evidence is vague; the burden being on the party seeking the exemption to show that he is entitled to it.

2. SAME—HORSES—HABITUAL USE AS MEANS OF LIVELIHOOD.

The exemption by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 690, subd. 6, of the two horses, etc., cannot be claimed unless the debtor "habitually earns his living" by their use.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Napa county; R. CROUCH, Judge.

Action by Charles Murphy against H. H. Harris, sheriff of Napa county, for damages for the levy and sale of two colts alleged to be exempt from execution. Judgment was rendered for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Coghlan & Coombs, for appellant. F. E. Johnson, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The question in this case is whether two colts were exempt from execution against the plaintiff. There are two provisions which might be claimed to have some reference to the matter. The third subdivision of section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure is as follows: "Subd. 3. The farming utensils or implements of husbandry of the judgment debtor; also two oxen, or two horses, or two mules, and their harness, one cart or wagon, and food for such oxen, horses, or mules for one month. * * *" The sixth subdivision of the same section is as follows: "Subd. 6. Two horses, two oxen, or two mules, and their harness, and one cart or wagon, one dray or truck, one coupé, one hack or carriage, for one or two horses, by the use of which a cartman, drayman, truckman, huckster, peddler, hackman, teamster, or other laborer habitually earns his living. * * *" These provisions correspond to subdivisions 3 and 6 of section 219 of the old practice act. That section was frequently amended. See Laws 1851, pp. 85, 86; Laws 1854, pp. 62, 63; Laws 1862, p. 573; Laws 1863-64, p. 523; Laws 1869-70, p. 384; Laws 1871-72, p. 864. And the section of the Code of Civil Procedure was amended in 1876 and in 1878. But in all these changes the sixth subdivision has always required that the party must "habitually" earn his living by the use of the animals claimed to be exempt. And this requirement has been held to be imperative. Dove v. Nunan, 62 Cal. 400. It cannot possibly be contended that the debtor here habitually earned his living by the use of the colts in question; and therefore this subdivision may be dismissed from consideration. The other provision has for all purposes of the present case been substantially the same as it stands at present; most of the changes being in the latter half of the subdivision. And, while the language is not absolutely clear, it has been held, and we think correctly, that it relates exclusively to persons engaged in farming. Brusie v. Griffith, 34 Cal. 305; Robert v. Adams, 38 Cal. 383, 384. The finding of the court was, in substance, that for 18 months prior to the seizure the plaintiff was not engaged in the business of farming. And we cannot say upon the record that this finding is not sustained by the evidence. It is certainly incumbent upon a party who brings a suit for the recovery of property, upon the ground that it is exempt, to show affirmatively that he is entitled to the exemption. The evidence here, however, is disjointed and vague; and we cannot say with any reasonable certainty that the plaintiff proved himself to be engaged in farming within the meaning of the provision. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

we concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

PEOPLE ex rel. WALLEN v. MORRIS. (No. 11,626.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 20, 1888.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—PURCHASE OF SCHOOL LANDS—PAYMENT IN WARRANTS.

A purchase of school land, by application to the land-office, at $1.25 per acre, in gold coin, accompanied by payment of 20 per cent. of the purchase money, followed by the issue of a certificate of purchase, in conformity with Pol. Code Cal. (Hittell's,) § 3494, cannot be completed by payment in land-warrants, under section 3502, enacting that $2 per acre state school-land warrants shall be receivable in payment for school land, but that such payment shall be to the register, and the warrants canceled before the certificate is issued; and a patent issued on such payment, under the latter section, will be set aside.

2. SAME—CANCELLATION—RETURN OF WARRANTS.

Such a patent, in the absence of fraud in its procurement, will not be annulled, unless the state returns or tenders the surrendered warrants.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Lake county; RODNEY J. HUDSON, Judge.

Action by the state of California ex rel. Ezra Wallen against Henry S. Morris, to set aside a patent for school lands. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Fox & Kellogg and Eugene W. Britt, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., and R. W. Crump, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This action was brought to set aside a patent from the state of California of certain school lands of the 500,000-acre grant made by the congress of the United States to the state. Judgment was given in favor of the plaintiff, from which, and an order denying him a new trial, the defendant appeals. According to the findings, one John T. Harrington, on the 10th day of January, 1876, filed in the office of the state surveyor general an application to purchase the lands in controversy. Before this application was granted, one Mullan having disputed Harrington's right to buy the lands from the state, the contest between them was referred, as by law required, to the district court of the Seventh judicial district for determination. Judgment was there given in favor of Harrington as having the better right to purchase the land from the state, a certified copy of which was filed in the surveyor general's office. Afterwards, on the 21st day of April, 1877, the surveyor general approved Harrington's application, and issued to him a certificate of purchase for the lands. This was a cash purchase for gold coin, made under and by virtue of section 3494 of the Political Code, (Hittell's,) which is as follows: "The unsold portion of the 500,000 acres granted to the state for school purposes, the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, and lands selected in lieu thereof, must be sold at the rate of $1.25 per acre, in gold coin, payable 20 per cent. of the principal within fifty days from the date of the certificate of location issued to the purchaser; the balance, bearing interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum in advance, is due and payable within one year after the passage of any act by the legislature requiring such payment, or before if desired by the purchaser." Within 50 days of the approval of his application, 20 per cent. of the purchase money was paid by Harrington, together with interest due by law. After the certificate was issued it was duly assigned in writing by Harrington to Smith, by Smith to Barger, by Barger to Hyde, by Hyde to Rice, by Rice to the defendant. Rice paid the accruing interest to November 15, 1883, and afterwards assigned the certificate to the defendant. On the 4th day of June, 1884, the defendant surrendered to the register of the state land-office certain school-land warrants at two dollars per acre, which were issued under an act of the legislature approved May 3, 1852, entitled "An act to provide for the disposal of the 500,000 acres of land granted to this state by act of congress," etc. Upon the surrender of the warrants for cancellation the register accepted them as payment in full for the balance due upon the land, and issued to the defendant the state's patent therefor. According to the agreed facts in the statement, plaintiff admits that if the final payment by defendant in surrendering the school-land warrants was a valid and legal payment for said lands, then the state has received full payment therefor, but denies the validity or legality of such payment.

The transaction seems to have been made in good faith, under the supposition that such payment might lawfully be made and received. Section 3502 of the Political Code, under which this matter was attempted to be concluded, reads thus: "School-land warrants, issued by authority of the state, are receivable in payment of the purchase money of any part of the 500,000 acres of land granted to the state for school purposes. Such payment must be made to the register, and the warrants canceled, before the certificate of purchase is issued." Thus it will be seen that the purchase was initiated under the terms of section 3494 of the Political Code, (Hittell's.) The certificate of purchase issued thereunder was valid and good against both Mullan and the state, and compelled the surveyor general to issue it. Nor is it permissible in this proceeding to call in question the evidence on which the judgment was based in favor of Harrington in the action of Harrington v. Mullan, as having the better right to purchase the land, or the rulings of the court in that action on matters of law. Section 3416, Pol. Code, (Hittell's;) Laugenour v. Shanklin, 57 Cal. 70; Batchelder v. Willey, 64 Cal. 44. It is manifest that the defendant had a right to conclude his purchase of the land described in the certificate which he held. But it seems that he did not complete the purchase in the manner required by law; for, as we have seen, it was not attempted originally by Harrington to buy the land with $2 per acre school-land warrants, but under the section of the Political Code, supra, prescribing the terms of a sale for gold coin at $1.25 per acre. The $2 per acre warrants were only paid as part and final payment upon a purchase made on the basis of gold coin at $1.25 per acre, and they were not paid to the register, and canceled before the certificate of purchase was issued, but long after. The register seems to have misconstrued the law governing the matter, and to have allowed the purchase to be concluded under a statute different from that under which it was initiated, and in a manner not contemplated by it. Therefore the patent was issued without lawful authority.

Nevertheless, there is no fraud or deception charged in the complaint, and none appears in the record, nor has any offer been made by the state to the patentee to return the warrants which he has paid in good faith. Such being the case, defendant cannot be deprived of his patent, unless he receives back from the state what he has paid under an erroneous view of the law entertained by the register and himself. People v. Bryan, 73 Cal. 377, 14 Pac. Rep. 893; U. S. v. White, 9 Sawy. 131, 17 Fed. Rep. 561, and cases cited. And unless some statute prevents, which has not been called to our attention, the certificate of purchase is valid, and the purchase may be completed by complying with the provisions of section 3494 of the Political Code, under which it was initiated. For these reasons we advise that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

(Supreme Court of California. October 20, 1888.)

1. CONTEMPT—PROCEDURE—AFFIDAVIT—CONTENTS.

In California a contempt is prosecuted in the proceeding out of which it arises; and therefore under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1211, requiring an affidavit of the facts constituting the contempt, it is unnecessary, on the violation of an injunction, to set forth the pendency of the proceeding in which it issued, or the provisions of the order; but it is sufficient if the affidavit alleges the acts done in violation of it.

2. SAME—FINAL JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS—REVIEW—HABEAS CORPUS.

After final judgment in proceedings to punish for contempt, where the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, alleged irregularities, that defendant was arrested in one county by the deputy sheriff of another, or that he was arrested in the night without an indorsement of authority therefor on the warrant, or that the warrant did not show on its face facts authorizing the arrest, or that he was given a fictitious name in the warrant, and was not otherwise described, cannot be inquired into on habeas corpus, the judgment of the court being conclusive, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1222, especially where it recites that defendant was duly brought into court pursuant to the warrant, and that the person proceeded against by the fictitious name answered by his true name.

3. SAME—WARRANT CONTAINING FICTITIOUS NAMES—AMENDMENT

Where a complaint states that the true names of defendants are unknown, and prays an amendment alleging their true names when discovered, and they do not appear, and an injunction directed to them under fictitious names is served on them, and a warrant for arrest for its violation describes them as the persons who had been served therewith, a judgment against them in their true names, in the proceedings for contempt, stating that their true names were found at the hearing, is valid.

In bank. Applications for writs of habeas corpus.

Cross & Simonds, for petitioners. E. A. Forbes and A. L. Hart, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. Petitioner claims that he should be discharged from custody for the following reasons: First, because the affidavit on which the warrant was issued was insufficient to give the court jurisdiction to order the arrest of petitioner; second, because the petitioner was arrested under a general warrant of arrest in Nevada county by the deputy sheriff of Yuba county; third, because he was arrested in the night-time, and without an indorsement on the warrant of arrest to authorize the arrest at that time; fourth, because the warrant of arrest did not show upon its face facts authorizing the arrest; and, fifth, because the petitioner is not named in the warrant of arrest, the only name used in the warrant being a fictitious name, and there being no other designation or description of the person to be arrested.

1. The affidavit on which the warrant of arrest was issued alleges, in substance, that, since the service on the defendants of the injunction which had been issued on the 16th day of January, and served on defendants on the 30th day of the same month, said defendants, John Doe and others, have been working and operating the mine described in the complaint by the hydraulic process, in willful and gross disobedience of the orders and processes of the court. It describes particularly the manner in which the mine had been operated, and alleges that large quantities of material had been deposited into Deer creek, tributary to the Yuba river, in violation of the writ of injunction. These allegations, we think, were sufficient. Section 1211 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, "when the contempt is not committed in the immediate view and presence of the court or judge at chambers, an affidavit shall be presented to the court or judge of the facts constituting the contempt, or a statement of the facts by the referees, arbitrators, or other judicial officer." In this state, although contempt of court is a specific criminal offense, and a judgment of conviction thereof the same as a judgment in a criminal case, (Ex parte Hollis, 59 Cal. 408,) the practice has always been to prosecute a matter of contempt in the cause or proceeding out of which it arose, and not as a separate proceeding, with a title of its own. It is therefore unnecessary in the affidavit to set forth the pendency of the cause or proceeding, or the provisions of the order which has been violated. The court takes judicial notice of those matters, and it is quite clear, we think, that the facts constituting the contempt, or the facts stated by the referee, within the meaning of section 1211, supra, are sufficiently stated if the acts done in violation of the order or writ are set forth. The most that can be said against the affidavit is that it is inartificially drawn. In determining on habeas corpus whether the court had jurisdiction, we must distinguish between a complaint or affidavit which charges no offense at all, and one which, though inartificially drawn, intimates the existence of the facts necessary to constitute the offense, and indicates a purpose to declare thereon. Ex parte Kearny, 55 Cal. 228.

2. It would be sufficient to say, in answer to the other grounds assigned as reasons for the discharge of the petitioner, that, if the facts are as represented, and could be considered here, they show irregularity in the obtaining of jurisdiction, but do not show such a want of jurisdiction as would authorize his discharge on habeas corpus. The petitioner was actually taken before the court below, and given an opportunity to defend himself against the charge made in the affidavit. We have already held that that affidavit was sufficient for the issuance of the warrant. The court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and, however irregular the proceedings taken to obtain jurisdiction of the person, its judgment is final and conclusive. Section 1222, Code Civil Proc., provides that "the judgment and orders of the court or judge, made in cases of contempt, are final and conclusive." The fact that the process has not been served by the proper person, or at the proper place or time, or that the warrant or order upon which a prisoner has been arrested is void, and the arrest unlawful, will not render the judgment void, and subject to a collateral attack. Ex parte McGill, 6 Tex. App. 498; Dorente v. Sullivan, 7 Cal. 279; Peck v. Strauss, 33 Cal. 685; Owens v. Gotzian, 4 Dill. 438; Ex parte Kellogg, 6 Vt. 511; Freem. Judgm. § 126. After final judgment of conviction the jurisdiction of the court cannot be questioned by an inquiry into the manner in which the accused was brought before it; and this is true, even though the prisoner has been kidnapped and forcibly brought before the court from a foreign jurisdiction. People v. Rowe, 4 Park. Crim. R. 253; U. S. v. Lawrence, 13 Blatchf. 306; Ex parte Scott, 9 Barn. & C. 446; State v. Smith, 1 Bailey, 283; State v. Brewster, 7 Vt. 118; State v. Ross, 21 Iowa, 467. In the last-named case it was said: "The liability of the parties arresting them [the defendants] without legal warrant for false imprisonment or otherwise, and their violation of the penal statutes of Missouri, may be ever so clear, and yet the prisoners not be entitled to their discharge." See, also, Mahon v. Justice, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1204, where the cases bearing upon this question are thoroughly reviewed by Mr. Justice FIELD. Nearly all of the objections urged against the validity of the judgment convicting petitioner of a contempt are answered by the recitals in the judgment itself. If the record were silent as to the jurisdictional facts, jurisdiction would be presumed; but the judgment itself recites all of the facts necessary to the exercise of jurisdiction by the court. It appears upon the face of the judgment that the injunction was duly issued and served, and that the same has ever since remained in full force and effect; that after service upon the defendants the acts alleged in the affidavit were committed by the defendants in violation of the injunction, and in contempt of the authority of the court. It recites that the petitioner was "duly and regularly brought into court pursuant to said warrant of attachment;" that the person sued and served as James Doe in said action, and proceeded against by said name, answered that his true name was Ah Men. The matters thus adjudicated are conclusive, and no evidence dehors the record can be received to impeach them. Freem. Judgm. § 619; Ex parte Sternes, ante, 275, (filed September 28, 1888.)

3. The fact that the true names of the defendants in the action were unknown was alleged in the complaint, followed by a prayer that when discovered the complaint might be amended by alleging their true names. The injunction seems to have followed the complaint, and was directed to the defendants under said fictitious names, but it was actually served upon the defendants. No answer was filed by them, nor did they make any appearance in the action. They continued, however, to do the things which they were by the writ of injunction enjoined and restrained from doing. In the affidavit for the warrant of attachment the defendants were described as persons who had been served with the injunction theretofore issued. At the hearing the court found the true name of petitioner to be Ah Men, and it is so stated in the judgment. This is sufficient.

With the question of injustice or wrong that may have been done to this petitioner by the procedure against him we have nothing to do. The only inquiry before us is whether the court had jurisdiction of the person and of the subject-matter. We think that the petitioners should be remanded to the custody of the sheriff of Yuba county; and it is so ordered.

McCUSKER v. WALKER. (No. 11,640.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 22, 1888.)

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—WRONGFUL ATTACHMENT—RUNNING OF THE STATUTE.

The statute of limitations runs on a cause of action for maliciously suing an attachment from the time of the wrongful act; and the limitation of two years provided by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 339, subd. 1, in case of actions upon a contract, obligation, or liability, not founded on an instrument in writing, applies in such case, rather than the three years limitation of section 338, subd. 3, in case of actions for taking, detaining, or injuring any goods or chattels, including actions for the recovery of personal property.

Commissioners' decision, Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; JOHN K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

Action by Tillatha G. McCusker against Thomas Walker for the wrongful suing of an attachment. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Code Civil Proc. § 338, subd. 3, prescribes a limitation of three years in case of "an action for taking, detaining, or injuring any goods or chattels, including actions for the recovery of specific personal property." Section 339, subd. 1, prescribes a two-years limitation in case of "an action upon a contract, obligation, or liability, not founded upon an instrument of writing."

A. S. Kittredge, for appellant. N. A. Dorne and T. H. Laine, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. In January, 1881, the defendant herein, Thomas Walker, purchased certain real property at a sale under a decree of foreclosure of mortgage, and in due time received the sheriff's deed therefor. The plaintiff herein, Tillatha C. McCusker, was a party to the foreclosure suit, and was in possession of the property when the sale was made, and up to the time when the sheriff's deed was executed. On the 27th day of August, 1881, Walker commenced an action against McCusker to recover the sum of $1,200, the alleged value of the use and occupation of the property during the six months allowed for redemption. At the time of commencing his action Walker filed an affidavit and undertaking, and procured a writ of attachment to be issued, under which certain personal property of McCusker was, on the same day, seized and taken into his possession by the sheriff. In September following.

McCusker moved the court to dissolve the attachment, on the ground that the alleged indebtedness was not on a contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money. This motion was denied in October, and an appeal from the order was taken to this court. On the 28th day of June, 1884, the order was reversed, (65 Cal. 360, 4 Pac. Rep. 206,) and on the 22d day of August following an order was entered in the court below dissolving the attachment. This action was commenced on the 24th day of August, 1884, to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff, in consequence of the wrongful issuance of the attachment in the case of Walker v. McCusker. It is alleged in the complaint that "plaintiff in said action willfully, maliciously, wrongfully, and unlawfully, and without probable cause, made application to the clerk of said court for a writ of attachment against the property of this plaintiff; * * * and the writ was improperly, irregularly, wrongfully, and maliciously, and without probable cause, issued." It is further alleged that the plaintiff was a farmer, and that the property attached "was used in and was necessary to her said business of farming; and thereby the business of plaintiff was utterly broken up, and said property and the use thereof was lost to plaintiff, and her credit was destroyed, to her damage in the sum of $10,000; that the property so attached was of the value of $6,000, and has been by reason of said attachment wholly lost to plaintiff, to her damage in the further sum of $6,000." The prayer is for damages in the sum of $16,000, and for costs. The defendant answered, and, among other defenses set up, alleged that the cause of action was barred by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The trial was by a jury; and the plaintiff introduced evidence showing, among other things, that the value of the property attached was, at the time of the levy, about $2,250. When the plaintiff rested her case, the defendant moved for a non-suit on the ground that it appeared from the plaintiff's evidence that the attachment was levied on the 27th of August, 1881, and this action was not commenced till the 24th of August, 1884, and that her cause of action was therefore barred by the statute of limitations. The court denied the motion and the defendant reserved an exception. The defendant then introduced evidence tending to show that the value of the property attached was, at the time of the levy of the attachment, about the sum of $1,450, and that on the 20th of March, 1884, judgment in the said suit of Walker v. McCusker was entered in favor of the plaintiff, and against the defendant, for the sum, including interest and costs, of $1,197.50. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff for $3,214.40, on which judgment was entered. The defendant moved for a new trial, and has appealed from the judgment and an order denying his motion, and now insists that plaintiff's cause of action was barred in two years after the levy of the attachment, and that the court erred in not granting his motion for non-suit.

The question is, does the two-years limitation provided by subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure apply, or the three-years limitation provided by subdivision 3 of section 338? It is clear, we think, that the gravamen of the action is the alleged suing out and levying the writ of attachment maliciously and without probable cause. Apt words are used to describe a cause of action for malicious prosecution, and they must be presumed to have been used by design; the words, "and without probable cause," having been added by an amendment made at the trial. The averments as to the injury done to the plaintiff's business and credit, and as to the value and loss of the property taken, were evidently inserted to furnish a basis for proof of damages. The plaintiff might have brought an action for the taking and detention of her property, but she elected to sue for the malicious prosecution of a process of law, and apparently chose the latter form of action because greater damages could thereby be recovered. Civil Code, § 3294. But where the gist of an action is a malicious prosecution, the statute begins to run when the wrongful act is done, and the limitation is two years. In Sharp v. Miller, 57 Cal. 431, the action was brought to recover damages for the malicious suing out of a writ of attachment, and levying it upon the real property of plaintiff; and it was held that the action was barred after two years from the time of the levy. So in Wood v. Currey, Id. 208, the action was brought to recover damages for maliciously causing a writ of execution to be issued on a judgment which had been satisfied, and levying it upon the plaintiff's real property; and it was held that the two-years limitation applied, and that the action was barred. See, also, Sharp v. Miller, 54 Cal. 329; Taylor v. Bidwell, 65 Cal. 489, 4 Pac. Rep. 491. We do not consider this case distinguishable in principle from the cases cited. Here, as there, the gist of the action was the malicious act of the defendant, and whether the levy was upon personal or real property is immaterial. Nor was the plaintiff's right of action postponed till the attachment was dissolved. The issuance of the writ was not a judicial proceeding, but a ministerial act on the part of the clerk, which he was bound to perform on the filing of the statutory affidavit and undertaking. Sections 538, 539, Code Civil Proc. Plaintiff might have commenced her action immediately after the writ was levied, and a motion to dissolve it was not necessary. The damages caused by the wrongful act had not all been sustained at that time, but the resulting damages might have been recovered.

In our opinion the action was barred, and the court should have granted the defendant's motion for nonsuit. It follows that the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

I concur: FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

NALLEY et al. v. McDONALD. (No. 11,528.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 25, 1888.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—GRANTING NEW TRIAL BY TRIAL COURT.

The appellate court, in reviewing an order granting a new trial, is not confined to the reasons given by the trial court in an opinion filed; but, if the order can be justified on any of the grounds on which the motion was based, new trials for insufficiency of the evidence being largely discretionary with the trial court, it will be affirmed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; ROBERT MCGARVEY, Judge.

Action by A. B. Nalley and E. H. Barnes, and William W. Melton, Robert W. Melton, James B. Melton, and Clymena Melton, minors, by said Nalley and Barnes, their guardians ad litem, against George H. McDonald, executor of the will of Anna McDonald, deceased, upon a promissory note. Verdict for plaintiffs set aside by the court, and plaintiffs appeal.

Henley & Oates, for appellants. J. T. Rogers, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiffs, and a judgment was rendered thereon. Defendant made a motion for a new trial, and the court granted it. From the order granting a new trial plaintiffs appeal.

The basis of the action was a lost claim against the estate of Anna McDonald, deceased. Plaintiffs sought to prove that the claim was properly verified; that it was presented to A. C. McDonald, executor of the estate, who indorsed his allowance thereon; that the said executor volunteered a promise to take the claim to the county-seat, and procure its allowance by the probate judge; and that the claim had been lost or destroyed, and could not after a sufficient search be found. Defendant contended that there was an insufficiency of evidence to establish either of these asserted facts, and included such insufficiencies in his specifications of the particulars in which the evidence was insufficient. On the 19th of January, 1886, the judge of the court below filed a short opinion, in which he gave as the main reason for granting the new trial the failure of the evidence to show the loss of the claim. On the next day the order granting the motion for new trial was made, in which, after a reference to the statement on the motion, is a recital that "after a full consideration of said statement the said motion for a new trial is on this day granted." Counsel for appellants contend that in passing upon the correctness of the order this court can consider only the reasons given for it in the said opinion of the judge. But it is clear, as contended by counsel for respondent, that the order should be affirmed if it can be justified on any of the grounds upon which the motion for a new trial was based. And the evidence was not so convincing upon any of the points contested, including the one mentioned in the opinion of the judge, as to warrant us in overturning the conclusion reached by the court below. A motion for a new trial, on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court; and when, on such a motion, the court below has granted a new trial, the order granting it will not be disturbed unless there has been a clear abuse of discretion. And it does not appear to us that there has been such an abuse of discretion in the case at bar. Order appealed from affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; WORKS, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

McCORMICK v. SHERIDAN. (No. 11,839.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 23, 1888.)

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER—DEFENSES—POSSESSION.

Plaintiff in forcible detainer had no paper title to the land in controversy, which was uninclosed, but had possession of a portion only, which he farmed during the preceding year, and had left some furniture in a house on it, and hay and implements in the barn. During harvest time he lived on the land, but afterwards returned to his former residence. Defendant, claiming to pre-empt the land, built a small house, and moved onto it, but took no possession of the improved portion. Held, that a verdict for defendant was proper.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; E. M. GIBSON, Judge.

Action for the possession of a quarter section of land in Alameda county, brought by Frank McCormick against Martin Sheridan. Verdict for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Shafter, Parker & Waterman, for appellant. Mich. Mullany, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action of forcible detainer to recover possession of 160 acres of land. It is alleged in the complaint that on the 5th day of December, 1884, and for five days prior thereto, the plaintiff was in the peaceable and actual possession and occupation of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 17, in a certain described township; that on the said 5th day of December, and in the night-time, the defendant unlawfully entered upon said land, and took possession of the same; and that on the 22d day of the same month plaintiff made a demand that defendant surrender to him the possession of the land.

but defendant neglected and refused, for the period of five days after such demand, to surrender possession of the same, and still holds and continues in possession thereof. The answer denies that on the 5th day of December, 1884, or on all or any of the five preceding days, plaintiff was in the peaceable or actual possession or occupation of the land in controversy; denies that defendant unlawfully entered upon or took possession of the land; and alleges that it was public land subject to pre-emption, and that defendant was a qualified pre-emptor, and entered upon the land with the intention and for the purpose of pre-empting the same under the laws of the United States. The case was tried before a jury, and a verdict returned for defendant, on which judgment was entered. The plaintiff then moved for a new trial, and, his motion having been denied, appealed from the judgment and order.

No errors of law are assigned, but it is argued that the verdict was not justified by the evidence. The record is somewhat voluminous, but the material facts may be briefly stated as follows: The plaintiff claimed to have held the quarter-section in question for several years under a lease, but when asked by defendant to produce the lease declined to do so. The land had never been inclosed. There was a small house on it in which was some furniture, and a barn in which was some hay. There were also on the place some farming utensils. Plaintiff had cultivated some of the land, and in the year 1884 had raised some hay and some wheat and barley upon it. The hay was stored in the barn; and the wheat and barley, as soon as threshed, were hauled away. In the spring of 1884 plaintiff summer-fallowed a part of the land, and he estimated the number of acres summer-fallowed at from 30 to 40, while the defendant, and another witness called for him, estimated the number at only 4. Plaintiff owned the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 18, in the same township. This quarter section was inclosed, and on it plaintiff raised hay and grain, and kept all his horses, cattle, and hogs, and had a dwelling-house and barn. Plaintiff was residing in this house on section 18 when the time came to harvest his crops on section 17. He then went with his wife and children to the house on the last-named section, and remained there till the harvesting was completed. He then returned to the house on section 18, and lived there till about the 13th or 14th of December. On the 5th of December, some time after sundown, defendant entered upon the disputed quarter section, and erected a small cabin, in which he took up his residence, and was living when this action was commenced and the trial had. There is no evidence to show that he did anything to disturb the plaintiff's rights, except that on one day he set fire to and burned a little stubble and straw. One of the plaintiff's witnesses testified that he owned 34 acres of the quarter section in question, but what part of it he did not say, and it was not pretended that plaintiff had any lease from him. About a week after the defendant's entry the plaintiff returned with his family to the house on the disputed land, and continued to reside there up to the time of the trial. In reference to this the plaintiff testified. "It was on the 14th of December, and on the second Sunday after Sheridan came there, that we moved back into the house on section 17. I have been plowing on section 17 since Sheridan came, and have been and am now living with my wife and all my children in my house on section 17. Sheridan has not interfered with us." Upon these facts it is difficult to see how the verdict could have been other than it was. To maintain an action of this kind the plaintiff must show that within five days before the unlawful entry by defendant he was in the peaceable and actual possession of the demanded premises. Sections 1160, 1172, Code Civil Proc. To constitute such a possession of agricultural land it is not absolutely necessary that the land be inclosed; but, if not, it must appear from the other facts and circumstances shown that the plaintiff was exercising exclusive dominion and control over it. Here the quarter section was not inclosed, and there was nothing to show that plaintiff had ever exercised any exclusive dominion and control, except over those parts of it occupied by his buildings and used by him for the purposes of raising hay and grain. But the defendant never took possession of or interfered with the buildings or the hay and grain land. And the plaintiff, according to his own testimony, was in full possession of all that part of the property when he commenced his action and when it was tried.

It results, we think, that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and orders are affirmed.

GIESKE v. ANDERSON. (No. 11,466.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 23, 1888.)

PARTIES—NECESSARY PARTIES—SUIT BY ONE FOR GENERAL BENEFIT.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 382, providing that, when a question is "one of a common or general interest of many persons," one or more may sue for the benefit of all, the treasurer of a fire association, being the representative of its members, may sue an ex-treasurer, who is himself a member, for funds in his hands belonging to the association.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Marion county; E. B. MAHEN, Judge.

Action by Henry C. Gieske against William N. Anderson under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 382, providing that, when a question is "one of a common or general interest of many persons," one may sue for the benefit of all. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

F. M. Angellotti, for appellant. Henry McCrea, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This action was instituted under section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The complaint alleges, among other things, that the plaintiff was, on the 27th day of October, 1885, duly elected treasurer of the San Rafael fire department, an association composed of 40 or more persons, formed and existing for the purpose of protecting the property of the citizens of the town of San Rafael against fire; that the defendant, as a former treasurer of that association, had certain moneys placed in his hands in trust, and with the understanding that he would pay over the same upon the demand or order of that association, or to any treasurer thereof who might be elected or appointed by said association as his successor; that the defendant, ever since the 22d day of December, 1885, has been and still is in possession of the trust funds; that on the 29th day of October, 1885, by order of said association, a written order to pay over the money then in his possession was drawn on the defendant by the president of the association, etc., and that the plaintiff, as treasurer thereof, presented that order to the defendant, and demanded that he pay over the money to the plaintiff as treasurer of the association; that the defendant refused, and still refuses, to comply with that demand. A general demurrer was interposed, to the effect that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled, and, the defendant declining to answer, judgment as prayed for was given in favor of the plaintiff. The facts stated in the complaint show that the question involved in the controversy was one of general interest to many persons, that is, all the members of the association, as against their former treasurer, who, it is alleged, holds trust funds belonging to the association which he agreed to pay over to his successor, and refuses to do so. All the parties to the controversy are before the court; the association by its treasurer appearing for all its members, except the alleged defaulting ex-treasurer. We do not see how his rights as a member of the association can be affected by being compelled to pay over to his successor trust funds which belong to the association, which should be in the custody of its treasurer, and which the defendant agreed to pay over when demand was made, and now repudiates his promise. The demurrer was properly overruled, and we advise that the judgment be affirmed, and the defendant be made to pay 10 per cent. damages in addition to the costs of this appeal, which was evidently taken merely for delay.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed, and the defendant is hereby ordered to pay 10 per cent. damages in addition to the costs of this appeal.

WORKS, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment on the ground that the plaintiff named shows his individual right to recover for the benefit of the association, but do not wish to be understood as agreeing to the proposition that this case is within section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure, authorizing one person to sue for the benefit of himself and others. The facts alleged attempting to show such right, should be treated as surplusage.

MALONE v. DEL NORTE COUNTY et al. (No. 11,585.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 23, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS—SUFFICIENCY.

Where, in the assignment of errors, it is asserted that the decision is against law, and no particulars are specified in which the evidence is insufficient, the evidence cannot be considered on appeal.

2. TRIAL—BY COURT—ISSUES NOT PASSED ON.

Where the facts found sustain the judgment, it is immaterial that some of the issues presented were not found upon.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Del Norte county; JAMES E. MURPHY, Judge.

Action by John Malone against the county of Del Norte and L. S. P. Marsh, on an assignment of a portion of a debt due from the county to Marsh on a contract for the erection of a court-house. The court below found that no valid contract was made by the county for the erection of a court-house, for the reason that no notice of the letting of the contract was given; that Marsh commenced the erection of the building, but abandoned it on December 29, 1884, and was paid the full amount due him for work done up to that time; that on September 16, 1884, Marsh was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $2,600, and agreed that the county should pay him that amount, of which facts the county had no knowledge; and that no claim was ever presented to the county in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 14, 1883. The action was accordingly dismissed, with costs, and the plaintiff appealed.

R. G. Knox and J. D. H. Chamberlin, (P. Reddy and W. H. Metson, of counsel,) for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., L. F. Coburn, and L. F. Cooper, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. This action was brought by the plaintiff, as the assignee of an indebtedness alleged to be due by virtue of a certain agreement, claimed to have been entered into between the county of Del Norte and L. S. P. Marsh, the assignor, as a contractor for the building of a court-house. The court below gave judgment in favor of the county of Del Norte, from which an order denying a new trial this appeal is prosecuted. The argument of the appellant in favor of the reversal of the judgment and order seems to be almost entirely based upon the proposition that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings. But in the assignment of errors he simply asserts that the decision is against law, but fails to specify the particulars in which the evidence is alleged to be insufficient to sustain the decision. Therefore, we cannot examine the evidence as it appears in the bill of exceptions, and "must accept as conclusively established the facts set out in the findings." Polack v. Gurnee, 66 Cal. 267, 5 Pac. Rep. 229, 610. Conceding, without deciding, that some of the issues "are not found upon, such issues are immaterial in view of the facts found. The facts found sustain the judgment, and there was and is no necessity to go further, and find upon other issues." Robarts v. Haley, 65 Cal. 402, 4 Pac. Rep. 385; McCourtney v. Fortune, 57 Cal. 617; Porter v. Woodward, Id. 535. No prejudicial error appearing, we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

ZIRKER v. HUGHES. (No. 12,575.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 23, 1888.)

COUNTIES—ACTIONS AGAINST—SPLITTING CLAIMS—JUDGMENT—RES ADJUDICATA.

The assignee of a claim against a county for $952.77 presented it to the board of supervisors for allowance, and it was allowed for the amount of $640.77 only. He then sued and recovered judgment upon a portion of his original claim. Held, that such judgment was a bar to further proceedings to enforce the claim, as allowed by the board, under Laws Cal. 1883, p. 313, § 44, allowing suit by a claimant dissatisfied with the amount allowed him, as such suit must be for the whole amount.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Merced county; C. H. MARKS, Judge.

Petition by Adolph Zirker for a writ of mandamus to compel R. N. Hughes, auditor of Merced county, to draw a warrant upon the treasurer of Merced county in favor of the petitioner. The petition was denied, and the petitioner appeals.

R. H. Ward and Frank H. Farrar, for appellant. J. W. Breckinridge, (Breckinridge & Peck, of counsel,) for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Application for a writ of mandate against the auditor of Merced county to compel him to draw a warrant upon the treasurer in favor of petitioner for $640.77. The petitioner was the holder by assignment of a claim against the county for $952.77. This claim was presented by him to the board of supervisors for allowance, and was allowed by them for the amount which petitioner claims here, viz., $640.77, and no more. The petitioner then sued the county in the justice's court for $299.99, (said amount being a part of his said claim,) and recovered judgment for that sum and costs, which judgment was paid by the county. He then brought the present proceeding for a warrant for the $640.77, for which his original claim had been allowed. The defendant pleaded the judgment of the justice's court as a bar to the proceeding, and the trial court sustained this plea, and rendered judgment accordingly. We think this was right. A claimant who is dissatisfied with the amount allowed him must sue the county within six months. Laws 1883, p. 313, § 44. The suit must be for his whole claim. It is an old and well-settled rule that a party having an entire demand cannot split it up into separate causes of action. If the petitioner could split his demand into two parts he could split it into 952 parts, in which case the costs alone would amount at the rate of the suit above mentioned to over $4,000. If he undertake such a course, the judgment in the first suit is, when properly pleaded, a bar to the rest. The other matters do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

VULICEVICH v. SKINNER. (No. 11,124.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 23, 1883.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF—CONTRACT FOR GROWING FRUIT.

A contract for the sale of growing fruit is not within the statute of frauds, and need not be in writing.

2. TRIAL—INSTRUCTION—ASSUMPTION OF FACTS.

In an action for money alleged to have been received to plaintiff's use, but which defendant testifies was paid on a contract for the sale of fruit, it is error to charge, in speaking of the payment, that "my understanding was that that completed the contract," as this instruction assumes the statement of defendant to be true.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.—Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; F. J. McCANN, Judge.

Assumpsit by Marco Vulicevich against Henry Skinner for money received to plaintiff's use. The jury returned a verdict for defendant for damages for breach of a contract on which the money was alleged to have been paid, and the plaintiff appeals.

Chas. B. Younger, for appellant. John Flournoy and Goldsby & Jeter, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This action was brought to recover the sum of $600, for money claimed by the plaintiff to have been received by the defendant for the former's use. The answer admits the reception of the money, but denies that it was received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use. It sets up a claim that the plaintiff bought defendant's entire crop of fruit for the year 1882 for the sum of $3,000, and that the sum of $600 sued for in the action by the plaintiff was in reality paid to the defendant as part of the purchase money for the crop of fruit; and, further, it states that after this purchase by the plaintiff he refused to receive any part of the crop of fruit, and that the defendant has thereby suffered damage in the sum of $900. The cause was tried by a jury, who returned a verdict in favor of the defendant for $600. From the judgment rendered thereon, and an order refusing a new trial, the plaintiff appeals.

He makes the point that the crop of fruit growing upon the trees and vines was real property, and that the alleged contract of sale was void under the statute of frauds as not being in writing, and that the court wrongfully charged the jury upon the matter. We cannot concur with this view. "Contracts for the sale of growing periodical crops—fructus industriales—are not within the statute of frauds, and therefore need not be made in writing. After some vacillation, this has become the settled doctrine. Marshall v. Ferguson, 23 Cal. 65." Davis v. McFarlane, 37 Cal. 636.

It is further argued in favor of the reversal of the judgment that the court in its charge to the jury said in its third instruction: "My understanding was that that completed the contract." The record shows that the court had just stated the materiality of the defendant's claim in evidence that the $600 was paid him as a part of the purchase price for the fruit. The instruction virtually assumes this statement of the defendant to be true as a matter of fact, and informs the jury that the payment referred to completed the contract. This instruction to the jury charged them with respect to a matter of fact, and was erroneous. We therefore advise that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

FISCHER v. TRAVELERS' INS. CO. (No. 11,475.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 23, 1888.)

INSURANCE—ACCIDENT INSURANCE—DEATH OF INSURED BY VIOLENCE.

No recovery can be had on an insurance policy which provides that the company shall not be liable if the death or injury "may have been caused by intentional injuries inflicted by the insured or any other person," where the insured was shot and killed by a third person, though without provocation, and while peaceably and lawfully engaged in his ordinary business.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; F. E. SPENCER, Judge.

Action by Pedronilla Fischer against the Travelers' Insurance Company on an insurance policy. A demurrer to plaintiff's complaint was sustained, and she appeals.

J. S. Wallis and Laine & Johnston, for appellant. J. H. Campbell and F. H. Howard, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover on what is ordinarily denominated an "accident insurance policy." According to the facts set out in the complaint, the insured, who was the husband of the plaintiff, "while peaceably, lawfully, and quietly engaged in his ordinary business as butcher, in his office at Mountain View, in said county of Santa Clara," was shot through the body with a pistol, without provocation, by one George Langley, from which shot and wound thereby inflicted alone, Fischer, the insured, died in a few hours. The complaint was demurred to as not stating a cause of action, the demurrer was sustained, and, the plaintiff declining to amend, a final judgment was given for the defendant, from which this appeal is taken. It is provided in the policy involved in this controversy, among other things, that the company issuing the policy shall not be responsible thereon, if the death or injury for which indemnity is sought "may have been caused by * * * intentional injuries inflicted by the insured or any other person." It is evident that the injuries inflicted in this instance, causing the death of the insured, were not inflicted by himself; but, according to the facts set out in the complaint, were caused by the act of one George Langley, without provocation. We do not agree with counsel that the proviso refers to killing in some brawl which the insured draws upon himself, or intentionally engages in. We think it clear that the word "intentional" refers to intention on the part of the person inflicting the injury, and on his part only. It is not distinctly alleged that there was such intention here, and it might be a question whether or not the rule as to construing pleadings against the pleader would cover the defect. But the counsel for the appellant does not press this point, but has argued the case upon the assumption that the complaint charges an intentional killing. If it does, the demurrer was properly sustained. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

CRESCENT CITY WHARF & LIGHTER CO. v. SIMPSON et al. (No. 11,649.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 26, 1888.)

1. COURTS—ADMIRALTY JURISDICTION OF STATE COURTS—INJUNCTION.

A state court has jurisdiction to enjoin the removal and destruction of anchors, moorings, and buoys appurtenant to a wharf on navigable waters; the act conferring admiralty and maritime jurisdiction on the United States district court expressly saving "to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it."

2. INJUNCTION—PLEADING—ALLEGATION OF INSOLVENCY.

A complaint for an injunction which alleges that irreparable damage is threatened, in that a part of a wharf, which is real estate, is about to be wrongfully taken away, need not allege insolvency of defendant.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT—LEASE BY TOWN—AUTHORITY TO EXECUTE.

A town's authority to execute a lease is shown prima facie by its corporate seal, affixed to the lease by the proper officer.

4. SAME—SEAL—ACCEPTANCE BY LESSEE.

It is not necessary to the validity of a lease that the lessee affix his seal thereto. His acceptance is shown by claiming under it, occupying and maintaining the premises, and paying rent.

Appeal from superior court, Del Norte county; JAMES E. MURPHY, Judge.

Action by the Crescent City Wharf & Lighter Company to enjoin A. M. Simpson, Joseph G. Wall, and the Crescent City Wharf & Dock Company from removing certain moorings appurtenant to a wharf alleged to belong to plaintiff, and for damages. The court granted an injunction, and awarded damages, and defendants appeal.

L. F. Cooper, L. F. Coburn, and Daniel Titus, for appellants. Wm. H. Hart and R. G. Knox, (Aylett R. Cotton, of counsel,) for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This action was brought for the purpose of obtaining an injunction against the defendants restraining them from taking up certain moorings, alleged to be the property of plaintiff, and to recover damages for the removal of certain of said moorings. The court below granted an injunction as to the removal of some of the moorings, and as to portions of others, and awarded damages in the sum of $100 for the taking away of a buoy and anchor belonging to a mooring of the plaintiff. From the judgment and an order denying a new trial the defendants have appealed. Their first point is that the court below should have sustained their demurrer to the complaint, because, as they allege, that tribunal had no jurisdiction of the action, and that the complaint did not state facts showing any equities, and was ambiguous and uncertain. The facts set out in the complaint appear to be, among others: That the plaintiff had leased from the proper authorities of the town of Crescent City a certain portion of the water front of that place, on navigable waters, upon which had been built and was being maintained by the plaintiff a wharf used for the unloading and loading of ships and other watercraft; that in connection with the wharf, and as necessary and appurtenant to it, the plaintiff had in its possession and under its control certain moorings, anchors, and buoys which were affixed and attached to the ground, earth, and rock constituting the bottom of the bay or navigable waters where the wharf was erected; that such moorings, anchors, and buoys, in "annexion" with the wharf, were in daily use by the plaintiff, and that the wharf could not be utilized without them; that the defendants wrongfully and maliciously removed one of the anchors, moorings, and buoys, and threaten to and would remove the rest of them unless they should be enjoined from so doing; that the injury already done amounted to the sum of $15,000, and that the injury threatened could not be estimated, and was irreparable.

Upon this state of facts we think there can be no doubt but that the state court had jurisdiction. Conceding, for the purposes of the case, that the federal court would have jurisdiction of such a case, the state court has concurrent jurisdiction; the action being in personam. Hen. Adm. p. 39, § 19; The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. 558. The act conferring admiralty and maritime jurisdiction on the United States district court expressly saves "to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it."

We do not think that the objection based upon the alleged uncertainty or ambiguity of the statements of the complaint is well taken.

It is further contended that the complaint was defective in not alleging the insolvency of the defendants. Yet it stated that irreparable damage was threatened in this: That a part of the wharf which is real estate was about to be wrongfully taken away,—that is, the inheritance was threatened to be removed, and a trespass threatened in the nature of waste. When such facts are alleged in a complaint, it is not necessary, in order to obtain an injunction, to allege the insolvency of the defendant. Richards v Dower, 64 Cal. 63. The demurrer was therefore properly overruled. It is further claimed by the appellants that the judgment should be reversed, because, as is asserted, the lease under which the plaintiff held was improperly admitted in evidence, for the reason that the officers had no authority to execute it. But the corporate seal appears to have been affixed by the proper officer, and that is sufficient prima facie to show the authority. Association v. Bustamente, 52 Cal. 192. It was not necessary to the validity of the lease that the lessee should affix his seal thereto. His acceptance was abundantly shown by claiming under it, and occupying and maintaining the wharf and its appurtenances, and paying rent. The other points made are without merit; and, no prejudicial error appearing in the record, we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

CAMPBELL et al. v. WALLS. (No. 11,411.)
(Supreme Court of California. October 23, 1888.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where the transcript shows no evidence on the subject of the alleged erroneous rulings, the presumption is that they were correct.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Lake county; RODNEY J. HUDSON, Judge.

Action to recover possession of a lot of land, brought by Charles Campbell and others against Benjamin Walls. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal.

E. W. Britt, for appellants. A. E. Noel, (R. W. Crump, of counsel,) for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The plaintiffs brought this action to recover the possession of a lot of land situated in the town of Lower Lake, in Lake county, and described in their complaint as "commencing at the north-west corner of Main and Mill streets, in said town of Lower Lake, and running thence north, along Mill street, 160 feet; thence west 16 feet; thence south, along the east line of lot 2, in block 2, in said town, 160 feet, to Main street; thence east 16 feet, to place of beginning." The defendant, by his answer, denied the plaintiff's ownership of the lot, and set up title in himself. The court below found that the plaintiffs were not the owners or entitled to the possession of the lot, and gave judgment for the defendant; from which, and from an order denying them a new trial, plaintiffs appealed. It is claimed for the appellants that the findings were not justified by the evidence, and this is the only question presented for review. The plaintiffs deraigned their title through a deed made to Jonathan H. Campbell, their father, in April, 1869. That deed was made by the admitted owner of the disputed and adjacent property, and described the land conveyed as a lot in the town of Lower Lake, "commencing on Main street at the south-west corner of lot No. 2, in block No. 2, in said town; running thence east 16 feet, to Mill street; thence north, with Mill street, 160 feet; thence west 16 feet, to the north-west corner of said lot No. 2, in block No. 2, in said town; thence south 160 feet, to the place of beginning." They also introduced in evidence a plat of the town of Lower Lake, taken from the office of the county recorder, and proved that it had been in that office for more than four years, and was the only plat of the town to be found there. The plat showed that block No. 2 was bounded on the east by Mill street, and on the south by Main street, but did not show the location or size of lot No. 2, or that any part of the block had ever been designated as lot No. 2. In support of his claim of title to the disputed premises, the defendant introduced in evidence a grant, bargain, and sale deed, made by Jonathan H. Campbell to one Charles Corum, in June, 1868, conveying a lot in the town of Lower Lake, described on a plat or survey of the town "as the east part of lot 2, in block 2, according to said survey, as follows, to-wit: Commencing at the south-east corner of said lot 2, of block 2; thence west 60 feet, (exclusive of the public road on the east side of said lot;) thence north from the section line 160 feet; thence east 60 feet; thence south 160 feet, to the section line between sections 2 and 11, to place of beginning." This deed was acknowledged and recorded on the day of its date. Defendant also introduced a deed from Corum to himself made in July, 1876, and conveying the same premises. The plaintiff objected to both of those deeds on the ground that they did not embrace the premises in suit; but the court overruled the objection and admitted them in evidence. It is said in the brief filed for appellants that the demanded premises lie between lot 2 and the east line of the block; and that the points in the calls of the deed, under which his clients claim title, described as "the south-west corner of lot No. 2," and "the north-west corner of said lot No. 2," should have been described as the south-east and north-east corners of the lot, and that the descriptions found in the deed were probably written by mistake. On the other hand, it is said in the brief for respondent that lot 2 covers all of the south-eastern quarter of the block.

Now, if the respondent is right in his statement as to the location of lot 2, it is evident that the demanded premises were included in the deed from Campbell to Corum, and that when Campbell received his deed in 1869 the title to the property, if conveyed by that deed, at once vested in Corum, his former grantee, and is now vested in respondent. Turning to the transcript, we find no evidence upon the subject of these statements, and nothing from which we can determine as to which statement is true. But the burden is cast upon an appellant to show by the record affirmatively and clearly that error was committed by the trial court; and, in the absence of such showing, the presumption is that the rulings of the court were correct and its action proper. We find nothing in this record to justify us in saying that the court below clearly erred in reaching its conclusions. If such evidence was given, it should have been brought up in the transcript. Not being there, the loss, if any, must be borne by the appellants. We therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

BURLING v. THOMPkins. (No. 11,747.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 23, 1888.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—TITLE DERIVED FROM STATE—PRIVITY OF TITLE.

Defendant settled on certain land, claiming it belonged to the United States, two years after plaintiff had made application to purchase it from the state, which claimed it as school land. Defendant offered to enter the land under the United States homestead law, but the register refused the entry, and informed him that the land was not subject to entry. Defendant alleged that he was misled by such statement, and prevented from prosecuting his claim at that time, but did not excuse his subsequent delay of 15 years. Held, that defendant was not in such privity with the title of the United States as would enable him to attack a patent from the state.

2. EJECTMENT—PLEADING—DESCRIPTIO PERSONÆ.

A complaint in ejectment entitled "B. B. Administrator of the Estate of W. B., deceased," and alleging ownership and right of possession in plaintiff, containing no allegations respecting his representative character, is not demurrable for ambiguity, or uncertainty; but the omission of the word "as" renders the words added to the title descriptio personæ, and the action is by plaintiff in his individual capacity.

3. SAME—TITLE TO SUPPORT—PATENT TO GRANTEE IN REPRESENTATIVE CAPACITY.

One suing in his individual capacity is entitled to recover on a patent issued to him in a representative capacity.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; F. J. McCANN, Judge.

Ejectment by Benjamin Burling against Daniel D. Thompkins. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

W. D. Storey and Z. N. Goldsby, for appellant. Mesick & Maxwell, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. Ejectment. In the title of the cause the plaintiff is styled "Benjamin Burling, Administrator of the Estate of William Burling, deceased." The complaint contains no allegations respecting his representative character, being in the ordinary form, alleging ownership and right of possession in the plaintiff. To this complaint the defendant filed a demurrer, which was overruled. The ground of demurrer is that it cannot be ascertained from the complaint whether the plaintiff is suing as administrator in his representative capacity, or as an individual in his own right. The words quoted created no uncertainty or ambiguity. If words, showing simply the official capacity of the party, are added directly to his name in the title of the cause, as in the case at bar, without the word "as," they will be regarded as a mere descriptio personæ. The allegations of the complaint show whether the action is brought by or against a person en autre droit. People v. Houghtaling, 7 Cal. 350; Bank v. Van Rensselaer, 6 Hill, 241.

The answer denies generally and specifically all of the allegations of the complaint; pleads in bar of the cause of action set up in the complaint the provisions of sections 318, 319, 343, Code Civil Proc.; and, for a further answer, equitable defense, and cross-complaint, alleges that prior to the month of August, in the year 1868, one Bennett settled upon the land in controversy, and made valuable improvements thereon, claiming the right to occupy the same as a homestead under the laws of the United States; that while the land was so occupied by Bennett—February, 1870—defendant purchased his improvements and possessory right, and immediately moved upon the land, and has continued to occupy the same with his family ever since, claiming and holding the same for the purpose of settlement and cultivation as a homestead under the homestead laws; that the land in controversy was listed to the state of California as land in lieu of school lands under the laws of the United States, on or about November 15, 1871; that there was no basis for the listing of said land to the state of California, there being no sixteenth or thirty-sixth section in lieu of which the lands in controversy were listed and taken by said state; that in August, 1868, while Bennett was in possession of the land, William Burling made application to purchase the land under the laws of the state, and falsely and fraudulently made affidavit that the land was not occupied by any other person than himself, and that there were no improvements except his own on the land, nor was there any claim to said land adverse to his own; that Burling died in July, 1877; that on the 30th of March, 1878, the heirs of said William Burling, deceased, received a patent for said land from the state of California, which was based upon the false and fraudulent application above referred to; that when said patent was issued the state had no title to the land, the same having failed by reason of the erroneous and baseless listing above mentioned; that all the right, title, and interest that plaintiff has is derived from and rests upon said pretended patent of the state; that William Burling never occupied the land, nor any part thereof; that in the year 1870, while he was in possession of the land, defendant went to the United States land-office, and offered to make the proper application to enter the land under the homestead laws, and to pay the fee required in such cases, but the register of the land-office refused to permit him to make such application, and informed him that the land was not subject to entry under said homestead laws, and that defendant was misled by said statement, and was thereby prevented from prosecuting his homestead claim at that time; that the defendant still continues to claim the land as a homestead under said homestead laws, and was about to take proper steps to assert and perfect his claim when this action was commenced, and will do so as soon as possible; that the land now is, and was at the time that this action was commenced, public land of the United States, and subject to entry under the homestead laws, but for the pretended title resting upon said fraudulent application. The demurrer to this cross-complaint, on the ground that said complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute any defense or any cause for affirmative relief, was sustained and leave given by the court to amend, but no amendment was made.

We think the demurrer was properly sustained. The facts alleged fail to show that defendant is in such privity with the paramount source of title as to authorize him to attack the validity of the patent. The cases are somewhat divergent upon the question as to what constitutes such privity with the title of the United States as will enable a party to attack a patent collaterally, but we think no case can be found—certainly no case has been cited—which extends the privilege so far as it is sought to be exercised herein. The defendant went upon the land in 1870, two years after Burling made his application to purchase from the state. In the same year he made his offer to enter the land under the homestead laws, and pay the fee required in such cases. It is alleged that the register then refused to permit the defendant to make such entry, and informed him that the land was not subject to entry under the homestead laws. This is followed by an allegation that the defendant was misled by said statement, and was thereby prevented from prosecuting his homestead claim at that time. There is nothing to show why an application was not made at some subsequent time,—no excuse for the delay of 15 years which occurred between that date and the time of the commencement of this action. In all the cases cited by appellant except one, (Hollinshead v. Simms, 51 Cal. 158,) the parties claiming the right to attack the validity of the patent had—where it was in their power so to do—filed a declaration in the United States land-office. This, of course, was sufficient to connect them with the paramount source of title. In Hollinshead v. Simms, the court said: "Nor does Simms seem to have been lacking in diligence in the assertion of his claim." That cannot be said of the defendant herein. In Kile v. Tubbs, 23 Cal. 443, it appeared that the plats of the United States surveys had not been sent to the land-office. It was therefore out of the power of the defendant to file his notice of claim to pre-emption, and the court held that, having done all in his power, the defendant lost no rights acquired under the pre-emption laws. The defendant does not claim to have any privity with the state. We think that the refusal of the register of the United States land-office to allow him to make proper application and pay the fee required does not, under the circumstances, establish any privity with the United States. If the land at the time such offer was made was subject to entry, the refusal of the register to allow him to enter the land could not have prevented him from prosecuting his homestead claim, because the defendant had a remedy by appeal, which would have placed him in privity with the paramount source of title. In support of the propositions discussed we cite the following authorities: Moore v. Wilkinson, 13 Cal. 478; Doll v. Meador, 16 Cal. 295; Burrell v. Haw, 40 Cal. 373; Damrell v. Meyer, Id. 166; Bank v. Hynes, 50 Cal. 202; Thomas v. Lawlor, 53 Cal. 405; Kentfield v. Hayes, 57 Cal. 411.

Section 2 of the act of congress of March 1, 1877, provides that, "if there be no such sixteenth or thirty-sixth section, and the land surveyed therefor shall be held by an innocent purchaser for a valuable consideration, such purchaser shall be allowed to prove such facts before the proper land-office, and shall be allowed to purchase the same at $1.25 per acre. * * *" Under this provision, conceding that the state patent is void for the reason that the state had no title as alleged by the defendant, the plaintiff had a preferred right to purchase from the United States, unless, after knowledge of the facts, he neglected to furnish the proof and make the payment required by the act. The patent is valid upon its face. It provides that "the United States of America, in consideration of the premises, and in conformity with the several acts of congress in such case made and provided, have granted unto the said Benjamin L. Burling, administrator, and to his successors, the said tract above described." The plaintiff was not called upon to support the validity of his patent with proof of the fact that it had been issued to him—if such be the fact—under the provisions of section 2, supra. It devolved upon the defendant to allege and to show that under no circumstances were the officers of the land department authorized in issuing the patent to the plaintiff. Speaking of the power of the land department, and the conclusiveness of its patents, Mr. Justice FIELD, in Smelting Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 646, said: "The doctrine as to the regularity and validity of its [the land department's] acts, where it has jurisdiction, goes so far that if, in any circumstances under existing law, a patent would be held valid, it will be presumed that such circumstances existed."

It is contended by the appellant that, if the designation of the plaintiff as administrator, etc., in the caption of the complaint, be merely descriptio personæ, then the plaintiff, having sued in his individual capacity, is not entitled to recover upon a patent issued to him in his representative capacity. The legal title was vested in Burling by the patent, and entitled him to a recovery in this action. Whether this legal title was held in trust for others is not a proper subject for inquiry in this case. Bonds v. Hickman, 32 Cal. 202. The matters we have discussed cover all the points made by the appellant under his assignments of errors, and it is therefore unnecessary to notice them further. Judgment and order affirmed.

In re Cook's Estate. (No. 12,200.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 23, 1883.)

1. DIVORCE—RENDITION OF JUDGMENT—ENTRY AFTER DEATH OF PLAINTIFF.

The rendition and entry in the minutes of a judgment of divorce on default, without findings, are effectual to dissolve the marriage from the time thereof; and the entry of the judgment nunc pro tunc after plaintiff's death, on petition of her second husband, without notice to the divorced husband, is not error. Reversing 17 Pac. Rep. 923.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—PETITION FOR DISTRIBUTION AND ACCOUNTING.

It is improper to include, in a petition for final distribution of a decedent's estate, a prayer for an accounting against one who is alleged to have come to the possession of property of the estate, and not to have accounted for it.

THORNTON, J., dissenting.

The report of the case on the original hearing will be found in 17 Pac. Rep. 923.

H. C. McPike and James M. Seawell, for appellant. Tilden & Tilden, Eugene N. Deuprey, L. M. Hoefler, and James G. Carson, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. After a more mature consideration of this appeal, upon rehearing, we are satisfied that the court below was in error, and that the decree appealed from must be reversed. The appeal is taken by William E. Miller, assignee of William W. Richards, from a decree of distribution, by which the estate of the deceased was distributed, one-half to her mother, Mary A. Strasberger, and the other half to Theodore T. Cook, who was adjudged to be the surviving husband of the deceased. As the deceased left no issue or father, one-half of her estate went to her mother and the other half to her surviving husband; and the question to be determined was whether the said Theodore T. Cook, or the said William W. Richards, was such surviving husband. Upon the trial of this issue, Cook proved that he was married to the deceased (whose maiden name was Emma Strasberger) on the 26th day of December, 1873. It was alleged and claimed on the part of said Richards and his assignee, Miller, that the deceased was divorced from said Cook; that afterwards, on May 30, 1880, she was legally married to the said Richards, and that Richards, from the date last named, was, and continued to be, her lawful husband until her death. To maintain this issue on his behalf, Miller offered in evidence a certain judgment roll, duly authenticated. To the introduction of this judgment roll Cook objected upon the grounds that the decree of divorce therein contained was entered on petition of said Richards, who was a stranger to the record; "that there is no foundation for the same, and that it is not a decree;" that it was entered after the death of the plaintiff to the action, and without notice; that there were no findings to support it; and that the papers constituting the judgment roll are immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent. The court sustained the objections, and appellant excepted. The appellant then offered to prove the marriage of the deceased to Richards after the alleged divorce, and the assignment by the latter of all his right and interest in the estate in California and in the hands of the administrator to Miller. This offer was objected to upon substantially the same grounds as above stated, and the objection was sustained. These two rulings are assigned as error, and present the point involved.

The judgment roll offered in evidence shows, substantially, these things: The deceased, Emma Cook, commenced an action in March, 1880, in the superior court of San Francisco against the said Theodore T. Cook, to obtain a divorce. The complaint was sufficient in form and substance, and averred willful neglect as the cause of action. Summons was duly issued March 20, 1880, and was personally served on the defendant on the same day in the city and county of San Francisco. The defendant not answering or appearing, default was entered against him on the 6th of April, 1880. The decree contained in said judgment roll was entered on the 8th day of September, 1885, nunc pro tunc, as of the 23d day of April, 1880. It recites that the action came on regularly for hearing on the 6th of April, 1880; that the issuance and service of the summons and the default of defendant appearing, the case was referred to F. W. Lawler, a referee, to take proof of all the material allegations, and report the same to the court; and that said referee made his report. The said decree proceeds as follows: "The report of said referee having been finally filed in this action, and this action having been finally submitted on the 23d day of April, A. D. 1880, and this court having then fully considered the same, and ordered that a decree be entered therein in favor of said plaintiff dissolving the bonds of matrimony, then, on said 23d day of April, A. D. 1880, and theretofore existing between the said plaintiff, Emma Cook, and the said defendant, Theodore T. Cook, on the ground of willful neglect, which said judgment of said court was duly rendered in open court by this court on said 23d day of April, A. D. 1880, and then and there entered in the minutes of said court; and this court, upon petition of William W. Richards, filed herein on the 4th day of September, A. D. 1885, having on the 7th day of September, 1885, ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said decree of divorce ordered by said judgment of said court to be entered in favor of said plaintiff as aforesaid, on said 23d day of April, A. D. 1880, be forthwith entered by the clerk of this court nunc pro tunc as of said 23d day of April A. D. 1880, and that the judgment roll in this action be forthwith made and filed by the clerk of this court nunc pro tunc as of said 23d day of April, A. D. 1880,—it is now, therefore, considered, ordered, adjudged, and decreed by this court," etc. The decree then proceeds to dissolve the bonds of matrimony between the parties as of April 23, A. D. 1880. The deceased, Emma Cook, who was the plaintiff in said action, died in the month of November A. D. 1883, and, of course, was not living at the date of the entry of this decree. And counsel for respondent contends—First, that the action taken by the court on April 23, 1880, and recited in said decree, was not in any sense or for any purpose a judgment, and had no effect whatever upon the marriage relations of the parties; and, second, that the decree of September, 1885, was of no avail, because at the time of its entry one of the parties was dead.

The deceased, no doubt, considered that she was divorced on April 23, 1880, and could lawfully enter into a second marriage. It is averred in the petition of Richards that the said Theodore T. Cook also entered into a second marriage before the death of the deceased; and, although there is no proof on that subject in the record, yet it may be fairly presumed, from his apparent acquiescence in the second marriage of the deceased until after her death, that he also supposed that a divorce had taken place, and that he could lawfully marry again if he so elected. If, therefore, the question here presented were a doubtful one, the leaning of the court should be in favor of the validity of the second marriage, and against the implication of bigamy. We think, however, that former decisions of this court have, with sufficient clearness, solved the problem here involved against the contention of respondent. In those decisions a plain distinction is established between the rendition of judgment and its entry in the judgment-book. In Gray v. Palmer, 28 Cal. 416, the question was whether an appeal from a judgment had been taken in time,—the statute then requiring the appeal to be taken within one year after "the rendition of the judgment." In that case the judgment had been rendered more than two months before it had been entered by the clerk; and the appeal had been taken within a year after the entry, but not within a year after the rendition, and the court held that the appeal was too late. Justice SAWYER, in delivering the opinion of the court, says: "After a careful review of these and other sections of the practice act, we cannot resist the conclusion that the terms 'rendition' and 'entry' are used in different senses, and to express the idea appropriate to those words, respectively; and that there is a rendition of a judgment before it is actually entered in the judgment-book. Different stages of the proceeding are recognized by the statute as initial points from which other proceedings may be taken, or other rights acquired. Thus the right of appeal attaches, and the time for taking it commences to run, from the rendition of the judgment by the court; the right to issue execution from the time of the entry of the judgment rendered; and the judgment lien upon real estate attaches from the docketing of the judgment rendered and entered." And again: "Upon the construction given by us there are not two final judgments, as is argued by appellant. The clerk enters the judgment rendered by the court. The court pronounces the judgment, and the clerk performs the ministerial duty of entering it. The judgment rendered is the judgment entered." In Casement v. Ringgold, 28 Cal. 335, it was held (at a time when the statute provided for stated terms of court) that when the court had pronounced a judgment it became the judgment of the court of the term at which it had been rendered, and that the clerk could perform the ministerial duty of entering it in the judgment-book after the expiration of the term. And the opinion in this case refers to McMillan v. Richards, 12 Cal. 467; and Hutchinson v. Bours, 13 Cal. 52, in which cases the entry of a judgment by the clerk is referred to as a mere ministerial act. The same doctrine is clearly stated in Peck v. Courtis, 31 Cal. 209; Genella v. Relyea, 32 Cal. 159; McLaughlin v. Doherty, 54 Cal. 519; and in other cases decided by this court. And in Estate of Newman, 16 Pac. Rep. 887, (decided by this court March 1, 1888,) the very point here involved seems to have been definitely settled. The only difference between that case and the one at bar is that in the former the decision of the court—that is, the rendition of the judgment—was in writing, and signed by the judge of the court and filed with the clerk. But, as we shall see, those circumstances gave no additional significance or validity to the rendition of the judgment. One of the questions in the Newman case was, when did the judgment of divorce take effect as between the parties? And the court say: "The decree was signed by the judge on October 19th, and was filed by the clerk on October 22, 1885. Thus rendered, it was binding on the parties and privies, although not entered until January 5, 1887. The clerk could not, by his failure to perform a ministerial duty, abridge the rights of any party interested."

If it were necessary to refer to general authorities, it would be found that their drift is the same way. Freeman, in his work on Judgments, states the essence of the cases as follows: "Expressions occasionally find their way into reports and text-books, indicating that the entry is essential to the existence and force of the judgment. These expressions have escaped from their authors when writing on matters of evidence, and applying the general rule that in each case the best testimony which is capable of being produced must be received, to the exclusion of every means of proof less satisfactory and less authentic. The rendition of a judgment is a judicial act; its entry upon the record is merely ministerial. * * * That which the court performs judicially, or orders to be performed, is not to be avoided by the action or want of action of the judges or other officers of the court in their ministerial capacity." Section 38. In Telegraph Co. v. Patterson, 1 Nev. 151, which was a well-considered case, the question was, what constitutes a judgment? And the court say. "This motion seems to be based upon a misapprehension of what constitutes a judgment; and counsel seem to have confounded the judgment itself with the entry or record thereof. The judgment is a judicial act of the court; the entry is the ministerial act of the clerk. The judgment is as final when pronounced by the court as when it is entered and recorded by the clerk, as required by statute. * * * The decision of the court is the judgment; the entry by the clerk is the evidence of it." The current of English and American authorities is to the same point.

In some of the cases decided by this court and cited above, the judge, at the time of the rendition of the judgment, had prepared a written decision, generally in the form of a decree, and had, in some instances, filed it with the clerk; and counsel for respondent contends that those cases are not authority here, because in Cook v. Cook no such written decision or decree had been prepared, signed, or filed. But there is no statutory provision for the signing of a judgment by the judge, either before or after entry; and his signature gives it no additional solemnity or validity. Clink v. Thurston, 47 Cal. 29. Where that practice is adopted it is merely to give the clerk surer means of correctly entering what has been adjudged. But when, after the trial and final submission of the case, the court pronounces a judgment in apt language which finally determines the rights of the parties to the action, and leaves nothing more to be done except the ministerial act of the clerk in entering it, and especially when what the court has pronounced has been entered in the minutes, then the judgment has been rendered, and the rights of the parties established. And such was the case in Cook v. Cook whether we take the recitals in the decree entered in 1885, or the entry in the minutes in 1880, as stated in the petition of Richards. In Peck v. Courtis, supra, no form of judgment had been written or signed by the judge. In that case the court say: "As to the final judgment from which an appeal is taken it appears from the record that 'the cause having come on to be heard before the court on the 22d day of December, 1863, upon the report of the referees, and the court having been sufficiently advised thereon, it was ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that the said report of said referees be confirmed, and that judgment be entered according to said report, and that said partition be effectual forever.' The judgment thus rendered on the 22d day of December, 1863, was not in fact 'entered' in the judgment-book by the clerk till July 25, 1864, some six months afterwards. But an appeal from a final judgment must be taken 'within one year after the rendition of the judgment.' The time begins to run from the time when the judgment is rendered, not from the time when it is entered. The rendition and entry of a judgment are entirely different things—the one is to be performed by the court, and must be first in order of time, and the other by the clerk." 31 Cal. 209. In Genella v. Relyea, 32 Cal. 160, the court say: "The court announced its judgment, and the order for judgment was entered in the minutes of the court on the 15th of August, 1865. The judgment was therefore rendered, and the time for taking an appeal commenced to run, on that day." In Telegraph Co. v. Patterson, 1 Nev. 155, above cited, the court, on rehearing say: "When a judge orders a judgment in a cause, and that order is entered in the journal or minutes of the court, and no further facts are to be ascertained to determine the exact amount and character of that judgment, but there simply remains the clerical duty of entering in the judgment-book that which the court has determined and ordered to be entered, this, in our opinion, is a final judgment from which an appeal lies." Counsel for respondent contends that the case of Macnevin v. Macnevin, 63 Cal. 186, is in conflict with the other cases above cited. That case is very meagerly reported, and the precise point under discussion here was apparently not argued by counsel, or considered by the court. The court below in that case announced its decision in favor of defendant, and then made an order vacating certain allowances which it had granted plaintiff for alimony and counsel fees. From this order plaintiff appealed before there had been any entry of the general judgment in the case; and this court held that the order was not appealable as an order made after final judgment. But at that time the Code had been changed so as to provide that an appeal from a final judgment could not be taken until after entry; and all that the court can be considered as having decided in the case was that, as an appeal from a judgment could not be taken until after its entry, therefore, for the purpose of an appeal, no order could be considered as an order made after final judgment which had not been made after the entry of the judgment. In Condee v. Barton, 62 Cal. 1, also relied on by respondent, when the court had announced its findings of facts, and its conclusion of law upon said facts that plaintiffs were not entitled to judgment, plaintiffs immediately moved that the conclusion of law be set aside, and that judgment upon the facts found be given for plaintiffs. Thereupon the court ordered that the entry of judgment be stayed until said motion could be heard, and upon the hearing of the motion the court ordered judgment for plaintiffs. Upon appeal this court held that the course adopted by the court below was not erroneous. But it can hardly be said that in that case the court had rendered any judgment at all, because the retraction was concurrent with the announcement of the first conclusion, and the intended judgment was expressly held in abeyance to await further consideration. And the concluding sentence in the short opinion of this court in that case must be considered with reference to the facts of the case. No such facts appear in Cook v. Cook. None of the other cases cited by respondent from this court are in point. The fact that the decree was entered upon the petition of Richards is of no significance. It was the duty of the court to have the judgment entered, no matter by whom its attention was called to the subject. The mere absence of findings would not render a judgment void in any case; and in a case of default findings are not necessary, and form no part of the judgment roll. Code Civil Proc. § 670; Mulcahy v. Glazier, 51 Cal 626; Fox v. Fox, 25 Cal. 587.

There was no necessity for any notice to Theodore T. Cook before the entry of the judgment. It was the duty of the clerk at any time after the rendition of the judgment to enter it. And the judgment having been rendered in the life-time of the plaintiff Emma Cook, there was no error in entering it after her death. There are abundant English and American authorities to this point; but there is no need of citing them here, because this court has so held expressly in Franklin v. Merida, 50 Cal. 289. That case was an action of ejectment. On the 2d of October, 1869, the court made the following order for judgment in favor of plaintiff, and it was entered by the clerk in his book of minutes of the court: "This cause having been heretofore tried before the court without a jury, and submitted for consideration and decision, it is now ordered that plaintiff in this cause have judgment against the defendants for the possession of the premises described in the complaint, together with costs of suit." No further entry was made by the clerk until the 1st day of October, 1874,—five years afterwards,—when he entered up and recorded a formal judgment. An execution, or writ of restitution, was issued on this judgment, and the successors in interest of the defendant Merida were put out. They moved to be restored to the possession; and upon the hearing of that motion it appeared that when the judgment was entered the plaintiff Franklin was dead, and that the judgment had been entered, and the writ issued, at the request of one Van Nest, to whom the title to the land had come through mesne conveyances from said Franklin, deceased. It appeared, also, that the judgment was entered on October 1, 1874, as of that date, and not nunc pro tunc as of October 2, 1869, and thereupon the attorney for Van Nest moved to amend the judgment so as to make it appear to be entered as of October 2, 1869, and in like manner to amend the writ of restitution, and the court below allowed the said motions to amend, but denied the application of the successors of the defendant to be restored to possession. Upon appeal the point made was that the judgment was entered after the death of the plaintiff. But this court took the opposite view, and in its opinion uses this language: "There was no necessity for an amendment of the judgment. It was rendered October 2, 1869, in the life-time of plaintiff, and recorded October 1, 1874, after his death. Nor was there any necessity to amend the writ of execution; for though it erroneously recited that the judgment had been rendered on the 1st day of October, 1874, still it otherwise correctly referred to the judgment in such a manner as to identify it. In these respects the order below was erroneous; but we think that, under the circumstances, the motion to restore the defendants to possession was correctly denied. The writ, though issued after the death of judgment plaintiff, and in his name, was, in point of fact, issued and executed at the instance of and for the benefit of Van Nest, who is conceded to be the successor of the judgment plaintiff. Had he, as such successor in interest, applied regularly for the writ in the first instance, the court would have awarded it to him. What has been done is therefore correct in substance, though irregular in point of procedure. It is hardly worth while to turn Van Nest out, when it is clear that he must be immediately put back into possession." This case is determinative, not only of the point immediately under discussion, but of nearly every point made by respondent in the case at bar. The entry of the judgment in Cook v. Cook, on September 8, 1885, was proper, and, perhaps, necessary, in order to furnish the requisite proof of the judgment when it was sought to be introduced as evidence in another proceeding. (It may be well to observe that in the case of a statutory judgment, entered by the clerk upon the rendition of a verdict by a jury, it may be fairly contended that the only judgment is the judgment actually entered by the clerk.)

Our conclusion is that under the circumstances here presented the judgment in the said case of Emma Cook v. Theodore T. Cook was rendered on the 23d of April, 1880, and that the divorce between said parties must be held to have been of that date; and that consequently the court below erred in sustaining the objections to the introduction of said judgment roll, and in excluding evidence of the marriage of said Emma Cook and said Richards after said 23d day of April, 1880. Of course, we have no commendation for the neglect of the clerk to enter the judgment in Cook v. Cook immediately after it was pronounced, or for the failure of the attorney of the plaintiff in that action to see to it that the judgment was then entered. But many of the most perplexing questions presented here arise out of the want of care, or the want of capacity, of attorneys and other officers of courts. It is the duty of the court, however, to protect the rights of litigants, even against the incapacity of their agents, except where such incapacity has placed those rights beyond the reach of legal justice.

2. The decree of distribution was made in this case on the petition of the administrator. In his petition, after stating what property of the estate there was in his hands, the payment of debts and taxes, and all other matters showing that the estate was in condition to be finally distributed, he further alleges that the deceased left certain other property in the state of New York which came into the hands of the said William W. Richards, which, he alleges, Richards never accounted for; and prays that Richards be cited to account for such property, and that if Richards be adjudged entitled to any portion of said estate, that he be charged with said property left by deceased in said state of New York. To the petition the appellant Miller demurred generally, upon the ground that an action for an accounting against Richards could not properly be united with a petition for final distribution; and specially, to that part which seeks to require Richards to account for the New York property, for want of jurisdiction, etc. The court overruled the demurrer, and found that Richards received certain property left by deceased in New York; but, as the court found that Richards was not an heir, no mention is made of the matter in the decree. We think that the demurrer should have been sustained. We do not see how a petition which goes upon the theory that the administration is ready to be closed, and the estate is in a condition to be finally distributed, can properly include averments and a prayer which start the estate upon a fresh career of litigation; even assuming that the court might have jurisdiction over property left by the deceased in New York, and that in a proceeding for the final distribution of the estate the probate court had jurisdiction to determine such equities as are asserted in the petition, and that the administrator could take a part in favor of one heir as against another. The decree and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

FABRETTI et ux. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SANTA CLARA COUNTY. (No. 12,163.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 29, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—FROM INFERIOR COURTS—QUESTIONS OF LAW.

In California, an appeal on questions of law and fact from a justice's judgment, there having been no trial on issues of fact, must be entertained and decided by the superior court as on questions of law alone.

2. SAME—REHEARING.

The court having thus decided the appeal, a subsequent order on a petition for a rehearing, a proceeding not authorized by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 980, prescribing the powers of the superior court on appeal, which order sets aside its decision on the ground that it had no jurisdiction, is coram non judge, and void.

In bank. Application for a writ of mandate to superior court, Santa Clara county; SPENCER, Judge.

Application by Fabretti and wife for a writ of mandate to compel the superior court of Santa Clara county to entertain and decide an appeal from a justice's judgment.

John Reynolds and W. B. Hardy, for petitioners. Wm. P. Veuve, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. In the case of Lotti v. Fabretti et ux., in the justice's court of Santa Clara county a demurrer to the complaint was overruled by the court; and, the defendants having failed to answer, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff therein. From this judgment the defendants appealed to the superior court on questions of law and fact. No statement of the case was filed. The appeal was properly considered by the court and by the parties as an appeal on questions of law alone. Railroad Co. v. Superior Court, 59 Cal. 471; Myrick v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 98, 8 Pac. Rep. 648. The appeal was duly taken on the 5th day of October, 1886. After argument upon the matters contained in the appeal, the court, on September 23, 1886, filed its decision in writing, affirming the judgment of the justice's court, with costs, and a formal judgment in accordance therewith was entered in the superior court in favor of Lotti against Fabretti et ux. on the 31st day of December, 1886. On the 3d day of January, 1887, defendants filed a petition for a rehearing and a motion for a new trial; and an order was made by the court staying all proceedings on the judgment until the determination of said motions. The court thereafter granted said petition for a rehearing of the cause; and, the cause being again submitted after reargument by counsel for the respective parties, the court, on the 13th of April, 1887, made the following order therein. "In this cause the court having permitted a reargument, and upon full consideration now orders, adjudgets, and determines that this court has no jurisdiction to either reverse or affirm the judgment of the justice appealed from. It is therefore ordered that the judgment of affirmance heretofore entered in this cause, December 31, 1886, be vacated and set aside, and that this court will proceed no further in this cause on appeal." The learned judge of the court below seems to have based the conclusion stated in his order upon the decisions of this court in People v. County Court, 10 Cal. 19, and Funkenstein v. Elyntter, 11 Cal. 328; but those cases were decided under section 366 of the practice act, which was omitted from the Code; and it is now settled that if the appeal be taken upon questions of law and fact, when there has been no trial upon issues of fact in the justice's court, the superior court must entertain and decide the appeal as upon questions of law alone. Railroad Co. v. Superior Court, supra, Curtis v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 435. The action first taken by the court upon the appeal was correct. It passed upon the merits of the appeal, and its judgment thereon is final and conclusive, unless set aside within a reasonable time in some mode authorized by law. A petition for a rehearing is a proceeding unknown to the law, or to the practice of the superior court. Section 980, Code Civil Proc. A superior court can set aside its judgment upon an application under section 473 Id., or on motion for a new trial. Neither of these modes was applicable in the case before us, because the judgment was not taken against the defendants therein through their mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, and there was no issue of fact tried or to be tried, and no trial, within the meaning of section 656, Id. Hayne, New Trial & App. §§ 1, 2, 3. If the court had refused to determine the question or point of law upon which the appeal was taken, and had attempted arbitrarily to divest itself of jurisdiction by a dismissal of the appeal, its order would have been void, (Hall v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 24, 8 Pac. Rep. 509; Carlson v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. 628, 11 Pac. Rep. 788;) and its order, attempting to do indirectly what it could not do directly, is, we think, equally invalid. The order is in effect a dismissal of the appeal. It shows upon its face an attempt by the court to divest itself of jurisdiction. The parties were entitled to the judgment of the court upon the merits of the appeal. The court gave them the benefit of its judgment; but subsequently, upon an erroneous conclusion as to its own powers, attempted to set aside its judgment by an order made upon a petition for a rehearing. The order, we think, was coram non judice, and void. Of course we must not be understood as saying that the superior court has not the power to set aside any order or judgment it may have made inadvertently or through mistake; but in all cases the order must be made within a reasonable time. Ex parte Gilmore, 12 Pac. Rep. 800. The prayer of the petitioners is denied.

v.19p.no.15—31

BYRNES v. HATCH, Sheriff. (No. 11, 736.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 23, 1888.)

1. SALE—DELIVERY—CHANGE OF POSSESSION.

The mortgagor of a crop of hay after hauling it to a warehouse at the request of the mortgagee, it being stored as the property of the latter, transferred it to him by bill of sale in settlement of the mortgage, and he afterwards sold it to plaintiff. Held that the transfer by the mortgagor was sufficient within Civil Code Cal. § 3440, declaring every transfer of personal property, if made by the person in possession or control of it, not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual change in the possession, void, as against his creditors, etc., and that the creditors of the mortgagee alone could question the sufficiency of the transfer to plaintiff.

2. REPLEVIN—EVIDENCE.

In replevin for a crop of hay, which had been sold by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, and by the latter to plaintiff, and on which defendant had levied as the property of the mortgagor, the mortgage and note secured by it are admissible as evidence to show the consideration for the sale by the mortgagor.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county; E. F. HEAD, Judge.

Replevin by James D. Byrnes against J. H. Hatch, sheriff of San Mateo county. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Civil Code Cal. § 3440, provides that "every transfer of personal property * * * is conclusively presumed, if made by a person having at the time the possession or control of the property, and not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the thing transferred, to be fraudulent, and therefore void, against those who are his creditors," etc.

Geo. W. Fox, for appellant. Edw. F. Fitzpatrick, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was commenced to recover the possession or value of 73½ tons of hay. The defendant, as sheriff of San Mateo county, levied a writ of attachment, issued against one Pullen, upon the hay; and he justified the taking on the ground that it was then the property of Pullen, and subject to seizure and sale in payment of his debts, and that the plaintiff's claim thereto was false and fraudulent, and was made for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding the creditors of Pullen. The court below found all the facts, and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant moved for a new trial, and, his motion having been denied, appealed from the judgment and order. The material facts of the case are as follows: The hay in question was wheat hay, and was raised and harvested by Pullen in 1884. In March of that year Pullen borrowed of one McDermott $400, and gave him his promissory note for that amount, bearing 1 per cent. per month interest, and a mortgage to secure the payment of the note on all the crop of hay and grain then standing and growing on a certain described farm. In September following Pullen borrowed of McDermott $150 more, for which he also gave his promissory note. When all the hay had been harvested, by direction of McDermott, Pullen hauled it to a warehouse a few miles distant, and stored it there. It was placed in one end of the warehouse by itself. In October, shortly after the work of hauling and storing was completed, Pullen executed and delivered to McDermott a bill of sale of the hay for the agreed price of $12 per ton. This satisfied the two notes for borrowed money, and left $284 due Pullen, which McDermott at once paid him. As the hay was being hauled to the warehouse, and after it was all stored and he had obtained his bill of sale, McDermott told the warehouseman that it was his hay, and to place it in his name on the books. The warehouseman knew of and recognized his ownership of the hay, and on one occasion asked him why he did not sell it. No books were kept at the warehouse, and no written entries were made or receipts issued for property stored there. In December, McDermott sold the hay to the plaintiff, and executed and delivered to him a bill of sale of it. On the next morning after the sale the parties went into the warehouse, and McDermott then pointed out the hay to the plaintiff, and told him he delivered him possession of it. The warehouseman had no notice of this sale until after the action in which the attachment was issued was commenced.

1. The contention of appellant is that the facts shown were insufficient to justify the finding that the plaintiff was the owner and in possession of the property in question when it was attached; and in support of this position it is said that the lien of the crop mortgage continued only so long as the crop remained on the land of the mortgagor, (citing section 2972, Civil Code, and Waterman v. Green, 59 Cal. 142,) and that neither the transfer from Pullen to McDermott, nor that from McDermott to the plaintiff, was accompanied by such an immediate delivery, and followed by such an actual and continued change of possession, as is required, by section 3440 of the Civil Code, to pass title as against creditors. We do not think this contention can be sustained. The testimony tended to show that the hay was hauled to the warehouse by Pullen at the request of and as the agent for McDermott; and, this being so, we are not prepared to say that McDermott did not have a lien on the hay, after it was placed in the warehouse, for the full amount of money represented by his note and mortgage. But, however this may be, the transfer afterwards made to McDermott was, in our opinion, sufficient to meet the requirements of the section of the Code cited, and to pass the title as against the creditors of Pullen. Whether the transfer to the plaintiff was accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession, it is not necessary to inquire. The transfer was good as between the parties to it, and only the creditors of McDermott could raise the question of its sufficiency.

2. The court found that the hay was worth $12 per ton, and estimated it at that value in making up the judgment. It is admitted for appellant that the testimony as to the value of the hay was conflicting, but he insisted that the finding is against the preponderance of the evidence. There was ample testimony, in our opinion, to sustain the finding.

3. The plaintiff offered, and, against the objection and exception of defendant, the court admitted, in evidence, the notes and crop mortgage executed by Pullen to McDermott. Afterwards the defendant moved to strike this evidence out, on the ground that the exhibits were irrelevant and immaterial; but the court denied the motion, holding that they were at least admissible for the purpose of showing in part the consideration for which the bill of sale between the same parties was executed. These rulings are assigned as error, but we think them proper. In deraigning his own title to the hay, the plaintiff had the right to show all the facts and circumstances tending to show title in McDermott. The exhibits objected to constituted a part of these facts, and were clearly relevant and material to the plaintiff's case. The other points do not require special notice. We find no material error in the record, and therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. DODEL. (No. 20,447.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 27, 1888.)

ASSAULT—WITH DEADLY WEAPON—INSTRUCTIONS—INTENT.

On indictment for an assault with a knife, where the testimony shows a want of ability, attempt, or intent to strike, the refusal of the court to charge that, to constitute an assault, the defendant must have the intent, the ability, and must have made the attempt, to strike, and that, where the assault is charged to have been committed with a deadly weapon, there must have been an attempt to strike with or use the deadly weapon, is error, and is not cured by an instruction that "included in this charge [of an assault with a deadly weapon] is also that of assault, which is an unlawful attempt, coupled with the present ability, to commit a violent injury on the person of another. In an assault which is commonly called a 'simple assault,' if there is no present purpose and no present ability to do an injury, there would be no assault."

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. TOOHY, Judge.

Indictment against X. Dodel for an assault with a deadly weapon. The jury rendered a verdict of guilty, and the defendant appeals.

Atty. Gen. Geo. A. Johnson, for the State. Davis Louderback, for appellant.

BELCHER, C. C. The defendant was convicted of the crime of an assault with a deadly weapon, and has appealed from the judgment and an order denying him a new trial. The assault was charged to have been committed by defendant with a knife, which he held in his hand, upon the person of one Borgwardt. It appears from the evidence that defendant went into a saloon, kept in the basement of a building in the city of San Francisco, where Borgwardt was employed to assist the barkeeper. After some words defendant drew a knife from his hip pocket, but whether he did this while standing backed up against a post in the center of the room, or while he was going up the stairs leading out of the saloon, does not clearly appear. But the testimony all shows that after the knife was drawn defendant was not at any time near enough to Borgwardt to strike him with it, and that he moved away from Borgwardt, and not towards him; and the testimony fails to show directly that defendant made any attempt to strike with or use his knife. Counsel for defendant presented 12 instructions, and asked that they be given to the jury, but the court refused them all. Two of these instructions read as follows: "To constitute an assault the defendant must have the intent to strike, the ability to do so, and must have made the attempt to strike." "And where, as in this case, the assault is charged to have been committed with a deadly weapon, there must have been an attempt to strike with or to use the deadly weapon." These instructions stated obviously correct rules of law, and the charge of the court, given at its own instance, did not embrace them in substance or effect. In our opinion, they should have been given, and the court clearly erred in refusing to give them. In justification of the refusal, the attorney general cites from the charge of the court the following clause: "Included in this charge is also that of assault, which is an unlawful attempt, coupled with the present ability, to commit a violent injury on the person of another. In an assault which is commonly called a 'simple assault,' if there is no present purpose, and no present ability, to do an injury, there would be no assault." But this, instead of curing the error committed by the refusal, seems rather to have aggravated the wrong done by it to the defendant; for it in effect told the jury that, in case of a simple assault, there must be present purpose and present ability to do an injury, in order to constitute the offense, leaving them to infer that the rule did not apply to an assault with a deadly weapon. It is very doubtful whether some of the other instructions refused were covered by the charge; but, without passing upon the other points presented, we advise that, for the error above noted, the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

I concur: HAYNE, C.

I concur in the conclusion reached: FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

(Supreme Court of California. October 27, 1888.)

DEDICATION—PUBLIC STREET—ACCEPTANCE.

The conveyance of a tract of land within the corporate limits of a town, by deed describing the tract as bounded by the lines of certain designated streets, if projected, and as being the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of a certain designated block, as laid down on the official map of said town, together with five years' use of the projected streets by the public, constitutes a complete dedication of such streets to public use, without a formal acceptance by the town.¹

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; J. J. DE HAVEN, Judge.

Ejectment by the city of Eureka against Barney Croghan to recover a tract of land claimed by said city as a street. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

E. M. Wilson, (Horace L. Smith, of counsel,) for appellant. S. M. Buck, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action of ejectment, brought by the city of Eureka to recover from the defendant a piece of land which it is claimed is a street of said city. The principal point made by the defendant for the reversal of the judgment and order refusing a new trial is that the findings are not supported by the evidence. It is claimed that the dedication was not attempted to be made, and, if attempted, was revoked, and after revocation was never formally accepted by the city. The case of Hayward v. Manzer, 70 Cal. 476, 13 Pac. Rep. 141, cited by the appellant as being in favor of his contention here, is not in point. The facts in that case were materially different from those involved here. The language of the judge below, in reviewing the facts showing a dedication of the land in controversy here as a street, is so decisive that we quote and adopt it: "The question to be decided in this case is whether or not the land described in the complaint has been dedicated to public use as a street. (1) On April 7 1870, John Cushing, who was then the owner of the land in controversy, together with other land, executed to one Leary a deed of land thus described: 'Commencing at a point distant, in a southerly direction, 600 feet from the N. W. corner of block 108, as laid down on the official map of the town of Eureka, made by J. S. Murray, and filed in the office of the county recorder of said county, July 28, 1859, said point of commencement being the N. W. corner of a block of land bounded on the north and west by Tenth and F streets, if said streets were projected; thence running south along the east line of F street, if said street were extended southerly, 120 feet; thence easterly at right angles with said F street, 120 feet; thence northerly, and parallel with F street, 120 feet; thence westerly, along the south side of Tenth street, 120 feet to the place of beginning,—being the north-west quarter of the block,' etc. What is the legal effect of this deed? Does it or did it operate as a dedication of the land adjacent on the north, as a street, under the well-known rule, more than once announced by the supreme court of this state, that, where a lot is sold as fronting on or bounded by a certain space designated in the conveyance as a street, the use of such space as a street passes as appurtenant to the grant, and vests in the grantee, in common with the public, the right of way over such street? Breed v. Cunningham, 2 Cal. 369; People v. Blake, 60 Cal. 499. If the deed can be construed as conveying a parcel of land bounded on the north by a line which would be a continuation of Tenth street if such street were extended, then it could not be said that it described the land sold as fronting on or bounded by a street. But we must look at every part of the description, and not alone to the words 'if said streets were projected,' in order to grasp the true meaning and legal effect of this deed. In it we find other words of description having no doubtful signification. The point of commencement is stated to be the 'N. W. corner of a block of land bounded,' etc.,—then giving the calls; thence to the place of beginning. The land conveyed is further described as the 'north-west quarter of the block.' These words, taken in connection with the other words of the deed, are controlling, and fix its meaning definitely. This was a sale of land within the corporate limits of a town, now city. When we speak of a block of land in a town or city, reference is always made to a square or parcel of land inclosed by streets, whether occupied by buildings or composed of vacant lots. The words, as applied to land in a town, has no other meaning. Calling this land the north-east quarter of a block necessarily carried with it the assertion that it was the north-west quarter of a tract of land surrounded by spaces known as 'streets.' I think the deed must be construed as bounding the land therein described on the north side by a street or space of the same width, and what would be a continuation of Tenth street, if the municipal authorities should extend or open the same; and, so far as the grantor was concerned, operated as a dedication of the land to the public, he being at the time the owner of such space." It also appears in evidence that, for more than five years prior to the obstruction of this street by the defendant, it had been uninclosed, and had been used as a street by the public for all the purposes for which they had occasion to do so. To make the dedication complete, no formal acceptance by the city of Eureka as a corporation was necessary. San Leandro v. Le Breton, 72 Cal. 175, 13 Pac. Rep. 405, and cases cited. We are of opinion that no prejudicial error is shown by the record, and advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

*Reversed in banc. See 22 Pac. 693, 81 Cal. 524.

I concur: BELCHER, C. C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

NOTE.

DEDICATION—OF STREET—ACCEPTANCE BY PUBLIC. A deed, describing the land conveyed as bounded by a street, also conveyed all the interest of the grantor in the land in said street. The street had never been opened, and was covered by buildings, of which the grantor, and the grantee after him, had possession. Held, in proceedings to acquire title for the public, that there had been no dedication of the land in the street. In re One Hundred and Sixtieth St., 1 N. Y. Supp. 237. The act of dividing up a parcel of land into lots, streets, and alleys, and selling lots with clear reference to a map or plan representing such divisions, is an immediate and conclusive dedication of such streets and alleys to the use of the purchaser and of the public. Schneider v. Jacob, (Ky.) 5 S. W. Rep. 350, and cases cited in note.

To make a highway by dedication there must be the assent of the owners of the land to its appropriation for a public highway, and its use by the public for such purpose, and for such a length of time, that the public accommodation and private rights might be materially affected by an interruption of the enjoyment. The owner's intention to dedicate must appear, and the acceptance of such dedication, by using it, on the part of the public, must also appear. Where these two facts concur, the dedication is complete. Union Co. v. Peckham, (R. I.) 12 Atl. Rep. 130; City v. Williams, (Tex.) 6 S. W. Rep. 860. The dedication of a public highway may be presumed from use. Howard v. State, (Ark.) 2 S. W. Rep. 331. A presumption of acceptance may be drawn from common user of the highway, and from actual assumption of care and control over it by the public authorities. State v. Eisele, (Minn.) 33 N. W. Rep. 785. Uninterrupted use of a public road for 10 years will create a presumption of dedication; but a much shorter period will be sufficient where the act of the owner from which the dedication is inferred is clear and unequivocal, and accompanied, or immediately followed, by public use. Rube v. Sullivan, (Neb.) 37 N. W. Rep. 666. The fact that lots embraced in a platted subdivision are assessed as such by the municipality does not show an acceptance by such municipality of the streets laid out in the plat, where there is strong evidence in the case that there was no acceptance. Hamilton v. Railroad Co., (Ill.) 15 N. E. Rep. 854.

On the general subject of the dedication and acceptance of a highway, see Price v. Town of Breckenridge, (Mo.) 5 S. W. Rep. 20, and note; Railroad Co. v. Lee, (Tex.) 7 S. W. Rep. 857; *Miller v. BROWN v. ANDERSON. (No. 11,401.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 23, 1888.)

1. CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION.

Plaintiff agreed to sell to defendant, for a gross sum, "all the prunes and other fruits that may grow or be produced during the year 1884," on a certain farm. Held, that there was no undertaking on the part of plaintiff that the crop should be of any particular quantity.

2. SAME.

A portion of the purchase price was to be paid "when the crop is taken off at the end of the year." Held, that the end of the fruit season was meant, and not the end of the calendar year.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; D. BELDEN, Judge.

This was an action on contract, brought by S. H. Brown against J. Z. Anderson. There was a trial to the court, and judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $1,734.38. Defendant appeals.

T. H. Laine, for appellant. J. F. Wendell, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action to recover a balance due on a contract for the sale of fruit. The material portions of the contract were as follows: "I have sold to J. Z. Anderson, of San Jose, all the prunes and other fruits that may grow or be produced during the year 1884 upon about fifty acres of land purchased by me of A. G. Higgins, and situate in Santa Clara county, for the full sum or price of $2,666.23, payable as follows: $100 on this date, $900 on or before January 1, 1884, and the balance when the crop is taken off at the end of the year. * * * I am to cultivate and take good care of the trees, and Anderson is to have the privilege of entering upon said land for the purpose of picking, drying, and caring for the fruit, and removing the same. * * *

The defendant made the first payments, but on July 30, 1884, gave written notice that he rescinded the contract. This attempted rescission was based upon the charge that the plaintiff had not performed his covenant to take good care of the trees. But the finding is that this charge was not true; that the plaintiff "properly cultivated" the orchard, and "well and skillfully pruned" the trees. The court further finds that the crop "proved an almost total failure. There should have been in an ordinary season eight tons of prunes. There was not in fact over two tons." The defendant never picked or cared for the fruit, or removed any part thereof, except a few cherries. The action was commenced on October 29, 1884, to recover the last payment. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals from the judgment upon the findings.

We think the judgment was right. It is apparent that there was no undertaking on the part of the plaintiff that the crop should be of any particular quantity. The contract was simply that defendant should have all the fruit "that may grow or be produced during the year 1884." He took his chances as to quantity. And it is not necessary to consider whether there was any implied warranty as to quality, because no inferiority of quality was shown. For all that appears to the contrary, the two tons of prunes of which the finding speaks may have been of excellent quality. If this were not the case, the defendant should have proved it. But the fact does not appear; and the learned counsel for the appellant makes no point in relation to inferiority of quality in his brief. The case, therefore, stands thus: The plaintiff did what he was required to do by the contract, and the defendant refused to receive the crop, although it was what he had bargained for.

It is argued for the appellant, however, that the action was premature; that the contract provided that the payment sued for was to be made "when the crop is taken off at the end of the year;" and that the crop was not taken off, and that the "end of the year" had not arrived when the suit was brought. But the provision was that the defendant should pick, dry, and care for the fruit, and remove the same. It was his duty to take off the crop, and it is perfectly clear that he cannot rest his defense upon his own neglect of duty. The question, then, is whether the "end of the year" had arrived when the suit was brought. In this regard the argument for the appellant assumes that the contract means a "calendar" year. But we do not think so. A year is a period of time; and it does not necessarily mean the period commencing with the 1st day of January and ending with the 31st day of the succeeding December. When the term is used in a contract its meaning is to be determined from the connection in which it is used, and the subject-matter of the contract. Knodel v. Baldridge, 73 Ind. 54. In the present case the term cannot mean a calendar year, because the evident meaning is that the crop is to be taken off (by which we understand that it was to be gathered) "at the end of the year;" and the court will take notice that the end of the calendar year was long after the season for gathering the crop. As remarked by the counsel for the respondent, the parties could not have intended such an untimely "taking off;" and it would be an entirely strained and uncalled-for construction to say that they intended that the crop should be gathered and left upon the premises until the end of the calendar year. If the end of the calendar year was not intended, it is unnecessary to inquire whether the parties meant a year from the date of the contract, or the end of the cropping year or fruit season. In either view, the action was not premature. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

MORROW v. GRAVES et al. (No. 11,455.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 23, 1888.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—DEED TO CREDITOR—VALIDITY.

In an action to set aside a conveyance as in fraud of creditors, it appeared that the grantee had advanced money to and indorsed for the grantor, for which the former alleged the conveyance to have been made; that he did not record his conveyance for nine months afterwards; that he knew nothing of the land, or its value, that he received some rent after the conveyance, and sold the land for a less sum than it cost him, according to his own statement. He knew that the grantor owed plaintiff, but did not know how much. The grantor and grantee were very intimate friends. There was evidence of the grantee's admissions that he held a deed for grantor's land, and that the latter owed him nothing; but such statement, if made, might as well have applied to another transaction prior to and unconnected with the one in question. Held, that the finding that the deed was for valuable consideration, and not fraudulent, was sustained by the evidence.

2. SAME—FAILURE TO RECORD DEED.

In such case it is immaterial that the deed, though made before, was not recorded until after the levy of plaintiff's attachment on the land in question.

3. SAME—RIGHTS OF BONA FIDE PURCHASERS FROM FRAUDULENT GRANTEE.

Though the deed in question were fraudulent and void as to creditors, the conveyance by the fraudulent grantee to his co-defendants, for valuable consideration without notice of the fraud, would be valid, as upon the record the title stood in their grantor, although they were aware of the levy of the attachment lien.¹

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; N. HAMILTON, Judge.

Action by Robert F. Morrow against Robert N. Graves, W. W. Wynn, and S. Anspacher, to set aside an alleged fraudulent deed made by one D. M. Tyrrell to said Graves. On the 23d day of August, 1882, Tyrrell conveyed to Graves a tract of 160 acres of land in Alameda county, by deed recorded in May, 1883. Upon the trial Graves testified that Tyrrell was indebted to him in about the sum of $1,511; that at different times in 1881 and 1882 he paid for Tyrrell, according to a previous agreement, different sums, to the Quijotoa Mining Company, on assessments for stock subscribed for by Tyrrell, of which Tyrrell repaid $1,000, leaving $1,511 still due, for which, and $200 cash then paid Tyrrell by Graves, the land was conveyed. He also testified that the certificates of stock owned by Tyrrell were in his possession, left with him merely to keep. The $1,000 repaid him by Tyrrell was paid by stock sold by Graves on Tyrrell's order. At the time of the trial the shares of stock, of which Tyrrell had $25,000, were worthless. Graves further testified that he was indorser for a note of $1,000 owed by Tyrrell, and that there was a mortgage on the same land to secure the note; that he took the deed in full of Tyrrell's entire indebtedness at that time, without inquiring whether the land, of which he knew nothing, was worth the money or not; and that the note was indorsed August 19, 1882. He received, after the conveyance, $40 rent from a tenant on the land. A. K. Masten testified that he acted as agent in procuring the $1,000 loan for which Mr. Graves indorsed; and also, at the instance of Graves, sold the land for him to Wynn and Anspacher, acting wholly for Graves, without any direction or consultation with Tyrrell. The price of the land was $2,000, Graves agreeing to assume the mortgage. The purchasers paid the money to Graves. Wynn and Anspacher knew of the attachment, but there was no evidence that they knew of the fraud, if any, in the conveyance. W. L. Lyle testified that Graves told him that Tyrrell had such confidence in him that he (Graves) held a deed to Tyrrell's ranch, which Tyrrell had never asked him for, though Tyrrell did not owe him anything. On cross-examination, the witness stated that this conversation occurred in October, 1881, and that he did not remember whether it was a deed or mortgage that Graves spoke of. Mr. Graves also testified that there had been business transactions before between them, in which Tyrrell owed him; and that in 1879 Tyrrell mortgaged the same land to him for $3,000, but repaid him before the stock assessments were paid, creating the indebtedness for which the deed was made. Plaintiff's debt against Tyrrell was about $9,000, and Graves knew that Tyrrell owed him, but did not know how much, or the particulars. It was admitted that Graves and Tyrrell were bosom friends, having unbounded confidence in each other. All this evidence was on behalf of the plaintiff, and no other was introduced, except the note, mortgage, and deeds referred to. The court found for defendants, and rendered judgment accordingly. Plaintiff appeals.

Ben Morgan, for appellant. H. A. Powell, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. Action to set aside certain deeds as in fraud of plaintiff's rights as a judgment creditor. The debtor, one Tyrrell, who was the owner of the property, conveyed it to the defendant Graves by a deed which was made before the commencement of the plaintiff's attachment suit against Tyrrell, but not recorded until afterwards. After the recording of the deed, Graves, for valuable consideration, conveyed to the defendants Anspacher and Wynn. Judgment passed for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals. The court below found that the deed to Graves was for valuable consideration, and not for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or defrauding the creditors of Tyrrell; and we cannot say upon the record that this finding is not sustained by the evidence. The fact that this deed was not recorded until after the plaintiff's attachment proceedings against Tyrrell is immaterial. Plant v. Smythe, 45 Cal. 161; Hoag v. Howard, 55 Cal. 564. But if it were otherwise,—if the deed to Graves be assumed to have been in fraud of the rights of creditors,—the objection would not reach the deed to Anspacher and Wynn. At the time of this deed the title stood of record in the name of Graves. They purchased from him for valuable consideration, and are not shown to have had any notice of the alleged fraudulent character of the deed to Graves. Knowledge of the existing attachment lien in the case of R. F. Morrow v. D. M. Tyrrell, is quite a different thing; for the title did not then stand in the name of Tyrrell. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CARTY. (No. 20,381.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 23, 1888.)

1. STENOGRAPHERS—CERTIFICATE.

Under Pen. Code Cal. § 869, subd. 5, providing that the short-hand reporter shall transcribe into long-hand his short-hand notes, and certify and file them, and that they shall be certified as being a correct statement of the testimony and proceedings in the case to entitle them to be admitted in evidence, a certificate merely that the document is a "correct transcript of the short-hand notes taken by me herein," without further stating that the notes are correct, is insufficient, and the defect cannot be supplied by parol.

2. SAME—PRESUMPTION.

The certificate of an official short-hand reporter, which is insufficient under such statute, is not aided by any presumption as to the correctness of official action.

3. SAME—ADMISSION OF NOTES IN EVIDENCE.

Where a short-hand reporter testifies, merely in aid of his certificate, that the notes taken by him are correct, and does not refresh his memory from them, and testify as to what occurred when the notes were taken, the evidence contained in them should be excluded.

4. CRIMINAL LAW—TRIAL—ABSENCE OF PROSECUTING WITNESS—DEPOSITION.

Where a subpoena for the prosecuting witness, with a return showing that he cannot be found in San Francisco, is offered, and after a delay of seven days, for additional search, subpoenas issued to eight other counties, with returns showing that the witness cannot be found, are offered, sufficient foundation is laid for the introduction of the witness' deposition taken before the committing magistrate.

5. SAME—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

It is proper for the court to refuse to permit counsel for defendant in a criminal case to argue the law in his opening to the jury.

6. SAME—FORMER JEOPARDY.

A conviction for manslaughter reversed on appeal does not sustain pleas of former acquittal and once in jeopardy, on a retrial for murder.¹

SEARLS, C. J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. MURPHY, Judge.

Indictment of Luke Carty for murder. Defendant was convicted of manslaughter on the first trial, but on appeal the judgment was reversed. 3 Pac. Rep. 609. On a subsequent trial defendant was again convicted, and brings this appeal. Carl Anderson was the prosecuting witness; and as a foundation for the introduction of his deposition, taken before the committing magistrate, a subpoena, with a return, showing that he could not be found in San Francisco, was offered. Trial was then postponed seven days for further search, and on resumption thereof eight subpoenas issued to other counties, with returns showing that the witness could not be found, were offered. The court admitted the deposition. T. R. Harold was a witness for defendant, and his deposition was excluded. Defendant pleaded once in jeopardy and former acquittal; and to sustain these showed his former conviction of manslaughter, reversed by the supreme court, but the pleas were overruled. Defendant was convicted; whereupon he appeals.

Henry E. Highton, for appellant. Geo. S. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The defendant was convicted of manslaughter, and sentenced to five years' imprisonment in the state prison, and he brings this appeal. Upon the trial the prosecution offered in evidence the short-hand reporter's transcript of his notes of the testimony of one Anderson, given at the examination before the committing magistrate. The certificate attached to this transcript was as follows: "I hereby certify that the foregoing is a full, true, and correct transcript of the short-hand notes taken by me herein. ERNEST A. GIRVIN. Official Short-Hand Reporter of Police Judge's Court Number Two." Among the objections taken to this document, one was that it was not properly certified. The reporter was then called as a witness, and testified that the document was a correct transcript of the notes taken by him of the testimony and proceedings at the examination before the magistrate. There was no attempt to have him refresh his memory from the writing, and then testify as to what occurred at the examination. His testimony relates merely to the correctness of the document. After hearing what he had to say on this subject, the court overruled the objections, and admitted the transcript, and the defendant excepted. We think this was error. The provision of the statute is that the reporter shall "transcribe into long-hand writing his said short-hand notes, and certify and file the same;" and that "when written out in long-hand writing, and certified as being a correct statement of such testimony and proceedings in the case, shall," etc. Pen. Code, § 869, subd. 5. What this statute requires the certificate to state is plainly written. It must state that the transcript is "a correct statement of such testimony and proceedings." In other words, there must be an affirmation by the reporter, not merely of the correctness of the transcribing from the original notes, but also that such notes were correct. The certificate before us relates simply to the correctness of the transcribing. Its language is that the document in question is "a full, true, and correct transcript of the short-hand notes taken by me herein." There is no affirmation that such notes were correct, and we are left to guess at what the notes were. Beyond the fact that the notes were taken "herein"—by which we understand that they were taken at the examination before the magistrate—we can gather nothing as to their character. For all that appears to the contrary, they may have been purely or partly a freak of the reporter's imagination. It is not upon such evidence as this that a man can be deprived of his life or liberty. The attempt to supply the defects in the certificate by parol evidence did not help the matter. The statute requires a written certificate. It says the reporter shall "transcribe into long-hand writing his said short-hand notes, and certify and file the same." Now, if in any case there could be an oral "certificate," it is perfectly manifest that such a thing could not be "filed." The provision of the statute being for a written certificate, the trial court was not authorized to hold that an oral one would do as well.

¹As to what will support a plea of former jeopardy, in general, see People v. Bentley, (Cal.) 18 Pac. Rep. 799, and note; Ex parte Fenton, (Cal.) ante, 267, and note; Com. v. Fitzpatrick, (Pa.) 15 Atl. Rep. 466, and note.

The argument of the attorney general that the reporter was an officer, and that the correctness of official action is to be presumed, proves too much. If allowed to prevail, it would do away with the necessity of any certificate whatever, in the face of a statute which explicitly requires one.

It is to be observed that there was no attempt to have the reporter, who was there on the stand, refresh his memory, and then testify as to what occurred at the examination, which would have been a perfectly practicable course. See Code Civil Proc. § 2047; and compare Reid v. Reid, 73 Cal. 209, 14 Pac. Rep. 781. The deposition was introduced as of itself sufficient to show the testimony of Anderson, and there was no other evidence thereof. The case of People v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 672, 4 Pac. Rep. 1144, and 6 Pac. Rep. 700, 846, is not at all in conflict with the foregoing. In that case the opinion places the admissibility of the testimony "upon the admissions of the defendant's counsel;" and the admissions referred to are shown by the record in that case (which we have examined) to be, among other things, that "the reporter, if present, would testify to what was in his written notes as his recollection of said witnesses' statements then made." "The presence of said reporter was waived. The written notes were admitted to be his recollection of said testimony." See page 67 of the record in People v. Cunningham. Upon this admission no question as to a certificate could arise, and the briefs in the case show that no such question was argued. The opinion, therefore, does not touch upon the question before us, and, besides this, it was not concurred in by a majority of the court.

As to the other matters argued, we think the action of the court was correct. Sufficient foundation was laid for the introduction of the testimony of Anderson. There was no sufficient showing of diligence as to Harold. The court properly refused to permit counsel to argue the law to the jury in his opening address; and it properly overruled the plea of once in jeopardy and former acquittal. People v. Keefer, 65 Cal. 235, 3 Pac. Rep. 818. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

TRUSTS—ASSIGNMENT BY TRUSTEE—SUIT BY ASSIGNEE—PARTIES.

Where a bond is assigned at the instance and request of a third person, who pays the consideration, the assignee holds in trust for him and his estate, and a subsequent assignee occupies the same relation, and is the real party in interest to sue on the bond. Overruling Grant v. Heverin, 18 Pac. Rep. 647. THORNTON, J., dissenting.

In bank. On rehearing. For former opinion and statement, see 18 Pac. Rep. 647.

M. C. Hassett, for appellants. Mich. Mullany, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. That John Hughes, if he had not assigned the undertaking sued on in this action, might have maintained an action against the defendants, is not disputed; but, before any action was brought on it, Hughes assigned it to Mullany, and Mullany to the plaintiff herein. The assignment from Hughes to Mullany was made at the instance and request of John Grant, since deceased, who paid the consideration thereof. After the death of John Grant, Mullany assigned to the plaintiff, who occupies, in our opinion, the same position that Mullany would have occupied if he had not assigned. We think that Mullany held the assignment before the death of John Grant in trust for him, and after his death in trust for his estate; and that the plaintiff, since the assignment to her, has held it in trust for such estate. And yet we think the plaintiff is entitled to maintain an action upon the undertaking as "the real party in interest." Pomeroy says: "It is now settled by a great preponderance of authority, although there is some conflict, that if the assignment, whether written or verbal, of anything in action, is absolute in its terms, so that by virtue thereof the entire apparent legal title vests in the assignee, any contemporaneous, collateral agreement by virtue of which he is to receive a part of the proceeds, 'and is to account to the assignor or other person for the residue, or even thus is to account for the whole proceeds, or by virtue of which the absolute transfer is to be made conditional upon the fact of the recovery, or by which his title in any other similar manner is partial or conditional,' does not render him any the less the real party in interest. He is entitled to sue in his own name, whatever collateral arrangements have been made between him and the assignor respecting the proceeds. The debtor is completely protected by the assignment, and cannot be exposed to a second action brought by any of the parties, either the assignor or other, to whom the assignee is bound to account." Pom. Rem. § 132. Accepting this, as we do, as a clear and correct explication of the law, we cannot do otherwise than hold that the plaintiff was the real party in interest in the undertaking sued on in this action. That being so, no material error was committed by the court below, and it follows that the judgment and order should be affirmed. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.

THORNTON, J. I dissent. I adhere to the opinion drawn by me in this case when in department 2. The evidence shows clearly that Mullany had no interest in the undertaking assigned to him but to hold it for John Grant. He thus became John Grant's trustee or agent, and, if either, he could not assign without the consent of Grant. I know of no rule of law which empowers an agent without authority of his principal to substitute another agent in his place, or a trustee by his conveyance or assignment to put another person in his place as trustee without the consent of the beneficiaries. Mrs. Grant, the plaintiff, was not an innocent purchaser. The evidence on Cal. Rep. 16-19 P.—63 this point is clear and distinct that she paid nothing for the thing assigned to her. She could not then be an innocent purchaser, but took with notice of all outstanding equities. Mullany could maintain the action, but his assignee could not. As to the question of pleading that the plaintiff is not the real party in interest, it is set up in the answer of the defendant Mallon that the plaintiff is not the real party in interest, and that Mullany is. The answer in this regard is sufficient. The citation from Pomeroy on "Remedies and Remedial Rights," § 132, applies as between Hughes, Mullany's assignor, and Mullany. In my judgment it has no application between Mullany and the plaintiff.

HILL v. FINIGAN. (No. 9,992.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 24, 1888.)

1. PLEDGE—CONVERSION BY PLEDGEE—RATIFICATION.

In an action by a pledgeor against a pledgee for conversion of the pledged property, by selling it without public notice, and purchasing it himself, the defense being that the plaintiff did not elect to avoid the sale within a reasonable time after being informed thereof, and instruction that if plaintiff did not, within a reasonable time after learning thereof, object to said sale, he thus ratified it, and the jury should find for defendant, is not erroneous, though in strictness a ratification implies affirmative action; as the effect of the instruction is that, if plaintiff did not in a reasonable time elect to disaffirm the sale, he thereby lost his right to do so, and the verdict should be for defendant.

2. SAME—ELECTION BY PLEDGEOR.

In such case an instruction that if the jury believe the property was offered at public auction without notice, and purchased by defendant for a fair price, that a higher price was not then and there obtainable, and that if plaintiff, knowing the facts, made no objection to the sale, but commenced negotiations with defendant for a repurchase of the property, he thus ratified the sale, and they should find for defendant, is correct, as such facts sufficiently manifest plaintiff's election to treat the sale as valid.

3. SAME.

Such an instruction does not invade the province of the jury in directing them to draw the inference of ratification from the enumerated facts, as, under the circumstance, the word "ratification" means only an election not to disaffirm the sale by which plaintiff was bound; and such an election is a legal inference, and not a conclusion of fact.

4. SAME—PLEDGEOR'S IGNORANCE OF THE LAW.

Whether such an instruction should have been qualified by a statement that a knowledge of the law governing plaintiff's rights in the premises was an essential element of a ratification is immaterial, as there was no evidence of ignorance of the law, and the contrary is presumed.

5. SAME—DISAFFIRMANCE.

The evidence of plaintiff himself being that in a day or two after the sale, upon defendant serving him with a statement thereof, he disaffirmed it, and denied defendant's right to sell the stocks and diamonds, it was not prejudicial error to instruct that the conversion, if any, took place at the time the statement was served, ignoring plaintiff's right to elect whether he would treat the sale as a conversion, and assuming that the conversion did take place then; such an assumption being in plaintiff's favor, as it was necessary that he elect to disaffirm the sale within a reasonable time, and, had the evidence been undisputed that the conversion did not occur until some two months later, when a formal demand and refusal was made, the trial court might properly have instructed, as a matter of law, that plaintiff did not elect to disaffirm the sale in time.

6. SAME.

Nor was it error to assume in said instruction that plaintiff had been served with a statement of account of the sale by defendant, as it was undisputed that he was served with a statement, although plaintiff denied the receipt of the same statement testified to by defendant, admitting the receipt of another near the same time, and of similar import.

7. TROVER AND CONVERSION—DAMAGE—PRESUMPTION.

An instruction that the presumption under Civil Code Cal. § 3336, that the detriment to personal property by its conversion is its value at the time, or, if the action is prosecuted with reasonable diligence, the highest market value of the property at any time between the conversion and the verdict, is disputable, is harmless error to plaintiff, if error at all, where there is no evidence tending to rebut such presumption.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

Action by John Hill against P. A. Finigan for the conversion of certain stocks and diamonds pledged by plaintiff to defendant. Verdict, and judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. For opinion on former appeal, see 62 Cal. 439. Civil Code Cal. § 3336, provides that the detriment to personal property by its conversion shall be presumed to be its value at the time of conversion, with interest; or, if the action be prosecuted with reasonable diligence, the highest market value at any time between the conversion and the verdict, without interest, at the option of the injured person.

Stanly, Stoney & Hayes, for appellant. Garber & Bishop, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Action for damages for the conversion of certain mining stock and diamonds. This property was pledged to secure the payment of money advanced by defendant at the request of plaintiff. Payment not having been made, the pledgee caused the property to be sold to satisfy the debt. The grounds of objection to the sale are that, although notice of the sale was given to the pledgeor, none was given to the public, and that the pledgee himself was the purchaser at the sale. The defense was that the want of notice to the public was at the pledgeor's request, and to save him from expense, and that he did not elect to avoid the sale within a reasonable time, but, upon being informed of the facts, ratified and confirmed it. The jury found a verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals. The principal points made for the appellant relate to the instructions.

1. It is claimed that the court erred in giving the following instruction: "If the jury find from the evidence that prior to June 13, 1878, Hill agreed with Finigan that the sale should be made without other or further notice to the public, or to him, than such as Hill already had, and that Finigan thereupon caused the sale to be made, and became a purchaser thereat, and that afterwards Hill, upon being informed of the fact that Finigan had purchased the property at such sale, did not, within a reasonable time, object to such purchase by Finigan, then you will find that Hill ratified the sale, and it thereby became valid and binding, and your verdict will be for the defendant." The argument against this instruction is, in the first place, that ratification is a fact, and that therefore it was improper for the court to tell the jury that they should infer it from other facts; and, in the second place, that such other facts were not sufficient to support the inference which the court undertook to draw. But we think the instruction was proper. The substance of it was that if the jury believed that there was unreasonable delay they must find a verdict for the defendant. This included everything that was necessary for them to know in this regard. It was not necessary to tell them why this was so, and, if there was any inaccuracy in stating the grounds of the rule laid down for their guidance, it was manifestly harmless. It is therefore immaterial to consider whether it is strictly accurate to say that unreasonable delay would amount to a ratification. We are inclined to think that in strictness a ratification implies some affirmative action, and that, if any reason were to be given to the jury for the explicit and positive directions embodied in the instruction, it would have been better to have said that the pledgeor had a right of election to treat the sale as invalid, and that he would lose this right by failing to exercise it within a reasonable time. But it is unnecessary to express an opinion upon this. The direction to find a verdict for the defendant, if they believed that there was unreasonable delay, excluded the possibility of misapprehension on their part, and we think it was correct as a matter of law. The sale being voidable merely, there must be some period within which the pledgeor must make his election as to whether he will avoid it or not. He cannot wait for the whole period of the statute of limitations, speculating upon the changes of the market. Hayward v. Bank, 96 U. S. 611. And this is a rule of law, and not an inference of fact. The learned counsel for the appellant will hardly contend that the pledgeor can wait an unreasonable time, and, if not, why is it not proper to tell the jury so? What constitutes an unreasonable time is doubtless a question which may involve many elements. Possibly it would be advisable in many cases for the judge to enlarge somewhat upon the elements of this question, but, if the appellant had desired this, he should have requested instructions in relation to it. In some cases the facts might be such as to render it proper for the judge to instruct the jury as a matter of law that the delay was unreasonable; and, if the facts here had been undisputed, we think it would have been proper to have done so in this case. If it were undisputed that the pledgeor had remained silent for nearly two months after being informed of the facts, and until the stocks had risen to the very high price at which they were on the 7th of August, we think that the judge should have instructed the jury as a matter of law, that the delay was unreasonable, and that they must find for the defendant. But, as is stated below, the pledgeor testifies that a day or so after the sale, when he was presented by the defendant with a statement of account, he disaffirmed the sale, and announced his intention to treat it as invalid. And in view of this, and of this only, we think the submission of the question to the jury was proper.

2. It is contended that the court erred in giving the following instruction: "If you find from the evidence that the defendant caused the property pledged to him to be offered for sale at public auction, but without notice, and if at such sale the property was bid in by the defendant for fair market prices, and that higher prices were not obtainable at the time and place of sale, and if you further find that the plaintiff, upon being informed of such sale, made no objection thereto, but commenced to treat with the defendant for the purchase from defendant of a portion of the property, you will find that the plaintiff ratified the sale, and your verdict will be for the defendant." The argument against this instruction is similar to that against the preceding one, viz., that ratification is a fact, and that, therefore, it is improper to tell the jury that they should infer it from other facts; and that, if this were not so, the facts stated in the instruction were not sufficient to support the conclusion which the court directed the jury to draw, for the reason that the element of the pledgeor's knowledge of the law was omitted. But we think the instruction was proper. It is perfectly true that our laws do not permit the judge to instruct the jury as to what inference of fact they are to draw. But whether or not a particular conception is of a "fact" or a "conclusion of law" is generally a matter of relation. In one connection a word or phrase may stand for a fact, while in another the same word or phrase may designate a conclusion of law. Levins v. Rovigno, 71 Cal. 273, 12 Pac. Rep. 161; Turner v. White, 73 Cal. 300, 14 Pac. Rep. 794. And although a finding that a party "ratified" a given transaction might in some cases be sufficient as a finding of fact, yet in the present instance all that we understand the instruction to mean, and all that the jury could have understood from it, is that, if they believed that the plaintiff did certain things, those things amounted to a sufficient election to treat the sale as valid, and that having once made his election he was bound by it. The sufficiency of the election was a matter of law, and the binding force of it was a matter of law. Suppose that evidence had been introduced to the effect that the pledgeor had expressly said to the pledgee: "I know that the sale was invalid because no public notice was given, and because you were the purchaser, and that I can have it set aside; but, knowing this, I elect to treat it as valid, and hereby ratify and confirm it." We think that in such case there could be no doubt but that it would have been proper for the court to have told the jury that, if they believed that he so said, there was a sufficient election to treat the sale as valid, and that he could not afterwards retract it, and if the facts enumerated in the instruction were of equivalent effect, we think it was not an invasion of the province of the jury to say so.

The question, then, is whether the facts enumerated in the instruction were sufficient, as a manifestation of the pledgeor's election, to treat the sale as valid; and we think that they were. It is to be observed that the instruction does not put a case of mere silence on the part of the pledgeor. It is possible that mere silence (irrespective of lapse of time) would not amount to an election or ratification. But here there was something more than silence. The instruction requires not only that there should be a failure to object, but also that he should have commenced to treat with the defendant for a portion of the property. If he did this with knowledge of his rights, we think it was sufficient. It was not necessary that the ratification should have a consideration or the elements necessary to make a new contract. Hill v. Finigan, 62 Cal. 439. In Child v. Hugg, 41 Cal. 520, the pledgeor, on being presented with an account of the sale, admitted its correctness, and "approved" of the sale, and promised to pay the balance due; and it was held that these things constituted a ratification. In Treadwell v. Davis, 34 Cal. 605, a pledge of property by one who had no right to do so was held to be ratified by the owner's saying, when informed of it, that "he was glad the arrangement had been made." In Earle v. Grant, 14 R. I. 229, after an invalid sale, the pledgeor was present with the pledgee and the purchaser, and saw the purchaser pay a dollar to the pledgee, and joined with them in drinking in celebration of it; and it was held that these circumstances constituted a ratification. Possibly there would have been no ratification if the pledgeor, while offering to buy the property, should protest against the sale, although offering to buy it for the sake of peace. But that question does not arise; for the instruction requires, not only that the pledgeor should have commenced to treat for the purchase, but also that he should have "made no objection" to the sale.

It remains to be considered whether the pledgeor's knowledge of the law should have been enumerated as one of the elements of the ratification. There certainly are decisions which hold that knowledge of the law is essential to a ratification. See King v. Lagrange, 50 Cal. 332; Cockerell v. Cholmeley, 1 Russ. & M. 425. And for the purposes of this case we shall assume, without deciding, that knowledge of the law was necessary. But there is nothing in the record to show that the pledgeor did not know the law, and the presumption is that he did know it. Now, if the pledgeor had expressly admitted at the trial that he did know the law at the time he commenced to treat for the purchase of the diamonds, it would seem to be clear that he would not have been injured by the failure to enumerate that element in the instruction; and we think that the un rebutted presumption has, for this purpose, the same force as an admission.

3. It is urged that the court erred in giving the following instructions, viz.: "A conversion of personal property takes place whenever one person assumes the ownership or control of another's property, in contravention and against the rights of such other person, and against his consent. That may be implied." "And if the jury find from the evidence that, on the day when plaintiff was served with the account of sale by the defendant, Finigan assumed the ownership and control of the property described in the complaint, and denied Hill's right or title to the same, and set up right or title himself, then you will find that the conversion of the property took place on said — day of June, 1878, or whatever day it was that the account of sale was rendered to him by Finigan, if you find the conversion took place at all." Two objections are made to these instructions, which we shall consider separately.

(a) It is said that they ignore the pledgeor's right of election; that while it is true that the pledgeor could have elected to treat the illegal sale as a conversion, yet that he did not do so, but elected to place the conversion at the time of the formal demand and refusal on the 7th of August. There are authorities which say that in case of a sale like the one involved here, where the pledgee is the purchaser, there is no conversion unless the pledgeor elects to treat it as such, (see Bryan v. Baldwin, 52 N. Y. 235; Jones, Pledges, § 571,) and, for the purposes of this decision, we shall assume that such is the law. But if the pledgeor's story is to be believed, he did elect to treat the sale as invalid at the time mentioned in the instruction. He says that a day or so after the sale the pledgee gave him a statement of account, and that he then "told him I did not recognize that sale, and that he had no right to sell my stocks and diamonds, and that I did not approve of it," and that he refused to buy back the diamonds; and said: "I will make you give up those diamonds yet." This seems to us a complete disaffirmance of the sale; and it is so characterized by the appellant's counsel himself, for he said on the oral argument, with reference to the story of his client: "He swore that promptly on the presentation of this account * * * he repudiated the sale, and said he would make him give back his property. He disaffirmed it then. * * * He disaffirmed it right from the beginning." If he did elect to disaffirm, such election would be binding upon him. He could not, for the purpose of increasing the damages, afterwards disaffirm the disaffirmance, and elect to disaffirm again at a later date. His right to the highest damages depends, under our statute, upon his prosecuting the action with reasonable diligence, a provision which would have little meaning if he could move the initial point along to suit himself. Now, without stopping to inquire whether the appellant can have a reversal because of the assumption or ignoring of a fact which he himself swore to upon the trial, and which his counsel now insists upon as the truth, we do not think there was any prejudicial error. The ignoring of the pledgeor's election was, in effect, an assumption of its existence at the time specified in the instruction. The position of the appellant in this regard must be, in effect, that it ought to have been left to the jury to say whether or not there was an election to disaffirm at the time stated in the instruction; and that, if it had been so left to them, they might have found (contrary to the sworn statement of appellant) that the election did not take place at that time; and that by ignoring it altogether the court in effect assumed that it did occur at the time specified in the instruction, and not on the 7th of August. But the assumption, in view of the conceded facts of the case, was in favor of the appellant. As has been stated under the ground first considered, it is only by reason of the election to disaffirm, sworn to by the appellant, that the court could not declare, as a matter of law, that there had been unreasonable delay in making the election. If it had not been for that, the trial court could, and presumably would, have instructed the jury to render a verdict for the defendant on the ground of unreasonable delay in making the election; and this would have ended the case, and rendered errors in other matters immaterial. In other words, it was only by reason of the fact assumed in the instruction that the appellant could get to the jury at all; and this being so, we think that the assumption of that fact was an assumption in his favor, and that he cannot complain of it.

(b) It is said that the judge improperly assumed a fact when he charged that "if the jury find from the evidence that, on the day when plaintiff was served with the account of sale by the defendant, Finigan assumed," etc. The argument is that this assumes that the plaintiff "was served with the account of sale by the defendant." But the plaintiff admits that he was served by the defendant with a statement of account. This fact is undisputed, and hence the appellant was not injured by its assumption. His counsel, who certainly has argued the case with zeal and ability, says that the instruction does not refer to the account above mentioned, but to another account, which the defendant says he delivered to the plaintiff, but which the plaintiff denies that he received. We are by no means certain that this is the case, or that the jury so understood it. But, assuming that the instruction refers to the latter account, there was nevertheless no injury, for the two accounts are, for all purposes which are material to the question in hand, substantially the same. The account which the plaintiff admits that he received from the defendant was received by him about the same time as the other; and it informed him (though in a more condensed mode,) that the securities had been sold, the date of the sale, and the price they brought. This, with what he admits that the defendant told him at the time, was all that it was material for him to know. The foregoing disposes also of what is claimed to have been a similar assumption in another instruction.

4. It is argued that there was error in instructing the jury that the presumption as to the measure of damages established by section 3336 of the Civil Code is a disputable presumption. We do not find it necessary to determine this question. There was no evidence tending to rebut the presumption, (unless the evidence going to defeat the plaintiff's claim altogether be considered such, in which view there was, of course, no injury,) and no question relating to it was submitted to the jury. The instruction, therefore, was purely abstract; and, in view of all the circumstances of the case, we do not see how it could have misled the jury. The assignments as to the admissibility of evidence were not pressed at the oral argument, and we do not think they require special notice.

Upon the whole record we see no prejudicial error, and the order appealed from is therefore affirmed.

MCDONALD v. HUFF. (No. 11,064.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 24, 1888.)

1. VENDOR AND VENDEE—CONTRACT—DELIVERY OF DEED.

A mortgagor agreed in writing to execute a deed to the mortgagee, and leave it in escrow, to be delivered on default by him in paying an agreed sum less than the amount due, provided the mortgagee gave a receipt in full. The deed was accordingly left with a third person. Default was made, but the mortgagor demanded the deed back, and, though he did not receive it, conveyed to another, knowing the facts. The holder delivered the deed to the mortgagee's attorney, who executed a receipt of all demands against the mortgagor. Held, that this delivery and acceptance were binding on the mortgagor, and his grantee took no title.

2. SAME—EFFECT OF DELAY.

The mortgagor cannot complain that the delivery and release did not take place till after the time provided in the agreement.

In bank. On rehearing. For opinion on hearing in department 1 and statement of case, see 18 Pac. Rep. 243.

Archer & Bowden and S. O. Houghton, for appellant. S. M. Buck, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This cause was heard in department 1, and reversed. A rehearing was granted. Upon a careful consideration of the questions presented, and more fully argued at the hearing in bank, we are of the opinion that the judgment in department should not stand as the judgment of the court. The deed from the appellant, Huff, to respondent was, in the hands of R. H. McDonald, an escrow. Cannon v. Handley, 72 Cal. 133, 140, 13 Pac. Rep. 315; Schmidt v. Deegan, (Wis.) 34 N. W. Rep. 83. And, being so, it could not be revoked by the appellant. Cannon v. Handley, supra; Knopf v. Hansen, (Minn.) 33 N. W. Rep. 781. The depositary was not the agent of the vendor alone, but of both parties, and, as such, was bound to deliver the instrument on performance of the condition provided for in the contract under which he held it. Cannon v. Handley, supra; Shirley v. Ayres, 14

Ohio, 307; Schmidt v. Deegan, supra. Here were two written instruments, signed by the appellant, Huff,—one an agreement to convey on certain conditions, which was fully executed by delivery to the depository; the other a deed, made in pursuance of the agreement, and to become operative upon the happening of the conditions set forth in said agreement, and its delivery by the depository to the respondent. The first of these was binding upon the appellant from its delivery to the depository, without the signature of respondent, or any contract in writing from him. Code Civil Proc. § 1973; Civil Code, § 1624; Rutenberg v. Main, 47 Cal. 213, 219; Vassault v. Edwards, 43 Cal. 458, 464; Moss v. Atkinson, 44 Cal. 4. And the respondent, having agreed, verbally, to the terms of such written agreement to convey, was thereby estopped to enforce the collection of his debt until the time fixed for the payment of the money in pursuance thereof, or, in default of such payment, the delivery of the deed. Vassault v. Edwards, supra; Cagger v. Lansing, 57 Barb. 421, 424; Worrall v. Munn, 5 N. Y. 229; 1 Reed, Spec. Perf. § 365; Schmidt v. Deegan, supra. The findings of the court below show an acceptance of the deed by the attorney of the respondent, and that he, by his agent and attorney, duly executed a receipt in full of all demands against the defendant, Huff, and deposited the same with the depository for his use. This shows a sufficient delivery and acceptance of the deed, and release of the indebtedness. The fact that such delivery and release did not take place until after the time provided in the agreement is immaterial. Certainly it is not a matter about which the appellants should be heard to complain under the circumstances of this case. The title to the property in controversy vested in the respondent by the delivery of the deed to him, and, as the court finds that the appellant Herrick took his deed with full knowledge of all the facts, he obtained no title. As against him the deed from the defendant, Huff, to the plaintiff must be held to have taken effect at the date of the contract authorizing its delivery. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

CARPENTER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY. (No. 12,395.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 27, 1888.)

CERTIORARI—ANSWER—JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS.

Where on demurrer to a petition for certiorari it is decided that the appointment of a guardian ad litem for minor parties is not necessary to the validity of a judgment in a will contest, an answer that defendant court set aside such judgment for the reason that no guardian had been appointed for the minors, presents no material question of fact, and the petitioners are entitled to judgment on the pleadings.

In bank. Petition for writ of review. Motion for judgment on pleadings.

This petition was filed by Abel F. Carpenter and others for the purpose of having reviewed the action of the superior court of San Joaquin county, J. G. SWINERTON, Judge, in the matter of the estate of Charles W. Carpenter, deceased. The will of said Carpenter was contested, the jury found against its validity, and the superior court entered judgment accordingly. A motion for a new trial was made and denied. Afterwards a motion was made by certain minors to have the judgment set aside, mainly on the ground that they had not been represented by a guardian ad litem. This motion the court granted, and it is to review this action of the superior court that the writ is applied for. Defendant filed a demurrer to the petition, which was overruled, the decision therein being reported ante, 174. Thereupon an answer was filed, and the present motion is for judgment on the pleadings.

Sawyer & Burnett, for petitioners. Carter & Smith and S. D. Woods, for respondent.

WORKS, J. The questions of law arising in this case were fully presented by a demurrer to the petition, and determined in favor of the petitioner. The respondent has filed an answer, and the petitioners move for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that "it appears from the pleadings that petitioners are entitled to the relief asked for in the petition." The answer is that the order mentioned in the petition, vacating and setting aside the verdict and judgment mentioned and set forth in said petition, was made, given, and entered, "because the minors described in said petition were not and had not been represented in the matter of the contest to revoke the probate of the will of said C. W. Carpenter, deceased, in that no guardian ad litem has or had been appointed to appear for and defend for said minors in the matter of said contest, and that by reason of the said failure to appoint said guardian ad litem for said minors the said verdict and judgment was irregular and void." The petition states the facts showing how and by whom the minors appeared and were represented. This petition was held to show that the minors were so represented that the judgment rendered was binding upon them, and the order vacating it was not effective. It was expressly held that the appointment of a guardian ad litem was unnecessary to the validity of the judgment. This being true, the answer presents no material fact to be tried, and the motion for judgment on the pleadings in favor of the petitioners should be allowed. It is so ordered.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

(Supreme Court of California. November 12, 1888.)

1. TRUSTS—IMPLIED TRUST—STATUTE OF FRAUDS—PART PERFORMANCE.

One who procures an assignee in insolvency, the creditors and the debtor, to allow him to purchase the property of the debtor at a public sale for a nominal sum, by advising them as their attorney that thereby a sacrifice will be prevented, and by orally promising them to hold it and manage it till it can be sold more advantageously, comes within the exceptions to the statute of frauds on account of confidential relations and part performance, and also within Civil Code Cal. § 853, providing that a trust is presumed to result on a transfer of property to one person when the consideration is paid by another, and sections 2222 and 2224, providing also for such trust where the property is gained by fraud.¹

3. PARTIES—JOINDER OF.

Joinder of the creditors, the assignee, and the debtor, parties to the agreement with the attorney, as parties plaintiff, and of the attorney, his grantee, and those claiming liens on the property, as parties defendant, is proper.

4. PLEADING—COMPLAINT—PRESUMPTION.

Where a complaint to establish a trust does not show that the agreement of defendant to hold as trustee was oral, it will be presumed to have been in writing, and the question of the statute of frauds is not raised by demurrer.

5. INSOLVENCY—VERIFICATION OF PETITION.

An attorney who holds property under the deed of an assignee in insolvency cannot be heard to object that the insolvency proceedings are invalid because the petition and schedule were verified before himself as notary, while he was attorney for the debtor.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Inyo county; JOHN A. HANNAH, Judge.

Action by John Broder, assignor in insolvency, W. A. Greenly, assignee, and R. C. Broder and others, creditors, against A. R. Conklin, purchaser of the property at assignee's sale, and Mollie Conklin, his wife and grantee, and others claiming liens, to establish a trust in favor of plaintiffs. Judgment on demurrer to complaint for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal.

R. S. Miner, Eugene R. Garber, and J. W. P. Laird, (Langhorne & Miller, of counsel,) for appellants. P. Reddy, (W. H. Metson, of counsel,) for respondents.

McFARLAND, J This is an action brought by John Broder and certain of his creditors and their successors in interest to have a trust established and declared against the defendant A. R. Conklin as to certain real and personal property, and for an accounting, etc. Other parties are made defendants, as claiming an interest in the said property, etc. The defendants A. R. Conklin and his wife, Mollie Conklin, demurred to the second amended complaint, upon the grounds that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; that the alleged cause of action was barred by several sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing for the time within which actions must be commenced; and that there was a misjoinder of parties, both plaintiff and defendant. The demurrer was sustained by the court below, and judgment entered for defendants. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment. The complaint is necessarily quite lengthy, but the main facts averred which it is necessary to state here, and which, for the purposes of the demurrer, must be taken as true, are substantially these: On March 24, 1879, the plaintiff John Broder filed his petition in insolvency in the county court of Inyo county. On May 1, 1879, William A. Greenly, one of the creditors, was appointed assignee. He qualified, and entered upon the discharge of his duties, and on May 6, 1879, took possession of all the said insolvent's estate. On May 13th the court made an order that said assignee sell all the property, real and personal, of the insolvent, at public auction, and apply the proceeds to the payment of the claims of the creditors. When the proceedings were at this stage, the defendant A. R. Conklin represented to the insolvent and his creditors that if the property should be sold at auction it would not realize enough to satisfy the creditors, and would be sold at a sacrifice; and that, if they would refrain from bidding, and allow him (Conklin) to bid the same in for a nominal sum, he would do so for the benefit of, and in trust for, said creditors, and would hold and manage it as their trustee until it could be sold advantageously at private sale. Thereupon a mutual agreement to that effect was entered into between Conklin and the insolvent and his creditors, and that after the sale said "defendant A. R. Conklin should and would hold and manage said property in trust for them until such time as it could be sold at private sale, or disposed of to better advantage and for a larger sum, and that all the rents, issues, profits, and proceeds thereof should be applied by said A. R. Conklin to the payment of the several claims of the creditors of said insolvent, and the surplus, if any, should be paid over to said insolvent, John Broder." At the time of this agreement the said Conklin was an attorney at law. He was also the attorney of said John Broder in his insolvency proceedings. He was also the attorney of said assignee Greenly; and he was also "the confidential and trusted adviser of the other creditors," who "had and reposed great and unlimited confidence in the integrity and good faith of said defendant A. R. Conklin, and trusted and believed him, and relied upon his agreement and representations and promises aforesaid, and his duty as their attorney and confidential adviser and trustee aforesaid, and allowed him to do and act in the matter as he had advised and counseled." In pursuance of this agreement Conklin was allowed to bid in the property, and did so bid it in, at the auction on June 9, 1879, at the nominal sum of $2,500, no part of which was ever paid; and on said day the said assignee conveyed by deed all the property of said insolvent to said Conklin. The property at that time was of the value of $32,000, and it has since become much more valuable. The said deed from said assignee was in form absolute, and did not, on its face, declare any trust; but Conklin took it under said agreement, and in trust as aforesaid. He took possession of all the property as such trustee, and acted as such until at a subsequent time he repudiated the trust. (Afterwards, about January 7, 1880, Conklin represented to the insolvent, John Broder, that the deed from the assignee was defective, and persuaded him to make another deed, and said Broder, upon representations of said Conklin, and for the purpose of carrying out said agreement as aforesaid, did execute and deliver to said Conklin a conveyance of all said property conveyed, or intended to be conveyed, by said deed of said assignee. No consideration was paid by Conklin for this second conveyance.) Between the date of the deed from said assignee and the 10th of March, 1884, he sold the personal property for more than $8,000, and received as rents, issues, and profits of the real property over $10,000. He paid creditors' claims to the extent of about $1,500, and conveyed one piece of land to a creditor who held a mortgage on it, in satisfaction of his claim. On the 10th of March, 1884, the said A. R. Conklin for the first time repudiated and disavowed said trust, appropriated all the moneys collected by him as such trustee to his own use, refused to pay any claims under said agreement, and claimed in his own right all the property received by him from said insolvent as aforesaid. And on said day he conveyed all the real property so received to his wife, the defendant Mollie Conklin, who took the same with full notice of all the facts before stated. Since said May 10, 1884, the defendants A. R. Conklin and Mollie Conklin have received rents, profits, etc., of said property to the amount of about $7,000. Plaintiffs did not know, and had no means of knowing, prior to said May 10, 1884, of any of said fraudulent acts of defendant. (There are many other averments of facts which fill up the details of the alleged transactions between the parties, but the foregoing statement is full enough to show the sufficiency or insufficiency of the complaint.)

It does not appear upon what grounds the court below sustained the demurrer, and we are not able to see why the complaint is not sufficient.

1. With respect to the point that the agreement upon which the alleged trust rests was not in writing, it may be said that this court has held that a defendant, to avail himself of the statute of frauds, must plead it, (Osborne v. Endicott, 6 Cal. 154,) and, if this rule is to be adhered to, the point cannot be considered on the demurrer. But, waiving that consideration, it does not appear from the complaint whether the agreement was verbal or in writing; and it has been held by this court several times that in such a case it is not necessary to aver the contract to have been in writing, (even when the statute of frauds requires it,) and that "on demurrer we shall consider it to have been made in writing." Brennan v. Ford, 46 Cal. 14; Miles v. Thorne, 38 Cal. 339; Wakefield v. Greenhood, 29 Cal. 598; Vassault v. Edwards, 43 Cal. 458; McDonald v. Association, 51 Cal. 210. Therefore no question as to the statute of frauds was raised by the demurrer. But, as the case may possibly be tried on issues raised by an answer, it is proper to say that, in our opinion, the facts averred in the complaint, if true, created a trust, as claimed by plaintiff, even though the agreement was not in writing. It is difficult to distinguish this case from Sandfoss v. Jones, 35 Cal. 481, except that in the latter case the trustees furnished part of the purchase money, while in the case at bar, Conklin did not furnish any of it, and that there was no peculiarly confidential relation, such as that of attorney and client, between the parties. In that case Bartram, being the owner of a large amount of real and personal property, with which he carried on the lumber and hotel business, and having been attached by his creditors, made a verbal agreement with J. and B., by which the latter agreed to take possession in their own names of all the property; to purchase it at sheriff's sale for the benefit of Bartram, and to advance their own money if necessary for that purpose; to conduct the business; and, when they had been repaid out of its proceeds their own debts and advances, to reconvey to Bartram, etc. J. and B. entered upon the execution of this agreement, and in due time all the claims against Bartram, including those of J. and B., were extinguished, with money chiefly, if not wholly, derived from the property and business. Then J. and B. undertook to repudiate the trust, and retain the property as their own. Thereupon Sandfoss, assignee of Bartram, commenced an action very similar to the case at bar, and the lower court, as in the case at bar, sustained a demurrer to the complaint. But on appeal this court reversed the judgment. SANDERSON, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, says: "Whether they (J. and B.) paid for the real estate wholly or in part with Bartram's money, or their own exclusively, is immaterial. In either event, their agreement was not within the statute of frauds, and was not, therefore, void, because it was not in writing. If the real estate was paid for by Jones and Blanchard with the money of Bartram, there was a resulting trust in favor of the latter, which a court of equity will declare and enforce, for such a trust is expressly excepted from the operation of the statute of frauds." We have noticed this case somewhat in detail, because, with respect to the somewhat complicated subject of trusts, it is more satisfactory to compare a case at bar with other adjudicated cases than to undertake to restate general rules in abstract language. See, also, Bayles v. Baxter, 22 Cal. 575; and Millard v. Hathaway, 27 Cal. 119. In Brison v. Brison, 17 Pac. Rep. 689, (recently decided by this court,) it was held that a wife can be compelled to reconvey to her husband land which he had conveyed to her upon her oral promise to reconvey the same when requested; and that a trust would have arisen from the confidential relation of the parties, even if there had been no fraudulent intent on the part of the wife, at the time she took the deed, not to reconvey. In the opinion of the court in that case, delivered by HAYNE, C., the principles which govern the class of trusts now under consideration are very fully stated, and the leading authorities upon the subject cited; and the confidential relation of attorney and client is put in the same category with that of husband and wife. The trust in the case at bar arose by operation of law, and it comes within nearly all the usual exceptions to the rule that a trust must be declared by a written instrument. The relation between the parties was of the most confidential character,—that of attorney and client. There was a transfer of the property to Conklin, while the whole consideration was furnished by plaintiffs, in which case “a trust is presumed to result,” as declared in section 853 of the Civil Code. The property was gained or detained by fraud, etc., and there was, therefore, a trust as provided by sections 2222 and 2224 of the Civil Code; and there was part performance of the agreement.

2. It appears from the complaint that the petition and schedule in insolvency of the said John Broder was verified before his attorney, the said defendant A. R. Conklin acting as a notary public. And it is argued for said defendant that said papers should have been verified before another officer; that, therefore, the whole insolvency proceedings were invalid; that, therefore, no title passed to said defendant by the assignee's deed; and that, therefore, there could have been no trust, etc. We shall not stop to inquire into the asserted defect in the proceedings in insolvency. Defendant, while holding on to the property which he received under said assignee's deed, cannot be heard here, as against plaintiffs, to assert a defect which occurred, if at all, by his own direction as attorney for the insolvent. Moreover, if the title did not pass through the deed of the assignee, it passed shortly afterwards through the deed of the insolvent, which must be considered as a part of the whole transaction.

3. We see no reason for holding that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. Many of the arguments made upon this point by counsel for respondents are based upon asserted facts which do not appear upon the complaint. While the respondent remained in possession of the property, and before he repudiated the trust, the statute certainly did not begin to run. According to the complaint he did not repudiate the trust until the 10th of May, 1884; and before that date plaintiffs had not discovered, and did not know or have any means of knowing, any of the fraudulent acts alleged. The action was commenced within two years thereafter, and, under any correct view of the law, it was commenced in time. The second amended complaint was filed within four years.

4. We think that the parties who are made plaintiffs and defendants are not improperly joined. The judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer to the complaint, and allow defendants a reasonable time in which to answer.

SAN FRANCISCO & N. P. R. CO. v. ANDERSON. (No. 11,212.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 27, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—REQUISITES—CERTIFICATE OF BOND FILED.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 953, requiring, on appeal, a certificate of the clerk or attorneys that an undertaking in due form has been properly filed, or a stipulation of the parties waiving it, a certificate simply stating that the clerk had compared the transcript with the papers on file, and it was correct, is fatally defective, even though the undertaking was embodied in the transcript; as it is not one of those papers required by sections 950, 951, and 952 to be furnished on appeal, and therefore should not be so embodied.

2. SAME—PRACTICE—OBJECTION TO CERTIFICATE—NOTICE.

An objection to the sufficiency of a certificate made five days before the hearing in a printed brief, together with a request that the appeal be dismissed, is a sufficient compliance with rule 13 of the California supreme court, which requires such objection to be taken and notice given to the appellant in writing at least five days before the hearing.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Marin county; E. B. MAHON, Judge.

Action by the San Francisco & North Pacific Railroad Company against William N. Anderson for the recovery of personal property. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

E. S. Lippitt, for appellant. H. Wilkins, for respondent.

WORKS, J. In this action the respondent asks that the appeal be dismissed on the ground that the clerk's certificate to the transcript is insufficient. The certificate is as follows: "I, Thomas S. Bonneau, county clerk of the county of Marin, and ex officio clerk of the superior court in and for said county, hereby certify that I have compared the foregoing transcript with the original papers now on file in my office, and that the said transcript is correct." Sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Code of Civil Procedure provide that the appellant must furnish copies of certain papers to this court, on appeal. Copies of such papers as are here designated must be set out in, and become a part of, the transcript. The undertaking on appeal is not one of the papers named in either of these sections, and should not be embodied in the transcript. The Code further provides: "Sec. 953. The copies provided for in the last three sections must be certified to be correct by the clerk or the attorneys, and must be accompanied with a certificate of the clerk or attorneys that an undertaking on appeal, in due form, has been properly filed, or a stipulation of the parties waiving an undertaking." This section imperatively requires a certificate from the clerk that an undertaking on appeal, in due form, has been properly filed. The certificate before us wholly fails to comply with the statute in this regard, and no stipulation waiving the undertaking is shown. The certificate is therefore clearly insufficient.

The appellant, instead of applying to this court, as it might have done, for leave to file a corrected certificate, contends against the motion to dismiss.

1. On the ground that under rule 13 of this court an objection of this kind must be taken and notified to the appellant in writing, at least five days before the hearing. The respondent has pointed out, in his printed brief, the objection to the certificate, and asks therein that the appeal be dismissed. This, being done within the time required by the rule, is a sufficient compliance with its provisions. A formal notice is unnecessary.

2. That as the undertaking on appeal is set out in the transcript, and appears to be in due form, the certificate of the clerk that the transcript is correct is a sufficient compliance with the requirement of the Code. As we have shown, the undertaking is improperly set out in the transcript, and forms no part of it. This being true, a certificate that the transcript is correct cannot be construed as certifying that a copy of a paper, not properly a part of it, is in due form, and has been properly filed. The requirements of the section of the Code under consideration are plain and explicit, and should be complied with. It has been held by this court that it was sufficient to set out the undertaking in the transcript, and certify to its correctness. Wakeman v. Coleman, 28 Cal. 58. But this was under an entirely different provision. Prac. Act, § 346. See, as bearing on the point, Bennett v. Bennett, 42 Cal. 629. The objection to the certificate is well taken. Appeal dismissed.

VON DRACHENFELS v. DOOLITTLE et ux. (No. 11,419.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 27, 1888.)

1. QUIETING TITLE—SUIT AGAINST HOLDER OF LEGAL TITLE.

A mining claim was conveyed to defendants, who were husband and wife, the consideration being notes executed by both defendants, but paid by the wife out of her separate estate. Plaintiff recovered judgment against the husband, and purchased the land at execution sale without notice that the notes were paid by the wife. Patent was afterwards issued to the wife. Plaintiff's complaint to quiet title alleged that he was the owner, and that defendants' claim was without right. Held, that plaintiff cannot obtain a decree finding that the wife holds the title in trust, and ordering a conveyance to him, such relief being contradictory to the allegations of the complaint.

2. SAME.

An action under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 738, which provides that "an action may be brought by any person against another, who claims an estate or interest in real property adverse to him, for the purpose of determining such adverse claim," cannot be brought upon an equitable interest against the holder of the legal title.

In bank. Commissioners' decision. Appeal from superior court, Del Norte county; JAMES E. MURPHY, Judge.

Action to quiet title, brought by Gregor Von Drachenfels against Albert Doolittle and Maria, his wife. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Code Civil Proc. § 738, provides that "an action may be brought by any person against another, who claims an estate or interest in real property adverse to him, for the purpose of determining such adverse claim."

L. F. Cooper, (Sawyer & Burnett, of counsel,) for appellant. J. D. H. Chamberlain and R. G. Knox, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. This is an action under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure to determine an adverse claim; or, as is usually said, an action to quiet title. The complaint is in the usual form, averring, in substance, that the plaintiff is the owner of the premises, (as against all persons except the United States,) and that the defendants have some claim to the premises adverse to the plaintiff, which claim "is without any right whatever." The facts are as follows: The owners of a mining claim upon public land conveyed it to the defendants, who were and are husband and wife. The consideration "was the sum of $1,000, payable in certain promissory notes," which were executed by both of the defendants, but which were paid, when due, by the wife out of her separate property. The plaintiff recovered a judgment against the husband, and caused execution to be levied upon the mining claim, and became the purchaser at the sale without notice of the fact that the notes were paid with the separate funds of the wife, and in due course received the sheriff's deed. After this the wife made application for a patent, and paid what was required by the government, and in due time a patent was issued to her in her own name. The court below gave judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals.

The theory advanced for the appellant is that the wife took the title in trust, and should be decreed to convey to him. But we think this relief is entirely outside the case made by the complaint. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff is the owner, and that the defendants' claim is without right.

The judgment asked for would be that the plaintiff is not the owner, and that the defendants' claim is not without right, but, on the contrary, is the legal title, and should be conveyed to the plaintiff. It is obvious that the plaintiff cannot have a judgment in direct contradiction of the material allegations of his complaint. If in any case an action to determine an adverse claim can be brought under our statute upon an equitable interest, (which we doubt; see Frost v. Spitley, 121 U. S. 552, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1129,) it cannot be brought against the holder of the legal title.

The judgment, having been right, will not be reversed merely to allow the plaintiff to apply for leave to amend his complaint. The other points made do not require special notice. We express no opinion as to the alleged equitable right of plaintiff. We therefore advise that the judgment and orders appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

DANIELS v. GUALALA MILL CO. (No. 11,487)

(Supreme Court of California. October 29, 1888.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—ADVERSE POSSESSION—RUNNING OF STATUTE

Act Cong. 1877, (19 St. at Large, p. 267, § 2,) which provides that where indemnity school selections made and certified to California, shall fail by reason of the land in lieu of which they were taken not being included in the final survey of a Mexican grant, or shall be otherwise defective, "the same are hereby confirmed," covers all defects in indemnity school selections, and where land is certified to the state as school land by the United States, and patented by the state as such, but subsequently the United States cancels the selection, and patents the land to the same person, who obtained patent from the state, the second patent is void, and the statute of limitations commences to run in favor of a person holding adversely to the patentee from the date of the first patent.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—ADVERSE POSSESSION—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

A railroad company built its road lengthwise through the center of a strip of land 25 feet wide, improved the land in the usual manner of railroads with reference to their road-bed and right of way, and paid the taxes thereon. Held an adverse possession within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 325, which provides that land shall be deemed to be held adversely, by one having a possession not founded on a written instrument, where it has been protected by a substantial inclosure, or where it has been usually cultivated or improved for five years continuously, and the taxes have been paid, though the land was not protected on all sides by a substantial inclosure.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; R. MCGARVEY, Judge.

Ejectment by Nathan Daniels against the Gualala Mill Company. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Code Civil Proc. § 325, provides that land shall be deemed to be held adversely by one having a possession not founded on a written instrument, where it has been protected by a substantial inclosure, or where it has been usually cultivated or improved for the period of five years continuously, and the taxes have been paid.

J. A. Cooper, for appellant. H. A. Powell and T. L. Carothers, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This action is in ejectment to recover a strip of land 25 feet in width, through the center of which the defendant's railroad runs lengthwise. The court below, sitting without a jury, found that the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations. From the judgment and an order denying a new trial the plaintiff appeals. From the evidence it appears that the plaintiff claims title under a patent issued from the United States government in 1883. If this patent was good, and the plaintiff had title to the land only through it, then the defendant could not prevail in the action. It becomes, then, a very material question in this case in what way and at what time the plaintiff did actually obtain a paramount title to the land. It is in evidence by a certain state patent, to the introduction of which no objection was made upon the trial, that the land was patented to one A. J. Delatour, May 13, 1878; that it was listed as an indemnity school selection, and selected and certified as such to the state of California in lieu of a portion of section 36, township 10 N., range 36 W., S. B. M., approved August 10, 1870, by the secretary of the interior; and the certified copy of the list was read in evidence without objection. Certain deeds were also put in evidence, without objection, showing that the plaintiff had this land conveyed to him by mense conveyances from Delatour, and that the deed to plaintiff directly was dated the 25th day of April, 1871. That afterwards, in 1882, the United States commissioner of the land office undertook to cancel the selection by the state, on the ground that it had not lost the school land for which it had obtained the indemnity land patented by it to the plaintiff; and it was shown that in 1883, after this order of cancellation, the plaintiff had obtained a patent for the land from the general government. The defendant then introduced a patent to certain parties for a Mexican land grant, dated the 1st day of March, 1870, which shows, with the map attached, that section 36, township 10 N., range 36 W., S. B. M., was included within it, and that the final survey of the ranchito for which the patent issued had been approved by the commissioner of the general land-office, March 1, 1870, its introduction in evidence being unobjected to. The plaintiff then introduced in evidence a certified copy of the application of A. J. Delatour to purchase of the state of California the lands described in the complaint, which is regular in form, dated April 2, 1868, duly verified; which application shows that the lands described in the complaint were duly located in lieu of the E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of section 36, township 10 N., range 36 W., S. B. M., by Leander Ransom, state locating agent, on the 27th day of May, 1868; also that a certificate of purchase to the land, dated the 24th of March, 1869, issued to A. J. Delatour from the register of the state land-office. Thus it will be seen that it was shown in evidence, without objection from the plaintiff, that there were two patents to the land in question,—one from the state, and one from the United States; so that the plaintiff cannot be heard here, at this stage of the cause, to object to the findings of the court, based upon any part of the evidence going to show the regularity or irregularity of these patents. This objection to the consideration of such evidence by the trial court should have been made at the proper time. It being certain, then, that the evidence was properly before the court, the only question is, what was its legal effect? If the first patent from the state was good, and vested a title in Delatour, then the second patent from the United States was void. Under the act of congress of 1877, commonly called the "Booth Act," to be found at page 267, 19 U. S. St. at Large, § 2, it is provided "that where indemnity school selections have been made and certified to said state, and said selections shall fail by reason of the land in lieu of which they were taken not being included within such final survey of a Mexican grant, or are otherwise defective, or are invalid, the same are hereby confirmed." The appellate court of this state held in Hambleton v. Duhaime, 71 Cal. 141, 11 Pac. Rep. 865, "that the use of the words, 'or are otherwise defective or invalid,' shows that the intention of congress in enacting the law was to cover any and all defects in indemnity school selections." It follows that the land in controversy having been listed and certified to the state, if the selection failed by reason of any defect or invalidity, it was made good, and such defect or invalidity cured. The state having title to the land, could and did give a valid patent to Delatour, and the patent from the United States to the plaintiff was void. Delatour, through whom the plaintiff claims, had title to the land on the date of his state patent, viz., the 13th day of May, 1878, which was more than five years next before the plaintiff commenced this action. The defendant commenced its occupation of the land in the year 1864, more than 20 years before this action was begun. It claimed title adverse to the patentee, Delatour, under whom the plaintiff claims, by mesne conveyances, from the 13th day of May, 1878, and claimed against the plaintiff himself ever since the fall of 1874, when the plaintiff was paid \$800 for the strip of land in controversy.

It then becomes a material question in this matter as to whether the defendant can claim that it had adverse possession of the land for more than five years next prior to the commencement of this action, so as to satisfy the conditions of section 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The land may not perhaps have been protected on all sides by a substantial inclosure, but we think it has been improved in the manner usual by railroads, with reference to their road-bed and right of way. We think the evidence shows that all the taxes which have been assessed upon this land in the occupancy of the defendant, as a road-bed and right of way, have also been paid. It is true that the land was not assessed as a strip of land 25 feet wide in the section of land through which it ran, and that the plaintiff did pay the taxes on the land described in his complaint; but the facts do not show, nor do the findings, that the plaintiff paid any taxes on this strip of land, which he had sold to the defendant, and upon which its railroad was built, and which it occupied, and they do further show, as we think, that the defendant in paying its taxes paid on this land, as included in its tax assessment on its road-bed, all the taxes assessed against it. The plaintiff sold this land to the defendant in 1874, and received $800 therefor. He permitted the defendant to build a costly railroad over and through it, and seems himself to have considered it as belonging to the defendant. Afterwards, when he thought his state patent was void, he again sought to get title to the land from the United States, and having, as he thought, accomplished this object in 1883, it occurred to him that his title was only good from that date, and that the defendant might be made to pay him again under his second patent for the land, as its possession had not been continuous for five years from 1883 to the commencement of this action. But inasmuch as, according to the evidence and the findings, his title was founded primarily on the state patent of 1878, this cannot be done. We perceive no prejudicial error in the record, and advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PEOPLE v. LENON. (No. 20,468.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 30, 1888.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—RECORD—JUDGMENT.

Under Pen. Code Cal. §§ 1237, 1240, providing for an appeal by a defendant from a judgment of conviction, or an order denying a motion for a new trial, and defining the manner of taking such appeal, where, in the transcript and bill of exceptions, no record of the judgment appears, but only a recital from the minutes of the court that the motion for new trial was overruled, and defendant sentenced, an appeal will not lie.

2. SAME—MATTERS NOT APPARENT OF RECORD.

An appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial will be dismissed, where the record does not show the grounds upon which the motion was made.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; H. K. S. MELVENY, Judge.

Indictment for rape. Verdict of guilty, motion for new trial denied, and term in the penitentiary fixed at 14 years. Defendant appeals.

Hugh J. & Wm. Crawford, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Geo. A. Johnson, for the People.

WORKS, J. The appellant was found guilty in the court below of the crime of rape. The appeal purports to be from a judgment of conviction, but no judgment appears in the record. The minutes of the court, as set out in the transcript, contain this recital: "Argument on motion for a new trial by Crawford, Esq., attorney for defendant. Motion overruled. Defendant sentenced to the penitentiary at Folsom for fourteen years." This is a mere recital in the minutes that sentence was passed, and not the judgment of the court, from which alone an appeal will lie. Pen. Code, §§ 1237, 1240. The bill of exceptions contains a statement that "defendant appealed to the supreme court from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, and from the final judgment of conviction," but the notice of appeal is from the "judgment rendered against him on the 14th day of May, 1888." The minutes of the court for that day show a continuance of the case until the 16th of the same month. An appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial, if properly made, could not be effective, as the record fails to show the grounds on which the motion was made, or that such a motion was made at all. Appeal dismissed.

JENNESS v. BOWEN et al. (No. 12,809.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 30, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—MATTERS NOT APPARENT OF RECORD.

Under Pol. Code Cal. § 3417, providing that in a contest as to the right to purchase school land, where an order referring the question to the courts for trial is made by the surveyor general, a complaint must be filed within 60 days, if such complaint appears from its face to have been filed in time, a judgment sustaining a demurrer for failure to file in time will be reversed; though from proceedings after judgment, and from briefs of counsel, it may be inferred that the claim was not indorsed as "filed" until after the 60 days; neither such indorsement, nor the fact of the delay in filing, being in any way made part of the judgment roll.

2. SAME—APPEALABLE ORDER—MOTION TO VACATE.

Upon an appeal from a judgment, an order denying a motion to vacate the judgment cannot be reviewed.

3. SAME—REQUISITES—FILING BOND.

An undertaking on appeal is filed within the statutory limitation of five days when the fifth day falls on Sunday, and the undertaking is filed on the following day; as under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 12, the time in which an act may be done is computed by excluding the first and including the last, unless the last day is a holiday, when it is also excluded.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Kern county; R. E. ARICK, Judge. Action by Annette L. Jenness against J. J. Bowen and H. Maybury, to try adverse rights to purchase school lands. Judgment for defendants on demurrer, and plaintiff appeals. By Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 12, it is provided that "the time in which any act provided by law is to be done, is computed by excluding the first day, and including the last, unless the last day is a holiday, and then it is also excluded."

F. D. Nicol, for appellant. C. C. Cowgill and S. F. Leib, for respondents.

WORKS, J. This is a contest involving the right to purchase school land from the state. The contest was certified to the superior court of Kern county by the surveyor general on the 8th day of March, 1887. There is a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that "it appears therefrom that the cause of action accrued more than sixty days previous to the commencement of the action," and that it "appears from said complaint that the cause of action therein stated is barred by section 3417 of the provisions of the Political Code." The section of the Code referred to requires the complaint to be filed within 60 days after the order of reference is made.

We may infer from subsequent proceedings appearing in the transcript, and what is said in the briefs, that the complaint was sent to the clerk by mail for filing, and reached him in time, but the fee for filing was not paid; that the clerk wrote requesting payment of the fees, which were forwarded, and when received he indorsed the complaint filed as of that date, which was after the expiration of the 60 days; but none of this appears in the judgment roll. The complaint is verified as of a date within the 60 days. There is nothing on the face of the complaint showing that it was filed too late. If we could look to the indorsement on the back of the complaint in order to uphold the demurrer, we cannot do so here, for the reason that, if there was such an indorsement, it is not made part of the record. The rule is well established that the question of the statute of limitations can be reached by demurrer only where it clearly appears upon the face of the complaint that the action is barred. Code Civil Proc. § 430; Sublette v. Tinney, 9 Cal. 423; Farris v. Merritt, 63 Cal. 118; Harmon v. Page, 62 Cal. 448. As there is nothing on the face of the complaint to show that the action was barred, and no evidence in the judgment roll of the time of filing, we must hold that the demurrer was improperly sustained. There was judgment rendered in favor of the defendants on the demurrer. Subsequently the plaintiff applied to the court for an order vacating the judgment, on the ground that the complaint was actually filed in time, but was indorsed "filed" as of a later date. The application was heard upon affidavits, and denied. A bill of exceptions, set out in the transcript, contains the proceedings of the court below, and the evidence given at the hearing of the motion.

The appeal is from the judgment alone. Counsel for respondents contend, and we think correctly, that we cannot consider the correctness of the order denying the motion to vacate the judgment upon an appeal from the judgment; but, while counsel contends that the matters set out in the bill of exceptions cannot be considered on the appeal taken, he asks us to refer to the same matters in order to sustain the ruling of the court on his demurrer. Such an inconsistency on the part of counsel may be pardoned, but the court cannot become a party to it. The respondent contends that the appeal should be dismissed on the ground that the undertaking on appeal was not filed within five days after the service of the notice of appeal. The notice was served June 19, 1888. The 24th, which was the last day for filing the undertaking, fell on Sunday, and the undertaking was filed on the day following. This was in time. Code Civil Proc. § 12. For the error in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint the judgment is reversed, with instructions to the court below to allow the plaintiff to amend her complaint.

KATZ v. BEDFORD et al. (No. 12,580.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 1, 1888.)

1 CONTRACT—ACTION ON CONTRACT—RECOVERY OF QUANTUM MERUIT.

A contract to build a cement sidewalk, "said sidewalk to be not less than 10 feet wide and ——— feet long," is not such an entire contract that the contractor cannot recover on a quantum meruit, a part of the work being defective.

2. SAME—DEFECTIVE WORK.

In an action for the contract price, defendants not controverting by pleading or proof the completion of the work, but alleging that a part of it was defective, the fact that a part is found to be defective will not prevent a recovery on a quantum meruit, on the ground that the work was not completed.

3. SAME—ACCEPTANCE—ESTOPPEL.

Defendants saw the defective work as it progressed, and when it was completed, with full knowledge of its condition, paid a part of the amount due therefor, and permitted plaintiff to go on with the work on the other side of the street, and also used some of the walk before completed, in an auction sale of lots. Held, that defendants are estopped from setting up the contract as entire, and thus attempting to avoid payment for any part of the work.

4. SAME—EVIDENCE.

Evidence of a conversation between the parties, as to how the work should be measured, is not incompetent, as tending to construe the written contract; it being uncertain, under the terms of the contract, whether only the top, or both the top and face of the curbing should be measured.

5. SAME.

Evidence that one of the defendants saw the work as it progressed was competent, as showing that the payment was made with knowledge of the quality of the work.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; J. M. WILLIS, Judge.

Action by E. E. Katz against Bedford Bros. to recover for laying a cement sidewalk. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

H. C. Rolfe, for appellants. Harris & Gregg, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This action is brought to recover for the making and laying of a cement sidewalk. The complaint is in two counts,—one upon a special contract, which is set out and made a part of the complaint; the other upon a quantum meruit. The defendants admit the execution of the contract, but deny that the work was done in the manner required and provided therein; and allege, affirmatively, that the work was not done in a substantial and first-class manner, as agreed upon. The defendants also plead, by way of cross-complaint, the making of the same contract set out in the complaint; that the plaintiff has not performed the conditions of the contract; and that he "laid the sidewalk in a bad and unworkman-like manner; and the same, as made and constructed by plaintiff, was and is of an unsubstantial, frail, and very inferior kind and quality, and not serviceable, and is crumbly and worthless, and of no use or service to defendants." Both the complaint and cross-complaint allege that the defendants paid $1,000 on the work, and the defendants seek to recover that amount, and interest. The complaint alleges that 16,200 square feet of sidewalk was laid, which was of the value, as fixed by said contract, and was of the reasonable value, of $2,916; leaving due the plaintiff, after deducting the $1,000 paid, $1,916, and interest from the time of the completion of the contract. The court finds the making of the contract; that the amount of work was done as alleged by plaintiff; that a part of the sidewalk was on one side of the street, and part on the other; that on the west side the work was done in all things as required by the contract, except as to the time, which was extended by consent of defendants; and that on the other side of the street it was not completed within the time fixed by the contract, but the variation as to time was with the consent of defendants; that as to both sides of the street, by an agreement between the parties subsequent to the making of the original contract, the width of the sidewalk was reduced from ten to nine feet. As to the east side the court finds that the plaintiff "honestly and in good faith endeavored to comply with that condition of the agreement that the walk should be laid in a most substantial manner, and should be first class in every respect; but that plaintiff did not lay the east half of the sidewalk in strict or substantial compliance with the last-named condition, in that a number of the blocks or squares of the east half of the pavement are broken and loose, and some portions of the curbing are cracked and broken, and need repair; and that it will cost about fifty-eight dollars to replace the inferior portions of the east half of the sidewalk with first-class pavement, and to put said east half into good order, according to the terms of the contract." Judgment was rendered for plaintiff for the amount of his claim, less the said sum of $58.

Counsel for appellants contends that the contract sued on is entire, at least so far as each side of the street is concerned, and that plaintiff cannot recover for the reason that the work was not completed. It seems to us that there are two answers to this contention, either of which must be conclusive.

1. The contract relied upon by both parties does not require the plaintiff to lay any particular quantity of sidewalk. It provides that plaintiff shall "build, make, or lay a cement sidewalk; * * * said sidewalk to be not less than 10 feet wide, and ——— feet long." It will be seen that the number of feet of sidewalk to be laid is left blank, and there is no attempt in the pleadings of either party to have the contract corrected in this respect.

2. It is not alleged in defendants' answer or cross-complaint that the contract was not completed, nor is its completion controverted at the trial. The defense is that it was not done in a workman-like manner. In such cases the rule is well established that the plaintiff may recover on a quantum meruit and quantum valebat what the work done and materials furnished were worth, where, as in this case, the parties cannot rescind and stand in statu quo, but one of them must derive benefit from the labor of the other. Some of the cases cited by the appellant are to this effect, and we cite them as directly against him on this point: Bragg v. Town of Bradford, 33 Vt. 38; McKinney v. Springer, 3 Ind. 59; Hayward v. Leonard, 7 Pick. 180, 19 Amer. Dec. 268, and note, 272. The court finds that, as to the side of the street on which the work is found to be defective, the defendant saw the work done from day to day, as it progressed; and when it was completed, and with full knowledge of its condition, paid a part of the amount due therefor to plaintiff, and permitted him to go on and do the work on the other side of the street thereafter, and made no objection to the manner in which it was done until the whole work was completed, and that before it was entirely completed they caused a part of it to be swept off, and used the same at an auction sale of lots belonging to them, and fronting thereon. Counsel for appellants claims that the court below regarded this as an acceptance of so much of the work, and contends that in this the court was in error. Whether the facts show an acceptance, strictly speaking, or not, it is clear to our minds that it was such conduct as should estop the defendants from defending against the whole contract price of the work. The allowance of the amount necessary to make the work such as the contract called for was all the defendants were entitled to, and this the court gave them. McKinney v. Springer, 54 Amer. Dec. 470, 479, note, 3 Ind. 59; Hayward v. Leonard, 19 Amer. Dec. 268, 272, 7 Pick. 181; 3 Amer. & Eng. Cyclop. Law, 920; Swain v. Seamens, 9 Wall. 257, 274. It may be conceded, as claimed by appellant, that part payment does not amount to an acceptance; but, taken in connection with the other facts found as to the conduct of the defendants, we think it is amply sufficient to avoid the defense attempted to be made here.

It is claimed that a part of the finding, viz., as to the sweeping of the sidewalk, and its use, is not supported by the evidence; but there is evidence directly on the point, and we will not inquire as to its weight.

The court permitted one of the witnesses to testify to a conversation between the parties with reference to the manner in which the work was to be measured. To this, counsel objected on the ground that it was testimony tending to prove what construction should be given to a part of the contract, which should be determined by the court upon an inspection of the instrument. We have examined the evidence, and do not regard it as a statement as to the proper construction of the contract, or of the understanding of the parties as to how it should be construed, but as a statement of a subsequent agreement or understanding as to the mode of measurement; it being uncertain, under the terms of the contract, whether only the top, or both the top and face, of the curbing should be measured. There was no error in admitting the evidence.

It is further objected that it was error to allow the plaintiff to prove that one of the defendants was present, and saw the work being done, as it progressed. We see no error in admitting this testimony. It was material, as tending to show that the payment of money on the work, without objection, was with knowledge of the manner in which the work was done, and its quality. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

BURLINGAME v. ROWLAND. (No. 12,764.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 1, 1888.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—PAROL PROMISE—ERECTION OF IMPROVEMENTS.

Equity will decree specific performance of a promise by a father to convey land, clearly identified, to his daughter, where the latter, acting on the faith of the promise, moved with her family upon the land, which was unimproved, moved a house upon it, erected other buildings, and cultivated the land.¹

2. EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY—ASKING FOR A CONCLUSION.

In an action by the father to quiet the title, a question asked of him, whether he had said anything to the daughter which led her to believe that she was going to obtain title, was improper, as asking for a conclusion of the witness.

3. SAME—ADMISSIONS.

Evidence that plaintiff had told a witness that he had given the property to the daughter, though the statement was not made in her presence, was competent, as showing an admission of the gift by plaintiff.

4. SAME.

The testimony of plaintiff as to whether he intended, in his conversations with the daughter, to give more than a life-estate, was properly rejected, as it could not be heard to vary the legal effect of the transaction.

5. CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION—AGREEMENT TO CONVEY LAND AND EXECUTE DEED.

An agreement to give property absolutely, and execute a deed therefor, is an agreement to convey the whole of the grantor's estate, and not merely a life-estate of the grantee.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. W. HUTTON, Judge.

Action by Hiram Burlingame against D. W. Rowland to quiet title to land. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

P. W. Dooner, for appellant. Winglin & Hester, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an action to quiet title, the complaint being in the usual form. The answer denies the material allegations of the complaint, and sets up affirmative matter to the effect that plaintiff was the equitable owner and in possession of the property in controversy; that while so in possession he promised and agreed with his daughter, one Lillie Rowland, that if she would take possession of the property, and live upon it with her husband and family, he would give the same to her, and make her a conveyance when he was able to do so; that she and her husband took possession of the property under said agreement, and made valuable and lasting improvements; that plaintiff subsequently became the owner of the legal title to the property, and the daughter demanded a deed from him, which he declined to give; that the said Lillie Rowland has since deceased, and the defendants are her heirs, and one of them the administrator of her estate. A cross-complaint was also pleaded, setting up the same facts, substantially, and praying for a specific performance of the contract. The court found for the defendants, both upon the answer and cross-complaint, and decreed that plaintiff held the title in trust for the estate of his daughter, and that he execute a conveyance to the administrator of her estate within 60 days. There was a motion by the plaintiff for a new trial, which was denied, and he appeals.

The findings of the court below are very full, and cover all the issues. It is insisted that some of the findings are not sustained by the evidence. We have gone carefully through the evidence, and are of the opinion that the findings referred to are very clearly and fully supported thereby. There does not seem to us to be any ambiguity as to the agreement. The evidence shows a plain, unequivocal promise to convey the property, which is fully identified and located. It sufficiently appears that, acting upon this promise, the daughter and her family went upon the property, which was wholly unimproved, moved a house upon it, erected other buildings, and cultivated the land. The authorities are clear that such a contract, acted upon, and partially performed, as shown here, may be specifically enforced. Manly v. Howlett, 55 Cal. 94, 97; Association v. Chester, Id. 98, 102; Anson v. Townsend, 15 Pac. Rep. 50; Freeman v. Freeman, 51 Barb. 306. The agreement proved was to give the property absolutely, and to execute a deed therefor. It is contended that this cannot be construed as an agreement to give and convey more than a life-estate, and that, therefore, the finding and judgment that the defendants were entitled to a fee-simple title is erroneous. We cannot concur in this view. The promise made must be construed as one to convey the whole of the promisor's title. It is true he owned but an equitable title at the time of making the promise, but his agreement was to convey when he could make a deed. We think the court below properly held this to be a promise to convey the fee-simple as soon as such title vested in him. The plaintiff, testifying in his own behalf, was asked this question: "Question. Did you, at any time, say anything which led her to believe she was going to obtain title, or a deed of the land from you?" The question was objected to, and the objection sustained. This is relied upon as error. The question was clearly improper, as asking for a conclusion of the witness, and the objection was properly sustained. But, if this were not so, the witness is allowed to state fully just what he did say, which rendered the ruling unimportant. A witness was asked for a conversation between the plaintiff and himself, in which the former stated that he had given the property to his daughter. This was objected to, because the statement did not appear to have been made in the presence of Mrs. Rowland, and, being after she had taken possession of the property, could not have influenced her. The evident object of the testimony was to prove an admission by the plaintiff that he had made the gift as claimed by the defendants, and for that purpose it was competent and material. The plaintiff was asked whether, by the conversations had with his daughter, he intended to give her more than a life-estate in the property. Objection being made the evidence was excluded, and properly. The question called for a conclusion as to what his intention was, which could not be heard to vary or affect in any way the legal effect of the transaction. We find no error in the record. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

In re GWIN'S ESTATE. (No. 12,805.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 1, 1888.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—DEVISE BY WILL.

Under Civil Code Cal. § 1402, which provides that "upon the death of the husband one-half of the community property goes to the surviving wife, and the other half is subject to the testamentary disposition of the husband" the husband's will, as against his widow, can pass title to but one-half of the community property.

2. WILL—PROBATE AND CONTEST—ELECTION BY WIDOW.

An election by a widow to take under the law, rather than under her husband's will, is not a contest of the will within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1333, which provides that "if no person within one year after the probate of a will contest the same or the validity thereof, the probate of the will is conclusive."

3. SAME—EFFECT OF PROBATE—ESTOPPEL.

A widow is not estopped to make such election by causing the will to be probated and becoming the executrix thereof.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; R. M. DILLARD, Judge.

This is an appeal by Hachaliah P. Gwin and Theodore Gwin, devisees of John Gwin, deceased, from a decree directing distribution of the property devised by said John Gwin. The respondent, Cornelia L. Gwin, is the widow of deceased Code Civil Proc. § 1333, provides that "if no person within one year after the probate of a will contest the same or the validity thereof the probate of the will is conclusive." Civil Code, § 1402, provides that "upon the death of the husband, one-half of the community property goes to the surviving wife, and the other half is subject to the testamentary disposition of the husband."

Wm. H. Schooler, for appellants. B. F. Thomas, for respondent.

WORKS, J. John Gwin, by his will, devised and bequeathed certain real and personal property to his wife, and to his two sons all of the real property in Butte county, Cal., of which he might die seized. His wife and two others were named as executors of the will. The will was duly admitted to probate, and the persons named appointed executors on the 19th day of February, 1887. The next step in the estate appearing in the record is a notice by the widow that she declined to take under the will, and elects to take as widow, under section 1402 of the Civil Code. This notice was filed April 26, 1888, more than one year after the probate of the will. Subsequently, on the 27th day of April, 1888, a petition for distribution of the estate was filed by said widow, and on the 12th of May following decree of distribution was duly entered, by which the real estate of the deceased was declared to be community property, and one-half thereof distributed to the widow and one-fourth each to the sons. The sons, who are legatees under the will, appeal.

No objection is made to the proceedings, nor is the fact that the real estate was community property in any way questioned. The appellants contend that as the widow is named as executrix of the will, and caused the same to be probated, and was appointed and qualified as such executrix, and her election to take under the law was not made within one year, she is estopped to make such election. It is contended that the election on her part not to take under the will was, in effect, a contest thereof, and came too late under section 1333 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But this was in no sense a contest of the will, or its probate. On the contrary, the court below proceeded to settle and distribute the estate according to the terms of the will. It was found that the real estate was community property, and that, for that reason, the will, as against the widow, could only pass the title to one-half thereof. There was no error in this conclusion. Civil Code, § 1402. It is urged that the widow, having probated the will, was estopped thereby to make her election, and numerous authorities are cited to the effect that one who has taken a beneficial interest under a will is thereby held to have confirmed and ratified it. This court has held that a widow is not estopped to make her election to take under the law by causing the will to be probated, and becoming the executrix thereof. Estate of Frey, 52 Cal. 658. There is nothing before us to show that the widow took a beneficial interest under the will, but if she had it would not estop her from asserting her title to the one half of the community property under the circumstances of this case. Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 252, 257; Estate of Silvey, 42 Cal. 210, 212. There is no error of which the appellants have reason to complain. Order affirmed.

BRALY v. HENRY. (No. 12,402.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 2, 1888.)

1. WITNESS—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Where the answer admits plaintiff's ownership of the note sued on, and the bill of exceptions recites that it is proved that the note was executed by defendant, and indorsed and delivered to plaintiff before suit, refusal to allow defendant to cross-examine plaintiff to show by him that he is not the owner of the note, is not error.

2. SAME.

Refusal to allow defendant to cross-examine plaintiff with the view of showing that the note sued on is without consideration, is not error where plaintiff has given no testimony on the point, in chief.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; J. B. CAMPBELL, Judge.

Action on a note brought by J. H. Braly against S. W. Henry. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. For opinions on former appeals, see 11 Pac. Rep. 385, 12 Pac. Rep. 623, and 18 Pac. Rep. 798.

W. D. Grady, (Goucher & Geis, of counsel,) for appellant. Geo. A. Nourse, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is the second time this case has been before this court. Braly v. Henry, 71 Cal. 481, 11 Pac. Rep. 385, and 12 Pac. Rep. 623. We refer to the former opinion for a statement of the issues presented by the pleadings. At the second trial in the court below the defendant was permitted to introduce evidence tending to show a contemporaneous agreement between the payee of the note and himself, by which he was to be credited with the quantity of hay the stack was found on measurement to fall short of the quantity estimated by the parties, and for which the note was executed. The question whether there was such a shortage is the only real controversy presented by the pleadings. The jury found against the defendant for the full amount of the plaintiff's claim, and judgment was rendered accordingly. Defendant appeals.

The record is full of objections to the evidence on the part of the defendant. There are no less than 40 specifications of error, all going to the admission or exclusion of evidence, although the evidence is very brief, taking up less room in the transcript than the objections themselves and rulings thereon. We cannot extend this opinion in like manner, by considering these alleged errors separately and in detail. Eighteen of the alleged errors are in sustaining objections of plaintiff's counsel to questions put to plaintiff on cross-examination, with the view of proving by him that he was not the owner of the note sued on, and that the same was without consideration. As to the matter of the ownership of the note the objections were properly sustained for two reasons: (1) There was no issue as to the ownership. That plaintiff was the owner of the note was admitted by the answer. (2) The bill of exceptions recites in the beginning that it is proved that the note was executed by the defendant to one Hughes, and by Hughes indorsed and delivered to plaintiff before the commencement of the suit. As to the question of consideration, the objections were properly sustained, for the reason that the witness had not given any testimony on the point, in chief, and the same were not proper cross-examination. We have carefully examined the other errors assigned, and find them to be equally without foundation. The defendant was permitted to go fully into the evidence excluded on the former trial, and the verdict of the jury is against him. It is urged that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence, but there are no specifications of particulars in which the verdict is not sustained. Waiving this omission, we are of opinion that the evidence is sufficient to uphold the verdict. It is urged by counsel for respondent that the record is not properly before us, but we have preferred to decide the case upon its merits. Judgment and order denying motion for a new trial affirmed.

PARDY v. MONTGOMERY et al. (No. 11, 204.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 2, 1888.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—MATTERS NOT APPARENT OF RECORD.

The court, on appeal, cannot notice affidavits in the transcript showing, as claimed by appellant, the circumstances under which the action was dismissed by the court below, where it is not shown in any mode that such affidavits were used in that court.

2. PRACTICE IN CIVIL CASES—DISMISSAL—PRESUMPTION.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 581, giving the trial court power, under certain circumstances, to dismiss an action for want of prosecution, it must be presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that the court exercised its power in accordance with the statute.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

This was an action by George Pardy against Charles Montgomery et al., commenced June 23, 1880. An amended complaint was filed September 15, 1880. The answer was filed October 8, 1880. The cause was tried May 2, 1882, before Judge ALLEN without a jury. The court announced from the bench that the defense was sustained by a preponderance of testimony, and ordered judgment for defendants. Judge ALLEN's term expired with the year 1882. April 2, 1883, plaintiff applied to the clerk to have a judgment entered in the case for the purpose of appealing therefrom. This the clerk refused because no findings were waived nor made and filed. October 30, 1883, S. T. Birdsall was substituted as plaintiff's attorney. December 10, 1883, plaintiff served and filed a notice that he would move for a new trial. May 23, 1884, the motion was dismissed. July 29, 1884, plaintiff gave notice to set cause for trial on the ground that the issues were joined, and that the former hearing resulted in a mistrial by reason of the negligence of defendants in not having findings made and filed. August 1, 1884, defendant made a motion to dismiss the action for want of prosecution, which prevailed, and from which order the appeal is taken.

Saml. T. Birdsall and Wm. T. Baggett, for appellant. W. S. Goodfellow, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. We cannot take notice of the affidavits in the transcript, showing, as claimed by the appellant, the circumstances under which this action was dismissed by the court below, for the reason that it is not shown in any mode that such affidavits were used on the hearing of the application in that court. The court below had power to dismiss the action for want of prosecution, (see Code Civil Proc. § 581;) and, there being no showing to the contrary, we must presume that the court below exercised its power properly, and within the rules prescribed by law. Judgment affirmed.

LABISH v. HARDY. (No. 11,627.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 8, 1888.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE—OCCUPATION OF GOVERNMENT LAND—COMMUNITY PROPERTY.
A husband and wife occupied a tract of land belonging to the United States from 1847 until 1856, when the wife died. The husband continued to occupy the land until 1871, when he received a deed to it from the town of Santa Cruz under act Cong. July 23, 1866. Held, that the occupation by the husband and wife during her life did not have the effect to render the land community property, or vest the wife with any ownership whatever.
2. QUIETING TITLE—PLEADING—EVIDENCE.
In an action by a daughter of the first marriage against a second wife, to whom the land had been deeded, to recover the interest, claimed by plaintiff as heir of her deceased mother, the court properly sustained objection to the introduction of evidence that plaintiff's father was indebted to her; and also properly denied her motion to amend her complaint by alleging such indebtedness.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; F. J. McCANN, Judge.

Action to quiet title, brought by Isabella Labish against Jane Hardy. The court, at the close of plaintiff's evidence, dismissed the action, and plaintiff appeals.

W. D. Storey, for appellant. Charles B. Younger, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. Action to quiet title. The material question in this case is whether the plaintiff has any title to the premises described in her complaint. The facts upon which appellant relies as proving her title to the premises are stated in the brief of her counsel to be as follows: "In 1847 plaintiff's parents went into possession of the land in dispute, which was then public land of the United States, and continued to occupy it, together with their children, as their home until the death of plaintiff's mother, which occurred in June, 1856, at which time plaintiff was seven years old. After the death of plaintiff's mother, the father of plaintiff continued to occupy said premises as his home until his death, in 1883. In June, 1860, plaintiff's father married the defendant. In May, 1871, plaintiff's father took a deed for the premises from the corporate authorities of the town of Santa Cruz, under the act of congress, approved July 23, 1866, entitled 'An act to quiet title to certain lands within the corporate limits of the city of Benicia, and the town of Santa Cruz;' said premises then being within the corporate limits of the town of Santa Cruz, and public lands of the United States. On August 8, 1881, plaintiff's father made a deed of gift of the premises to the defendant. This deed was recorded, but was not properly acknowledged, when this action was commenced. At the time this deed was made the premises constituted all the property of plaintiff's father, and he never afterwards acquired any property. The defendant claims the premises under this deed." Counsel for appellant claims that "the rights and equities acquired by her parents through occupancy and possession of the premises constituted community property, one-half of which belonged to her mother, and at her death, by the law as then existing, descended to and vested in her children." Conceding that to be so, what rights or equities did the parents acquire through occupancy and possession of the premises prior to the death of appellant's mother, in 1856? Ten years after the death of appellant's mother, congress relinquished and granted the land to the corporate authorities of the town of Santa Cruz, in trust and with authority to convey it to the party in the bona fide occupancy of it at the date of the passage of said act. On May 13, 1871, the corporate authorities of Santa Cruz conveyed the premises to William H. Hardy, father of appellant, and husband and grantor of respondent. The beneficiaries under the act of congress were clearly those in the bona fide occupancy of land in the town of Santa Cruz at the date of the passage of said act, which was 10 years after the death of appellant's mother. An occupancy which terminated 10 years before the passage of the act would not be a bona fide occupancy at the time of its passage. We are unaware of any law under which a bare occupancy of any public land of the United States vests in the occupant any rights or equities in or to the land so occupied. We think no property was acquired in the premises in controversy by either of the parents of appellant prior to the passage of the act of congress of July 23, 1866, and to constitute it common property it must have been acquired after marriage, otherwise than by gift, bequest, devise, or descent.

Holding as we do that appellant had no title, legal or equitable, to the premises, the failure of the court to find upon the issue raised by the defendant's defense of the bar of the statute of limitations, does not materially affect the substantial rights of the parties, and the error, if any, must be disregarded. We advise courts, however, in all cases to find upon the material issues raised by the pleadings. The objection to the introduction of evidence to prove that plaintiff's father was indebted to her, was properly sustained, and the motion of plaintiff to amend her complaint by alleging such indebtedness, was properly denied. Judgment and order affirmed.

RANDALL v. DUFF et al. (No. 11,343.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 23, 1888.)

1. POWERS—OF ATTORNEY—SALE WITHOUT CONSIDERATION—PURCHASERS WITH NOTICE.

Under a power of attorney to sell and convey land, a conveyance without any consideration, given or agreed to be given, is a nullity; and, the owner not having been made a party to a foreclosure by mortgagees of the grantee, purchasers at the foreclosure sale, with notice, cannot maintain an action against him to quiet title.

2. LIS PENDENS—NOTICE.

Representatives of the owner having, before the foreclosure, sued the grantee to have the conveyance declared void, and filed notice of lis pendens, purchasers at the foreclosure sale take with notice.

3. QUIETING TITLE—FINDINGS—NOTICE.

In an action to quiet title by the purchaser at foreclosure sale, findings which show that the legal title did not pass to him unless he was a purchaser without notice, and which, instead of showing want of notice, show merely that the mortgagees had no notice when they took the mortgage, are insufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff.¹

4. SAME—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

The mortgagor having no title to the land, and the purchasers at foreclosure sale taking with notice, the action by the latter to quiet title must fail, irrespective of any question whether the rights of the owner's representatives are barred by the statute of limitations.

5. APPEAL—RECORD—NOTICE OF MOTION.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 952, making an order denying a motion for a new trial a part of the record, a recital in the order that the motion was made upon grounds set forth in the notice of motion is a sufficient showing in the record that the notice was given; a recital of the contents of the motion not being necessary.

MCFARLAND, J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; N. HAMILTON, Judge.

Action by A. W. Randall against Julia K. Duff and Agnes Duff, heirs at law of William R. Duff, and William L. Duff, administrator, to quiet title. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

¹One who takes a deed of land, with knowledge of an outstanding equitable right in a third person, takes subject to such right. McCone v. Courser, (N. H.) 15 Atl. Rep. 129. See, also, note, Id. See Morrow v. Graves, (Cal.) ante, 489, and note.

Wilson & Wilson (S. M. Wilson, of counsel) and J. D. H. Chamberlain, for appellants. Horace L. Smith and S. M. Buck, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Suit to quiet title to three tracts of land. The defendants set up title in themselves, and filed a cross-complaint for affirmative relief. A preliminary objection is taken to the proceedings on motion for new trial, upon the ground that the record does not show that a notice of intention was given, and the case of Dominguez v. Mascotti, 15 Pac. Rep. 773, is relied upon. We think, however, that it sufficiently appears from the record that a notice of intention was given. The order denying the motion, which is a part of the record, (Code Civil Proc. § 952,) recites that the motion was made "upon the grounds set forth in defendants' notice of motion." This sufficiently shows that a notice was given. It is not necessary that the notice should be formally set out. The fact that it was given may be inferred from a recital in the statement or bill of exceptions, (Frost v. Meetz, 52 Cal. 670,) or from a stipulation, (Godchaux v. Mulford, 26 Cal. 320,) or, as in this case, from the order disposing of the motion, (Girdner v. Beswick, 69 Cal. 115, 116, 10 Pac. Rep. 278.) In the case of Bank v. Hitchcock, 18 Pac. Rep. 648, the fact that a notice had been given was inferred from a statement in the order denying the motion that "a motion for a new trial is not the proper remedy." It is true that the recital here only goes to the fact that a notice was given, without showing its contents, or that it was given in time. But it will be presumed that the grounds stated in the bill of exceptions correspond (as they should) with the grounds stated in the notice. And it has been several times held that, where it appears that a notice was given, it will be presumed to have been in time, unless the record shows the contrary. Roussin v. Stewart, 33 Cal. 210; Burnett v. Stearns, Id. 472; Girdner v. Beswick, 69 Cal. 115, 116, 10 Pac. Rep. 278. The case of Dominguez v. Mascotti, therefore, has no application, and the preliminary objection is not well taken.

Upon the merits the facts shown by the record are as follows: In 1863, one William R. Duff, who was then the owner of the property in controversy, departed from the state, leaving a power of attorney to his father, Richard Duff. William R. Duff remained away until his death, which occurred in April, 1875. During his life-time his father, assuming to act as his agent, executed conveyances of the property to one Robert P. Duff, the brother of William R. These conveyances purported to be for valuable consideration, but "were in fact made without any consideration given, or agreed to be given." The grantee mortgaged one of the pieces of the property to one William Ritchie for $500, and the others to one Charles Fiebig for $1,500. Neither of these mortgagees had, at the time they took their mortgages, any notice of the rights of William R. Duff, or of his successors in interest. Each of the mortgages was foreclosed after the death of William R. Duff, but his successors in interest were not parties to either of the suits. The piece covered by the Ritchie mortgage was sold directly to the plaintiff, who in due course received the sheriff's deed. The other pieces were bought in by the mortgagee Fiebig, who, after receiving the sheriff's deed, conveyed to the plaintiff. William R. Duff never knew of the conveyance to his brother Robert; and his wife and child (defendants here) first learned of it, and of the fact that it was without consideration, in December, 1880. In February, 1881, they brought a suit against Robert P. Duff and one Frank S. Duff, but not against the plaintiff here, "to have the title acquired by Robert P. Duff * * * declared to be void, and that defendants in that action held the property in trust;" and at the same time filed a notice of lis pendens. This notice was filed before the mortgages were foreclosed. Judgment in said action was rendered for plaintiffs, but this judgment was reversed on appeal, and the case was remanded for a new trial. See Duff v. Duff, 71 Cal. 513, 12 Pac. Rep. 570. Said action was pending at the time of the trial herein. Judgment in the case before us was given for the plaintiff, and the defendants appeal. We think the judgment appealed from was erroneous.

1. The power of attorney was to sell and convey the property. It did not authorize the agent to give the property away, or to commit a fraud upon the principal by executing a conveyance which purported to be for valuable consideration, but which was in fact without any consideration "given, or agreed to be given." The grantee must necessarily have known that he did not give or agree to give any consideration for the deed, and consequently that the agent had no authority to make it. The conveyance being one which the agent had no power to make, was a nullity, (Dupont v. Wertheman, 10 Cal. 368.) And, such being the case, the legal title remained in the principal, William R. Duff. The case of Duff v. Duff, 71 Cal. 513, 12 Pac. Rep. 570, is not inconsistent with the foregoing. In that case it seems to have been argued that a court of equity had no jurisdiction because no title passed under the agent's deed. The court, however, said that there was fraud, and that that was sufficient to give the jurisdiction. See page 533. But we see nothing in the opinion to the effect that the title passed to Robert P. Duff, although the suit seems to have been framed on that theory. We do not see how it can be held that the title passed under the agent's deed without overruling Dupont v. Wertheman, which we think was rightly decided.

2. But, although the legal title remained in William R. Duff, the apparent title was in Robert P. Duff; and Ritchie and Fiebig having lent their money to him, and taken their mortgages without notice of the facts, were, so far as their securities were concerned, purchasers without notice for a valuable consideration. But purchasers of what? Not of the legal title; for under our system a mortgage does not convey the legal title. They simply took liens upon the property to secure the sums lent by them. Their mortgages conferred upon them the right, by proper proceedings, to have the legal title sold to satisfy their claims. But to that end it was necessary to bring suits of foreclosure against the parties who had the legal title. The person who executed the mortgages had no title, either legal or equitable. No title, therefore, could be got through a suit against him alone. The mortgagees had to rely upon a species of estoppel, and they could not have this estoppel judicially declared against persons who were not before the court. It is too plain for discussion that, at any time before the foreclosure suits, the real owners had the right to redeem their property from the incumbrances to which it was subjected by the fraud of the agent of their predecessor in interest; and they could not be deprived of this right by suits to which they were not parties. The rule that adverse titles cannot properly be litigated in foreclosure has no application. The fallacy which we think runs all through the argument of the learned counsel for the respondent is in assuming that Robert P. Duff ever had any title. But, as we have stated, the conveyance to him was in excess of the powers of the agent, and was therefore a mere nullity. If Robert P. Duff had conveyed the property to a purchaser for value, without notice, and such purchaser had mortgaged it, the result would probably have been different. It might then have been claimed that the whole title passed to such purchaser, and that he was the only party necessary to be made a defendant in the foreclosure suits. But inasmuch as the mortgagees took their mortgages directly from Robert P. Duff, who never had any title either at the date of the mortgages or otherwise, it was necessary to bring the persons who had the title before the court, which was not done. Hence the foreclosure proceedings did not ex proprio vigore cut off the rights of the successors in interest of William R. Duff.

3. But the apparent title being in Robert P. Duff, a defendant in the foreclosure suits, we think that a purchaser at the sheriff's sales for value, and without notice, would take as good a title as if he had purchased directly from Robert P. Duff, and taken a deed from him. See 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 774. And inasmuch as there is no dispute that the purchasers at such sales gave value for their deeds, the question is reduced to this: Did they have notice of the rights of the defendants at the time they purchased? In this regard the findings show the power of attorney in full, the fact that the deed from the agent to Robert P. Duff was without consideration, and that the foreclosure suits were against Robert P. Duff and one Frank S. Duff—not against the defendants here. The findings, therefore, show that the legal title did not pass to the purchasers at the foreclosure sales, unless they were without notice. It is necessary, therefore, that the want of notice should appear from the findings. Compare Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 394. If they do not show this affirmatively, they do not support the judgment; and this, independent of the question as to the burden of proof at the trial. But the findings do not show that the purchasers were without notice at the time of the foreclosure sales. What they do show is that the mortgagees had no notice at the time they took their mortgages, which is quite a different thing. This defect in the findings is not cured by any admission of the parties, as supposed by the counsel for the respondent. There was nothing in the nature of an agreed statement of facts, made part of the judgment roll by stipulation. See cases cited in section 249, Hayne, New Trial & App. The admissions were of mere matters of evidence at the trial. The cases cited by the learned counsel have no application, being in reference to admissions in the pleadings. The findings, therefore, do not support the judgment. This is sufficient to require a reversal; but, since the question of notice will arise upon a retrial, and has been argued, we have examined the evidence in regard to it.

The evidence shows that the suit of Duff v. Duff, was commenced before either of the decrees in foreclosure was rendered. The purpose of that suit was "to have the title acquired by Robert P. Duff and Frank S. Duff, under the power of attorney mentioned in defendants' cross-complaint in this action, declared void." The plaintiff, Randall, who was the purchaser at the Ritchie sale, had actual knowledge of this suit. It does not appear that Fiebig, who bought in the property at the sale under his mortgage, and afterwards conveyed to Randall, had any such actual knowledge. But a notice of lis pendens was filed on the day the suit was commenced; and this gave both Randall and Fiebig constructive notice of the pendency of the suit. Now, as has been stated, the mortgagees could not claim to be purchasers of anything but a lien up to the time of the foreclosure proceedings; and those proceedings did not cut off the rights of the defendants here, because they were not parties to said suits; so that whatever rights Fiebig and Randall got must arise from their having been innocent purchasers, at the foreclosure sales, of the apparent title of Robert P. Duff. They therefore claim through him. This being the case, and the suit to declare the invalidity of his supposed title having been pending at the time they purchased, and they being charged with notice thereof, how can it be contended that they took the property free from the claims litigated in that suit, so as to be entitled to have their title quieted as against such claims? We understand it to be elementary law that a person who acquires the claim of a defendant in a pending suit, of which he has notice, takes subject to the rights of the plaintiff in such suit. The maxim is, pendente lite nihil innovetur; and while our statute has made some change as to what constitutes notice, it makes none as to the effect of the notice when given. It results that the purchasers at the foreclosure sales are subject to the rights of the plaintiff in the suit of Duff v. Duff. We cannot know from the record before us what the final outcome of that suit will be. Therefore we are not called upon to say what the rights of the parties will be in case the defendants in Duff v. Duff shall finally prevail. In other words, the question whether the notice with which the purchasers at the foreclosure sales were charged, would cease to operate upon a defeat from any cause of the plaintiff in that suit, or would extend beyond it, and affect the present case, notwithstanding such defeat, is a question which does not arise upon the record on this appeal.

4. It is argued for the respondent, however, that the rights of the defendants here are barred by limitation, because they discovered the fraud upon their predecessor in interest more than three years before the filing of their cross-complaint; but if we assume, in favor of the respondent, that this point arises upon the record, we do not think the point well taken. The fallacy of the argument is in assuming that any title passed to Robert P. Duff. The learned counsel assume that he took the title, and that the defendants here are driven to fasten a secret trust upon it; but, as we have pointed out, no title passed to Robert P. Duff. And whatever rights the respondent has must depend upon whether he and Fiebig were purchasers without notice at the sheriff's sales. If they cannot establish this, their claim to the property fails. If they do establish it, they take a perfect title, irrespective of any period of limitation. For this purpose, therefore, it is immaterial when the cross-complaint was filed, or whether one was filed at all. The questions as to what affirmative relief the defendants are entitled to, and what should be required of them as a condition thereof, are not necessary to be considered at present. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur. BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

SANSOME v. MYRES, Judge. (No. 20,452.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 19, 1883.)

EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF—SIGNING BY JUDGE—MANDATE TO COMPEL.

Where a party presents a bill of exceptions which is meager, inaccurate, and partial, omitting important evidence, and condensing into 4½ pages of manuscript more than 100 pages of type-writing, the judge will neither be compelled to sign the bill, nor to amend it, as an amendment would be practically to draft a new bill; which duty is, by Pen. Code Cal. § 1171, required to be done by the excepting party.

In bank. Application for writ of mandate.

John Sansome, having been found guilty in the superior court of Placer county of the crime of robbery, moved for a new trial. He tendered a bill of exceptions, which, for reasons set out in the opinion, Hon. B. F. MYRES, judge of said court, refused to sign; whereupon he applied to the supreme court, and obtained an alternative writ of mandate, in accordance with his petition.

A. L. Hart and D. L. Chamberlain, for petitioner. F. P. Tuttle and John W. Fulweiler, (Pillsbury & Blanding, of counsel,) for respondent.

THORNTON, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate commanding the Honorable B. F. MYRES, judge of the superior court of the county of Placer, to settle a bill of exceptions in the case of People v. John Sansome. Sansome, the petitioner for the writ here, was indicted by the grand jury of Placer county for the crime of robbery, and tried on this indictment before the superior court of the same county, the Honorable B. F. MYRES presiding. He was convicted and sentenced, and at the proper time a motion for a new trial was made. This motion was made on the grounds that the court had misdirected the jury in matters of law, and erred in the decision of matters of law arising during the course of the trial, and that the verdict was contrary to the evidence. In due time counsel for the defendant, Sansome, prepared a draft of a bill of exceptions, which was regularly presented, on notice to the district attorney, to the judge for settlement. The judge refused to settle the bill presented, on the ground that it was inaccurate, and in many respects untrue, and contained but a meager and partial statement of the facts and proceedings leading up to and connected with and upon which the rulings of the court were had, that are complained of, and also a mere defective skeleton of the testimony and evidence submitted to the jury, and upon which they reached their verdict of guilty. To the alternative writ issued in this case the judge has filed an answer, in which he states the same reasons for not settling the bill of exceptions, and amplifies them. The judge in his answer says: "That to have presented fully and fairly all the matters and things and facts connected with and leading up to the rulings of the court and connected with the trial, as tending to show error, it would have been necessary for the court to have added amendments to that part of the bill of exceptions, relating to such errors, of about twenty pages of manuscript, and, in fact, the matters were so presented in said bill of exceptions that the only proper way would have been to have drawn an entirely new bill as a substitute; and, the testimony of the seven witnesses for the people, as set out in the proposed statement, was condensed to four and a half pages of very coarsely-written manuscript, while the testimony for the people, as given by the witnesses, covered over one hundred and fifteen pages of type-writing, as actually written by the court reporter under the order of the court, for the use of the petitioner's attorney; and, in fact, contained very little, and in some instances none of the material testimony, as given by the witnesses for the people. That, to have made that part of the statement a fair presentation of the testimony upon which the jury found their verdict, would have required amendments covering at least fifty pages of manuscript; and this court would have to have written, or ordered the same written at its dictation, such amendments, and, in fact, would have had to draft an entirely new bill of exceptions and statement." The judge further states that none of the testimony of Capt. A. W. Stone, so far as it related to the commission of the offense, and as tending to connect the petitioner with the commission of the crime, was set out in the bill of exceptions, although the same covered over 50 pages of type-writing, nor was any part of the three statements claimed to have been made by the petitioner at three different times, and to be contradictory and inculpatory in their nature, given in the bill, although such statements were more than 10 pages in length of type-writing; that the testimony for the defense, as set out in the bill presented, was partial, and did not contain, but rather omitted, all those matters which tended to criminate defendant, or to show that such evidence might not be true, or was given under a mistaken recollection of the facts. The learned judge states that he was ready at all times, and has ever been ready, to settle and allow a fair and full bill of exceptions in the case, and submits that he should not be compelled to draft or amend the bill of exceptions presented so as to present a full and impartial statement and showing of the facts and circumstances and matters upon which the rulings of the court were made, and of the testimony by which the verdict was supported, and upon which it was reached. The above statements present the portions of the answer herein which are of material importance, and which are to be considered.

As we understand the position of this cause, it was argued upon a general demurrer to the answer. The statements of the answer must then be taken as true. That it is the duty of the party desiring to have a bill of exceptions settled to prepare the draft of such bill, is plainly required by the statute. See Pen. Code, § 1171. See, also, section 1174 of the same Code. This duty of preparing such a draft cannot, by direct or indirect means, be thrown on the court or judge. The draft to be prepared by the party should be full and fair. It should show fully and fairly all the facts and circumstances on which the rulings of the court excepted to were based; and when the ruling of the court, on a motion for a new trial made on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, is to be reviewed, all the evidence on which the jury acted should be set out in the draft of the bill. The mistakes and omissions of the draft may be corrected and supplied by the suggestion and order of the judge on the settlement of the bill, so as to make the bill, when settled, conform to the truth, and correctly set forth, so far as is material, what transpired on the trial or proceeding to be reviewed. The judge should see that the bill is a true history of what it purports to set forth. But this duty of the judge does not extend so far as to require him to prepare or have prepared what in effect would be a new bill of exceptions. This would be to impose on the judge, and relieve the party of the duty of preparing the draft of the bill of exceptions to be settled. Taking the facts stated in the answer of Judge MYRES to be true, as we must in the manner in which the case is presented to this court, we think it clear that, by allowing the writ here asked for, we should be imposing on the judge the duty and task of preparing what would be substantially a new bill of exceptions, and taking from the party desiring to have the bill settled a duty imposed on him by the statute. Entertaining these views, we must hold that the answer of Judge MYRES is sufficient, and states facts which are a defense to the application of the petitioner. The demurrer to the answer must be overruled. So ordered.

STERN v. LOWENTHAL. (No. 11,010.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 16, 1888.)

1. LIBEL AND SLANDER—PLEADING AND PROOF—VARIANCE.

In an action for slander, where the complaint alleges that defendant called plaintiff a thief, testimony that defendant said plaintiff had been robbing him is not literally nor substantially the same; and, not being said by the witnesses to have been spoken at the same time with the words alleged in the complaint, should have been stricken out, and the error is not cured by subsequently striking it out on plaintiff's motion.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE.

The original, having been superseded by an amended answer, is improperly admitted in evidence.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; J. P. HAYNES, Judge.

Action by L. Stern against J. Lowenthal, for slander. The complaint alleged that defendant had said of plaintiff: "He is a thief; he is doing business on my money." Several witnesses testified that defendant had said plaintiff had been robbing him. Motion to strike out this testimony was overruled. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

J. D. H. Chamberlain, James Hanna, and E. W. Wilson, for appellant. S. M. Buck, Horace L. Smith, and J. J. De Haven, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. On the trial of this action (for slander) some of the witnesses for the plaintiff testified to utterances by the defendant other than those alleged in the complaint. The defendant moved that the evidence as to such utterances be stricken out. The motions were denied, and the defendant excepted. This raises the question of the admissibility of evidence to prove words not set out in the complaint. Upon that question the opinions of courts have been discordant. Against the admissibility of such evidence the opinion of BRONSON, J., in Root v. Lowndes, 6 Hill, 518, is characteristically clear and vigorous. Townshend, after referring to some conflicting opinions upon this point, says: "But the better opinion appears to be that evidence of a charge of a different nature and at a different time from that alleged in the declaration is inadmissible to prove malice, or for any purpose. This is, in effect, only another form of the rule that actionable words not counted upon cannot be given in evidence unless suit upon them is barred by the statute of limitations; and their admission, where the statute has run, is opposed to principle, as it, in effect, restores a cause of action, which has been taken away by the law." Townsh. Sland. & Lib. § 392. In that view of the question we concur, and think the court erred in denying the motion of defendant to strike out. After denying the defendant's motion to strike out, the court, on motion of plaintiff, struck out the evidence which the defendant had moved to have stricken out, with the exception of that given by the witness Taylor, who testified that defendant told him "that he would break Mr. Stern [plaintiff] up in business." If the court erred in denying defendant's motion to strike that out, the error was not cured by any subsequent act of the court. Was the denial of that motion error? The words are not literally nor substantially the same as those alleged in the complaint to have been spoken by the defendant. And the witness does not testify that they were spoken in connection with those alleged in the complaint to have been spoken, or that the defendant ever, at any time, spoke in his (witness') hearing the words alleged to have been spoken by the defendant. The testimony of this witness was clearly irrelevant, and the motion to strike it out should have been granted. The case of Chamberlin v. Vance, 51 Cal. 75, cited by plaintiff's counsel, is distinguishable from this case. In that case the court says the words testified to "were substantially the same as those declared on." The rule against admitting irrelevant testimony applies in this as in other cases. In Howard v. Sexton, 4 N. Y. 157, the lower court admitted evidence of a charge made by the defendant against the plaintiff of a different nature, and at a different time, from the slander alleged in the declaration, "to show with what mind the words stated in the declaration were spoken, and for no other purpose;" in other words, to prove express malice. The court of appeals said: "As this was not essential to sustain the action, there could be no assignable reason for the admission of such testimony, except to aggravate the damages. And yet upon that question the learned judge instructed the jury to disregard it. If they had regarded the ruling of the court, which is never done under such circumstances, the evidence was irrelevant, and should have been excluded.

The original answer of the defendant was superseded by an amended answer, and the court, against the objection of the defendant, admitted the original in evidence. The question here involved was considered in Morris v. Lachman, 68 Cal. 109, 8 Pac. Rep. 799. In that case the plaintiff sought to introduce the original answer, which had been superseded by an amended answer, in evidence. The court sustained defendant's objection to its introduction, and this court said: "The defendant had a right to withdraw the charge made against the plaintiff's reputation in his first answer, and by the court's permission to file an amended pleading, leaving the objectionable matter out. And no error was by that tribunal committed in refusing to allow proof to be made that such a charge had been thus preferred on a previous trial, and attempted to be established by evidence." If it was not error to exclude such evidence in that case, it certainly was error to admit it in this case. In Gilmore v. Borders, 2 How. (Miss.) 824, pleas of justification were pleaded and withdrawn. It was held to be error to permit them to be read in evidence. The question is one which admits of considerable elaboration, but we forbear, as Morris v. Lachman, in our opinion, is decisive of it. Upon the other points discussed by counsel we express no opinion. Judgment and order reversed.

I concur: PATERSON, J.

McFARLAND, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment upon the first ground stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice SHARPSTEIN.

SEARLS, C. J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment upon the ground that the original answer of the defendant, having been superseded by an amended answer, was not admissible in evidence on behalf of the plaintiff. Ponce v. McElvy, 51 Cal. 222; Mecham v. McKay, 37 Cal. 154; Morris v. Lachman, 68 Cal. 109, 8 Pac. Rep. 799. Upon the other questions discussed I express no opinion.

SENTER et al. v. MONROE. (No. 12,763.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 16, 1888.)

CONTRACT—ACTION FOR BREACH—PLEADING—COMPLAINT.

A complaint alleging that defendant falsely represented himself as agent of the owners of certain land, and authorized to sell it; that plaintiffs, relying thereon, agreed to buy it, and paid part of the purchase money, and received the written agreement of defendant, as the owner's agent, for the conveyance of the property; that, while they were always ready to pay the residue of the price, defendant and said owners refused to convey the land; that defendant knew the persons did not own the property, and that they had not authorized him to sell it; that after the sale, and before the time fixed for the last payment, the land had greatly appreciated in value; and praying judgment for the value of the property,—as a complaint for damages for breach of contract, is bad on demurrer, as the defendant did not profess to bind himself personally, and there is nothing to show that the failure to convey injured plaintiffs. Following Wallace v. Bentley, 18 Pac. Rep. 788.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; H. K. S. O'MELVENY, Judge.

Action for damages for breach of contract by Mary S. Senter and Adelaide C. Stanley against William N. Monroe. Verdict and judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

E. W. Little and Williams & McKinley, for appellant. M. C. Hester, for respondents.

WORKS, J. The complaint in this action avers, in substance, that the defendant represented to plaintiffs that E. F. Spence, J. F. Crank, and John D. Bicknell were the owners of certain real estate in the county of Los Angeles, specifically describing it, and that he, defendant, was the agent of said parties, with full power to bargain, sell, and convey the same; that plaintiffs, relying upon said representations, bought from him said lands for the sum of $250, and then paid him on said purchase the sum of $62.50, and took from him his written obligation, as follows:

"This is to witness that I have this day sold to Mary Stanley Senter and Adelaide C. Stanley that certain lot of land described as follows: Lot 18, block F, town of Montrovia,—for the sum of $250, and received $62.50, this day paid to me on the purchase price thereof; the balance to be paid as follows: $187.50 on or before 17th day of June, 1887, and ——— dollars on or before ———, 18—. All deferred payments to bear interest at the rate of eight (8) per cent. per annum from this date, interest payable annually; and, if not so paid, to be compounded with the principal; and to be evidenced by their promissory notes under the terms aforesaid, to be executed by said Mary Stanley Senter and Adelaide C. Stanley upon receiving an agreement from E. F. Spence, J. F. Crank, and John D. Bicknell to convey the said property. Deed to be executed when said purchase price, with all interest thereon, is fully paid.

"Dated 17th day of June, 1886.

[Signed]

"W. N. MONROE, Agent."

—That plaintiffs have been ready and willing to execute their notes for the deferred payments upon receiving the agreement mentioned in said written instrument, and to do and perform all and every other thing required of them by said written instrument; that they have not received said agreement from said Spence and others, or either of them, or from the defendant, although they have requested the defendant to deliver the same to them; that they tendered to the defendant the full amount of said purchase money and interest, as provided for in said writing, and demanded of him a deed, which he refused to give, and that he has ever since refused to receive said money or execute said deed; that said Spence and others had no title to said real estate, and defendant had no authority to act for them in the sale thereof; that between the time of entering into said contract and the time fixed therein for making the last payment of the purchase money the land had largely increased in value, and was reasonably worth $3,000; that defendant knew that said parties had no title to said property, and that he had no authority to act as their agent in the sale thereof, and that plaintiffs had relied upon his statements to the contrary, but he had never informed them of the facts, or offered to return them the money paid by them. The complaint further alleges that, "by reason of the said failure and refusal of the defendant to cause the said lot of land to be conveyed to them, they have sustained damages in the sum of $3,000, which said sum is now due and wholly unpaid." The prayer is for "judgment for the sum of $3,000, for their costs in this behalf, and for all proper relief." There was a demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled. The answer put in issue all of the material allegations of the complaint. There was a trial by jury, and verdict for plaintiffs for $1,019.53. A motion for a new trial was overruled, and defendant appeals.

The appellant contends that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the complaint. It is difficult to determine the ground upon which the plaintiffs seek to recover. The facts alleged tend to show an attempt to recover damages against defendant for falsely representing that the parties named were the owners of the land, and that he was their agent, thus inducing the plaintiffs to part with the sum of $62.50, but the damages alleged are for a failure to cause a conveyance of the real estate; and, if the intention is to recover for the false representations, the contract need not have been set out, and the allegation as to the value of the real estate would be immaterial. In that case plaintiffs would only be entitled to recover the money paid by them to defendant, and interest. Hall v. Crandall, 29 Cal. 568; Wallace v. Bentley, 18 Pac. Rep. 788. But, whatever the intention of the pleader may have been, we must hold the complaint to be bad. If it seeks to recover for the false representations, it is not alleged in the complaint that the plaintiffs were ignorant of the facts as to the ownership of the property of the defendant, and no special damages are alleged which can be regarded as the result of the acts of the defendant. If we treat the complaint as one for damages for a breach of the contract, and we think it must be so treated, it is clearly insufficient. It alleges in express terms that the plaintiffs were not contracting for the title of the defendant in the land, but the title of Spence and others, through the defendant, their agent. The contract shows upon its face that the defendant was assuming to act as the agent of other parties, and, if it did not, it is made to appear by the allegations of the complaint. That an action on the contract for damages cannot be maintained under such circumstances has been determined by this court. Wallace v. Bentley, supra. In that case it is said: "The theory of the pleader evidently was that, upon the facts alleged, the liability of the defendants is the same as that of the owner of the property would be if he had authorized the defendants to sell the property, and then, after he had sold it, he had sold and conveyed it to some one else. Had that been the case, he, and not the defendants, would have been liable for the damages claimed in this case. But the owner is not liable on the contract, because the defendants had no authority from him to make it. The defendants are not liable unless the contract contains apt words to charge them personally. Hall v. Crandall, 29 Cal. 568; Lander v. Castro, 43 Cal. 497. If not liable upon the contract because they did not undertake to contract on their own behalf, the plaintiff's remedy against the defendants is 'an action to recover the money, if any has been paid them, or the value of the work or labor, if any has been performed for him, under the supposed contract, or special damages resulting to the plaintiff by reason of the defendant's wrong in undertaking to act for another without authority.' Hall v. Crandall, supra. This action is not for the recovery of any money paid by the plaintiff to the defendants; and the only attempt to allege facts entitling the plaintiff to special damages is that, by reason of the representations of the defendants, he was prevented from purchasing the premises." In this case there is no allegation that the owner of the property was unknown, or that the property could not have been purchased for the price agreed to be paid defendant for it, or any state of facts set out showing or tending to show that the failure of defendant to convey the property did or could have resulted in damage to the plaintiffs. The demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained. Other questions are presented by the record, and argued in the briefs, but the conclusion we have reached renders it unnecessary that they should be considered.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and the cause remanded.

PACIFIC MUT. LIFE INS. CO. v. SHEPARDSON et al. (No. 12,790.)

(Supreme Court of California, November 16, 1888.)

PLEADING—COMPLAINT—DEMURRER.

A complaint alleging that through the default in the payment of interest plaintiff, under an option given in the note, has declared the whole principal and interest immediately due and payable, a demurrer on the ground that the action is prematurely brought does not present the question whether or not the option has been properly exercised, the complaint stating a good cause of action for the overdue interest.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Colusa county; E. A. BRIDGFORD, Judge.

Action by Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company against Dudley Shepardson, Minnie Shepardson, his wife, T. I. Talbot, and John Doe, to recover on two notes given to plaintiff by the Shepardsons, and to foreclose the mortgage given to secure them. Talbot, a subsequent incumbrancer, appeals from a judgment overruling his demurrer to the complaint.

J. W. Goad, Richard Bayne, and T. I. Talbot, for appellant. C. N. Fox, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an action against the defendants, Dudley Shepardson and Minnie Shepardson, his wife, to recover upon two notes executed by them to the plaintiff, and to foreclose two mortgages given to secure the same. T. I. Talbot was made a defendant, he being a subsequent incumbrancer. There was a separate demurrer by Talbot to the complaint, which was overruled, and judgment and decree entered against the defendants; Talbot making no defense. Talbot alone appeals from the judgment.

The appellant presents but one point in his brief. He claims that his demurrer should have been sustained on the ground that it appeared on the face of the complaint that the debt sued for was not due, and therefore the action was prematurely brought. The note set forth in the first count bears date December 15, 1883, and is made payable three years after date. It fixes the rate of interest, provides that it shall be payable annually, and recites further: "In case default be made in the payment of the interest as the same becomes due, according to the terms hereof, then the whole principal and interest shall, at the option of the holder hereof, become at once due and payable." The complaint, filed December 15, 1886, alleges that "no part of the principal or interest on said note has been paid, and that, by reason of default in the payment of the interest, the plaintiff, in the exercise of the option given in said note and mortgage, has declared all sums secured by said mortgage immediately due and payable." The appellant urges upon us that, as the note could only become due, upon failure to pay interest, at the option of the holder, such option must be exercised immediately. The case of Crossmore v. Page, 73 Cal. 213, 14 Pac. Rep. 787, is cited as supporting this view. The point presented and decided in the case referred to was that the failure to exercise the option within a reasonable time was a waiver of the right, as against an indorser, to enforce the payment of the whole of the principal and interest called for in the note. No such question is presented here. The only ground of demurrer, properly pleaded, is that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The complaint constitutes a cause of action for the recovery of the interest. Whether anything more could have been recovered could not be raised by demurrer. The promise to pay the interest annually was absolute. The only question left to the option of the holder was whether, upon the failure to pay such interest, the whole amount of principal and interest should immediately become due and payable, without any act on the part of the holder showing his election to exercise the option given him. The case, as presented, does not call for a decision of this question, but we think the case of Whitcher v. Webb, 44 Cal. 127, determines it adversely to the appellant. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

FAGAN v. CARTY. (No. 12,793.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 19, 1888.)

1. QUIETING TITLE—EVIDENCE.

The land in dispute was, on April 29, 1871, conveyed to defendant by the trustees under act Cong. July 23, 1866, conveying this and other lands in trust for the parties who at the time of its passage were in the bona fide occupancy thereof. Plaintiff's testimony that he bought the property, April 5, 1870, at constable's sale, was the only evidence tending to show title in him. Held to justify a judgment for defendant in an action under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 733, to determine adverse claims.

2. APPEAL—RECORD—AMENDMENT OF DEFECTS.

Supreme court Cal. rule 12, providing for the correction of errors or defects in the transcript on the suggestion of either party, by the clerk's certificate of so much of the record as may be necessary, does not apply to the case of failure to procure from the trial judge a sufficiently full statement of the case.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Solano county; C. H. GAROUTTE, Special Judge.

Action by James Fagan against Miles Carty to quiet title. From a judgment for defendant plaintiff appeals. Rule 12 of the supreme court of California provides that, for the purpose of correcting any error or defect in the transcript, either party may suggest the same in writing, and, upon good cause shown, obtain an order for the certification by the clerk of so much of the record as may be necessary, or may produce it so certified without any order.

James Fagan, appellant, pro se. J. McKenna and Geo. A. Lamont, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is an action brought under the provisions of section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to determine the rights of the parties to the real estate described in the complaint. The court found that the plaintiff is not the owner of the property, or any part thereof, and "that the defendant was, at the time of the commencement of this action, and had been for a long time before, and is now, the owner of said land, and the whole thereof." These findings are as broad as the issues, and are sufficient. The evidence shows that the land in dispute is a portion of the lands which were conveyed by act of congress passed July 23, 1866, to the city of Benicia, in trust for the parties who were, upon the passage of the act, in the bona fide occupancy thereof; and that in pursuance of said act of congress the trustees of Benicia conveyed the land to respondent by deed dated April 29, 1871. The only evidence in the statement tending in any respect to show that the plaintiff ever acquired any title is the testimony of plaintiff that he "purchased the property described in the complaint at constable's sale on the 5th day of April, 1870." Appellant, realizing the insufficiency of his statement to present the merits of his case on appeal, has printed in the transcript, immediately following the statement, a transcript of the official reporter's notes of the evidence and proceedings, duly certified by that officer, and now asks the court to consider the same upon his suggestion of a diminution of the record. But manifestly we have no right, upon such a suggestion, to add to the statement any of the evidence proposed.

The Code prescribes a plain and simple method of securing a statement of the evidence and proceedings, and rule 12 of this court is not intended to relieve those who, through ignorance, negligence, or mistake, have failed to procure from the trial judge a full and correct statement of the case. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J., WORKS, J., SHARPSTEIN, J., and SEARLS, C. J.

THORNTON, J., concurs in the judgment.

PENROSE v. CALKINS. (No. 12,789.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 26, 1888.)

MECHANIC'S LIEN—NOTICE—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY—SUFFICIENCY.

A notice of a mechanic's lien, referring to the land as "that certain lot and parcel of land situated in said county of Nevada, state of California, and sought to be charged with this lien, and described as follows, to-wit," containing no other description of the land, is insufficient.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; J. M. WALLING, Judge.

Action by Thomas Penrose against Malcolm D. Calkins, to enforce a mechanic's lien. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Caldwell & Little, for appellant. W. P. Sowden, for respondent.

WORKS, J. The only question presented in this case is as to the sufficiency of the description of the real estate in the notice of mechanic's lien sought to be foreclosed. The court below held the notice to be sufficient, and rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff. The only reference to any real estate in the notice is as follows: "That certain lot and parcel of land situated in said county of Nevada, state of California, and sought to be charged with this lien, and described as follows, to-wit." It would seem that it was the intention of the scrivener who drew the notice to follow this general reference to the property by a specific description of it, but, if so, such description is entirely omitted. The courts have been very liberal in upholding imperfect descriptions in this class of cases, but here there is absolutely no description of the property. The court below erred in admitting the notice in evidence over the objection of appellant, and the findings of the court based upon such notice are not sustained by the evidence. The judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are reversed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; THORNTON, J.; PATERSON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

TAPIA v. DEMARTINI et al. (No. 12,720.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 21, 1888.)

1. MORTGAGES—FUTURE ADVANCES—PRIORITY OF LIEN.

To the extent of the sum limited in it, and as against subsequent incumbrances, including mechanics' liens, a recorded mortgage is entitled to priority for future advances made without actual knowledge of such incumbrances, though it is not expressed to be for future advances, and the agreement making it a lien therefor is verbal.

2. SAME—EXPRESS TRUST—ALTERATION OF WRITTEN AGREEMENT.

An agreement, at the time of the execution of a mortgage on realty, that it shall be held to secure one not named in it for future advances, is not a declaration of an express trust in lands, required by Civil Code Cal. § 852, to be in writing; nor does it vary the terms of a written instrument, within the provision of section 1698 that a written contract may be altered only by writing, or an executed oral agreement; nor is it within section 1624, requiring agreements not to be performed within a year to be in writing; and such a verbal agreement is valid as against subsequent incumbrancers.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sierra county; F. D. SOWARD, Judge. Suit by J. M. Tapia against A. Demartini and others for the adjustment of partnership affairs. Defendants Busch, Mooney, Castagnetto, and Sorocco filed a cross-complaint as mortgage creditors against the partners. The mortgage was held not a lien in favor of Mooney, and he appeals. The following are the material provisions of the Civil Code: Sec. 852. "No trust in relation to real property is valid unless created or declared (1) by a written instrument, subscribed by the trustee, or by his agent thereto, authorized by writing; (2) by the instrument under which the trustee claims the estate affect; or (3) by operation of law." Sec. 1624. "The following contracts are invalid, unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing, and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent. (1) An agreement that by its terms is not to be performed within a year from the making thereof. * * *" Sec. 1698. "A contract in writing may be altered by a contract in writing, or by an executed oral agreement, and not otherwise."

Smith & Ford, for appellant. B. Schessinger and J. F. Ramage, for respondents.

WORKS, J. Suit was brought by the plaintiff against certain of the defendants to dissolve a partnership alleged to exist between them in carrying on the business of mining, and to close up and adjust the partnership affairs. Subsequently numerous other parties, who claimed to hold liens against the property of the copartnership, were made defendants, and set up, by way of answer, their respective claims of liens, most of which were mechanics' liens, for labor performed on the mining property of the firm. The defendants Busch, Mooney, Castagnetto, and Sorocco also filed their cross-complaint, alleging, in substance, that the plaintiff and the defendants, his copartners, on the 1st day of February, 1888, executed to said defendant Busch his promissory note for $15,000, payable one year after date, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and to secure the payment thereof executed to said defendant their mortgage on the real estate in controversy in this action; that at the time said note and mortgage were so executed the mortgagors were indebted to said Busch and one Herringlake, his partner, in the sum of $571.22, and to the defendant Mooney in the sum of $1,425.14, and to the defendant Crowell in the sum of $1,152.27; "that said note and mortgage were executed and delivered with the understanding and agreement among all the parties thereto, and said Mooney and Crowell, that the same were so executed and delivered to secure the payment of the several balances of account aforesaid then due said Busch and Herringlake, as copartners aforesaid, and said Mooney and Crowell, respectively, and to secure further sums to become due for goods, wares, and merchandise to be afterwards sold and delivered by said Mooney and Crowell, respectively, to said mortgagors, not exceeding the sum agreed to be paid in said promissory note." It is further alleged that Mooney, under said agreement, furnished goods, wares, and merchandise to the amount of $2,174.43, and the amounts due and unpaid to the respective parties are stated. The recording of the mortgage, and the fact that, prior to the commencement of the suit, the said Crowell had sold, assigned, and delivered his account and all his rights under the mortgage to the defendants Castagnetto and Sorocco, are alleged, and it is asked that Herringlake, partner of Busch, be made a party, and that the lien of certain of the defendants be declared subordinate to the claims under said mortgage, and the property sold to satisfy the said mortgage lien. With the pleadings in this condition it was stipulated by all the parties in interest that a decree might be entered dissolving the partnership, and ordering the sale of the property, and the payment of the proceeds of the sale into court, to be applied on the respective claims of the parties, according to their priority, to be determined by the court thereafter. The decree was entered, the property sold, and the proceeds paid into court. The court below, in adjusting the liens, held that, as between the defendant Mooney and the other lienholders, the mortgage held by Busch created no lien in his favor, and the final decree was rendered accordingly. The defendant Mooney alone appeals to this court.

Three questions are presented for our consideration: (1) Was the mortgage executed to Busch valid as against subsequent incumbrances for future advancements? (2) Was such mortgage a valid and effective lien in favor of Mooney, he not being named as a mortgagee or mentioned therein, and no trust in Busch, for his benefit being declared in writing? (3) If the mortgage was valid for any purpose in favor of Mooney, was it binding as between him and subsequent incumbrancers as to future sales of goods and merchandise, under the parol agreement for advances under the mortgage?

1. It is firmly settled by a long line of decisions that a mortgage made in good faith to cover future advancements or indorsements is valid, not only as between the immediate parties to the instrument, but as against subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers, if properly recorded. Civil Code, § 2884; Tully v. Harloe, 35 Cal. 302, 309; Ackerman v. Hunsicker, 85 N. Y. 46; Googins v. Gilmore, 47 Me. 13; Morris v. Cain, (La.) 1 South. Rep. 797, 810; 1 Jones, Mortg. §§ 373, 374; Shirras v. Caig, 7 Cranch, 34; McDaniels v. Colvin, 16 Vt. 300; Ward v. Cooke, 17 N. J. Eq. 93, 99; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 1197, 1198. The mortgage under consideration is in the ordinary form, and does not disclose upon its face that it is given in part for future advancements. While it is better and more consistent with open and fair dealing that the mortgage should express its object, this is held not to be necessary to its validity if the amount of liability to be incurred under it is expressly limited. Tully v. Harloe, supra; Morris v. Cain, supra; Lawrence v. Tucker, 23 How. 14, 26; 1 Jones, Mortg. § 374; Shirras v. Caig, supra; Moroney's Appeal, 24 Pa. St. 372; Witczinski v. Everman, 51 Miss. 844. Nor is it necessary that the agreement under which advances are to be made shall be in writing. 1 Jones, Mortg. § 351. The mortgage, as against subsequent incumbrancers, becomes a lien for the whole sum advanced, from the time of its execution, and not for each separate amount advanced from the time of such advancement, although the right to enforce the collection thereof can only arise upon each advancement being made. Ackerman v. Hunsicker, 85 N. Y. 43, 49; Shirras v. Caig, supra; Moroney's Appeal, 24 Pa. St. 372. But the lien of the mortgage cannot be enforced as against subsequent incumbrances of which the mortgagee has actual notice, for advancements or indorsements made or given after such notice. The notice must be actual. Constructive notice, by the recording of subsequent incumbrances, is not enough. Ackerman v. Hunsicker, supra, 52; Ward v. Cooke, 17 N. J. Eq. 93, 99; Shirras v. Caig, supra; 1 Jones, Mortg. § 372; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1199. It is immaterial whether the advances are to be made in money or materials. Brooks v. Lester, 36 Md. 65. If the mortgage discloses upon its face that it is to stand as security for future advancements, the amount of the advances to be made need not be set out. It is sufficiently definite to put subsequent incumbrancers on inquiry, and they must ascertain the extent of the lien or suffer the consequences. Lovelace v. Webb, 62 Ala. 271; Witczinski v. Everman, 51 Miss. 841, 845. The rules thus established apply to mechanics' liens. Ph. Mech. Liens, § 236. We are fully in accord with the doctrines laid down in the cases cited. They seem to us to be eminently just and equitable. Applying them to this case, the mortgage under which the appellant claims was of record, and was notice to subsequent incumbrancers that it constituted a lien upon the property to the full sum of $15,000. They performed labor on the property, with full notice of the existence of a lien to that amount. If they had desired to do so, they might have ascertained the actual condition of the security, and by notice to the holder of the mortgage have prevented any additional incumbrance of the property for further advancements, by giving notice of their liens. Not having done so, their rights must be held to be subject to the mortgage to the full amount of the advancements shown to have been made.

2. We pass to the question whether the execution of the mortgage to Busch, under a parol agreement between all of the parties in interest that it should be held in part for the benefit of the appellant, was valid and binding as against the respondents. As we understand the position of counsel for respondents, they contend: (1) That the agreement by which Busch was to hold the mortgage for the benefit of the appellant had the effect to change the written contract between the mortgagor and mortgagee, and, being in parol, was not binding under section 1698 of the Civil Code. (2) That the oral arrangement, if valid, must have been executed within a year, under section 1624 of the Civil Code. (3) That it amounts to a declaration of an express trust in lands, and cannot rest in parol. The question presented is not a new one. The decided cases are clearly to the effect that such an agreement as the one under consideration is valid and binding upon the parties. In this state a mortgage conveys no estate in the land, but is a simple lien upon the property. This being true, a transaction of this kind is not within the provisions of the Code that an express trust in lands cannot be created except by an agreement in writing, or a parol agreement fully executed. Being but a personal chattel, "a parol trust may attach to a mortgage that the mortgagee shall hold it, in trust for his own benefit, and in part for the benefit of another." 1 Jones, Mortg. §§ 376, 846; Hubbell v. Blakeslee, 71 N. Y. 63, 69; Wood v. Weimar, 104 U. S. 786; Hall v. Crouse, 13 Hun, 557; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 74; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1181. The proof of such an agreement does not vary the terms of the written instrument. 1 Jones, Mortg. § 376. It is not claimed that the transaction here was fraudulent. On the contrary, the case is presented with the express understanding that the agreement was made in good faith, and that the advancements were made by appellant in pursuance thereof, as set forth in the cross-complaint. We have no doubt of the validity or binding effect of the parol contract made between these parties. Its enforcement, as against the subsequent incumbrancers, can work them no injustice. It can make no difference to them whether the mortgage is enforced in favor of Busch or the appellant. They had notice of the amount of the lien, which was the material question for them. As to the claim made by appellant that the contract, being in parol, must be performed within one year, it is sufficient to say that it is the written contract, the mortgage, that is to be performed. The parol agreement can only have the effect to explain the object of the mortgage, and determine for whose benefit it may be enforced.

3. If we are correct in the conclusions we have reached upon the first two questions presented by the briefs, it must follow as a necessary consequence that the mortgage executed to Busch for the benefit, in part, of the appellant, was valid and binding in his favor as against the respondents for the amount due him for advancements made thereunder. It is not claimed that the appellant had actual notice of the liens of the respondents at the time he made the advancements, and it is conceded that, as there is no dispute as to the facts, a new trial is unnecessary. The judgment appealed from is reversed, with instructions to the court below to so modify the same as to give the lien of said mortgage, to the extent of the amount due the appellant, priority over all liens of respondents for work done or materials furnished subsequent to the execution of said mortgage.

BALDWIN v. SECOND ST. CABLE R. Co. (No. 12,605.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 22, 1883.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE—SUIT BY WIFE FOR PERSONAL INJURIES—PARTIES.

A married woman is the real party in interest in an action for personal injuries to her, and the evidence showing that she is living separate from her husband by reason of his desertion, the action is properly brought by her alone under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 370.

2. PARTIES—DEFECT OF PARTIES—OBJECTIONS WAIVED.

A defect of parties plaintiff being ground for demurrer under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 430, and section 434 providing that objections not taken by demurrer, or answer, with certain exceptions, are deemed waived, the objection of the non-joinder of the husband cannot be raised on motion for nonsuit.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; H. K. S. O'MELVENY, Judge.

Action by Mary Baldwin, a married woman, against the Second-Street Cable Railroad Company for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Judgment and verdict for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Code Civil Proc. § 370, provides that "when a married woman is a party her husband must be joined with her, except * * * when she is living separate and apart from her husband by reason of his desertion of her * * * she may sue or be sued alone." By section 430, "that there is a defect or misjoinder of parties plaintiff" is ground for demurrer; and section 434 provides that if the objections enumerated as grounds of demurrer, except an objection to the jurisdiction, or that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, are not "taken either by demurrer or answer, the defendant must be deemed to have waived the same."

P. W. Dooner and Chapman & Hendricks, for appellant. Holloway & Kendrick, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is an action instituted by the plaintiff to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by her through the negligence of the defendant while she was riding upon one of its cars in the city of Los Angeles. The plaintiff is a married woman, and sues alone. No objection was made, either by demurrer or answer, that there was a defect of parties plaintiff; but when the plaintiff had introduced her evidence and rested her case, the defendant moved for a nonsuit on the ground that the plaintiff was a married woman, and not deserted by her husband, and that she was not the real party in interest.

We think that the motion was properly denied. The evidence shows quite clearly that plaintiff is "living separate and apart from her husband by reason of his desertion of her," hence it was unnecessary that he be joined as a party plaintiff. Section 370, Code Civil Proc.; Andrews v. Runyon, 65 Cal. 629, 4 Pac. Rep. 669. But, even if the evidence failed to show such desertion, the objection urged on the motion for nonsuit was waived when the defendant failed to raise it by demurrer or answer. Section 434, Code Civil Proc.; Hoop v. Plummer, 14 Ohio St. 449. Such objection cannot be raised for the first time on motion for a nonsuit. Boone, Code Pl. §§ 868-869. The plaintiff is a real party in interest. In Matthew v. Railroad Co., it is said: "The ground of the action is the wife's personal injuries. The cause of action is hers. The husband was only joined as a plaintiff because the common-law rule requiring that he do so is yet in force. But the husband could not himself recover for personal injuries sustained by the wife." 63 Cal. 451. The wife in such cases is a necessary party. No recovery can be had for such damages in an action to which she is not a party. Sheldon v. Steam-Ship, 18 Cal. 535; Fuller v. Railroad Co., 21 Conn. 574.

On the question of damages it is enough to say that we think the evidence sufficient to support the verdict. Judgment and order affirmed.

In re STEPHENS. (No. 20,457.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 21, 1888.)

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—APPLICATION FOR DISBARMENT—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

In proceedings for disbarment, an accusation that respondent urged a prosecution for libel and promised to secure satisfactory evidence of the guilt of the defendant, and alleged that the statute of limitations had not run, and at the examination, appeared for defendant and set up the statute of limitations and procured a writ of prohibition and defendant's discharge thereon, is good on demurrer.¹

In bank. On demurrer to the accusation on application for disbarment.
Horace Bell, for applicant. Alexander Campbell, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is an application for the disbarment of C. C. Stephens, an attorney and counselor at law. The written accusation alleges, in substance, that on December 1, 1887, two criminal actions were pending in the superior court of Los Angeles county against one B. A. Stephens, (brother of respondent,) and another of the same character in the supreme court against said B. A. Stephens, and one A. M. Thornton, charging the defendants therein with having published a libel against Horace Bell, the accuser herein; that said C. C. Stephens and one G. Wiley Wells were the attorneys for said defendants; that while said actions were pending as aforesaid, said C. C. Stephens represented to said Bell and the prosecuting attorney that said G. Wiley Wells was the person really guilty of the publication of the libels mentioned, said B. A. Stephens and A. M. Thornton having acted under the guidance and instructions and at the instigation of said Wells, and that he, said defendant, knew of and would furnish to said Bell the original manuscript of said libel in the handwriting of said Wells, and assist in the prosecution and conviction of said Wells, if said Bell would agree to dismiss the said actions against his brother and Thornton; that said Bell agreed to do as requested, and in pursuance of his promise said Stephens consulted with the prosecuting officers concerning the facts and the law involved in the proposed action and repeatedly urged said Bell to commence the prosecution against said Wells; that on the day said actions in the superior court were to be tried said Stephens produced a document which he represented to be the original manuscript referred to and requested a dismissal of the actions; that said Bell refused to consent to said dismissal, being in doubt as to the genuineness of the document, but did consent to a continuance at that and subsequent times in pursuance of the understanding between the parties; that at the urgent request of said Stephens, who claimed that the statute of limitations had not run against the action, and upon his promise to procure satisfactory evidence of the guilt of said Wells, a complaint was filed in the justice's court on February 23, 1887, charging said Wells with criminal libel, and thereafter a warrant was issued and served, and the examination of said Wells upon said charge continued and set for April 17, 1888; that up to the last-named date said Stephens consulted with and advised the prosecuting officers in the preparation of the case and in securing evidence against said Wells, but when the matter came on for examination he appeared as attorney for the defense of said Wells on said charge, and objected to the examination of Wells on the ground that the action was barred under the provisions of sections 801 and 802 of the Penal Code; and that, when this objection was overruled, he procured, as attorney for said Wells, a writ of prohibition, prohibiting the justice from proceeding with the examination, and thereupon said Wells was discharged. To this accusation a demurrer has been filed, in which it is claimed that no sufficient reason for disbarment is shown, because it appears that Stephens did try to furnish evidence as he agreed to do, and that no bad faith is shown on the part of respondent in his promise and effort to bring Wells to justice. It is said that he may have found that he was mistaken as to the guilt of Wells, and on finding Bell was not dealing fairly by him he was induced to accept a retainer from Wells.

It is unnecessary for us, at this time, to consider how far—admitting the accusations to be true—the bad faith or failure of Bell in relation to the matter would operate to justify Stephens in the conduct charged, or to what extent the good faith of the latter may excuse him for advising the prosecution, and then acting for the defense of Wells. We think that the charges call for an answer. It has always been considered a sufficient cause for disbarment for an attorney and counselor to urge and aid in the prosecution and then appear for the defense of a person charged with crime, or to encourage the commencement of proceedings which he knows or has reason to know are illegal or unjust. Weeks, Attys. 140 et seq. The demurrer is overruled with directions to respondent to answer the accusation within 30 days after notice of this order.

TURNER v. WHITE et ux. (No. 12,649.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 22, 1888.)

QUIETING TITLE—EVIDENCE.

A complaint in an action against husband and wife, alleging that the husband was the owner of land, and conveyed it to his wife in fraud of creditors; that the land was afterwards sold to plaintiff under execution against the husband; that the conveyance is a cloud on plaintiff's title; and that by the continuance of the use and occupation by defendants plaintiff has been deprived thereof,—shows no cause of action where plaintiff admits at the trial that no conveyance by the husband to the wife was made.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; J. M. WALLING, Judge.

In this action by George E. Turner against James White and Martha S. White, to set aside a deed as fraudulent, and to remove a cloud on title, and for other relief, defendants had judgment, and plaintiff appeals.

Thomas Ford, for appellant. Frank Power, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is the second time this case has been before us. On the former hearing it was reversed, on the ground that the defendants had been permitted in the court below to make proof of certain matters not put in issue. Turner v. White, 14 Pac. Rep. 794. Upon a second trial there was judgment for the defendants, from which, and an order denying him a new trial, the plaintiff appeals. The complaint is very long, and was evidently intended as one to set aside a deed on the ground that it was made to defraud creditors. It alleges, in substance, that on the 12th day of June, 1880, the defendant James White was the owner of certain real estate, describing it, and on said day conveyed the same to his co-defendant, who was his wife; that the conveyance was without consideration, and made to defraud credit ors, which was known to the grantee; that on the 1st day of October, 1881, said White became indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $51.79; that he sued and recovered a judgment therefor, caused execution to issue and the property to be sold by a constable, became himself the purchaser, and received a constable's deed therefor. The complaint further alleges "that said real property was subject to and liable on execution for the debts and obligations of defendant James White, who was the owner thereof; that, by virtue of the deed of conveyance from said constable, plaintiff became seized of and ever since has been and now is seized of and the owner of said premises, and entitled to the possession thereof; that the said purported deed of James White, conveying all his property to his wife, in no manner altered or affected the title, status, or condition, as against this plaintiff, of the property herein described as purchased by plaintiff, but that nevertheless the said conveyance now operates as a cloud upon the plaintiff's title to the said purchased property." The value of the rents and profits of the real estate is stated, of which sum it is alleged plaintiff has been wrongfully deprived by the defendants; "and, by the continuance of the use and occupation of said premises by defendants, plaintiff has and will be deprived of such use and occupation, to his damage in the sum of $250 in addition thereto." The prayer of the complaint is for judgment "that the defendant James White was the real owner of said described premises at the time of the recovery of the judgment aforesaid, the issuing of the execution, and the sale and conveyance by said constable to plaintiff, and that defendant Martha S. White held her purported title to the same by fraud, and in violation of the plaintiff's rights; that the said purported conveyance from said James White to his wife, so far as it affects the property purchased by plaintiff, be decreed to be fraudulent and void, of no legal force or effect; and that plaintiff is the legal owner of said premises, and entitled to the possession thereof; that defendants may be decreed to make, execute, acknowledge, and deliver to plaintiff a deed of conveyance of all their right, title, and interest in and to said premises described, and, if they make default in doing so on a day to be fixed by the court, that some competent person may be appointed by this court to do it for them; "that plaintiff recover the sum of $500 damages for the withholding of said property, and the loss of the value of the rents, issues, and profits thereof; that such general relief as the nature of the case may require may be awarded, and that plaintiff also have judgment for costs." The answer denied that any deed of the property in controversy had been given by White to his wife. The opening of the bill of exceptions containing the evidence has this recital: "On the second trial of this cause, before the offer of any evidence, the plaintiff read to the court and filed with the clerk a written statement, admitting as true the allegations of defendants' answer that the property in controversy was not included in the deed of June 12, 1880, and never was conveyed by defendant James White to his wife, the other defendant. The trial then proceeded as an action to quiet title." The alleged errors relied upon for a reversal relate to the admission and exclusion of evidence; and the findings of the court, it is claimed, were not sustained by the evidence.

As the facts appear in this record, we cannot conceive of any ruling upon the evidence, or any finding of the court, that could possibly work the plaintiff any injury. The one and only allegation in the complaint that gave him a cause of action to quiet title was that the deed of June 12, 1880, had been executed by White to his wife, and was a cloud on plaintiff's title. There is no general allegation in the complaint that either of the defendants are claiming or asserting any title or interest in the property adverse to the plaintiff. It can only be inferred that such claim is made from the alleged fact of the execution of this deed. At the opening of the trial the plaintiff expressly admits that no such deed was ever executed. If so, there was no cloud upon his title to be removed, and no evidence of any adverse claim on the part of the defendants. Treating the complaint as one to set aside a deed as fraudulent, there was no deed to set aside. His complaint and this admission left the plaintiff the owner of the property, with no cause of complaint against the defendants. In other words, the plaintiff admitted his whole case away. This being the condition of the case, there was absolutely nothing left for the court to try. Strictly speaking, it may have been error to admit any evidence, but, as we have said, if it was error, it was harmless, and could not entitle the plaintiff to a reversal of the judgment. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

REEVES v. HYDE et al. (No. 11,460.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 27, 1888.)

PUBLIC LANDS—OWNED BY STATE—AGRICULTURAL LANDS.

Lands adapted to the growth of fruits are agricultural lands, and may be entered as such, fruits being an "ordinary agricultural crop," as that phrase is used in Pol. Code Cal. § 3495, prescribing the tests of lands which may be entered as agricultural.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Lake county; RODNEY J. HUDSON, Judge.

Action by James M. Reeves against Marcus D. Hyde and H. W. Rice, to determine the right to purchase certain land from the state. Judgment for plaintiff. Motion for new trial denied, and defendants appeal. Pol. Code § 3495, prescribing the tests of agricultural land which may be entered as such, provides "that any smallest legal subdivision of school lands shall be deemed suitable for cultivation, if any part not less than one-half of its area will, without artificial irrigation, but with or without the clearing of timber or other growth therefrom, by the ordinary processes of tillage, produce ordinary agricultural crops in average quantity."

E. W. Britt, (C. E. Wilson, of counsel,) for appellants. R. W. Crump, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This action was to determine a contest as to which of the parties to it had the better right to purchase a tract of 320 acres of school land from the state. The cause was tried before the court without a jury, and judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, from which, and an order denying a new trial, the defendants appeal.

The only point in dispute in the court below was as to whether or not the land was suitable for cultivation. The court found "that the land in controversy is now, and was at the time of the filing of the application of the defendant Hyde to purchase said land, and ever since has been, suitable for cultivation, and at least one-half of every subdivision thereof is now, and was at the time of the filing of said application to purchase said land, and ever since has been, suitable for cultivation." The defendants contend that the evidence conclusively shows that no kind of crops could be raised upon the land, except fruits, and that they are not such "ordinary agricultural crops" as are meant in section 3495 of the Political Code, which prescribes the tests for agricultural lands, which may be entered as such. They further claim that there is no evidence demonstrating the fact that one-half of each legal subdivision of the land was suitable for the cultivation of any ordinary agricultural crop. Upon these points there is an undoubted conflict, yet there is some evidence of a persuasive kind going to show that the land, in at least the proportion of one-half of each legal subdivision thereof, is suitable for the cultivation of the ordinary fruit crops grown in this state; and we cannot say that the court below, before whom the witnesses appeared in person and testified, had no basis for its finding. The language of section 3495 of the Political Code, which describes what character the land shall possess in order to make it agricultural, should be taken in its broadest sense, and be held to include crops of fruit in the term "ordinary agricultural crops," especially in view of the circumstance that a very large portion of the husbandmen of this state are engaged in tilling portions of the soil in which are grown various descriptions of fruit, a fact well known to the people and their legislative representatives, who enacted the law. It will not do to say that (as we understand) in California apples, prunes, and grapes are not ordinary agricultural crops. We advise, therefore, that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

SESLER v. MONTGOMERY. (No. 11,359.) *

(Supreme Court of California. December 3, 1888.)

1. LIBEL AND SLANDER—COMMUNICATION BY HUSBAND TO WIFE—PUBLICATION.

Communication by a husband to his wife of slanderous words in regard to a woman is a publication.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE.

In an action for slander, where it is shown that defendant accused plaintiff of perjury and want of chastity, in a room where his wife was, in a voice loud enough to be heard outside, there is sufficient evidence that she heard and understood the words.

3. SAME—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION—HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Under Civil Code Cal. § 47, providing that a privileged communication is one made without malice to a person interested therein, by one who is also interested, or by one who stands in such a relation to the person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive for the communication innocent, and section 48, providing that malice is not to be inferred from the mere fact of publication, a finding of the jury that a communication from a husband to his wife, with whom he was on bad terms, slanderous of a female acquaintance of hers, who had testified for her in divorce proceedings between her and her husband, was made with malice, and was not privileged, cannot be disturbed.

4. TRIAL—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—FAILURE TO INTRODUCE EVIDENCE.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 2061, subd. 6, providing that evidence is to be estimated, not only by its own intrinsic weight, but also according to the evidence which it is in the power of one side to produce and the other to contradict, comment to the jury upon the failure of defendant to introduce his wife to corroborate his own testimony is proper.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; E. M. GIBSON, Judge.

Action by Mary A. Sessler against A. Montgomery for slander. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Estee, Wilson & McCutchen, J. C. Martin, and W. F. Goad, for appellant. W. W. Allen, A. R. Cotton, and W. H. H. Hart, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action for slander. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Several points are made.

1. It is said that there was no publication. The facts are that the words were spoken to the defendant's wife, and were overheard by the plaintiff, who was listening in the corridor. The point is that husband and wife are in law one person, and that therefore a communication between them is not "published," within the meaning of the law of slander. It is to be observed that this is a different thing from saying that the communication was privileged. There must be a publication before the question of privilege can arise. We have not been referred by appellant to any decision in support of the precise point, except Trumbull v. Gibbons, 3 City H. Rec. 97, decided by an inferior court. We have not had access to this report, but from the mention of the case in Townshend on Slander we should infer that the decision proceeded on another ground, and that what is said in relation to the question in hand is merely a dictum. Nor have we been able to find any case exactly in point. Upon principle we should say that there was a publication. That husband and wife are one person is a mere fiction, and is not true for all purposes. The tendency of modern law, especially in California, is certainly not to extend the operation of the fiction. Nor do we see any reason why it should be extended, at least in the present direction. The reputation of a woman can certainly be injured by slanderous communications to her female friends; and the fact that the communication came through a husband would not ordinarily deprive it of its injurious effect. Furthermore, if husband and wife are one person to the extent that a communication from the husband to the wife concerning a third person is not published, it would seem to follow that a communication from a third person to one of the spouses concerning the other would not be a communication concerning a third person, so as to constitute a slander. But the contrary has been decided. A communication to one of the spouses concerning the other may be slander. Wenman v. Ash, 13 C. B. 836; Schenck v. Schenck, 20 N. J. Law, 208; Odgers, Sland. & Lib. *152, *153. That the result is the same in each case is stated by Townshend, who says: "The husband or wife of the author or publisher, or the husband or wife of him, or whose affairs the slander concerns, is regarded as a third person." Townsh. Sland. & Lib. § 95. We think, therefore, that a communication from a husband to his wife may constitute a publication.

2. It is contended that there was no evidence that the wife heard or understood the words uttered. The words imputed to the plaintiff perjury and a want of chastity, and hence were slanderous per se. They were not ambiguous, and were spoken of the plaintiff, and could not have referred to any other person. This being the case, the only possible point that can be made in this regard is that there is no proof that the wife heard or understood the words at all. It is certainly true that the slanderous words must be heard and understood. And it may be conceded that the burden is on the plaintiff to prove the hearing and understanding. But where a man converses with his wife in a room in such a tone of voice that he can be heard and understood by a person outside of the room, it is hardly possible that the wife did not hear and understand him. If the wife was deaf, or did not understand the language, or any other peculiar circumstance existed to prevent what would be the ordinary result, we think the defendant should have proved it. What was proved was sufficient to overcome the burden we have assumed to be on the plaintiff in the first instance.

3. It is urged that the communication was privileged. The Code provides that a privileged communication is one made "in a communication, without malice, to a person interested therein, by one who is also interested, or by one who stands in such a relation to the person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive for the communication innocent, or who is requested by the person interested to give the information." Civil Code, § 47. It is clear from the above that if there be malice the communication cannot be privileged, and the question of the existence of malice is one for the jury. In this case the jury was instructed that if no malice was shown the communication was privileged. It must be assumed from their verdict, therefore, that they believed that there was malice; and, although malice is not to be inferred from the mere fact of the publication, (Id. § 48,) we cannot say from the record that the jury was not justified in finding the existence of malice. The circumstances were such as to negative the theory that the communication was for justifiable purposes. At the time it was made, the defendant was on bad terms with his wife. A suit for the annulment of the marriage was then pending. The plaintiff was an acquaintance of the wife, and had come, at the wife's request, to give the protection of her presence against any outbreak on the part of the husband. She had testified on behalf of the wife in the suit above mentioned. The charge of perjury was probably made by the husband with reference to this testimony, and the inference is strong that it was resentment on his part at her testifying on the part of the wife, and not solicitude for the welfare of his family, that caused him to utter the slander. This inference is not weakened by the circumstance that the interview between the defendant and his wife was a stormy one; that he "became so excited" that he called his wife a liar; that the communication with reference to plaintiff was coarse and brutal in its nature; and that "he spoke in an angry tone." Taking everything together, we think there was evidence from which the jury could infer malice. Hence the communication was not privileged.

4. It is claimed that there was an irregularity of counsel for the plaintiff in the argument to the jury. During the trial the plaintiff called the defendant's wife to the stand, and after she had been sworn, and testified that she was his wife, the defendant's counsel objected to any further testimony from her, on the ground that the consent of the defendant to her being a witness had not been obtained. There was no ruling upon the point. The plaintiff withdrew the witness, and she was not subsequently recalled by either party. This left a direct conflict between the plaintiff and the defendant as to whether the slanderous words were uttered. The plaintiff affirmed the fact, and the defendant positively denied it. During the argument the plaintiff's counsel began by referring to the objection which had been made to the wife's testifying, and was proceeding to argue from it that an inference against the truth of the testimony of the defendant should be drawn. The counsel for the defendant objected to this line of argument; but the court overruled the objection, and the counsel for the plaintiff proceeded with his argument, dwelling mainly upon the failure of the defendant to call his wife as a witness. We think the action of the court was proper. Where it is in the power of a party to call a witness who can corroborate or disprove his statements, his failure to call such witness is a legitimate subject of comment to the jury. Such a case falls within the scope of subdivision 6 of section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that "evidence is to be estimated not only by its own intrinsic weight, but also according to the evidence which it is in the power of one side to produce, and of the other side to contradict." See, also, Gray v. Burk, 19 Tex. 233. The non-production of evidence in such case is a circumstance from which the jury may draw an inference of fact. If this is so, it is permissible to counsel to ask them to draw such inference; and it is a matter of every-day occurrence for counsel to make such arguments. The case is not similar to that of a person accused of crime; for the statute expressly provides, with reference to cases where the prisoner does not testify, that "his neglect or refusal to be a witness cannot in any manner prejudice him, nor be used against him on the trial or other proceeding." Pen. Code, § 1823. Now, in the present case, the wife was perfectly competent to be a witness if the defendant had consented. The slanderous words having been alleged to have been spoken to her, she could have corroborated or disproved his statements; and the circumstances excluded any idea that the communication was in fact confidential. He exercised much ingenuity to avoid admitting that she was his wife. His failure to consent was the sole reason she could not testify; and under the circumstances we think that the case falls within the rule above stated, and that the failure to give his consent was a subject of comment to the jury. It is to be observed that there was no ruling of the court upon the admissibility of the testimony, the witness having been withdrawn before a ruling was made; and there was no attempt to argue against the justice of the law, or to induce the jury to disregard the law, and it is therefore unnecessary to express an opinion as to what would have been the result had such circumstance existed. Moreover, we are not to be understood as saying that in every case in which a party fails to produce a witness such failure may be commented on to the jury. The fact sought to be inferred may not be an issue in the case, (Fletcher v. State, 49 Ind. 134,) or may not be proper for the consideration of the jury, (Rudolph v. Landwerlen, 92 Ind. 34.) The whole subject of the latitude to be allowed counsel in argument rests very much in the discretion of the trial court, and an exercise of such discretion should not be disturbed except in a clear case. The other points do not require special notice. We do not see any contradiction in the instructions. The charge of the court seems to have correctly presented the case to the jury. We think that the defendant had a fair trial, and we therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

McFARLAND, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment; but I am not prepared to say that there would have been a publication, if, at the time the slanderous words were spoken by defendant to his wife, he had been living with her in the friendly and confidential relation which usually exists between husband and wife.

STANDART v. ROUND VALLEY WATER CO. (No. 12,633.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 3, 1888.)

PROPERTY—ARTIFICIAL WATER-COURSE—REAL PROPERTY—QUIETING TITLE.

Under Civil Code Cal. § 658, providing that real property shall consist of that which is incidental or appurtenant to land, and section 652, providing that a thing is deemed to be incidental or appurtenant when it is used with the land for its benefit, as in the case of a water-course from or across the land of another, a right to use an iron pipe, through which water is conducted from a reservoir to a mill, and to the water itself, is real property, and the subject of an action to quiet title.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Plumas county; G. G. CLOUGH, Judge.

Action by George Standart against the Round Valley Water Company, to quiet title. Demurrer to complaint sustained, and plaintiff appeals.

Goodwin & Goodwin, for appellant. W. W. Kellogg, for respondent.

WORK, J. The complaint in this case alleges, in substance, that the plaintiff is the owner, and in possession of a certain mill-site and a quartz-mill thereon, situate about 400 feet below the dam known as the "Round Valley Reservoir Dam;" that during the 20 years he and his grantors have owned and possessed the same they have owned, possessed, and used, and the plaintiff does now own, possess, and use, a sheet-iron pipe extending from the water-wheel in said mill to and through said reservoir dam, which pipe, during all of said time, has been, and still is, a part of said mill, and used with the same; that said pipe has been during all of said time, and now is, the only outlet for the water stored in said reservoir; that plaintiff is, and he and his grantors have been during all of said time, the owner of the water flowing from said reservoir through said pipe to the extent of 350 inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure, as a motive power, with which to propel the machinery of said mill, and have used, and plaintiff now has the right to use, the same for said purpose; that the defendant claims to own said reservoir as a storage-room for water for sale, and claims to own a water-ditch from North canyon, immediately through which the water so stored is distributed and sold, after leaving plaintiff's said premises, and claims some right or title in said iron pipe, and in said water as it flows through said pipe, adverse to plaintiff's ownership and use thereof, and intends to divert said water from said pipe, and to deprive plaintiff of the use thereof as aforesaid, and that said claim is invalid. The prayer of the complaint is that defendant be required to set forth its right or title to said water-pipe and water; that its rights, so far as they are adverse to plaintiff, be declared invalid; and that plaintiff be quieted in his title and use in said water and pipe to the extent and for the uses and purposes set forth. A demurrer to the complaint, on the ground that the same does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action was sustained, and judgment rendered thereon in favor of the defendant, from which plaintiff appeals.

The only question before us is as to the sufficiency of the complaint. We see no objection to its form. We are not favored with any brief on behalf of the respondent, and are not informed of the grounds upon which the court below held it to be bad. We infer from what is said in appellant's brief that it was held that the property mentioned in the complaint was not real estate, and therefore not the subject of an action to quiet title. The complaint raises two questions: (1) That of the ownership of and right to use the iron pipe through which the water is conducted from the reservoir to the mill; (2) the right to the water contained in the reservoir, to the extent mentioned in the complaint. As to the first of these, the ownership of the soil through or over which the pipe passes is not claimed. If the pipe is personal property, any interference with it would certainly be a trespass, for which a recovery might be had in an action at law. So if, by reason of its connection with plaintiff's mill, it can be regarded as an interest in real estate, an action at law would lie for the recovery of damages, or, if it were necessary to prevent the defendants so using or interfering with the same as to work the plaintiff injury, he might have resorted to the preventive remedy of injunction. But neither of these remedies can be regarded as exclusive. If the parties are claiming conflicting or adverse interests in the property, and it is an interest in real estate, there is no more simple, direct, or satisfactory proceeding by which to settle these conflicting claims than the one here chosen. The water-pipe used, as is alleged in the complaint, is what is sometimes termed in the decided cases an "artificial water-course." Farmer v. Water Co., 56 Cal. 13. We may very properly consider together the alleged right to the water-course, and the ownership of the water itself, and the right to flow the same through the pipe to be used in propelling the machinery of the mill with which it is connected. By the provisions of our Code real or immovable property consists of (1) land; (2) that which is affixed to land; (3) that which is incidental or appurtenant to land; (4) that which is immovable by law. Civil Code, § 658. "A thing is deemed to be incidental or appurtenant to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit; as in the case of a way or water-course, or of a passage for light, air, or heat, from or across the land of another." Id. § 662. The question whether the right to have water flow upon lands, through an artificial water-way, is appurtenant to the real estate frequently arises where a conveyance of the real estate and its appurtenances has been made. The case of Farmer v. Water Co., supra, is a case in point. There the action was to determine the rights of the parties in the water in controversy, and for an injunction. The water had been conveyed by the defendant to one Lamar, who owned about four acres of land, with a dwelling-house and other buildings thereon, and who brought the water so conveyed to him onto said land, and used the same thereon for irrigation and domestic purposes. Lamar conveyed the premises, with the appurtenances belonging thereto, to one Bell, from whom, through mesne conveyances, plaintiff deraigned his title. Subsequently Lamar conveyed the water-right to one Todd, through whom the defendant claimed the right to, and did deprive the plaintiff of the water. The court below found for the defendant, but this court reversed the judgment, holding that the water-right there in controversy became and was appurtenant to the land in the hands of Lamar, and passed, by his deed and mesne conveyances, to the plaintiff. Other cases in this court are to the same effect. Fratt v. Whittier, 58 Cal. 126; Ditch Co. v. Canal Co., 60 Cal. 108. We cite as establishing this doctrine, Ang. Water-Courses, §§ 141, 161, 167; Kilgour v. Ashcom, 5 Har. & J. 83; Philbrick v. Ewing, 97 Mass. 133. There is no direct allegation in the complaint that the use of the water flowing through the pipe is necessary to the use of the plaintiff's mill, but the facts alleged sufficiently show such necessity. We hold that the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the demurrer to it should have been overruled. The judgment is reversed, with instructions to the court below to overrule the demurrer to the complaint.

PEOPLE v. ROSS. (No. 20,433.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 4, 1888.)

CRIMINAL LAW—FORMER CONVICTION—INSTRUCTIONS—VERDICT.

Where an information read to the jury charges petit larceny, and a former conviction of burglary, and defendant pleads guilty to the latter, and the trial is had on the charge of petit larceny only, the jury being instructed that they have nothing to do with the charge of former conviction, defendant cannot complain that the form of verdict, given by the court, stating that the jury find defendant guilty as charged in the information, misled the jury into the belief that they must consider the charge of former conviction in determining his guilt or innocence of petit larceny.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; F. T. BALDWIN, Judge.

Information against one Ross, charging petit larceny, and a former conviction of burglary. Conviction of petit larceny, and defendant appeals.

S. D. Woods, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The defendant was charged with petit larceny, and a prior conviction of burglary, and from the judgment rendered against him, and an order denying a new trial, he appeals. The point which he makes for a reversal of the judgment and order is that the court erred in instructing the jury that, if they found him guilty the form of the verdict should be: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged in the information." The reason advanced by the defendant as showing error upon the part of the court in giving the instruction complained of, is that the jury was misled into the belief that they must consider the question of the defendant's former conviction of the offense of burglary in determining his guilt or innocence of petit larceny; that, inasmuch as the information charging petit larceny and prior conviction of burglary had been read to the jury on the opening of the trial, they, having that in mind, were misled by the court's instruction into the belief that they must, in their verdict, find upon both charges. But an examination of the record shows the entire improbability of such an understanding. After the information had been read, the defendant pleaded not guilty to both charges, and the district attorney stated what he expected to prove, and the defendant answered that portion of the information which charged prior conviction of burglary by entering a plea of guilty. Then the case stood for trial upon the charge of petit larceny alone, so far as the pleadings were concerned, and the province of the jury. When the evidence was introduced it was confined to the question of the guilt or innocence of the defendant of petit larceny. The instructions for the people referred solely to the matter of the guilt or innocence of the defendant of petit larceny. To make it absolutely certain that the charge of prior conviction for burglary should not be considered by the jury, the court, at the instance of the defendant, expressly informed them that as to that matter they had nothing whatever to do. Taking the instructions altogether, it is perfectly plain that the only charge remaining in the information for trial was that of petit larceny; that the jury were positively instructed to confine their deliberations to the consideration of the truth or falsity of that charge upon the evidence before them. There is no reason whatever to suppose that they ever dwelt in the remotest degree upon the charge of prior conviction of burglary, which, in their presence, had been eliminated from the trial by the confession of the defendant by his plea of guilty after the information had been read, and by the emphatic instructions of the court. They must have understood the instruction objected to as relating solely to the charge of petit larceny, the only one about which there was any dispute as to the defendant's guilt. The authorities cited by the defendant are wholly inapplicable to this case. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

APPLEGARTH et al. v. MCQUIDDY et al. (No. 12,653.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 4, 1883.)

CORPORATIONS—ACCOUNTING BY DIRECTORS—SUIT BY STOCKHOLDERS—PLEADING.

A complaint by stockholders against the directors of a ditch and canal company, which alleges that the company "is incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California" for the purpose of constructing a water-ditch for irrigating purposes, and that defendants have fraudulently distributed the water gratuitously, without alleging that the corporation was organized for profit or for the purpose of selling water, does not state a cause of action, since it shows no misconduct on the part of defendants.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county, WILLIAM W. CROSS, Judge.

Action by John Applegarth and Henrietta A. Applegarth against T. J. McQuiddy, D. Burris, W. Newport, and the People's Ditch Company. Plaintiffs are stockholders, and defendants McQuiddy, Burris, and Newport are stockholders and directors of said company. Plaintiffs appeal.

Jarboe, Harrison & Goodfellow and Oregon Sanders, for appellants. Brown & Daggett, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. This action was brought to compel an accounting from the directors of a ditch and canal company for losses claimed to have been sustained by the stockholders, resulting from the alleged fraudulent failure of the directors to sell the water which flowed through an irrigating canal, and to obtain a judgment for the amount so found due for such alleged failure to sell the water. A demurrer was filed, setting up that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. There was no direct allegation in the complaint that the corporation was organized for profit, or that the purposes for which it was incorporated were other than "to construct a water-ditch, for irrigating purposes, in said Tulare county." The court below sustained the demurrer, and, the plaintiffs declining to amend the complaint, judgment passed for the defendants, from which an appeal is taken.

The appellants contend that it is a presumption of law that, when it is alleged in a complaint, as in this case, that a corporation "is incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California," the corporation so mentioned is a corporation organized for profit, and that such an allegation is sufficient to declare that it is so organized. The proposition thus asserted is not correct, for it may happen that, as a matter of fact, a corporation incorporated under the laws of this state to operate an irrigating canal is not one designed for profit. It is true that, as a matter of evidence, it might be presumed that such a corporation was organized for profit; but such presumption would not necessarily arise as a matter of law. Because the complaint alleged that the corporation was organized for the purpose of irrigation, would not of itself compel the presumption that the corporation was organized for the purpose of selling the water in its canal or ditch for irrigation purposes. It would be entirely legal for an irrigating canal and ditch company to be incorporated to distribute water gratuitously. If from the allegation of incorporation, as expressed in the complaint, it is not necessarily to be presumed that the purpose for which the corporation was incorporated was to sell water for irrigating purposes, then there is nothing contained in the pleading which alleges the violation of any existing obligation on the part of the defendants. Having violated no obligation which was binding on them, they cannot be made to respond in damages for failing to sell the water. The allegation in the complaint with respect to fraud on the part of the defendants is not sufficient; for while it is alleged that the directors fraudulently distributed the water for irrigation purposes by doing so gratuitously, there is no allegation that any duty to sell the water rather than to give it away was imposed upon them. Hence there were no facts alleged in the complaint which constituted the supposed fraud. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

FOOTE, C. The points involved in this case are precisely similar to those in the case of Applegarth v. McQuiddy, ante, 692, (decided December 4th,) and on the authority of that case the judgment herein should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PEOPLE ex rel. ATTORNEY GENERAL v. STANFORD et al. (No. 9,783.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 21, 1888.)

1. CORPORATIONS—FRANCHISES—FORFEITURE—PLEADING.

Where a count in a petition prays for the forfeiture of franchises then being exercised by a company of persons acting as a corporation, and alleges that, if it ever had, as a corporation, any legal existence, privilege, or franchise, the same has become forfeited, the previous existence of the corporation not being alleged, no cause of action is stated. Following 18 Pac. Rep. 55.

2. SAME—ADMITTING EXISTENCE.

A count alleging that certain private individuals and a railroad company, joined as defendants, are falsely claiming that there is such a corporation, and usurping certain powers, etc., is demurrable, since by suing the corporation as such its existence is admitted, and therefore no cause of action stated; and, further, an alleged corporation and the members composing it cannot be joined in an action to declare its non-existence.

3. SAME.

Where a complaint seeking the forfeiture of the franchises of a corporation alleges that the corporation has ceased to exist, it must state how and by what means it has ceased to exist.

4. SAME—DEFECTIVE PROCEEDINGS—ALLEGATIONS.

Though an allegation, in a petition to declare the non-existence of a corporation, that there never was such a corporation, is sufficient, if it is insisted that the proceedings under which it acts are defective, the defects must be set out. Reversing 18 Pac. Rep. 85.

5. SAME—QUO WARRANTO—ANSWER—GENERAL DENIAL.

An information in the nature of quo warranto against a corporation and the individuals claiming to compose it, which alleges that there is no such corporation, is, in effect, against the individuals, and not against the corporation, and an answer denying the allegations of the complaint is sufficient, without any disclaimer or justification by the corporation of its exercise of the franchises alleged to have been usurped.

6. SAME—JUDGMENT.

The complaint in such case will not sustain a judgment which, without determining the question of the existence of the corporation, provides that plaintiffs recover of defendants the rights and privileges exercised by them.

7. HORSE AND STREET RAILROADS—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—ASSIGNMENT OF FRANCHISES.

Const. Cal. art. 4, § 31, providing that corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act, does not prohibit a duly-organized corporation from receiving by assignment from its lawful owners a franchise to lay down and maintain a street railroad.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

On rehearing. For former opinion see 18 Pac. Rep. 85.

McAllister & Bergin, for appellants. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., and J. P. Meux, for respondents.

WORKS, J. This cause was decided in department 1, and a rehearing granted. It was held by the department that the second count of the complaint was bad, and that it was error to overrule the demurrer thereto. We adhere to this conclusion, and to that extent the opinion of the department is adopted as the opinion of the court.

There was also a demurrer to the first count of the complaint, which was overruled by the court below. It is urged upon us that this count of the complaint is bad, for the reason that conclusions are pleaded, and not the facts. The pleading is an anomaly. It sues the Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company as one of the defendants, and at the same time alleges that it is not a corporation. It alleges that the private individuals named as defendants, and the Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company, are falsely claiming that there is such a corporation, and that they have unlawfully held and exercised, and still do exercise and claim and hold unlawfully, divers powers, etc. It is well settled that a corporation cannot be sued as such, and brought into court, and the action maintained against it on the ground that it is not a corporation. If it is intended to draw in question the franchises of the corporation, the proceeding must be against the individuals who usurp the franchise. If it is claimed that the corporation is usurping privileges and powers not belonging to it, the corporation is the proper and only proper party. Ang. & A. Corp. § 756; Boone, Corp. §§ 162, 163; State v. Coke Co., 18 Ohio St. 262; People v. Railroad Co., 15 Wend. 113; Draining Co. v. State, 43 Ind. 236. By making the corporation a party it is admitted that it once had an existence. Ang. & A. Corp. § 756. In Draining Co. v. State, supra, the court says: "This first paragraph was clearly bad. It is not against certain persons claiming to be a corporation, but against the corporation by its corporate name. It is brought into court as a corporation, to answer an allegation that it is not and never was a corporation. When a corporation is brought into court by its corporate name, its existence is thereby admitted." In this case, the corporation being made a party, its existence is admitted. It must follow, therefore, that there is no cause of action stated as against it. But there are other defendants sued jointly with it, and charged with having, jointly with such corporation, usurped the rights of a corporation, etc. There is no question made in the record or in the briefs as to the misjoinder of these parties. But we are clear that the people cannot bring both a corporation and the individuals who compose it before the court by information in the nature of quo warranto, and claim the non-existence of the corporation thus brought before the court, and that the other defendants, jointly with it, are claiming to be and exercise the rights and privileges of such corporation. To permit such a course would be subversive of all rules of pleading. If we are right in the position taken, that by suing the corporation as such its existence is admitted, this is an end of the matter, so far as this count of the complaint is concerned, for the reason that the whole force of its allegations, as against the individual defendants, rests upon the sole ground that no such corporation exists.

If the complaint can be defended on the ground that it admits that such a corporation once existed, but has ceased to exist, it is open to the objection made to it, that it does not state the facts showing how and by what means it has ceased to exist. We are of the opinion that it would be sufficient, in an action against individuals, charging that they are wrongfully claiming to act as a corporation, to allege, in general terms, that there never was such a corporation. In such case the allegation that there never was such a corporation covers the whole ground. Nothing can be added to this general statement, which is itself an allegation of a fact. We are equally clear that where the existence of the corporation is expressly averred, or is admitted, it is not sufficient to allege that it has ceased to exist. The facts showing that its existence has terminated must be set forth; and if the claim is that the corporation is acting as such, but the proceedings under which it is acting are defective, the facts showing that it is so claiming to act, and the defects claimed to exist, should be set out specifically. Taking either view of the complaint, therefore, we must hold this count to be bad, and that the court below erred in overruling the demurrer to it.

There was an answer to the complaint, to which a demurrer was sustained. Notwithstanding what was said in the opinion in department, we are constrained to hold that this was error. The answer for each and all of the defendants jointly and severally and specifically denies that "the defendants, or any of them, claiming to be the said Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company, have for a long time, or do now, or at any time have, unlawfully claimed or unlawfully exercised the franchises, powers, or privileges in said city and county in this behalf in said complaint alleged, or any franchise, power, or privilege." The other material allegations of the complaint, are denied in like manner. It is urged that in an action of this kind it is not enough for the defendants to deny the allegations of the complaint, for the reason that the writ requires them to show affirmatively by what right they are exercising the franchises, and so it is held in department. This is true where it is admitted, or not denied, that they are exercising the rights and privileges alleged, and attempt to establish their right to do so. High, Extr. Leg. Rem. §§ 712, 716.

But the defendants, whether it is the corporation or individuals, who are alleged to be wrongfully claiming to be such, may, instead of justifying their claim, deny that they are making such claim and exercising the rights and privileges alleged. It is certainly not necessary to justify their right to lay down and operate a railroad when they deny specifically that they are doing any such thing. The authorities cited in the former opinion are to the effect that the people are not bound to prove anything where the defendants attempt to justify their right or disclaim. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. (3d Ed.) § 893; Ang. & A. Corp. § 756. But these authorities are only applicable where it is admitted, or not denied, that the defendants are exercising the franchises, and the question is as to the right to exercise them. That is not the case here. The issue presented is not one of the right to exercise a franchise, but whether it is being exercised. The impropriety of attempting to join the corporation and the individuals alleged to be acting as such in the same action is thus made manifest. It is impossible that both could be doing the acts alleged. That the individual defendants are in the wrong, as alleged, can only be established by showing that there is no such corporation, and, if the corporation does exist, and is itself exercising the franchises complained of, the individuals charged may truthfully, and with perfect propriety, deny that they are exercising such franchises; and such a denial, it seems to us, is a complete defense to the action as to them. In this case they not only deny that they, as individuals, are doing the acts or exercising the privileges set forth in the complaint, but allege affirmatively that "the Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company was and is a corporation duly organized and acting under the laws of the state of California, and lawfully entitled to own, maintain, and operate its line of street railroad along and upon the several streets, highways, and roads in said complaint alleged, and in so doing to demand and receive fares and tolls in money from all persons and people who may pass over the same, over the cars of said Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company." The answer goes further than is necessary to meet the first count of the complaint. The individual defendants are the only ones against whom it can be claimed any cause of action is stated. They meet the whole of this cause of action by denying that they are or have been doing the acts complained of. They go a step further, and allege that some one else, viz., the Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company, is doing the acts set forth in the complaint, and that it has the right so to do. This latter allegation may properly be treated as mere surplusage, and the answer still contains a complete defense to the action. If we are right in the conclusion reached, that a general averment that no such corporation exists is sufficient, it must follow necessarily that a denial in the same general form is likewise sufficient.

It is clear that in the opinion of the department the first count of the complaint was understood to be against the railroad company, as an existing corporation, on the ground that it was exercising the privileges set forth without right. It is said: "The first count of the complaint alleged that the Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company never had the right or franchise to build and maintain tracks and run cars upon streets within the city and county of San Francisco, and the answer fails to aver facts showing that the company had such rights or franchises." We cannot so construe this count of the complaint. As we have said, it does not claim to recover on the ground that the corporation is usurping franchises or privileges not belonging to it, but, on the contrary, avers in direct terms that there is no such corporation, and that the individuals named are claiming to be such corporation. This being true, we are of the opinion that the cases cited by counsel for respondent to support their contention that a denial is not enough, but facts must be alleged showing a right to exercise the privileges claimed to be usurped, are not controlling. The case of People v. Pfister, 57 Cal. 532, was one in which it was alleged that the corporation "never at any time legally existed as a corporation, and that, if it ever did so exist and was a corporation at any time, its full term of existence expired, and it ceased to be a subsisting corporation on the 11th day of November, 1887." The answer in the case was a "denial of all the material allegations of the complaint." No question seems to have been raised as to the form of either the complaint or answer. Certainly no such question is decided by the court. In the case of People v. Lowden, 8 Pac. Rep. 66, the complaint alleged specifically the facts showing the illegality of the corporation. It was held that the facts stated must be specifically denied, and the denial of the legal conclusions drawn from the facts was insufficient. People v. Clayton, 11 Pac. Rep. 206, was an information to contest the right of the defendant to hold a territorial office in Utah. It was held sufficient to allege generally in the complaint that the defendant "holds and exercises the functions of the office without authority of law therefor," and that such averment cast upon the defendant the burden of pleading and proving his title to the office.

We do not question the correctness of these cases, but do not regard them as in any way antagonistic to the views we have expressed. In the case of People v. Riverside, 66 Cal. 288, 5 Pac. Rep. 350, it was alleged that the defendant was usurping the franchise to be a corporation. It was urged on the part of defendant that the allegation that it was never incorporated was equivalent to an allegation that it never existed, and therefore no action could be maintained against it. The court says: "The argument is not devoid of logical force, and, unless the action given by the Code differs in this respect from that which existed at common law, the weight of authority is doubtless on that side; for it has been held in England and in this country that an information for usurping the franchise to be a corporation should be against the particular person guilty of the usurpation, (Le Roy v. Cusacke, 2 Rolle, 113; People v. Richardson, 4 Cow. 109;) and it was held that quo warranto would not lie against one claiming office under a corporation which had no existence. But in New York and Minnesota, under statutes not materially different from our Code in this respect, it has been held that the statutory action would lie against one usurping a town or county office, although no such town or county as the one in which it was charged the office was usurped existed. People v. Carpenter, 24 N. Y. 86; State v. Parker, 25 Minn. 215. An allegation that a person had usurped the office of supervisor of the county of A. would be inconsistent with one that there was no county of A.; and, since a city cannot exist in this state without incorporation, it is equally inconsistent to sue one as a corporation, and at the same time deny its existence as a corporation. But for this there is a precedent, (People v. Nevada, 6 Cal. 143;) and as no substantial right of any one can be prejudiced by following it, we think no good would result from not doing so; particularly as the object of the Code would be effected, and justice promoted thereby." The opinion shows great doubt in the mind of the court as to the correctness of the rule laid down. No reason is given for the statement that the Code changes the common law in respect to the proper mode of pleading, and we see none. That case differs from this, however. It was an action to determine the validity of certain proceedings to incorporate the city of Riverside, and the particulars in which those proceedings were invalid were specifically set forth. It would seem to be proper in such case that the defendant, claiming to be a city under such proceedings, and acting thereunder as such, should be made a party in an action to determine the validity thereof. Boone, Corp. § 162. In such a proceeding the trustees of the city could not be sued, as there could be no trustees if there were no city, and no individuals could be made parties as claiming to be a corporation. In case of a private corporation the rule must be entirely different. If no corporation exists, the parties who are claiming to be such can be proceeded against. That such is the only proper course where, as in this case, it is claimed that certain persons are unlawfully claiming to be, and are, exercising the functions of a private corporation which never had an existence, the authorities are, so far as we know, agreed, and such we believe to be the proper rule. In People v. Flint, 64 Cal. 49, this court held that in a proceeding of this kind the corporation was the proper defendant. But there the facts were set forth, showing that the defendant was a de facto corporation, acting under articles of incorporation which were claimed and held by the court to be defective. The court, after holding that the corporation was a necessary party, says: "It is well to say, to prevent any misconception, that if, on a new trial, after the alleged corporation had been made a party, it should be adjudged that it never had been legally a corporation, that in that case appropriate proceedings should be had by which the affairs of such de facto corporation should be wound up and settled by the trustees."

The statute of limitations is pleaded by way of answer, and a demurrer thereto was sustained by the court below. This it is claimed was error, but as the case must be reversed on other grounds, and the pleadings be amended, we express no opinion on the question.

As to the other questions arising upon the answer, they relate to the special answer to the second count of the complaint, which count of the complaint was held in the former opinion to be bad. We adhere to that opinion so far as it relates to these questions, except so far as it holds that a duly-organized corporation cannot take an assignment, from its lawful owners, of a franchise to lay down and maintain a street railroad. This is based upon the constitutional provision that "corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act." Article 4, § 31. This provision applies to the formation or creation of corporations, and to the powers directly conferred upon them by legislative enactment, and cannot, in our judgment, be construed as prohibiting the assignment of a franchise to a legally organized corporation, by persons having the lawful right to exercise and transfer the same.

If we look to the judgment rendered in this case it is apparent that it is founded upon the second count of the complaint, which was held by the department to be bad. It does not decree that there is or was no such corporation as the Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company, nor that the said corporation, or the other defendants, are usurping the right to be such corporation, but simply decrees that the plaintiff "recover of the defendants the said rights, powers, and franchises by them, the said defendants, exercised and claimed, viz., of constructing, maintaining, and operating an iron railroad, commonly called and known as a 'street railroad,' along and upon certain of the streets, roads, and highways, to-wit," describing the route; and the defendants are enjoined from exercising said franchises. We are of the opinion that, upon the decision of the department that the second count of the complaint was bad, the judgment of the court below should have been reversed, for the reason that the judgment cannot be supported by the first count. The sole ground upon which the first count is based, viz., the non-existence of the corporation, is left wholly undetermined by the judgment. The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded.

KNIGHT v. RUSS et al. (No. 12,659.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 4, 1888.)

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—COMPENSATION—RETAINER—EVIDENCE.

In an action for professional services as attorney at law in certain cases, evidence of the value of a "retainer" in the cases is admissible on behalf of plaintiff, the value of the services including the value of the retainer.

2. WITNESS—COMPETENCY—TRANSACTIONS WITH DECEDENT.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1880, providing that parties to an action against an executor or administrator upon a claim against the estate of a decedent cannot be witnesses as to any matter occurring before the latter's death, an attorney at law who sues for professional services rendered the decedent is not incompetent to testify as to the nature and extent of his law practice.

3. TRIAL—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—READING PLEADINGS TO JURY—COMPETENCY AS WITNESS.

Plaintiff, arguing the case in his own behalf, is not precluded from reading to the jury the claim and verification thereof, filed in the case, on the ground that he is incompetent as a witness to the facts stated therein.

4. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—COMPENSATION—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction that, for the purpose of determining the value of plaintiff's services, "it is proper to receive evidence as to the price usually charged and received for similar services by other persons of the same profession, in the same vicinity, and practicing in the same court," is correct.

5. APPEAL—REVIEW—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

There being evidence that plaintiff was employed by deceased, and that his services were worth the amount allowed by the verdict, the latter will not be set aside as against the weight of evidence.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; JAMES E. MURPHY, Judge.

Action by George A. Knight against Zipporah Russ and others, executrix and executors of Joseph Russ, deceased.

J. D. H. Chamberlin, J. H. G. Weaver, and Geo. W. Hunter, for appellant.
John A. McQuaid, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The plaintiff presented a claim, properly verified, against the estate of Joseph Russ, deceased, for $1,500, "for professional services as attorney and counselor at law, rendered in the month of May, 1886, at the city and county of San Francisco, in the following cases," etc. The cases referred to were four indictments in the United States district court for subornation of perjury; one of the indictments being against the deceased. The claim was rejected, and thereupon this action was commenced to recover the amount thereof. The case was tried by a jury, and the verdict was in favor of the plaintiff for the full amount claimed. The defendants moved for a new trial, and have appealed from the judgment and from the order denying their motion.

At the trial it appeared that the indictments were filed in court on the 3d of April, 1886, and demurrers thereto were interposed by another attorney; that one of the cases was taken up as a test case, and the demurrer therein was argued by the attorney who filed it on the 28th of April; that the demurrer in that case was sustained on the 2d of May, and thereupon all of the indictments were dismissed. The plaintiff then, after proving that he was an attorney at law and in good standing at the bar, introduced evidence tending to show that, after the demurrers were filed, he was engaged by the deceased to assist in the defense of all the cases, and that he was present in court at the time of the argument and at the time of the decision, and had rendered some service outside. He then called witnesses to prove the value of a retainer in the cases. This evidence was objected to on the ground that the action was brought to recover the value of professional services rendered, and not the value of a retainer. The objection was overruled and an exception reserved. It is earnestly argued for appellants that this ruling was erroneous, but we think it correct. The word "retainer," when used in this connection, is defined by Bouvier to be "the act of a client by which he engages an attorney or counselor to manage a cause, either by prosecuting it, when he is plaintiff, or defending it when he is defendant." Bouv. Law Dict. It has been held that whenever an attorney is employed generally, to prosecute or defend an action, he may, after the action has been terminated, recover from his client a retaining fee, although the contract of employment did not expressly or specifically mention a retaining fee. Perry v. Lord, 111 Mass. 504; Blackman v. Webb, 17 Pac. Rep. 464. In the last-named case the supreme court of Kansas said: "When an attorney is engaged to prosecute or defend in an action, his entire services in that action are engaged for his client, and he cannot perform services for the adverse party. He is retained by his client for that entire action; and, whether his client may ever call upon him to perform services or not, he cannot perform services in that action for the adverse party, nor can he receive any fee or compensation from the adverse party. All his skill and ability for that case is at the command of his client. A retainer of an attorney at law is presumably worth something to the client, and presumably a loss to the attorney; and, whether the attorney is ever called upon to perform any services or not in that case, he may, when the case is terminated, recover for whatever the evidence shows the retainer was worth." When an action is brought to recover the value of an attorney's services, the retainer, it not having been paid, constitutes a part of the plaintiff's cause of action; but it is not necessary to set forth the items of the account in the complaint. It is sufficient to state the facts constituting the cause of action in ordinary and concise language, and, if the defendant desires further particulars, he may call for them, and they must be given him within a limited time. Code Civil Proc. §§ 426, 454. At the trial, if the issue has been tendered as to the value of the services, their value must be proved, and that will include the value of the retainer.

The plaintiff was called as a witness in his own behalf, and was asked if he was an attorney at law, how long he had practiced law, how long he had been practicing in San Francisco, whether he had devoted considerable time to criminal practice, and what had been the income from his practice for the last two or three years. These questions were all objected to by the defendants, upon the ground that the plaintiff was rendered incompetent to be a witness in the case by the provisions of section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and the objections were overruled. That section provides that parties to an action against an executor or administrator, "upon a claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person," cannot be witnesses "as to any matter of fact occurring before the death of such deceased person." The evident purpose of the section was to prevent parties from testifying to matters tending to establish the asserted claim or demand, and not to prevent their testifying in reference to other matters which may arise incidentally. The plaintiff's testimony was wholly as to incidental matters; and they were matters, too, which cannot be said to have occurred before the death of deceased. In our opinion, it did not come within the inhibition of the statute, and the ruling of the court was therefore proper.

Many other objections were taken by defendants to the admission of evidence offered by plaintiff, but they do not require special notice. After carefully going over the record, we are unable to see that any prejudicial error was committed by the rulings of the court.

When the testimony was all in, the plaintiff argued the case to the jury in his own behalf. In doing so he read the complaint, and the verified claim which was attached thereto and made a part thereof. Counsel for defendants objected to his reading the claim and verification thereof, on the ground that he could not be a witness to the facts stated therein, and, if allowed to read them, would, in effect, do indirectly what he could not do directly. The court overruled the objection, and defendants reserved an exception. In commencing a trial before a jury the pleadings are ordinarily read to the jury, or the facts of the case are fully stated by counsel; and if, in the progress of the argument, counsel desire to again read the pleadings, or to further call the attention of the jury to the facts alleged, there can, so far as we can see, be no impropriety in their doing so. The argument is under the control of the court, and extraneous matters should not be brought in or commented upon. But counsel have a right to discuss the case in all its bearings; and, so long as they do not go outside of it, and attempt to bring in other matters, cannot be restrained by the court. The verified claim in this case constituted a part of the complaint, and the plaintiff had a right, if he desired to do so, to read the whole complaint, and he violated thereby no rule of law or propriety.

In its instructions to the jury, the court, among other things, told them that if they found that the deceased employed the plaintiff, then the plaintiff was entitled to the value of the services rendered, taking into consideration the nature of the services performed, the plaintiff's standing in his profession for learning, skill, etc., and then added: "For the purpose of aiding in determining this, it is proper to receive evidence as to the prices usually charged and received for similar services by other persons of the same profession, in the same vicinity and practicing in the same court." The part of the instruction above quoted was excepted to by defendants, and it is now claimed that it was misleading and erroneous. We think the instruction proper. It stated a well-settled rule of law, and there was therefore no error in giving it. Vilas v. Downer, 21 Vt. 419; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 557.

It is also urged for the appellants that the verdict was not justified by the evidence. But there was evidence tending strongly to show that plaintiff was employed by the deceased to assist in the cases named, and that his services and retainer were worth as much as he was allowed by the verdict. We cannot say, therefore, that the judgment should be reversed on this ground. In our opinion, the judgment and order should be affirmed.

I concur: FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

FRANKISH v. SMITH. (No. 12,611.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 4, 1888.)

QUIETING TITLE—EVIDENCE.

Where the decisive question in an action to quiet title is whether a note given for the purchase of the land was intended as an absolute payment, or as an evidence of debt, and the evidence is conflicting, a finding that it was merely evidence of debt will not be disturbed.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; JAMES E. GIBSON, Judge.

Action by Charles Frankish against J. H. Smith to quiet title to a piece of land which plaintiff had contracted to sell to defendant. Plaintiff obtained judgment. Defendant appeals.

Rowell & Rowell, for appellant. W. Taylour English, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. Action to quiet title. The principal point of contention in this case is as to whether a note for $500, given by Smith on the purchase of a piece of land from Frankish, was intended as an absolute payment, or as an evidence of debt. The defendant contends that the evidence shows it was accepted as an absolute payment of so much of the purchase price for the land, and that the remedy of the plaintiff was thenceforward by suit on the note, distinct from any claim on the land. The court below found that the note was not accepted as payment; that it was not paid when due; and that thereupon the plaintiff, as he had a right to do under a written contract of sale of the land contemporaneous with and a part of the same transaction as the giving of the note for $500, rescinded the contract of sale; and that the tender of payment of the note last mentioned, and another note for a deferred payment, given at the time when the agreement to sell was made, came too late. There was a sharp conflict in the evidence upon the points involved, and we advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

HARRIS et ux. v. SUTHERLAND, (BOX, Intervenor.) (No. 12,655.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 4, 1888.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

A decree deciding that a deed absolute on its face is not a mortgage will not be disturbed, on appeal, where the evidence is conflicting.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; J. B. CAMPBELL, Judge.

Action by C. C. Harris and Pattie A. Harris, his wife, against William Sutherland, to redeem land from an absolute conveyance made by plaintiffs to defendant, which plaintiffs allege to be a mortgage. A. J. Box intervened, claiming the land as an innocent purchaser from Sutherland. The court held the instrument to be a deed, and not a mortgage. Plaintiffs appeal.

Hinds & Merriam, for appellants. E. D. Edwards, for defendant and respondent. C. G. Sayle, for intervenor and respondent.

FOOTE, C. This case turns upon the point as to whether or not the evidence is sufficient to warrant the court below in finding that a certain instrument in writing made by the plaintiff to Sutherland, the defendant, was intended to be a deed, and not a mortgage. The evidence is conflicting, and the finding should be upheld. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

NUNEZ v. MORGAN et ux. (No. 11,601.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 7, 1888.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—CONTRACT—PARTIAL PERFORMANCE.

Where a mortgage had been released as to that portion of the premises purchased by defendant, and on foreclosure against the entire tract, plaintiff, representing that he was interested in having a speedy and cheap foreclosure, and had arranged to purchase the premises at the sale, agreed that if defendant would bear certain expenses of a conveyance and fence, and would allow judgment of foreclosure, plaintiff, on obtaining title, would convey to defendant his portion, defendant, on complying with his part of the agreement, and on plaintiff's obtaining title to the premises, is entitled to a specific execution of the contract.

2. SAME—PLEADING THE AGREEMENT—STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

A complaint on the agreement need not aver that it was in writing.

3. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF—WAIVER—PAROL EVIDENCE OF CONTRACT.

The benefit of the statute of frauds is waived where no objection to the admission of parol evidence of the contract is made.

4. TRIAL—FAILURE TO FIND ON ISSUES—WAIVER.

It is not necessary that there be a finding that a contract within the statute of frauds was in writing, especially where the right to interpose the defense of the statute is waived.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; F. J. McCANN, Judge.

Ejectment by Manuel S. Nunez against Daniel B. and Mary A. Morgan, and cross-complaints for specific performance. Demurrers to the answer, (except the first count thereof, which was a denial of plaintiff's right to possession, etc.) and to the cross-complaints, were overruled. Plaintiff then answered the cross-complaints, and the court found the issues thereon in favor of defendants. Motion for new trial was denied, and plaintiff appeals.

Goldsby & Jeter, for appellant. W. D. Story, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. The plaintiff instituted this action against Daniel B. Morgan and Mary A., his wife, to recover possession of a tract of land. The complaint is in the usual form in such actions. The answer denies that the plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the land in suit, and further denies that the defendants ever unlawfully or wrongfully withheld from the plaintiff the possession of the land. The defendants, by way of defense, set up a contract between the plaintiff and defendant Daniel as in equity entitling them to the possession of the land in suit, and in two cross-complaints set forth substantially the same contract as entitling them to have the plaintiff, holding the legal title to the land, convey it to them in execution of such contract. Issue was joined as to the material allegations of the cross-complaints. The cause was tried, and the court found the facts as alleged in the cross-complaints, and decreed a specific execution of the contract. The averments of the cross-complaints set forth the following: That on the 21st day of December, 1876, the defendant Daniel, for the consideration of $2,500, purchased of one J. L. McLaughlin, who was then the owner thereof, the tract of land involved herein; that McLaughlin, on the same day, executed a conveyance of this land to the defendant above named; that on the 15th of October, 1874, the premises were mortgaged by McLaughlin to one Porter; that at the same time that the conveyance above mentioned was executed, McLaughlin procured of Porter a release of this land from the lien of this mortgage, which release was duly executed, acknowledged, and recorded; that under the conveyance above mentioned defendants entered into possession of the premises and have since continuously resided thereon; that on the 13th of September, 1880, Porter commenced an action in the superior court of the proper county for the foreclosure of the mortgage mentioned above against the plaintiff and defendants herein, and others; that in this suit Porter proceeded for a foreclosure against the whole tract mortgaged by McLaughlin to him, and demanded judgment of foreclosure against the tract mentioned herein, as well as the other lands covered by his mortgage; that on the 25th of May, 1882, a judgment of foreclosure was entered against the premises, and the other lands proceeded against in the suit, and a sale of such land ordered, which sale was had, at which the plaintiff became the purchaser; that in the early part of May, 1882, and before defendants had answered in the action of Porter for foreclosure, the plaintiff represented to defendant Daniel that he had an arrangement with Porter whereby he was to become the purchaser of the mortgaged land after the mortgage should be foreclosed, and that he, the plaintiff, was interested in having the foreclosure suit pressed as rapidly as possible, and in having the cost and expenses of such suit made as light as possible, and the plaintiff, Nunez, then and there promised to and agreed with defendant Daniel that if this defendant would agree to bear the necessary expenses attending the conveyance to him and of erecting the line fence between the tract in suit and other lands of Nunez, and if the defendants would file their answer in the suit admitting the allegations of the complaint and permitting judgment of foreclosure to be entered against the land described in the complaint, that Nunez, as soon as he obtained the title to this land, would convey it to defendant Daniel by a good and sufficient deed, and would not attempt to dispossess the defendants thereof; that the foregoing proposition was accepted and agreed to by the defendant above mentioned; that defendants, relying on the promise above stated, and in consideration thereof, complied with the said agreement; that Nunez, after acquiring the title as above stated to the land, refused, on request of the defendants, to comply with his promise, and refused to make the promised conveyance.

The contract mentioned in this action, and of which specific performance is asked, is as above set forth, and we are of opinion that it is a contract of that character that, if established by proof, the defendant Daniel is entitled to have of the plaintiff the specific execution thereof. We do not understand that the contract is at all dependent upon an uncertain or indefinite contingency. Whatever contingency ever existed in the dealings between the plaintiff and defendant Daniel, in regard to this land, did depend upon the plaintiff's becoming the purchaser at the foreclosure sale under the decree above mentioned; but, the plaintiff having purchased at such sale, the contingency disappeared. It is argued "that the facts averred in said pretended cross-complaints do not take the alleged contract out of the statute of frauds." Admitting that the statute of frauds requires, as essential to the validity of such a contract as that involved in this suit, that it should be in writing, still, according to the well-settled rule in this state, we think the cross-complaints, though they lack the averment that the contract pleaded was in writing, are and must be held sufficient. In Wakefield v. Greenhood, 29 Cal. 599, which was a case involving the provision of the statute of frauds requiring that the agreement of the defendant to answer for the default of another should be in writing, it was held, on general demurrer, that it was not necessary to aver in a complaint on such agreement that it was in writing. The court further remarked on this point as follows: "If the contract stated in the declaration or bill in equity was denied, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff or complainant to prove by legal evidence its existence, and this could be done only by the production or proof of the execution and contents of the written agreement or some note or memorandum thereof, executed according to the provisions of the statute of frauds." 29 Cal. 599, 600. The rule, as declared in Wakefield v. Greenhood, was followed in Brennan v. Ford, 46 Cal. 8. The contract counted on the complaint in that case was one for the exchange of lands. In McDonald v. Association, 51 Cal. 210, which was an action to rescind a contract for the sale and purchase of land, etc., a like ruling was made as to the sufficiency of the allegations of the complaint in regard to the contract. There does not appear to have been any demurrer to the complaint in the case cited. In the cross-complaints herein the contract for the conveyance of land is set forth as stated above; and, following the decisions of this court above referred to, we must hold that the averments of the cross-complaints are sufficient. We cannot conceive that the rule held applicable to a complaint would be different when applied to a cross-complaint, and, applying the rule referred to to the cross-complaints, the averments in it are all that the law requires.

When the testimony to prove the allegations of the cross-complaints was introduced by defendants, no written evidence of the contract counted on was offered. The testimony was entirely parol. But to this testimony plaintiff made no objection and reserved no exception. The plaintiff had denied the stipulations of the contract, as set forth by the defendants, and might have objected to the evidence on the ground that it was not written, and reserved an exception, had the ruling of the court been adverse to his objection. Conceding, now, that the contract declared on was void, by reason of the statute of frauds, because it was verbal, still, as no objection was made by plaintiff to the evidence when offered, it must be held that the right to invoke the statute of frauds was waived by the appellant, and it cannot now be invoked in this court as a reason why the judgment should be reversed or a new trial granted. The defense of the statute of frauds can be waived, and that it was waived by the plaintiff in failing to object at the time to the parol evidence when offered, we think there can be no doubt. Such we understand to be the ruling in McDonald v. Association, above cited, where it was held that, "if the contract was in fact merely verbal, objections should have been taken to the proof offered to establish it, and, if the objections were overruled, an exception should have been properly reserved." It is not found that the contract was in writing, but this is not necessary within the ruling in McDonald v. Association, supra. Moreover, the plaintiff had waived his right by his neglect at the trial, as just above pointed out, to invoke the statute of frauds. We have examined the other points made on behalf of plaintiff, (appellant here,) and are of opinion that they are either not maintainable, or, if maintainable, they are not of such character as to call for a reversal. There is no error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed. Ordered accordingly.

COWAN et al. v. THEIR CREDITORS. (No. 11,413.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 4, 1888.)

EXEMPTION—RIGHT TO EXEMPTION OUT OF FIRM PROPERTY.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 690, exempting from execution specified property of a judgment debtor, and act Cal. 1850, § 35, providing that, upon partners being adjudged insolvent, all the property of the firm and all the separate estate of each of the partners shall be taken, excepting such parts thereof as may be exempt by law, a partner cannot, on insolvency of the firm, claim an exemption out of firm property.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; F. E. SPENCER, Judge.

J. H. Campbell, for appellants. C. D. Wright and T. H. Laine, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. W. W. Cowan and Thomas Scott were partners engaged in the business of farming and fruit-raising in the county of Santa Clara. In September, 1885, they filed in the superior court of that county a petition asking to be adjudged insolvents, and discharged from their debts. All of the property mentioned and described in the petition and schedule was partnership property, used in carrying on the business of the firm, and all the debts were partnership liabilities. In due time each of the petitioners applied to the court to have certain parts of the property set apart for his use and benefit, on the ground that such parts were by law exempt from execution. Subsequently Scott withdrew his petition, and after a hearing the court denied the petition of Cowan upon the ground that he "was not entitled to have any part of the property claimed by him, and heretofore described by him, set apart to him, for the reason that the whole thereof is partnership property, and therefore not exempt by law from execution." Cowan appealed from the order, and the only question is, was the court right in its conclusion as to the law applicable to the matter?

Section 690 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for the exemption from execution of property belonging to a judgment debtor, and names the kinds and amount of property which shall be treated as exempt. Section 35 of the insolvent act of 1880 provides that two or more persons who are partners in business may be adjudged insolvent, "in which case an order shall be issued in the manner provided by this act, upon which all the joint stock and property of the partnership, and also all the separate estate of each of the partners, shall be taken, excepting such parts thereof as may be exempt by law." And section 60 of the act declares that "it shall be the duty of the court having jurisdiction of the proceedings to exempt and set apart for the use and benefit of said insolvent such real and personal property as is by law exempt from execution."

If the petitioner had been the sole owner of the property in question, there can be no doubt that it would have been exempt from execution, and the duty of the court to set it apart for his use and benefit. Did the fact that it was partnership property change the rule in this regard, and make it subject to seizure and sale by creditors? The authorities upon the question are sharply conflicting, and a majority of the cases hold that partnership property is not exempt. See Thomp. Homest. & Ex. §§ 194-216, where the cases are very fully collected and reviewed. See, also, Freem. Ex'ns, (2d Ed.) § 221.

The leading case in favor of the proposition that partnership property is exempt is Stewart v. Brown, 37 N. Y. 350. In that case a pair of horses and their harness, which were partnership property, had been taken under an execution, and the court said: "If the partners have such an ownership as subjects the property to seizure on execution, they have also such an ownership as entitles them to claim its exemption in a case plainly falling within the terms and intent of the statute. * * * If each of the respondents had owned a pair of horses, both teams would have been exempt, upon the state of facts found by the referee. It would be an obvious perversion of the statute to hold that the plaintiffs forfeited its protection, by owning but a single team between them, used for the common support of both. The language of the statute should be construed in harmony with its humane and remedial purpose. Its design was to shield the poor, and not to strip them. The interest it assumes to protect is that belonging to the debtor, be it more or less. The ownership of the team may be joint or several; it may be limited or absolute. Whatever it be, within the limitations of the statute, the debtor's interest is exempt, in view of his own necessity, and of the probable destitution to which its loss might reduce a family dependent on him for support." And see Skinner v. Shannon, 44 Mich. 86, 6 N. W. Rep. 108; McCoy v. Brennan, 61 Mich. 362, 28 N. W. Rep. 129; Burns v. Harris, 67 N. C. 140; Evans v. Bryan, 95 N. C. 174; Blanchard v. Paschal, 68 Ga. 32.

On the other side the leading case seems to be Pond v. Kimball, 101 Mass. 105. In that case the court said: "We agree with plaintiff's counsel that the statute is humane and beneficial in its purpose and operation, and fairly entitled to as liberal a construction as can be given it consistently with its true and just interpretation. There are many difficulties in the way of applying it to the case of copartners and joint owners, and these difficulties we find to be insuperable. Property purchased with the joint funds of the firm, and constituting a portion of its capital, must necessarily be subject to all the incidents of partnership property. On the decease of one member of the firm it would go to the surviving member, and he would have a right to hold it, to be used in settling the affairs of the concern and paying its debts. In the case of numerous partners, can it be said that each would have the right to claim, as exempt from attachment for the joint debts, $100 worth of material and stock, or is the whole firm to be considered as one debtor only? Does the exempted property in that case belong to the partners jointly, or does each take a separate share? It appears to us that the statute is intended to apply only to the case of a single and individual debtor. The exemption which it gives is strictly personal. The statute speaks in the singular number throughout, unless, possibly, the clause as to fishermen be an exception. Its apparent object is to secure to the debtor the means of supporting himself and his family, by following his trade or handicraft, with tools belonging to himself. It also provides that his family are to be secured in the enjoyment of certain indispensable comforts and necessities out of his property. But property belonging to the firm cannot be said to belong to either partner as his separate property. He has no exclusive interest in it. It belongs as much to his partner as it does to him, and cannot, in whole or in part, be appropriated (so long as it remains undivided) to the benefit of his family. It may be wholly contingent and uncertain whether any of it will belong to him on the winding up of the business and the settlement of his accounts with the firm. The exemption, in our opinion, is several, and not joint. It applies to the debtor in the singular number, and is personal and individual only. If he desires to form a partnership, and combine his means with those of one, or more than one, other person, he must take the precaution to retain exclusive ownership of his tools and implements, allowing the use of them to his associates, or he will lose entirely the benefit of the statutory exemptions as to that kind of property." And see Gaylord v. Imhoff, 26 Ohio St. 317; Guptil v. McFee, 9 Kan. 30; Spiro v. Paxton, 3 Lea, 75; Gill v. Lattimore, 9 Lea, 381; White v. Heffner, 30 Ia. Ann. 1280; Giovanni v. Bank, 55 Ala. 305; Baker v. Sheehan, 29 Minn. 235. 12 N. W. Rep. 704; State v. Spencer, 64 Mo. 355; Bonsall v. Comly, 44 Pa. St. 442. Without discussing the question further, it is enough, under all the circumstances, to say that we think the rule, which is supported by the great preponderance of authority, the safer and better one, and we therefore advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order appealed from is affirmed.

SULLIVAN v. GRASS VALLEY QUARTZ M. & M. Co. (No. 12,650.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 6, 1888.)

1. ACTION—SEPARATE CAUSE OF ACTION.

Findings that defendant employed plaintiff to do certain tunneling at a specified price per foot; that it inadvertently let the same work to L. on the same terms, and, on discovery of the mistake, "arranged with plaintiff and L. to do the work together, which they did;" that defendant, on the termination of plaintiff's contract, measured the work done, and promised to pay plaintiff his share, an amount stated,—show a separate cause of action for the amount found due plaintiff.

2. CONTRACTS—ALTERATION AND MODIFICATION.

L.'s assent to the promise to pay the amount found due plaintiff was not necessary.

3. SAME—CONSTRUCTION—PERFORMANCE.

It having been originally agreed that, if plaintiff should find work elsewhere, he should have the right to terminate the contract, and he having found such work, and notified defendant of the termination, and defendant having measured the work and promised to pay, defendant cannot object that the contract was entire, and that there was not complete performance.

4. CORPORATIONS—ACTIONS AGAINST—PLEADING—AUTHORITY OF OFFICERS.

A complaint, in an action against a corporation for services, alleging that plaintiff was "employed by defendant through one A., its secretary," need not aver the secretary's authority to bind the corporation.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; J. M. WALLING, Judge.

Action by Cornelius Sullivan against the Grass Valley Quartz Milling & Mining Company for balance on a contract to do certain tunneling. A demurrer to the complaint was overruled. Defendant answered, and judgment on the evidence was given for plaintiff. Defendant appeals.

T. S. Ford, for appellant. C. W. Kitts, for respondent.

WORKS, J. The appeal in this case is from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and comes up on the judgment-roll. The complaint is to recover $56, and to enforce a mechanic's lien therefor. It is alleged that the plaintiff was "employed by the defendant, through one John Reilly, its secretary," to run 50 feet of tunnel on the defendant's mine, and was to receive therefor $3 per foot—the defendant to furnish certain tools and materials, the price to be paid, one-third as the work progressed, and the remainder at the completion of the work; that work was commenced on said tunnel and continued until the defendant failed to furnish the material, "and by agreement of all the parties the contract was terminated;" and that the value of the labor has been paid, except the sum of $56. The complaint also contains the necessary allegations to entitle the plaintiff to a mechanic's lien. There is a demurrer to the complaint on the grounds (1) that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; (2) it is ambiguous, unintelligible, and uncertain in that (a) it does not appear therefrom that Reilly, the secretary of the defendant, had authority to make the contract sued on; (b) it cannot be ascertained from it whether it is sought to recover the value of the services rendered, or a balance due under the contract. The demurrer was overruled. The defendant, by its answer, denies the making of a separate contract with the plaintiff, and alleges, affirmatively, that it did enter into a joint contract with the plaintiff and one Lehey by which said parties agreed to do the work mentioned in the complaint; that the work was done by them under such contract, and paid for in full. The case was tried by the court. The court finds, in substance: (1) That the defendant, through its secretary, entered into the contract with plaintiff, as set out in the complaint, and, in addition, that it was agreed that if, during the work under the contract, he found work at wages elsewhere, he might terminate the contract. (2) That about the same time the defendant, through another officer, inadvertently let the same work to Lehey on the same terms, except as to the privilege given to terminate the contract. (3) That upon the discovery of the mistake that had been made defendant arranged with plaintiff and Lehey to work on said contract together, which they did. (4) That they continued work until the tools used by them were stolen, and defendant was by plaintiff requested to replace them, but failed for two days to do so, and in the mean time plaintiff found other work at wages, notified defendant, quit work, and demanded his pay; that defendant measured the work done by plaintiff and Lehey, and found that 44 feet of tunnel had been constructed, and then and there promised to pay plaintiff for his share of the same, viz., $56, (he having previously received $10,) the same to be paid when Lehey completed the work. (5) That Lehey completed the work October 14, 1887, and defendant paid him therefor in full, and plaintiff has not been paid or tendered the amount due him by defendant or Lehey.

(6) That plaintiff's work was worth $56, that he directed defendant not to pay the same to Lehey, and that plaintiff and Lehey never jointly demanded payment of the amount due on the contract. There were other findings, but they relate to the mechanic's lien, and need not be noticed, as no question arises on them.

1. It is urged that the court below erred in overruling the demurrer to the complaint. The objection made to the complaint is that it alleges the making of the contract by the secretary of the defendant, and fails to allege that he had authority to bind the company. The complaint does not allege the making of the contract by the secretary. The allegation is that the plaintiff was employed by the defendant through the secretary. It would, no doubt, have been better pleading to have omitted all reference to the secretary; but, as the allegation is directly made that the employment was by the defendant, we regard it as sufficient.

2. The findings of the court are attacked and minutely criticised. The evidence not being before us, we must be guided, as to the facts, by these findings. It is contended by the appellant that the findings are inconsistent in many particulars, but that, taking them as a whole, they establish a joint contract between the plaintiff and Lehey and the defendant; that the work was paid for in full to one of the joint contractors who had a right to receive it; and that no separate cause of action could accrue to the plaintiff, admitting that a balance of the contract price remained unpaid, if the findings show a joint contract and payment in full, as claimed, the position taken is undoubtedly correct. But we are clearly of the opinion that the findings cannot bear such a construction. The original contract was with the plaintiff alone for the whole work. By mistake the same 50 feet of tunnel work was also let to Lehey. By a subsequent arrangement it was agreed that they should both go on and do the work. The price was so much per foot. The work of each could easily be done separately, and both receive payment for what he actually did. Whether this was the arrangement or not does not clearly appear from the findings, but it does appear that, when plaintiff came to quit work, the defendant treated the contract as several, measured it, found what was due him for his share of the work, and agreed to pay him as soon as Lehey finished the work. This, it seems to us, gave the plaintiff a separate cause of action for the amount thus found to be due him. Thereafter the defendant could not shield itself from liability to him by payment to Lehey. It is contended, further, that the contract was entire, and, as plaintiff did not complete the work, he could not recover, and the agreement to pay him for the work done was without consideration. But the court expressly finds that plaintiff was, by the original contract, given the right to terminate the contract when he could get work elsewhere at wages; that he did find such work; notified the defendant that he terminated the contract; the defendant assented to it, measured his work, and agreed to pay him. He was probably entitled to immediate payment, but the court finds that it was agreed that he should receive his money when Lehey finished the work. If the contract could have been considered as entire before, it was thus modified, and the obligation to complete the contract was waived. It is further urged that the agreement was not binding because Lehey was not a party to it. But the findings do not show that Lehey had any interest in the matter, or that his assent was necessary to its validity. The defendant saw fit to contract with the plaintiff, and, if he was originally bound to complete the work, to release him from the obligation, and agree to pay him for what he had done. This must be binding upon it whether Lehey assented to it or not. The fallacy of the whole argument of counsel for appellant is that he assumes that the contract sued on was a joint one, with the plaintiff and Lehey, while the facts, as found by the court, show it to be a several contract with the plaintiff alone. We do not regard the findings as inconsistent or contradictory as claimed. They are consistent with the cause of action alleged in the complaint, and support the judgment. The judgment is affirmed.

KERNS v. DEAN. (No. 8,211.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 18, 1888.)

1. EVIDENCE—BOOKS OF ACCOUNTS.

In ejectment by the grantee of the vendor to enforce a forfeiture for non-payment of the purchase price, the vendor's account-book, containing a charge against and credits in favor of the vendee, is not admissible to prove that the purchase price is in part unpaid; the book not being shown to be one of original entries, and it not appearing that such entries were made at the date of the transactions recorded, or were known by the person making them to be correct. Following Kerns v. McKean, 18 Pac. Rep. 122.

2. EJECTMENT—PLEADING—COMPLAINT.

In ejectment for non-payment of the purchase price under contract of sale, where the complaint states facts constituting a cause of action, it is not demurrable because it also states facts which give defendant an opportunity to redeem, and to avoid the effect of a judgment of restitution by performing the contract.

3. SAME—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

Defendant cannot object that the amounts alleged to be due under the contract are barred by the statute; the theory of the complaint being, not that defendant is absolutely liable for such amounts, but that he should be adjudged to have forfeited his right to the land, unless he pay such amounts within a reasonable time fixed by the judgment.

4. VENDOR AND VENDEE—CONTRACT—RIGHTS OF VENDOR—NOTICE OF FORFEITURE.

The contract provided that in case of non-performance by the vendee, the vendor might rescind by filing a notice of forfeiture in the county recorder's office, and that thereupon all moneys paid on the contract should be retained as compensation for use of the premises. Held, that no recovery could be had for rents prior to the filing of such notice; the vendee's rights up to that time being limited to the forfeited payments.

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—ADVERSE POSSESSION—NOTICE.

Defendant having entered into possession under contract with the vendor, his holding cannot be adverse unless its hostility has been manifested by unequivocal acts brought expressly, or by legal implication, to the vendor's knowledge.¹

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—CLAIMS AGAINST DECEDENT.

The vendee being dead, and no personal demand made against his estate, it was not necessary to present the claim to his administrator.

7. SAME—REMOVAL OF ADMINISTRATOR—RIGHTS OF SUCCESSOR—PROSECUTION OF ACTIONS.

Where an administrator defendant, pending his appeal, is removed, his successor has the right to prosecute the appeal and defend the action.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; J. H. LOGAN, Judge.

Action to recover possession of land, brought by Thomas Kerns, as assignee of W. H. Patterson, against P. F. Dean, administrator of the estate of A. P. Sanford, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Garber & Bishop and J. A. Barnham, for appellant. Chas. B. Younger, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. Many of the facts and questions involved in this case are identical with those which were before this court in the cases Kerns v. McKean, (No. 8,040,) 65 Cal. 411, 4 Pac. Rep. 404; Kerns v. McKean, (No. 11,207,) 18 Pac. Rep. 122, and Kerns v. Dean, (No. 8,041,) 6 Pac. Rep. 704. The most of the facts are stated in the opinion of the court in said case of Kerns v. McKean, in 65 Cal. It is sufficient to say here that on October 25, 1867, W. H. Patterson, being the owner in fee of the land described in the complaint, made a written contract with A. P. Sanford, now deceased, by which the latter agreed to pay the former a certain sum of money, —$500 in cash, and the balance in four equal annual payments, with a stipulated interest; and Patterson agreed that upon the payment of said money he would convey the land to Sanford. By the terms of the contract Sanford was to have possession of the land, and he immediately took possession under the contract, and he and his administrators have been in possession ever since. It was provided that if Sanford failed to pay any installment when due, Patterson might declare the contract and all of Sanford's rights thereunder forfeited and ended by depositing a notice to that effect in the office of the county recorder. It was also provided that Sanford should pay all taxes on the land, and that upon a forfeiture Patterson should retain all moneys that should have been paid by Sanford as compensation for use of the premises. Patterson filed the notice of forfeiture on the 18th day of September, 1875; and on December 13, 1876, he conveyed the land to plaintiff. Sanford died September 4, 1874. Dean was removed as administrator, and Edward White was appointed, and substituted as appellant, after the appeal reached this court. The complaint avers that Sanford has paid, altogether, $1,200 on said contract; that no other amount has been paid thereon by him, or by defendant, or any other person; and that a large sum remains unpaid, amounting, as found by the court, to $9,017.90. This is denied by the answer, in which it is averred that the whole amount had been paid. The issue thus made was the principal matter of fact in contest. The plaintiff, to maintain his side of the issue, was allowed to introduce, over the objection of defendant, a certain account-book of Patterson, which showed that Sanford had made three several payments, amounting in all to $1,200; the purpose being to show that no more than that sum had been paid.

We shall not here enter anew upon the discussion of the question whether the admission in evidence of the account-book was a material error. The question was fully discussed in the opinion of this court, delivered by Mr. Justice MCKINSTRY in Kerns v. McKean, 18 Pac. Rep. 122, and the conclusion was there reached that the admission of the book was a reversible error. And while the ruling there may not be absolutely the "law of the case" in the case at bar, still, as the question there was entirely identical with the one presented here, we think that it should be taken as conclusive upon the point. For this error, therefore, the judgment must be reversed.

There are some other matters which should be noticed for the benefit of the court below in the event of another trial.

1. While the complaint, on the first glance, no doubt presents some apparent confusion of ideas, still we think that the demurrer was properly overruled. The plaintiff might have contented himself with merely stating facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in ejectment. In that event, defendant would have been compelled to set up the contract, if he desired to claim any equities under it. But plaintiff chose to state the contract in his complaint, and to there disclose the rights which defendant might claim under it; and as the complaint, we think, states sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action in ejectment, it is not demurrable, because it also states facts which give defendant an opportunity to redeem, and to avoid the effect of a judgment for restitution, by complying with the contract; and for the same reason appellant's position that the amounts alleged to be due on the contract are barred by limitation because they were all due more than four years before the commencement of the action, is not tenable. The theory of the complaint is not that plaintiff is entitled to an absolute judgment for what was unpaid on the contract, but that he could recover possession of the land unless the defendant paid the amount due within a reasonable time,—which is fixed by the judgment at 80 days. The defendant's right to redeem is not a question in the case, because the plaintiff concedes it. The question under the statute of limitations is whether or not plaintiff's right to recover the land is barred. Neither do we think that the complaint is demurrable on the ground that it contains separate causes of action not separately stated.

2. The court should have found more specifically as to the seizure of plaintiff, and as to whether plaintiff's right to recover the land was barred by the statute of limitations. With respect to the latter question, as Sanford entered into possession under the agreement with Patterson, such possession by him and his administrator could not be adverse, unless its hostility was manifested by unquestionable acts brought expressly to the knowledge of Patterson, or of such a character as to clearly charge him in law with such knowledge, (Kerns v. McKean, 65 Cal. 411, 4 Pac. Rep. 404;); and there should be a specific finding upon this point. The action having been commenced within five years after the filing of the notice of forfeiture, it certainly was not barred, unless there had been a hostile possession for more than five years manifested as above indicated.

3. As nothing was asked against the estate, there was no necessity to present the claim to the administrator. 65 Cal. 416, 4 Pac. Rep. 407.

4. We do not think that plaintiff is entitled, under any circumstances, to recover rents for any period prior to the time of the filing of the notice of forfeiture in the office of the county recorder. Prior to that act Patterson's right to rents and profits was limited to the payments which had been made on the contract.

5. White, as administrator, appointed after the removal of Dean, has the right to prosecute this appeal and defend the action. The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

HIRSCHFELD v. SEVIER et al. (No. 11,555.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 6, 1888.)

VENUE IN CIVIL CASES—CHANGE OF VENUE—DENIAL OF MOTION.

In an action which must be tried in the county in which defendants or some of them reside, an order denying a motion for change of venue from the county in which one of sixteen defendants resides to a county in which others are residents will not be reviewed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; J. J. DE HAVEN, Judge.

In this action of Hirschfeld against Sevier and others, a motion for change of venue was denied, and defendants appeal.

Naphtaly, Freidenrich & Ackerman, for appellants. H. H. Lowenthal, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This is an appeal from an order denying a motion to have the place of trial changed from Humboldt county to San Francisco. The action was commenced in Humboldt county against sixteen defendants, twelve of whom were residents of the city and county of San Francisco, two of New York city, and one of Humboldt county. Four of those residing in San Francisco appeared in the action by filing a demurrer to the complaint, and at the same time demanded that the place of trial be changed from Humboldt to San Francisco. Afterwards, and before the denial of the motion to change the place of trial, Sevier, the only defendant residing in Humboldt county, appeared, by filing a demurrer to the complaint, and at the same time filed a consent in writing that the place of trial be changed as demanded by four of the defendants. It appears by the record that five, and five only, of the defendants, appeared in the action. It does not appear that a summons was served on any of the defendants. Upon the foregoing facts, were the appellants entitled to have the place of trial changed as by them demanded? This action belongs to the class which must be tried in the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action. Code Civil Proc. § 395. In this case one of the defendants (Sevier) resided in the county in which the action was commenced, viz., in Humboldt county. Therefore the action might be tried in that county; and since it might, we cannot disturb the order denying the motion to change the place of trial. Order affirmed.

RENTON et al. v. MONNIER. (No. 11,344.)
(Supreme Court of California. December 8, 1888.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—AUTHORITY OF ARCHITECT—NOTICE TO AGENT.

An architect, whose authority is to see that the building is properly constructed, and, as the work progresses, to sign certificates that it is properly done, and to decide disputes as to the drawings and specifications, is not authorized to receive notice of an assignment of the payments accruing on the contract for the erection of the building, so as to charge the owner with notice thereof.

2. ASSIGNMENT—OF CLAIM—NOTICE TO DEBTOR—RIGHTS OF ASSIGNEE.

Where the owner is unable to read or write English, and understands the language imperfectly, and testifies that he did not understand the meaning of the written assignment of the payments exhibited to him, and so stated at the time, and requested that it should be shown to him again when his clerk should be present, which was not done, an instruction, in an action by the assignee for a payment which had been made to the contractor, that notice of the assignment, to be effectual, should be sufficient to have put the owner fully on his guard, and he should have understood it, is proper.

3. SAME—EVIDENCE OF ASSIGNMENT—PAROL TO EXPLAIN CIRCUMSTANCES.

Evidence that the contractor was a stranger to the assignee; that the latter had procured bondsmen for him; and did not wish the money to go into his possession; that the assignment was for security; and that the assignee had made an advancement which had been repaid,—is admissible to explain the written assignment, under Civil Code Cal. § 1647, allowing explanation by reference to the circumstances in which a contract is made, and also as having some tendency to show such confidence in the contractor that notice of the assignment was not given until the time admitted by the owner.

4. SAME—RIGHTS OF ASSIGNEE—NOTICE.

The admission of a letter from the assignee to the contractor as to the disposition of the moneys received by the former, if erroneous, is cured by an instruction that the assignee's right to the payments is not affected by any arrangement between the assignee and contractor in relation to such disposition unless the owner were a party to it.

5. DEPOSITION—ADMISSIBILITY—ABSENCE OF WITNESS.

Testimony that inquiries were made at the former place of business of an alleged absent witness, and at other places of various people who had known him, and that they said that they did not know where he was, but understood that he was in another state, is sufficient to admit his deposition.

6. APPEAL—REVIEW—OBJECTIONS NOT MADE BELOW.

Volunteered testimony not objected to is not ground for error.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDON, Judge.

Action by Renton, Holmes & Co. against George Monnier to recover an installment on a contract by V. H. Harding for the erection of a building for defendant, the payments to be made on which were assigned to plaintiffs. The letter of May 16, 1882, of Holmes to Harding was as follows: "We hereby agree that all payments received by R., H. & Co. on the Monnier contract, by virtue of your assignment to R., H. & Co., will be applied towards the payment of your bills on said building, said bills to be correct, and the payment to be ordered in writing on each bill by you before payment, and that the receipt by R., H. & Co. of any payment shall not affect any legal rights you may have against their bill for lumber, and all money that may be left after paying all legitimate bills shall be paid to you; all bills and claims incurred to be at reasonable market value and no more." The following is the third instruction given at plaintiffs' request: "The rights of the plaintiffs to have the payment of $1,000 made to them, provided the defendant had prior notice of its assignment to them, are not affected by any agreement or arrangement between plaintiffs and Harding as to what should be done with the money, unless Monnier were a party to such arrangement; for defendant had nothing to do with such agreement, and if any such existed it affords no defense to the defendant." In relation to the whereabouts of Harding, whose deposition was admitted, a witness testified that he knew Harding for about 10 months, and had occasion to search for him; that he knew Harding was to be a witness in this case; that he made inquiries for the purpose of seeing whether he was in town or not; inquired at his former place of business, and of a man named "Tom," who knows him personally; that Tom gave him to understand that Harding was in New Mexico or Arizona, but he did not know where; that he had made inquiries in other places, and no one seemed to know anything about Harding; that he had not been able to find him; and on cross-examination said that he made the inquiries within the last two or three weeks; that he inquired of the man who keeps the saloon at Harding's former place of business, and of those who visited there, and who had known Harding; that Tom knew Harding, but did not know where he was; that Jewell, who knew Harding two or three years previously, said he did not know where he was and had not seen him, but had heard that he had gone away; that witness made inquiries as to Jewell's information, but did not follow it up further than to ask him if he knew where he was, and he said, "No,"—that he had heard that he had gone away; that witness did not remember that he inquired of anybody else; that he made inquiries of a number, but could not say anything further in regard to their names.

Verdict and judgment for defendant; motion for new trial denied; and plaintiffs appeal.

William H. H. Hart and William H. Fifield, for appellants. Gordon & Young, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. It appears from the record in this case that on the 14th day of April, 1882, the defendant entered into a written contract with one Valentine H. Harding to construct for him a building on Howard street, in the city of San Francisco, for the sum of $8,957, to be paid in installments as the work progressed, and the first payment of $1,000 to be made when the frame was up to the second-story floor, including the second-story floor joists and frame of sidewalk. It was provided that the building should be constructed "according and conformable to the drawings and specifications made by William Mooser, architect," and "in a good, workman-like, and substantial manner, to the satisfaction, and under the direction, of the said William Mooser, the duly-authorized architect, to be testified by a writing or certificate" under his hand. The payments were to be made by defendant to Harding, his executors, administrators, or assigns: "provided, that in each case a certificate be obtained and signed by the said William Mooser, architect, that said works have been done in the most substantial and faithful workman-like manner, to the approval and full satisfaction of said architect." On the 15th of April, 1882, Harding assigned to the plaintiffs the several payments to be made to him under the contract by a written assignment, which directed the architect to deliver to plaintiffs the certificates, and directed the defendant to pay to plaintiffs the several payments as they should fall due. The contractor commenced his work, and the first payment of $1,000 became due on the 29th of April, 1882. On that day the architect gave his certificate to Harding, and the defendant paid him the $1,000, and subsequently refused to again pay the money to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs claimed that defendant had notice of the assignment, and wrongfully paid the $1,000 to Harding, and they brought this action to recover the same. The case was tried by a jury, and the verdict and judgment were in favor of defendant. The plaintiffs moved for a new trial, which was denied, and then appealed from the judgment and order.

The principal question is, did the defendant have notice of the assignment before he paid the money? If he did, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover; and if not, they could not maintain their action. It was proved that notice of the assignment was given to the architect on or about the 21st of April; and it is claimed for the appellants that this was constructive notice to the defendant, and conclusively settled the question. Whether this claim is well founded or not, depends upon the extent and character of the architect's agency. The rule is well settled "that notice to an agent of facts arising from, or connected with, the subject-matter of the agency is constructive notice to the principal, when the notice comes to the agent while he is concerned for the principal, and in the course of the very transaction." Bierce v. Hotel Co., 31 Cal. 165. But notice to an agent of facts not arising from, or connected with, the subject-matter of his agency is not notice to the principal, unless actually communicated to him. Agencies are general or special; and an agent has such authority as the principal actually or ostensibly confers upon him. Civil Code, § 2315. In this case it is not claimed that the architect had any other authority than that expressly conferred upon him by the written contract for the construction of the building. That authority was: First. To see that the building was constructed according to the drawings and specifications, in a good, workman-like, and substantial manner, and to testify in writing to that effect. Second. As the work progressed, and the payments became due, to sign and issue certificates that the work had been done in the most substantial and faithful workman-like manner, to his approval and full satisfaction. Third. To decide any dispute which might arise respecting the true construction or meaning of the drawings or specifications. The foregoing are all the powers delegated to the architect, and as to these powers the plaintiffs were fully advised. The defendant reserved to himself the duty of making the payments; and it was a matter that in no way concerned the architect when or to whom the payments should be made. This being so, we are unable to see how it can be said that the assignment was a fact "arising from or connected with the subject-matter of the agency;" and in our opinion the instruction requested by the defendant upon this subject stated the law correctly, and was properly given to the jury.

It was claimed by the plaintiffs at the trial that defendant had actual notice of the assignment before he paid the money; and in support of this claim one Bibb was called as a witness, and testified that he was the agent of plaintiffs, and that on the 25th of April he went to the defendant's saloon and exhibited and read to him the written assignment. On the other hand, it was claimed by defendant that no notice of the assignment was given or attempted to be given to him until the 1st day of May; and in support of this claim defendant was called as a witness, and testified that at the time he paid the money to Harding neither Bibb nor any one else had informed him that the payments had been assigned, and that Bibb did not call upon him and exhibit the written assignment until the 1st day of May; that when Bibb called he exhibited a paper and asked witness to sign it, and he declined to do so; that he was a Frenchman, and did not read or write English, or understand what the paper meant, and so informed Bibb at the time; that he asked Bibb to come back when his clerk was in, and Bibb then went away. At the conclusion of the testimony, the court, at the request of plaintiffs, instructed the jury that if the defendant had notice of the assignment to plaintiffs before or at the time he paid the $1,000 to Harding, then the verdict should be in their favor; and that a verbal notice of the assignment was all the law required. Afterwards, an instruction reading as follows was given for defendant: "The defendant in this action is not liable to plaintiffs, if you find from the evidence that, at the time he paid the said sum of $1,000, involved in this action, to Valentine

H. Harding, he had no notice that said Harding had assigned such payment to the plaintiffs; and notice given, in order to be effectual, should be sufficient, precise, and complete enough to put the defendant fully on his guard as to the fact of such assignment, and he should have understood it." It is argued for appellants that the last part of this instruction was misleading and erroneous, because it, in effect, told the jury that notice of the assignment would be ineffectual unless the defendant understood it, and it was sufficient to put him fully on his guard; thereby withdrawing from the jury the full consideration of the evidence upon the issues on which they were to pass. And in support of this position counsel cite Perkins v. Eckert, 55 Cal. 404. But it should be observed that each party to a lawsuit is entitled to have the law given to the jury which is applicable to his theory of the case, and the testimony of his own witnesses. The court acted upon this rule, and gave to the jury all of the instructions asked by the plaintiffs. The defendant's theory was that no notice of the assignment was given, or attempted to be given, to him until after he paid the money to Harding; and, there being a sharp conflict of the evidence upon this question, that if notice was given it was ineffectual, because he did not understand it or know what it meant. Now, whether notice was given or not, and, if given, whether defendant understood it, and it was sufficient to put him on his guard, or, in the language of the Code, to put a prudent man upon inquiry, (Civil Code, § 19,) were questions of fact for the jury, and the instruction was evidently given to meet the defendant's theory of the case. Possibly, the part of the instruction complained of might have been more happily written; but the question is, was it applicable to the facts proved by defendant, and did it state correct propositions of law? Suppose a similar notice should be given to one who neither reads, writes, speaks, nor understands the English language, would the notice be effectual, and an instruction like that given here be erroneous? Evidently not. And yet we fail to see how the fact that defendant understood and spoke the English language to a limited extent can make any difference. If he did not understand what was read or said to him by the plaintiff's agent, and so informed the agent at the time, then the latter should have left with him a copy of the assignment, or should have returned for further explanation when the defendant's clerk was in. The case of Perkins v. Eckert, supra, is not in point. In that case, the question was whether a bill of sale was an absolute one, or was given as security, and an instruction was given which, in effect, told the jury that if plaintiffs understood it to be taken as security, and the defendants did not so understand it, they must find it to be an absolute sale. The instruction was held by this court to be erroneous, because it "withdrew from the jury the full consideration of the evidence upon the issue on which they were to pass." In our opinion, under all the circumstances shown, the instruction stated the law correctly, and was properly given to the jury.

When C. S. Holmes, one of the plaintiffs, was upon the witness-stand, counsel for defendant asked him, "What was the object and purpose of this assignment to you?" The question was objected to on the ground that it was immaterial and irrelevant, and that the terms of a written instrument could not be varied by parol testimony. Counsel for defendant replied that they did not wish to vary the terms of the instrument, but to show all the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction. The court then overruled the objection, and the witness answered that the contractor was a stranger to him, and he had procured bondsmen for him, and did not want the money to go into his hands; that the assignment was made to secure his firm as against the bond and everything pertaining to the construction of the building. And he added that his firm advanced to Harding $165 before he received payment of the $1,000, and that Harding repaid the money on the 2d of May. We see no error in the ruling. A contract may be explained by reference to the circumstances under which it was made, (Civil Code, § 1647,) and the testimony had some tendency to show that plaintiffs had such confidence in Harding that they may not have attempted to give notice of the assignment to defendant until the time named by him.

There is nothing in the next point made, that the court erred in permitting defendant's counsel to show that Harding borrowed money from the plaintiffs and repaid it. Holmes testified to the borrowing and repayment of the money without being asked to do so, and without objection from either side. If it was error to admit in evidence the letter written by Holmes to Harding on the 16th of May, 1882, in reference to the disposition of all moneys which might come into plaintiffs' hands under the assignment, the error was cured by instruction No. 3, which was given to the jury at the request of the plaintiffs.

The last point made by appellants is that the court erred in allowing counsel for defendant to read in evidence the deposition of Valentine H. Harding, because there was no sufficient showing that he was out of the jurisdiction of the court. The showing that Harding was out of the state probably might have been made somewhat fuller and more conclusive, but we think it sufficient to admit his deposition.

After carefully going over the whole record we find nothing calling for a reversal of the judgment, and therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

SMITH v. MILLARD. (No. 12,700.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 8, 1888.)

PARTNERSHIP—SALE OF PARTNERSHIP INTEREST—ASSUMPTION OF FIRM CONTRACTS.

Plaintiff sold his interest in a firm to his partners; they, as part consideration, agreeing to do certain printing for him. Afterwards a new company was formed between the remaining partners and defendant. The written agreement did not assume the obligations of the old firm. One of the old partners thought the new company liable for them. The other testified that he, and not the new company, was to be responsible for the printing, and that he made an agreement with the company for its performance; but it was repudiated by plaintiff, who wanted it executed by the old firm. When this partner retired, the others assumed the obligations of the company, releasing him, and on defendant's purchase of the interest of the other partner he assumed "all the obligations of the firm contracted since they became partners." Held, that defendant had not assumed the contract with plaintiff.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; H. K. S. O'MELVENY, Judge.

Action by Smith against Millard. Defendant appeals from a judgment for plaintiff.

C. M. Stephens, Lucien Shaw, and James M. Damron, for appellant. Chas. L. Batchelder, for respondent

HAYNE, C. The material issue in this case was whether the defendant, Millard, who was an incoming partner, assumed certain obligations of the old firm. The court below found that he did, but we think that this finding is not sustained by the evidence.

The plaintiff, Smith, who was a member of a partnership known as the "Express Printing Company," sold out his interest to Bynon and Morrill, who continued the business for a short time under the old name. Part of the consideration for this sale was a contract by Bynon and Morrill to do $500 worth of printing for Smith. This contract is one of the obligations which it is claimed was assumed by the defendant, Millard; the other being a note of Bynon and

Morrill to a Los Angeles bank. Millard had nothing to do with this transaction. There is some testimony by the plaintiff indicating that he thought that defendant's knowledge of the conditions of the transfer, and his subsequent connection with the firm, rendered him liable. But it is clear that this transaction was between the plaintiff, on the one part, and Bynon and Morrill, on the other, and that the defendant had nothing to do with it. A short time after Smith's transfer of interest, a new firm was formed under the name of the "Pacific Publishing Company," consisting of Bynon and Morrill, and the defendant, Millard. The agreement by which this copartnership was formed was in writing. It contains nothing whatever to indicate that Millard assumed the obligations of the old firm. Some of the partners were evidently under the impression that this contract made the new firm liable for the old debts. Thus, Bynon says: "The contract of copartnership by the new firm of Millard, Morrill, and myself contained a paragraph in regard to the payment of these obligations. The intention, so far as I was concerned, was that we jointly assumed all the liabilities." And this idea explains some general statements of this and other witnesses for the plaintiff to the effect that Millard "assumed the payment" of the old debts. They were simply mistaken as to the legal effect of the agreement. There are no facts supporting such an idea. On the contrary, according to Morrill's own testimony, it was expressly agreed that he himself, and not the new firm, should become responsible for the performance of the printing contract. The following is his account of what occurred when the plaintiff came to the office to get the new firm to assume the obligation in question: "Mr. Millard said he was not ready to sign an agreement to do that printing by our office, for the reason that he did not understand how our office was to receive any remuneration for it,—any pay. * * * Mr. Bynon and I explained to him that I was to pay the Pacific Publishing Company for doing that printing. It was to be paid out of money which I was to receive out of the directory and pamphlets which were then being printed both for San Bernardino city and county. Mr. Millard said that was all right, but he wanted something to show for it. It was considerable work,—$500 worth. He thought that it ought to be secured in some way. We made the arrangement there that I should secure the Pacific Publishing Company for the payment of that work, $500, and upon my making that agreement they agreed to sign the paper." But it seems that the plaintiff repudiated this proposed arrangement, for Morrill goes on to say: "But Mr. Smith said he had nothing to do with the Pacific Publishing Company. The agreement was by Bynon and I to have that printing done for him, and he wanted us to execute the agreement as the Express Printing Company. We did so." So far, therefore, there is nothing to show any assumption by Millard of the debts of the Express Printing Company. About a month after the formation of the Pacific Publishing Company, Morrill transferred his interest in it to Bynon and Millard. On this occasion it appears that Bynon and Millard assumed the obligations of the Pacific Publishing Company, for Morrill says: "The substance of the conversation was * * * that I should step out, and be released and relieved from all obligations and contracts." This must be taken to mean that he was to be released from the obligations and contracts of the firm from which he was retiring, viz., the Pacific Publishing Company, and, as we have shown, the obligations sued on were not of this company, but of the Express Printing Company. But the idea that the Pacific Publishing Company had in some way or other become liable for the old debts seems to have taken hold of the minds of some of these parties, and they state their conclusions as to it in several places. As above shown, however, this idea was a mistaken one. There were no facts to support it on the former occasion, and there are none on this. Morrill himself says: "At that time there was nothing said, that I know of, about Bynon and Millard doing the five hundred dollars' worth of printing." There was nothing, therefore, upon this occasion, which showed an assumption by Millard of the old debts. Some time after this, Bynon sold out to Millard, who thus became the only one remaining in the business. There was no testimony which tended to show an assumption by Millard of the debts in question at the time of this transfer. The written agreement of dissolution provides that "all the obligations of the firm, except those specified above, contracted by said Millard and Bynon since they became partners, are assumed by said Millard, including a $500 note by the firm to himself." But, as we have shown, the obligations in question were of the Express Printing Company, and not "of the firm" referred to in this agreement, which was the Pacific Publishing Company. Moreover, they were not "contracted by said Millard and Bynon since they became partners." There was, therefore, nothing in the evidence which showed an assumption by Millard of the debts in question. The fact that he went to the bank, and offered to have the Pacific Publishing Company assume the note held by the bank, certainly gives color to the theory of the plaintiff. But the proposition was rejected by the bank, which wanted his individual signature, which he declined to give. And his going at all is, we think, satisfactorily explained by him in his testimony, to the effect that he then supposed his partners to be solvent, and that he was willing to have the new firm sign as security for them, but that when he found they were not solvent he declined to do anything. The specifications in the statement are sufficient to raise the question. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

VANN v. McCREARY. (No. 11,686.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 8, 1883.)

1. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—ADVICE OF COUNSEL—EVIDENCE.

Defendant, in an action for malicious prosecution, relied on the advice of counsel. The district attorney testified that he told defendant that he did not think he could convict, and that he had not a very good case. Another witness said to defendant that he could not do anything with plaintiff, to which defendant replied that plaintiff had taken sides against him, and that he would "set him up for his meanness." Though defendant testified that other lawyers whom he consulted advised him that he could maintain the prosecution, none of them were produced as witnesses. Held sufficient to sustain a verdict for plaintiff.

2. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—PROVINCE OF JURY.

The court charged that if, when defendant made the complaint, he knew certain facts, and also knew that plaintiff had nothing to do with taking the sheep, except "to separate them from the others in the corral, as testified by the witnesses, [naming them,] there was no probable cause." Held, that the words "as testified by the witnesses" referred only to the separation to which all the witnesses named had testified, and, there being no conflict as to this matter, the court did not invade the province of the jury.

Commissioners' decision. Department I. Appeal from superior court, Lake county; RODNEY J. HUDSON, Judge.

J. A. Cooper, for appellant. E. W. Britt and R. W. Crump, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action for malicious prosecution; verdict for plaintiff; defendant appeals.

1. It is contended that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence, in this: that the evidence shows that the defendant relied upon the advice of counsel. But in view of the testimony, the jury may well have concluded that the defendant did not believe that the plaintiff was guilty of the crime with which he was charged. Mr. Crawford, who was the district attorney, testified that he said to the defendant, when he came to him to start the prosecution: "I did not think he could convict under the testimony. I gave him reasons for it. * * * I told him my opinion was that he had not a very good case. He then remarked that he wanted the case prosecuted. * * * I don't think I told him it constituted grand larceny. I wrote the complaint as district attorney because I understood and thought the facts were sufficient to demand an investigation. * * * I wrote out the complaint because there might be additional facts in the case obtained by investigation." Another witness—the constable who arrested the plaintiff—testified to the following conversation with the defendant: "I said: 'I don't think you can do anything with George.' 'Well,' he says, 'George took sides against me in regard to a woman scrape. I am going to set him up for some of his meanness, any-how.' " It is true the defendant testifies that he consulted other lawyers besides the district attorney, and that they advised him that the prosecution could be maintained. But he did not produce such lawyers as witnesses, and this is a somewhat suspicious circumstance. We think the evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict.

2. It is argued that the court invaded the province of the jury in giving the following instruction: "If the jury find from the evidence that McCreary did not sell the eighteen sheep to McMath, but that before he made the complaint against Vann knew that McMath had taken them and had left money with Scudmore, Reynolds & Co., at Upper Lake, to pay for them, and that Vann had nothing to do with the taking of said sheep, except 'pull them out,' or separate them from other sheep in the corral, as testified to by the witnesses G. W. Vann, E. P. Vann, C. McMath, Jr., and John Donaldson, then I charge you that there was no probable cause," etc. The argument is that all of these witnesses did not testify to all the facts enumerated in the above instruction. But as we construe the instruction the words "as testified to by the witnesses G. W. Vann, E. P. Vann, C. McMath, Jr., and John Donaldson" refer only to what immediately precedes, viz., the pulling out or separation of the sheep, and informed the jury that if the defendant knew that the plaintiff had nothing to do with the taking of the sheep, except to pull them out of the corral, or to separate them, under the circumstance detailed by the witnesses mentioned, there was no probable cause for the prosecution. These witnesses (including Donaldson) all testified to the circumstances of the pulling out or separation, and there was no conflict concerning the matter. We think the defendant is hypercritical in his view of the import of the language; that when properly construed the instruction was correct; and that the jury were not misled by it. The jury were sufficiently instructed that they were the exclusive judges of the facts. But if they had not been, there being no conflict in the evidence as to the circumstances of the pulling out or separation of the sheep, it would have been a harmless omission. The other matters do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

SAN BENITO COUNTY v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO. (No. 11,201)

(Supreme Court of California. December 13, 1888.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—TAXATION OF FRANCHISE GRANTED BY UNITED STATES.

An ordinance requiring the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to take out a license in order to continue its business in a county of carrying persons or freight for hire by means of railroad cars is void as a tax upon the use of a franchise granted by the United States.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Benito county; JAMES F. BREEN, Judge.

N. C. Briggs, J. B. Lamar, Walter A. Lamar, and J. E. Foulds, for appellant. N. A. Hawkins, Dist. Atty., and B. B. McCroskey, (McCroskey & Hunder, of counsel,) for respondent.

PATERSON, J. In view of the decisions of the supreme court of the United States in the cases of State v. Railroad Co., and Same v. Railroad Co., rendered April 30, 1888, (8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073,) it would seem useless to follow in this case the decisions of this court in Railroad Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 60 Cal. 35; Los Angeles v. Railroad Co., 61 Cal. 59, and Santa Clara Co. v. Railroad Co., 66 Cal. 642, 6 Pac. Rep. 744, for it is quite clear, we think, that the supreme court of the United States would hold, in a proper case, the ordinance before us herein, requiring the defendant to take out and pay for a license to continue its business of carrying persons or freight for hire by means of railroad cars in the county of San Benito, to be void; and of course we ought always to follow the rule of law laid down by that court, when our judgment, as in the case at bar, may be examined by it on writ of error. Belcher v. Chambers, 53 Cal. 643. In the case referred to (State v. Railroad Co., supra,) it was held that the defendant therein, (defendant herein,) having been invested with certain franchises derived from the government of the United States in connection with other railroad corporations, by certain acts of congress, and having accepted all the terms and conditions of each of said acts, and fully complied therewith, "the state of California can neither take them away nor destroy nor abridge them nor cripple them by onerous burdens." The court, in that case, further said: "It may undoubtedly tax outside, visible property of the company situated within the state. That is a different thing. But may it tax franchises which are the grant of the United States? In our judgment it cannot. * * * No private person can establish a public highway, or a public ferry or railroad, or charge tolls for the use of the same, without authority from the legislature, direct or derived. These are franchises. * * * Corporate capacity is a franchise. * * * How can it be possible that a franchise granted by congress can be subject to taxation by a state without the consent of congress? Taxation is a burden, and may be laid so heavily as to destroy the thing taxed, or render it valueless. As Chief Justice MARSHALL said, in McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316: 'The power to tax involves the power to destroy.' Recollecting the fundamental principle that the constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States are the supreme law of the land, it seems to us almost absurd to contend that a power given to a person or corporation by the United States may be subjected to taxation by a state. The power conferred emanates from, and is a portion of, the power of the government that confers it. To tax it is not only derogatory to the dignity, but subversive of the powers, of the government, and repugnant to its paramount sovereignty. It is unnecessary to cite cases on this subject. The principles laid down by this court in McCulloch v. Maryland, supra, and Osborn v. Bank, 9 Wheat. 817, and Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 436, and in numerous cases since, which have followed in their lead, abundantly sustain the views we have expressed. It may be added that these views are not in conflict with the decisions of this court in Thomson v. Railroad Co., 9 Wall. 579, and Railroad Co. v. Peniston, 18 Wall. 5. As explained in the opinion of the court in the latter case, the tax there was upon the property of the company, and not upon its franchises or operations. Id. 25, 37. Taxation of a corporate franchise, merely as such, unless pursuant to stipulation in the original charter of the company, is the exercise of an authority somewhat arbitrary in its character. It has no limitation but the discretion of the taxing power. * * * It only remains to consider whether the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as well as the Central Pacific was invested with any franchise derived from the government of the United States. Of this, we think there can be no question. * * * It follows that in each one of the cases now before us the assessment made by the state board of equalization comprised the value of franchises or property which the board was prohibited by the constitution of the state from including therein, and that these values are so blended with the other items of which the assessment is composed that they cannot be separated therefrom. The assessments are therefore void." In Railroad Co. v. Peniston, supra, the court, referring to McCulloch v. Maryland, supra, said: "The tax, therefore, was not upon any property of the bank, but upon one of its operations; in fact, upon its right to exist as created. It was a direct impediment in the way of a governmental operation performed through the bank as an agent. It was a very different thing, both in its nature and effect, from a tax on the property of the bank. No wonder then that it was held illegal. 'It does not extend,' said the chief justice, 'to a tax paid by the real property of a bank, in common with the other real property in the state, nor to a tax imposed on the interest which the citizens of Maryland may hold in the institution, in common with the other property of the same description throughout the state. But this is a tax on the operations of the bank, and is consequently a tax on the operations of an instrument employed by the government of the union to carry its powers into execution. Such a tax must be unconstitutional. Here is a clear distinction made between a tax upon the property of a government agent, and a tax upon the operations of the agent acting for the government. In Osborn v. Bank, the tax held unconstitutional was a tax upon the existence of the bank,—upon its right to transact business within the state of Ohio. * * * For this reason the power of the state to direct it was denied; but at the same time it was declared by the court that the local property of the bank might be taxed, and, as in McCulloch v. Maryland, a difference was pointed out between a tax upon its property and one upon its action. * * * A tax upon their operations is a direct obstruction to the exercise of federal powers."

The contention that the exemption claimed ought not to be implied by the court, in the absence of any legislation by congress upon the subject of exemption, is answered by the court in Osborn v. Bank, supra, where it is said: "It is contended that, admitting congress to possess the power, this exemption ought to have been expressly asserted in the act of incorporation; and, not being expressed, ought not to be implied by the court. It is not unusual for a legislative act to involve consequences which are not expressed. An officer, for example, is ordered to arrest an individual. It is not necessary, nor is it usual, to say that he shall not be punished for obeying this order. His security is implied in the order itself. It is no unusual thing for an act of congress to imply, without expressing, this very exemption from state control, which is said to be so objectionable in this instance. * * * It is secured by the judicial power alone; that is, the judicial power is the instrument employed by the government in administering this security. * * * Can a contractor, for supplying a military post with provisions, be restrained from making purchases within any state, or from transporting provisions to the place at which the troops were stationed? Or could he be fined or taxed for doing so? We have not yet heard these questions answered in the affirmative. It is true that the property of the contractor may be taxed as the property of other citizens; and so may the local property of the bank. But we do not admit that the act of purchasing, or of conveying the articles purchased, can be under state control."

It seems to us that the reasoning of the court in the above cases applies with as much force to the license tax upon the use of the franchise—the operations of the road, and the conduct of its business—as to the tax upon the franchise as property; and that the supreme court of the United States would so hold. Holding this opinion, it is our duty, notwithstanding the opinions of this court upon the same subject hereinbefore referred to, to reverse the judgment and order of the court below, with directions to enter judgment for the defendant. It is so ordered.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; WORKS, J.

THORNTON, J., (concurring.) The rulings of the supreme court of the United States, in the cases cited in the beginning of the foregoing opinion, on the question of the power of the state to tax the franchises granted by the United States government must control our action in this case. The question is federal; and on such questions the settled law requires that the courts of the state shall conform to the decisions of the highest federal judicial tribunal. The license tax in question herein is one that affects the franchises enjoyed by the defendant company under a grant or grants from the federal government. It is a tax on the right of this company to carry on its business under the federal grant, and comes within the judgments of the United States supreme court in the cases cited. Under the constitution of this state, which requires all taxation to be equal and uniform throughout the state, it must be supposed that the legislature would not impose or authorize the imposition of any taxes by any county or other political subdivision of the state, whether in the nature of property or license taxes, which would destroy or render valueless the business of any railroad corporation, or cripple such corporations by onerous burdens. The guaranty of fair and just taxation is found in the constitution of the state. Taxation by a county must be equal and uniform, at least as to all persons engaged in the same business in the county; and such a guaranty will protect railroads in a county from unfair or unjust or oppressive taxation which would tend to destroy their business or cripple it, or interfere with their right to do business, as it protects individuals on whom such taxes are imposed. The amount of the tax is so small in the case before us that it cannot be considered onerous. But in the view taken by the supreme federal tribunal, the foregoing considerations are of no weight. The power of the state to tax is held not to exist at all, without regard to the fact whether the tax is so trifling as not to in any degree be onerous, or equal or uniform on all persons, whether natural or artificial, engaged in the business of carrying persons or freight for hire, or by means of railroad cars. Following then the judgments of the supreme court of the United States in the cases above cited, we must hold that the license tax under consideration was levied without authority of law, and must be held void. With the foregoing observations, I add that I concur in the foregoing opinion and judgment.

In California, no appeal lies from an order denying a motion in arrest of judgment.

2. BURGLARY—INDICTMENT—DUPLICITY.

An information charging that defendant "feloniously entered the house, room, apartment, tenement, shop, warehouse, store, and building of the San Diego & Coronado Water Company, with the intent then, there, and therein to commit larceny," charges but one offense.

3. SAME—OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY.

The ownership of the property in such case is sufficiently alleged, though it is not stated whether the San Diego & Coronado Water Company is a corporation or a partnership, and no names are given of persons composing the company; Pen. Code Cal. § 959, making it sufficient to state the acts constituting the offense in ordinary and concise language.

4. SAME—PRACTICE—DISMISSAL—FAILURE TO PROSECUTE.

Under Pen. Code Cal. § 1382, requiring the court, unless good cause to the contrary is shown, to dismiss a prosecution not brought to trial within 60 days from the filing of the information, a judgment will not be reversed where it does not appear that the trial judge abused his discretion in refusing to so dismiss the prosecution.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. PARKER, Judge.

Hunsaker, Britt & Lamme, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. On the 2d day of May, 1888, an information was filed against the defendant, charging that he, on a certain day prior to the filing of said information against him, had "feloniously entered the house, room, apartment, tenement, shop, warehouse, store, and building of the San Diego & Coronado Water Company, with the intent then, there and therein to commit larceny," etc. To this information the defendant, on the 22d day of May, 1888, demurred upon all the statutory grounds. On the same day the demurrer was overruled, the defendant excepted and pleaded not guilty. On the 3d of September the case was set for hearing on the 25th of September, 1888. On that day, before the trial commenced, the defendant, by his counsel, moved the court to dismiss the case, and discharge the defendant, on the ground that his case had not been brought to trial within 60 days after the filing of the information. Affidavits were filed by both sides upon the motion, which was then denied by the court, the defendant excepting. The trial then proceeded, and the defendant was found guilty of burglary in the first degree. At the time fixed by the court for pronouncing judgment upon the verdict of the jury, the defendant moved the court in arrest of judgment upon the grounds set out in the demurrer. The motion was denied, the defendant excepted, and judgment was given against him. He has appealed from the judgment and order. From the latter no appeal lies. People v Majors, 65 Cal. 100, 3 Pac. Rep. 401.

As stated before the information charges the defendant with having feloniously entered the house, room, apartment, tenement, shop, warehouse, store, and building of the San Diego & Coronado Water Company, with the intent then, there, and therein to commit larceny. As we construe this allegation there is but one offense attempted to be charged, the felonious entry of some building of the San Diego & Coronado Water Company, with the intent then and there to commit larceny. It is contended that, as the information does not state whether the San Diego & Coronado Water Company is a corporation or a partnership, and does not give the names of any persons composing the corporation or partnership, there is, in a legal sense, an entire absence of any allegation as to the party intended to be injured. The cases of People v. Schwartz, 32 Cal. 160, and People v. Bogart, 36 Cal. 245, are cited as conclusive upon this question. The first case referred to was an indictment for burning a building insured against fire, with intent to defraud an insurance company. It was there held that, in order to make the indictment fit the statute and respond directly to its requirements, it had to allege that the Phoenix Insurance Company is a corporation, if such is the fact, or that it is a partnership, if such is the fact, composed of certain individuals, (giving their names,) and alleging that the act was done with intent to injure and defraud them in their associate capacity. The other was a prosecution for grand larceny, and followed the common-law rule, in the absence of statute to the contrary, that, in cases of larceny, where the stolen goods were the property of partners or joint owners, the names of all the partners or joint owners must be stated. The case before us is one of burglary, and we think that, under the Code definition of that crime, the ownership of the building entered is sufficiently designated by the language used in the information. Section 959 of the Penal Code provides that the information is sufficient if the acts constituting the offense are stated in ordinary and concise language, without repetition, in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. There was no error in the refusal of the court to dismiss the case upon the defendant's motion, made under subdivision 2 of section 1382 of the Penal Code.¹ There was no abuse of discretion within the rule laid down in People v. Camilo, 69 Cal. 540, 11 Pac. Rep. 128. Appeal from the order dismissed, and judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MAURIN. (No. 20,455.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 8, 1888.)

FALSE PERSONATION—EVIDENCE.

Under Pen.Code Cal. § 529, making punishable "every person who falsely personates another, and in such assumed character * * * verifies, publishes, acknowledges, or proves, in the name of another person, any written instrument, with intent that the same may be recorded, delivered, and used as true," a conviction cannot be sustained for falsely personating a certain doctor, and in such assumed character verifying, etc., a certificate of death, with intent that it should be recorded, etc., where the evidence shows that defendant did not assume or pretend to be the doctor, but signed the latter's name to the death certificate on being told that he had authorized it.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. TOOHY, Judge.

Robert Ferral and Jarret W. McEnerny, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

McFARLAND, J. 1. Defendant was informed against and convicted under subdivision 2, § 529, Pen. Code. That portion of said section which is material here is as follows: "529. Every person who falsely personates another, and in such assumed character either * * * (2) verifies, publishes, acknowledges, or proves, in the name of another person, any written instrument, with intent that the same may be recorded, delivered, and used as true, * * * is punishable," etc. The particular charge in the information was that the defendant falsely personated one Dr. F. F. De Derky, and in such assumed character verified, etc., a certain certificate of death, with intent that it should be recorded, etc.

There was no evidence tending to prove that defendant personated the said Dr. De Derky, or assumed his character. The facts proved by the prosecution were, substantially these: One Louise Peckelhoff died at the house of one Mrs. Hagenow, who was a physician. Dr. De Derky also attended the deceased for a few days before her death. A certificate of her death, with the name of Dr. De Derky signed to it, was delivered by an undertaker, Mr.

¹Pen. Code Cal. § 1382, provides that "the court, unless good cause to the contrary is shown, must order the prosecution to be dismissed in the following cases: * * * (2) If a defendant, whose trial has not been postponed upon his application, is not brought to trial within sixty days after the filing of the indictment or filing of the information." People v. Camilo, 69 Cal. 540, 11 Pac. Rep. 128, holds that a prosecution will not be dismissed for such cause where "sufficient cause was shown for not bringing the action against the defendant to trial within 60 days after the filing of the information."

Fredericks, to the secretary of the board of health, who supposed that the signature of Dr. De Derky was genuine. The name of Dr. De Derky was, however, as a matter of fact, signed to the certificate by the defendant. The undertaker, Fredericks, prepared the body of the certificate, and left it at the house of Mrs. Hagenow to be signed by the physician. Afterwards it was brought to him by the defendant with De Derky's name to it. Fredericks knew defendant well; had known him for two years; knew that he was a cook working for Mrs. Hagenow; knew that he was not Dr. De Derky, and knew that he did not pretend to be Dr. De Derky. De Derky testified for the prosecution. When pressed to say categorically whether or not he had authorized any one to sign his name to the certificate, he answered that he had not, but that Mrs. Hagenow was under the impression that he had. He testified that Mrs. Hagenow told him that, as she had been convicted of practicing medicine without a license, the board of health would probably not issue a burial permit on her certificate, and that he told her that he would sign the death certificate. He was then asked if she did not say to him: "But supposing that I cannot find you, what shall I do?" and if he did not thereupon say to her: "Well, sign it; but I prefer to sign it myself." To which he answered: "It may be so; I don't remember. I suppose I said something to that effect." This was all the testimony on the part of the prosecution. The defendant, on his own behalf, testified, substantially, that he had worked as cook for Mrs. Hagenow for about 10 years; that he also acted as her secretary, and had signed her name to nearly all the certificates of death which had been given by her as a physician; that the certificate set forth in the information was brought to him in the kitchen by Mrs. Hagenow, who told him that Dr. De Derky had authorized the signing of his name to it, and asked him to sign the doctor's name to it because she was too nervous to do so; and that he signed it believing that he had the authority and that it was proper to do so. This was substantially all the evidence in the case.

There is no question here as to the weight of evidence, or as to the right of the jury to believe or disbelieve certain testimony. The most that the jury could have found against the defendant, under any view of the evidence, was that he signed De Derky's name to the certificate without authority to do so, and without any reason to honestly believe that he had such authority. And they must have concluded that signing the certificate without such authority constituted the crime charged in the information. But there was no evidence that he personated Dr. De Derky, or pretended to any human being that he, the defendant, was Dr. De Derky. He certainly made no such pretension to the undertaker, Fredericks, or to Mrs. Hagenow, who both knew him well; and those were the only persons with whom he came into contact about the business of the certificate. If he signed the certificate without any authority, and fraudulently wrote De Derky's name when he knew he had no right to do it, he may have been guilty of forgery; but a defendant cannot be convicted of a crime which is not charged in the information under which he is tried. To personate another person is to assume to be that person.

2. Instruction No. 3, asked by defendant and refused by the court, contains a very fair description of false personation; and it should have been given, or the substance of it should have been given, in another form, which was not done.

3. We are not prepared to say that the certificate in question is not an instrument which may be recorded, within the meaning of said section 529 of the Penal Code; but the evidence was very vague as to the manner in which the health officer, under the rules of the board of health, keeps a record of deaths, as provided in section 3023 et seq. of the Political Code. Judgment and order denying a new trial reversed, and cause remanded.

v.19p.no.21—53

CAL. REP. 16-19 P.—69

77 Cal. 461

LEVISTON v. HENNINGER et al. (No. 11,733.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 10, 1888.)

1. EJECTMENT—TITLE TO SUSTAIN—EVIDENCE—EXECUTION SALE.

In ejectment, where plaintiff claims through a sheriff's sale, under an execution issued on a judgment for a balance due on a mortgage debt, after the sale of the mortgaged premises under foreclosure, the docketing of the judgment for the deficiency, and the return of the sheriff in the foreclosure proceedings, should be shown by the record itself.

2. SAME—FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE—DOCKETING DEFICIENCY JUDGMENT.

Where a sale of mortgaged premises is made under foreclosure, the mortgagor having no interest in, or title to, them, and afterwards a judgment for a balance due on the mortgage debt is docketed against the real owner, one claiming under a sale made to satisfy the latter judgment can maintain ejectment against one claiming under the former sale.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county; R. CROUCH, Judge.

Both Leviston and Henninger, parties to this suit, claim title from the same source, namely, the title of Martina Castro. The land in question was mortgaged by Riordan, (at one time attorney for Martina Castro, but now appearing for the plaintiff,) to Dean; and, on the land being sold in foreclosure proceedings brought by the latter, the certificate of sale came, by assignment, into the hands of the defendant Henninger. Subsequently a personal judgment was docketed against Martina Castro for a balance due on the mortgage debt, and plaintiff claims under a sale made to satisfy the latter judgment.

R. W. Hent and Henry Miller, for appellants. Thos. D. Riordan and Wm. Leviston, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. This is an action of ejectment. Judgment went for plaintiff, and defendants Henninger and Martina Castro de Newton appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial. Plaintiff claims title to the land in contest through a sheriff's sale under an execution issued upon a judgment for a deficiency after a sale under a decree of foreclosure in the case of Dean v. Castro et al. To establish his title, plaintiff introduced the judgment-roll in Dean v. Castro, down to and including the decree of foreclosure. He also introduced an execution which recited that the sheriff, after a sale under the foreclosure decree, made a return upon the order of sale showing a deficiency of $434.88, and that a judgment was docketed for that amount; but he did not introduce the judgment itself as docketed, nor the order of sale and return of the sheriff thereon showing the deficiency. Defendants objected to the evidence introduced because the deficiency judgment, order of sale, and sheriff's return were not introduced, and, plaintiff having rested, they moved for a nonsuit upon the same grounds, and their motion was denied. The defendants were undoubtedly right in their position. It is clearly the general rule that a plaintiff in ejectment, claiming title under an execution sale, must introduce the judgment upon which the execution issued. A recital of the judgment in the execution is not sufficient. The best evidence of the judgment is the judgment itself. Schuyler v. Broughton, 65 Cal. 252, 3 Pac. Rep. 870, and cases there cited; Hihn v. Peck, 30 Cal. 288. And what is necessary proof of the docketing of a judgment for a deficiency arising after a sale under a decree of foreclosure must be governed by the same rule, namely, the rule of the best evidence. A docketed deficiency judgment has, no doubt, under our Code, a somewhat peculiar character. It is not expressly made part of the judgment-roll; and, as held in Bowers v. Crary, 30 Cal. 622, it cannot be considered as an entirely new and independent judgment. But it differs from the docketing of an ordinary money judgment in this: that it makes definite and certain what, in the decree of foreclosure, was a mere contingent provision, (Chapin v. Broder, 16 Cal. 423;) while in the other case the docketing has only the effect of establishing a lien for an amount already ascertained and declared in the judgment. In the said foreclosure decree involved in the case at bar it is provided that, if the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged premises shall be insufficient to pay the amount found due, the sheriff shall report the deficiency; that, upon the return of the sheriff, "a judgment of this court shall be docketed for such balance against the defendant Martina Castro;" that the said Castro shall "pay to said plaintiff the amount of such deficiency and judgment;" and "that the plaintiff have execution therefor." Under the decree, therefore, the validity of the execution depended upon the docketing of the judgment for the deficiency reported by the sheriff; and, as it was a matter of record, it should have been proved by the record itself. And as the docketing of the judgment for the deficiency was based on the return of the sheriff, showing what the deficiency was, the return of the sheriff should also have been introduced. For these reasons the order denying a new trial must be reversed. Upon the other matters determined in the case we think that the court below was right. The foreclosure of the mortgage in the case of Dean v. Castro et al., and the sale under the decree, carried only the interest which the mortgagor, Riordan, had in the mortgaged premises. But he never had any interest in, or title to, said premises. They belonged all the time to Martina Castro, and the title thereto was in her. Her title was hostile and paramount to that of the mortgagor; and it was therefore not affected by the decree of foreclosure. But if there was a judgment for a deficiency docketed against her personally, and, upon a sale under an execution issued upon such judgment, her interest in the land went to plaintiff, then the latter has the title, and should recover against the defendants who claim under the foreclosure sale. The order denying the motion for a new trial is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

PEOPLE v. HOLLADAY et al. (No. 8,501.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 11, 1888.)

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

This action was instituted by the attorney general for the removal of certain buildings and fences from a public park. On appeal judgment in favor of defendants was reversed, and cause remanded for new trial, January 28, 1886. See 9 Pac. Rep. 655. One of the respondents, S. L. Mastick, died pending appeal. On December 10, 1888, Mary W. Mastick was substituted as respondent in his place.

John L. Love and William Mathews, for appellant. S. W. Holladay and Mastick, Belcher & Mastick, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. J. This cause having been heretofore submitted as to the respondent Mary W. Mastick, as executrix of the last will and testament of S. L. Mastick, deceased, upon the briefs on file herein, and upon which the cause was heretofore submitted and determined as to all the respondents except the said S. L. Mastick, it is now by the court considered, ordered, and adjudged, in accordance with the opinion and judgment filed herein January 28, 1886, (9 Pac. Rep. 655,) that the judgment and order of the superior court be and hereby is, as to the respondent Mary W. Mastick, as executrix of the last will and testament of S. L. Mastick, deceased, reversed, and that said cause be as to said respondent remanded to the superior court for a new trial, and that the remittitur issue forthwith.

77 Cal. 618

PEOPLE v. NORTHEY. (No. 30,441.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 27, 1888.)

1. GRAND JURY—QUALIFICATIONS—FORMER OPINIONS.

Some of the grand jury who found an indictment against M., for procuring defendant to approach and offer a bribe to a juror, afterwards acted as members of the grand jury which indicted defendant for offering to bribe said juror. The grand jurors testified that they formed the opinion that defendant was guilty from his testimony before the grand jury in the Case of M., and they voted for his indictment. Held, that the opinions so formed did not disqualify them as grand jurors. Such disqualifying opinions must arise from something heard outside, which has not the sanction of an oath, and is merely hearsay.

2. SAME—INDICTMENT—CORROBORATING TESTIMONY—BIAS.

Although the grand jury could have indicted defendant on his own testimony, the fact that they called another witness, before ordering the indictment, would indicate no bias or prejudice on the part of the grand jury.

3. SAME—PRESENCE IN COURT.

The fact that two of the grand jurors were in court when M. was on trial, and heard defendant plead his constitutional privilege as a witness, on the ground that his testimony would tend to criminate him, is immaterial; there being nothing to show that it had anything to do with their voting for defendant's indictment.

4. CRIMINAL LAW—CONTINUANCE—ABSENCE OF WITNESS—CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE.

The court properly refused a delay to procure the testimony of another member of the grand jury, who was out of the jurisdiction, when the statement of defendant's counsel showed that he expected to prove by the absent juror the same sort of prejudice, partiality, or bias, on the same facts as existed in regard to the other jurors, which are held to be no indication of bias or prejudice.

5. SAME—INDICTMENT—INDORSEMENT OF WITNESSES' NAMES.

The notes of the shorthand reporter of defendant's testimony on this trial were read to the grand jury when considering the case against defendant. Held, that the name of defendant was not required to be indorsed on the indictment as one of the witnesses.

6. SAME—TRIAL—REMARKS OF JUDGE—INSTRUCTIONS.

The judge remarked during the trial that he thought "the prosecution in criminal cases was too much handicapped," but in his charge to the jury said: "During the examination of Mr. Kohler, as to his qualifications to serve as a juror, some language was used by the court to which defendant's counsel took exception. I instruct you that it is your duty to ignore in your deliberations the remarks then made by the court, and that you must deal with the case on the law as it exists, and as the court states it to you, irrespective of your own opinion, or of any opinion the court might have, as to the wisdom of the law." Held, that the latter remarks of the court were sufficient to remove all apprehensions that the first remarks would have any effect on the jury prejudicial to defendant.

7. BRIBERY—EVIDENCE—DOCUMENTARY.

On indictment for offering a bribe to a juror in a civil case, the complaint and answer in the civil case are admissible to prove the allegations in the indictment relating thereto, and the fact that the juror who was named in the indictment as the person to whom a bribe was offered by defendant was a juror, and acted as such on the trial of that case, and it is proper to read them to the jury.

8. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—OBJECTIONS NOT RAISED BELOW.

If there was anything in the complaint and answer not relevant to the issue, whether there was an issue of fact pending in the civil case for trial by jury, which might operate prejudicially to defendant, he should have requested an instruction limiting the scope of the evidence to the purpose for which it was offered; and, not having so requested, the defendant cannot allege the court's failure to give such instruction as error.

9. SAME—EVIDENCE OF ACCOMPLICE—ADMISSIONS.

Where defendant's counsel informs the court that he is going to contend that the juror alleged to have been bribed was an accomplice with defendant, it is not error to admit the testimony of the juror as to his conversation with a third person, in which the witness told the third person that defendant had offered to pay him money to favor defendant in rendering a verdict; and that the third person had advised witness to hear all that was to be said on the subject, because, if witness did not do so, defendant might approach other jurors, and that, in pursuance of such advice, witness had answered defendant, on the third conversation with him, that it was all right.

10. SAME--OBJECTIONS NOT RAISED BELOW.

The fact that the admissions of the defendant, as to the correctness of the written statement, were made while he was in prison, detained there as a witness in another criminal case, cannot be urged against the admissibility of the admissions in the appellate court; such objection not having been raised in the court below.

11. SAME.

The objection that the written statement of the evidence of the defendant before the grand jury was not admissible, because it was not affirmatively shown by evidence to have been voluntary on the part of defendant, cannot be urged on appeal, when it was not urged in the court below, and it also appears that the written statement of such evidence had been admitted by defendant to a third person to be substantially correct.

12. GRAND JURY--EVIDENCE OF TESTIMONY BEFORE THEM.

Pen. Code Cal. § 926, providing that a grand juror can be compelled to disclose the testimony of a witness examined before the jury only in certain cases mentioned, has no application to such admissions, no grand juror having been called to testify as to the admissions, and the rule of secrecy set forth in the statute being intended only for the protection of grand jurors, and not of witnesses before it, and witnesses cannot invoke it.

13. BRIBERY--CONVEYANCE OF OFFER.

The conveyance of the offer of a third person to a juror to bribe said juror is in itself an offer of a bribe, and the fact that the money to be paid was to come from said third person makes it no less an offer to give a bribe.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

Indictment against F. T. Northey, for offering to give a bribe to H. F. Woods, a juror in a civil case. Defendant was convicted, and sentenced to imprisonment for nine years. From the judgment and order denying a new trial defendant appeals.

Geo. A. Knight, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Geo. A. Johnson, for the People.

THORNTON, J. The defendant, Northey, was accused by indictment of willfully, corruptly, and feloniously offering to give a bribe to H. F. Woods, a juror on the trial of the action of Wright et al. v. The Geary-Street Park & Ocean Railroad Company, pending in the superior court (department 6 thereof) of the city and county of San Francisco, and in which an issue of fact had been joined, with the corrupt and felonious intent to corruptly influence the vote, opinion, verdict, and decision of Woods as juror, in favor of the defendant in the action above named. The defendant was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment in the state-prison for the term of nine years. A motion for a new trial was made by defendant, and denied, and he prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and order denying a new trial. The defendant, not having been held to answer before the finding of the indictment, when called on to plead, moved to set aside the indictment. First. "Because Stewart Menzies, Patrick Connolly, W. H. Coddington, Charles F. Doe, J. J. Donovan, Charles Holbrook, A. P. Hotaling, Patrick Lynch, P. V. Merle, Samuel Pollack, F. G. Wagner, Louis Abrahams, H. Brandt, A. R. Kelly, Sol. Kohlman, George C. Shreve, William Wolf, and Jacob Greenbaum, members of the grand jury which found the said indictment against defendant, were at the time they were impaneled as grand jurors on said grand jury, and at the time they found the said indictment, incompetent to act as grand jurors in the finding of said indictment, for the reason that there existed a state of mind in each of them in reference to the above-entitled case, and this case, and in reference to this defendant, which prevented them, and each of them, from acting impartially, or without prejudice to the substantial rights of defendant, in the finding of said indictment." Second. "That the names of all witnesses and persons appearing before said grand jury are not and were not inserted at the foot of said indictment or indorsed thereon."

It appears from a bill of exceptions found in the record that Patrick Connolly and Stewart Menzies, on their examination, on the hearing of the motion above stated, testified that they were members of said grand jury that found the indictment against the defendant Northey, and that they voted for the finding of the indictment. Twelve grand jurors, including them, voted for the finding of the indictment. They were present in court when the case of People v. Robert F. Morrow was on trial for procuring Frank T. Northey to approach and offer to give a bribe to H. F. Woods, in the cause of Florence M. Wright et al. v. Geary-Street Park & Ocean Railroad Company, wherein defendant here was called as a witness for the prosecution, and declined to answer all questions put to him relating to the charge against Morrow, on the ground that they would have a tendency to convict him of a felony; and were present in the grand jury room when the charge against Morrow was examined, and when Northey testified, and heard defendant Northey then testify.

Connolly further testified that, after hearing the testimony of Northey given before the grand jury in the Morrow Case, he had formed an opinion that Northey was guilty; that that opinion was a fixed and decided opinion, and founded on Northey's own statement before the grand jury; that this opinion was formed before the finding of the indictment against Northey, and that he had this opinion when he went to examine the charge against Northey. Menzies was also called, and testified that he formed the opinion after hearing Northey's testimony on the examination of Morrow's Case before the grand jury; that Northey admitted his guilt in this testimony; that the opinion was decided as to his guilt; that he voted for the indictment against Northey; that it was founded on the testimony of Woods; that the indictment against Northey was found after the finding of the indictment against Morrow; that he acted fairly and impartially, and without prejudice, in finding the indictment under consideration. John T. Wagner, Alfred R. Kelly, F. G. Wagner, Charles F. Doe, William H. Coddington, Samuel Pollack, and Jacob Greenbaum, who were members of the same grand jury, and acted on the indictment against Northey, and voted for it, also testified that they heard Northey's testimony before the grand jury above mentioned, and on this testimony formed a fixed and decided opinion that Northey was guilty. Patrick Lynch was one of the same grand jury, and testified that the short-hand reporter's notes of Northey's testimony on the trial of the indictment against Morrow were read to the grand jury while it had Northey's Case under discussion. It appears, further, by the bill of exceptions, and is so stated therein, "that each and all of said above-named grand jurors testified, upon their examination on said motion, that, when they acted upon the case of defendant, and considered and found said indictment, they had no bias or prejudice against defendant, and acted without regard to any prior opinion of his guilt, and without prejudice, and were not influenced in any manner against defendant, or his substantial rights, but acted impartially and fairly upon the evidence introduced before them in the grand jury room on the hearing of the charge against the defendant, and not from comments in public journals, or public rumor, or common notoriety."

In connection with this inquiry, the counsel for defendant asked for a subpoena to procure the attendance of A. P. Hotaling, one of the members of the grand jury who had acted on and voted for the indictment against Northey. A subpoena had been regularly and with diligence issued for Hotaling, and placed in the hands of the sheriff, who returned that Hotaling was absent from the county, and could not be found, but that he would return in two days. The court inquired of counsel what he expected to prove by Hotaling, to which he replied that he proposed to show by Hotaling substantially the same facts as testified to by the other grand jurors,—that he had formed a fixed and decided opinion as to the guilt of Northey, from Northey's testimony before the grand jury above stated, and that opinion was that he was guilty. The court required of counsel to make his statement by affidavit, which counsel refused to make, and thereupon the court refused to grant further time to subpoena grand jurors. The court refused to set aside the indictment, and defendant excepted. It is argued that the indictment should be set aside for the reason that it appears from the testimony of the grand jurors examined that a state of mind existed on the part of each of them, when they found these indictments against Northey, in reference to Northey and his case, which prevented them, and each of them, from acting impartially, or without prejudice to the substantial rights of the defendant in finding the indictment herein. The partiality and prejudice here charged against each grand juror is based on the fact that, in examining, in their capacity as grand jurors, a case against Robert F. Morrow, Northey was called as a witness before the grand jury, and on such examination testified that he was guilty of the offense charged in the indictment, and that in this testimony each of them had formed the opinion that he was so guilty. It clearly appears from the testimony of one of the grand jurors examined that Northey in his testimony admitted his guilt, and, as they all say that they formed their respective opinions on this testimony, the inference is irresistible that such was the character of Northey's testimony. It is admitted by each of these grand jurors that their opinion, formed on such testimony, was fixed and decided. Now, conceding that an indictment can be vitiated by the participation of a grand juror in finding it, who had formed, before entering on its examination, an unqualified, fixed, and decided opinion that the defendant so indicted was guilty, and for that reason should be set aside, can it be that an opinion formed under the circumstances in evidence herein is of that character? The facts upon which the opinion of each grand juror was formed herein came to his knowledge in the discharge of his duty as a grand juror, when the grand jury was engaged in the discharge of its official duties, in inquiring into a public offense against the people of the state, triable within the county of their impanelment. Northey is called as a witness before them, and testifies under oath in the presence of the jury, to facts which inculcate him in a public offense, within the scope of their inquiry. In effect, the witness admits his guilt. The grand jurors hear his sworn statement, and conclude that he is guilty. Can such an opinion—is it possible that an opinion so formed can—be disqualifying as to any member of the grand jury to act upon an indictment of the witness for the offense of which he admits his guilt? The opinion which disqualifies is one formed from something heard outside which has none of the sanction of an oath, and is merely hearsay. It might as well be charged against a judge that he is partial, or biased, or prejudiced against a person tried for a public offense before him, when, on a motion for a new trial of the cause, on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, he states, in denying it, that he has heard and considered the evidence, and formed the opinion when he heard it, and was still of opinion, that the defendant was guilty, and the verdict correct.

The counsel speaks of Morrow's Case, and the grand jury having under consideration Morrow's Case when Northey gave his testimony, and he seems to regard the grand jury as resembling a petit jury, and, like the latter, restricted to the examination of a particular case. We do not think this is a proper or reasonable view. The grand jury has within the scope of its inquiry all public offenses committed or triable within its county, (Pen. Code, § 915;) and though it takes up for examination a charge against one person, if it should appear from the testimony taken on such examination that sufficient reasons exist for putting another person on his trial, they can and should find an indictment against such other person. Suppose, in such a case, they should conclude that both persons should be indicted on an opinion formed, when the charge against one only was specially under examination. Both indictments might not be directed by the same order. The indictment against the witness might be ordered on a day subsequent to the order of the other. Could it, with any justice or propriety, be said, under these circumstances, that a grand juror was not impartial, or was prejudiced, because when the matter of directing an indictment against the witness was taken up he had already formed an opinion on evidence regularly heard that the witness was guilty? Can bias or prejudice or partiality be charged against members of a grand jury because, having already formed an opinion of a party's guilt on testimony regularly and lawfully heard, they hear the testimony of another witness before ordering an indictment to be drawn up against such party? The foregoing questions can be answered in only one way, and that relieving a grand juror so acting from every imputation of bias or partiality. We see nothing of bias or prejudice in an opinion so formed. It is not a prejudgment at all. The opinion is formed on evidence coming regularly before the grand jury in the discharge of its lawful functions, and does not indicate a state of mind in reference to the case or the party indicted which will prevent a grand juror from acting impartially, and without prejudice to the substantial rights of both parties. We see no reason why this grand jury should not have indicted Northey on his own testimony, as given before it. If it saw proper to call a witness, (Woods,) as was done in this case before ordering the indictment, we see no reason why it could not do so. Such a course indicated no bias or prejudice on the part of the grand jury, or any member of it. In fact, Northey's Case may be said to have been under consideration from the time that he gave his testimony in relation to Morrow until the indictment against him was found. The disqualifying state of mind referred to in the statute must have existed when the examination of Northey's Case was commenced, when he was called before them as a witness, and it is not contended that any such state of mind existed at that time.

The fact that two of the grand jurors were in court when Morrow was on trial, and heard Northey plead his constitutional privilege when he was there called as a witness, is of no significance. It does not appear to have had anything to do with their voting for Northey's indictment. The contention as to bias or prejudice of the grand jurors, or either of them, cannot be sustained. We fail to see that Northey suffered any prejudice as to any substantial right, or any right whatever. The court committed no error in refusing a delay to procure the attendance of Hotaling. From the statement of counsel when he made the motion for delay, it appears that he expected to prove the same sort of prejudice, partiality, or bias, on the same facts as existed in regard to the other jurors, which we have held was no indication of bias or prejudice. It is further argued that the indictment should be set aside because the name of a witness whose deposition was read to the grand jury was not inserted at the foot of the indictment, or indorsed thereon. It appears that the notes of the short-hand reporter of Northey's testimony on Morrow's trial were read to the grand jury when considering the case against Northey, and it is said this was Northey's deposition, and that Northey's name should have appeared on the indictment in one of the modes above stated. The testimony of Northey was given orally on Morrow's trial, and the short-hand notes of such testimony were not a deposition. Code Civil Proc. §§ 2004, 2005. "The object of requiring the names of the witnesses to be thus indorsed upon the indictment is twofold—First, to inform the party who are his accusers; and, second, to inform the prosecutor who are the witnesses." People v. Freeland, 6 Cal. 99. It would be useless to inform the party that he was himself an accuser. If it was material or important that he should be informed of it, he already had that information. As to his being informed of the names of those who had testified before the grand jury, and might be called to testify on his trial on behalf of the prosecution, this could only refer to such witnesses as could be called by the prosecutor, and could be compelled to testify, or, at least, to be sworn. It could not refer to the party indicted, who could not, in any event, be called for the prosecution. We cannot see that the law required Northey's name, in any view, to be placed on the indictment in either of the modes above pointed out. It follows from the above that the court below properly refused to set aside the indictment. We do not think that there should be a reversal on account of the remarks made by the judge of the court below as to the law, and that he thought "the prosecution in criminal cases was too much handicapped." The court, in consequence, no doubt, of the importance attributed to these remarks by counsel for defendant, and an apprehension on the part of counsel that they might have an effect on the eight jurors present in the jury-box when the remarks were made, prejudicial to his client, took occasion, in delivering its charge to the jury, to make to them the following observations: "You are the exclusive judges of all matters of fact, but must be guided by the law as laid down for you by the court, independently of any preconceived notions of your own, or of anything that counsel may have said, and of anything that may have been said in your presence or hearing as to the propriety or policy of any provision which the law may have laid down for the conduct of criminal cases. During the examination of Mr. Kohler as to his qualifications to serve as a juror, some language was used by the court to which defendant's counsel took exception. I instruct you that it is your duty to ignore in your deliberations the remarks then made by the court, and that you must deal with the case on the law as it exists, and as the court states it to you, irrespective of your own opinion, or any opinion the court might have, as to the wisdom of the law." We think that these observations to the jury, made to them by the court when giving them directions by which to guide their conduct in the consideration of the case, were sufficient to remove all apprehension that the remarks of the court, above referred to, would have any effect on their minds prejudicial to the defendant. To hold otherwise would be to attribute to the jurors a lack of ordinary intelligence; and this, we are bound to presume from their selection to try the cause, they possessed. To hold that the members of the jury in whose presence the remarks were made could not lay them aside as something irrelevant to the business they were charged with, and disregard them entirely in the discharge of their functions, would be irrational and incredible. If men of ordinary intellectual endowments are incapable of such a mental operation, trial by jury may justly be regarded as a failure. In view of all the circumstances, we see no ground justifying a reversal in this matter, the discussion of which here comes to an end.

The complaint and answer and the minutes of the court in the case of Florence N. Wright et al. v. The Geary-Street, P. & O. R. Co. were properly admitted in evidence to prove the allegations of the indictment in regard to that case, and the fact that the Woods who was named in the indictment as the person to whom a bribe was offered by defendant was a juror, and acted as such on the trial of the case. If these documents were admissible in evidence, it was proper to read them to the jury. Counsel for defendant contends that the complaint and answer were admissible only to show that there was an issue of fact pending in the case referred to, for trial before a jury; that it was error to permit them to be read to the jury against his objection; and, further, that, as the evidence was admitted for a special purpose, it was the duty of the court to have limited, by its instruction to the jury, the evidence to such special purpose, and that the failure to do so was error. We have already disposed of the objection to reading the above papers to the jury. What portion of this evidence would or could have operated to the prejudice of defendant we cannot see, nor has counsel pointed it out. If there was anything of the character above referred to in the papers, not relevant to the issue joined herein, and which counsel apprehended might operate prejudicially to the defendant, he should have requested an instruction limiting the evidence so as to restrict its scope to the purpose for which it was offered. Not having done so, he cannot here assail the failure of the court so to limit the evidence. That the court failed to instruct on such point is not error, conceding that such instruction should have been given if asked for. We think it may be stated, as a general rule in all cases, that, if the court in its charge has failed to direct the jury on any point, its failure to do so is not error; and if counsel desires an instruction to be given, proper in itself, and which should be given, he should ask for it, and on his omission to ask for it the omission of the court to give it is not error. To entitle counsel to assail the action of the court for error, under such circumstances, a proper instruction must have been requested by counsel, refused by the court, and an exception reserved by counsel to the ruling.

The defendant excepted to the ruling of the court admitting Woods' testimony as to his conversation with Gamage. Woods stated that he had told Gamage what had occurred between him and Northey as to the offer of Northey to pay him money to favor the defendant as a juror in rendering a verdict in the case of Wright, etc., v. The Geary-Street Park & Ocean Railroad Company, and that Gamage had advised him to hear all there was to be said on the subject, and to seemingly acquiesce, because if he did not do so, he might approach some other juror, and that, in pursuance of such advice, he had answered Northey, on his third conversation with him, that it was all right. The counsel for defendant had informed the court that he was going to contend that Woods was an accomplice with Northey. On this issue, collateral to the main one, the evidence was admitted by the court. We think there was no error in this ruling. The testimony related to an occurrence which tended to illustrate the conduct of the witness Woods in his dealing with Northey, and was admissible on the issue above mentioned. The admission of the written statement of Northey's evidence before the grand jury, which Northey admitted to George Flourney to be substantially correct, was not error. The objection here made, that it was not admissible because it was not affirmatively shown by evidence to have been voluntary on the part of Northey, cannot be now urged. No such objection was ever made to it in the court below. The objection then made was that it was irrelevant and immaterial, and not permissible under section 926 of the Penal Code. The objection now urged was made for the first time in this court, and cannot be considered. When the admissions of Northey were made he was in prison, detained there as a witness in the case of People v. Morrow, and this is urged as a ground why they were not admissible. This point does not seem to have been urged in the court below, and cannot be urged or considered here. Indeed, the fact of Northey's imprisonment related to the voluntary character of the admissions, and, as we have seen, no objection as to their voluntary character was made when the testimony was offered and admitted. The ruling on that point covers this. Section 926 of the Penal Code, and the provisions therein contained, relate to a grand juror, when called as a witness, and provides that a grand juror may be required by any court to disclose the testimony of a witness examined before the grand jury in the cases mentioned in the section. Granting that a grand juror can only be compelled to disclose the testimony of such witness in the cases mentioned in the section referred to, it will be observed that no grand juror was called here to make any disclosure whatever. The only witness called in relation to this matter was Flourney. It may be further remarked that it seems that the rule of secrecy set forth in the statute is intended only for the protection of grand jurors, and not of the witnesses before them, and that the witnesses cannot invoke it. See People v. Young, 31 Cal. 564, 565. Stewart Menzies, foreman of the grand jury, testified: "Know Frank Northey. He was examined before the grand jury,—sworn and examined." To the above testimony counsel for defendant made no objection and reserved no exception. He cannot then assail it here as error. We may add that the evidence was clearly admissible, within the rule laid down in People v. Young, supra. The fact that a person was called, sworn, and examined as a witness before a grand jury does not come within the rule of secrecy. If it did, it is violated whenever an indictment is returned with the names of the witnesses indorsed on it or inserted at its foot. Publicity is thus given to the fact, and a publicity, too, that is required by the statute. We think the verdict is sustained by the evidence. It would be an absurd refinement to hold that the defendant did not offer to give a bribe to Woods. When he conveyed Morrow's offer to Woods to bribe him he was offering himself to give a bribe. It was no less an offer to give a bribe on his part, because the money to be paid was not to come from his pocket. We find no error in the record. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

PATERSON, J. I concur. I think, however, that the admission of Woods' testimony as to the conversation he had held with Gamage was error. I agree in saying that the error was not prejudicial on the grounds—First, that no objection was made to it because incompetent; and, second, that it is of such a character it did not tend, in my opinion, to prejudice the defendant before the jury.

EVA v. McMAHON et al.— (No. 11,766.)
(Supreme Court of California. December 10, 1888.)

1. DAMAGES—LIQUIDATED—FAILURE TO DELIVER POSSESSION OF LAND—CONTRACT.

Under Civil Code Cal. §§ 1670, 1671, providing that contracts liquidating damages shall be void except in cases where it would be impossible, or extremely difficult, to fix the actual damage, and section 3334, providing that the detriment caused by the wrongful occupation of land, except in certain cases specified, shall be deemed the value of the use of the property for the time of such occupation, an agreement to pay $200 per month and an attorney's fee, for failure to deliver possession of land on a certain day, is void.

2. EQUITY—REFORMATION OF CONTRACTS.

The agreement was made by the owner of the land at the time of a conveyance, which contained more land than he owned, and he called the attention of the grantee's attorney, drawing the instrument, to this fact, but the description was not changed in order that it might certainly embrace the lands of the grantor. It was understood that the grantor could not give possession to the portion he did not own. Held that, in an action on the agreement for damages for not delivering the portion not owned by the grantor, a prayer for a reformation of the conveyance should have been granted, and that the right to the reformation was a valid defense, though the reformation was not made.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county; A. VAN R. PATERSON, Judge.

Action by James Eva against Daniel McMahon and others for liquidated damages. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Civil Code Cal. §§ 1670, 1671, provide that contracts liquidating damages shall be void except in cases where it would be impossible or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage. Section 3334 provides that the detriment caused by the wrongful occupation of land, except in certain cases specified, shall be deemed the value of the use of the land for the time of such occupation.

J. C. Bates, for appellant. W. H. & J. R. Glascock, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. On the 15th day of August, 1883, the defendants sold and conveyed to the plaintiff a tract of land in Contra Costa county, described as containing about 200 acres. On the same day defendants executed and delivered to plaintiff an agreement, called "Exhibit A," by which it was stipulated that they might remain in possession of the premises until the 1st day of October, 1883, and that, if they should fail or neglect to surrender to the plaintiff the possession of the described premises on that day, then they would pay to him all costs, charges, and expenses to which he might be put to gain such possession, including a reasonable attorney's fee, and would also pay the further sum of $200 per month for such time as plaintiff might be deprived of, or prevented from gaining possession of, the premises by reason of any act or thing done, suffered, or committed by the defendants, while in possession thereof. The description in the deed included some 20 acres which the defendants did not own. On the day named they surrendered the possession of all the land which they did own, and the plaintiff took and afterwards retained the possession thereof. This action was commenced in May, 1885, to recover the sum of $3,880,—being $200 per month from October 1, 1883,—as “liquidated damages thus far incurred on account of deprivation of possession of part of said premises, and $250 attorney’s fee.” The defendants answered, and, by way of cross-complaint, set up certain facts which entitled them, as they claimed, to have the deed and agreement reformed so as to contain a true and correct description of the property sold by them to the plaintiff. No demurrer or answer to the cross-complaint was filed by the plaintiff. The case was tried by the court, and judgment rendered in favor of the defendants; but their prayer for reformation was denied, because, as was said, “they did not sign the deed or agreement under any mistake as to their terms or meaning.” The plaintiff appealed from the judgment, and has brought the case here on the judgment roll.

The court found, among others, the following facts: In July, 1883, the defendants, being the owners in fee of a certain tract of land situated in the county of Contra Costa, and bounded on the north by the lands of one Blum, on the east by the lands of one Wagner, on the south by the lands of one Roland, and on the west by the lands of one Emmett, agreed to sell the same to plaintiff; he taking several days to examine the title thereof. During the time given plaintiff in which he examined the title, he and his attorney, J. C. Bates, were informed of the claim and title of Roland to that portion on the south embracing the creek, and also of the claim and title of Blum to the greater portion of that part on the north which is embraced in the diagram attached to the complaint, and marked “Exhibit B,” to-wit, about 20 acres thereof; the same being a part of the La Bocha rancho, owned by said Blum, a survey of which had been recently made by the United States authorities, and that a portion of the said rancho, to the extent of from eight to ten acres, was within the exterior limits of the old fences which had been put on defendant’s land many years prior thereto, and such portion was known to belong to Blum, of which plaintiff and his attorney had full notice. On or about the 15th of August, 1883, plaintiff’s attorney, in drawing the deed, followed the description by metes and bounds which had been used by defendants’ grantors long before the line of the La Bocha rancho was established, and before the purchase by Roland of the creek on the south; and upon defendants calling the attention of said attorney, who was acting for plaintiff in procuring said conveyance, to the fact that defendants did not own a portion of the land included within said boundaries on the north, and that they desired to sell only the lands to which they had title within said boundaries, plaintiff and his attorney, not having a precise description of the true boundary line on the north and the south, preferred to use, and did use for their own convenience, the old description used in the prior deeds, in order that the same might certainly embrace the lands to which defendants did have title, and which were intended to be sold by defendants and purchased by plaintiff. The said deed and agreement were made and delivered with the full and distinct understanding that the description by the said metes and bounds was not a correct description of the lands intended to be conveyed, and plaintiff in fact knew that a large portion included within said metes and bounds was not owned by defendants at the time of the conveyance. The deed and agreement (Exhibit A) were made and were taken with the understanding by plaintiff and his agent that defendants could not and should not make title or give or procure possession to such portions as they had no title to. At the time of the sale defendants had a tenant in possession whose lease did not expire until October 1, 1883, and plaintiff, being desirous that said tenant should leave promptly upon the expiration of his lease, and not put him to trouble, induced the defendants to sign Exhibit A. It was not understood, agreed, or intended that said instrument should operate against defendants as a covenant of quiet and peaceable possession and enjoyment, but was distinctly understood between the parties that the possession of the premises to be delivered only applied to such lands as defendants had title to in fee, and had sold and conveyed to plaintiff, and to none other. The land of Blum, shown on the diagram, "Exhibit B," was, during all the time for which damages were asked, unproductive, and without value; and all that portion of it outside the old fence, containing about 20 acres, was never in the actual possession of defendants, nor claimed by them. Plaintiff, at the time of the negotiations for the purchase of said lands, went upon the lands, and viewed the same, and had actual knowledge of the location of the exterior fences, which were supposed to follow the lines described in the metes and bounds given in the deed; and while so viewing the premises he was notified by the agent of defendants that the fence on the north was on the land of Blum. Plaintiff had not been damaged in any sum whatever by reason of his failure to obtain possession of all the lands described in Exhibit A, or by reason of any act of defendants done or suffered by them, or either of them, while in possession of said lands, or at all. From these facts the court found, as a conclusion of law, "that from the nature of the case it was neither impracticable nor difficult to fix the actual damages which would arise from the failure of either of the parties interested to perform any of the terms or conditions of the contract on their part to be performed, and for that reason that part of the stipulation contained in Exhibit A, providing for damages for the breach of other provisions therein contained, is void."

This conclusion is in accord with the provisions of sections 1670 and 1671 of the Civil Code, and if warranted by the facts is decisive of the case. It is assailed by appellant, but we think it must be sustained. We see no difficulty in fixing the actual damages which one sustains by being deprived of the use of land to which he is entitled. Ordinarily the damage is the value of the use and occupation of the land for the time he is deprived of its possession. Civil Code, § 3334. There are exceptions to this rule provided for in other sections of the Code, but they do not affect the result. Here the plaintiff had sustained no damage at all, and it would seem to violate all rules of honesty and fair dealing to allow him to take from the defendants the large sum claimed.

But, however this may be, we think there is another ground on which the judgment may be sustained. Upon the facts found the defendants were entitled to have the deed and agreement reformed so as to contain a true description of the land actually sold by them to the plaintiff, and the reason assigned for refusing the reformation was not sound. Murray v. Dake, 46 Cal. 644; Isenhoot v. Chamberlain, 59 Cal. 630. And it is clear that, if the descriptions of the land had been properly reformed, the plaintiff could not have recovered. But, in order to constitute a defense, it was not necessary that the reformation be in fact made. It was enough that the defendants set up and established facts which entitled them to the relief demanded. Hoppough v. Struble, 60 N. Y. 430.

We find no error in the record prejudicial to the appellant, and therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

WE CONCUR: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

WORKS, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment and in the opinion, except so far as it announces the doctrine that the defendant could defeat the action by proving facts sufficient to show that the instrument sued on ought to be reformed without such reformation being in fact made. As to the right to have the instrument reformed, the finding of the court below is against the defendant.

PATERSON, J., took no part in the decision of this case.

CITY OF SAN DIEGO v. GRANNISS. (No. 12,856.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 12, 1888.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—BOUNDARIES—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

The city of San Diego is built around three sides of a bay, shaped like a horseshoe, and was originally a pueblo, whose water-line was the bay. A peninsula began near the mouth, and at one side of the bay, running nearly in the center, and more than half way up the bay, around which the water for an indefinite distance was called the "Ship's Channel." Acts Cal. 1875-76, p. 806, reincorporated the city, with the same limits on the land side as before, but provided that the "water front line should be the ship's channel," and gave the city jurisdiction of the bay and of the sea for one league from shore. Another section divided the peninsula into wards for voting purposes, and drew the boundary line of one ward from one point to another across the mouth of the bay; thus including, practically, the whole peninsula. Other sections restricted the elective franchise to residents of the city, and authorized the city to acquire land outside of its boundaries for municipal purposes only. Held, that the act included the peninsula within the city limits.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. T. McNEALY, Judge.

Action by the city of San Diego against J. W. Granniss, for taxes. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Harry L. Titus, for appellant. A. B. Hotchkiss, Levi Chase, and W. H. C. Ecker, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This case was submitted to the court below upon an agreed statement under section 1138 et seq., Code Civil Proc. Judgment was rendered for the defendant, and plaintiff appeals. The matter involved is the right of plaintiff to assess and tax certain land of defendant, situated on what is known as the "Peninsula of San Diego,"—the question being whether or not said land is within the limits of the city, and its determination depends upon the true construction of an act of the legislature approved April 1, 1876, entitled "An act to reincorporate the city of San Diego." St. 1875-76, p. 806. From the maps before the court, and admitted to be substantially correct, it appears that the main body of the city is built around three sides of the bay of San Diego, somewhat in the shape of a horseshoe. The upper, or inland, end of the bay is towards the north, and the lower end, or mouth, is towards the south. Leaving the mainland at a point on the east side of the bay, and apparently not far from its mouth, is a strip of land which runs northerly, up through the bay, and is called the "Peninsula." The body of water lying immediately around the peninsula (on three sides) is called "Ship's Channel," and, on the westerly side, leads out to the open sea. The peninsula runs far beyond the middle of the bay, its exact distance from the northern shore not appearing; and it is in the very center of the horseshoe. It is, topographically, almost as much in the heart of the city as if the latter inclosed it on all sides, as in a circle. There is a line designated in the said act incorporating the city as "a line drawn from the south-west corner of the pueblo at Chollas valley due west to the light-house at Point Loma;" and it is admitted that if the southerly limits of the city extend to that line, (which is substantially a line between the two ends of the "horseshoe,") then the plaintiff should have had judgment. And the same admission is made if the city limits extend over the bay, "and into the ocean to the extent of one marine league from the shore." But San Diego was a pueblo, and received a patent as such from the United States in accordance with a certain survey made in 1858, by J. C. Hayes. This patent does not include any part of the peninsula, but is confined to lands outside of the shores of the bay, and defendant contends that the limits of the city are bounded by the lines of the patent, except only that the water-front along the ship channel is slightly modified. (We have thus stated the situation sufficiently for an understanding of the subject with which the legislature was dealing.)

Defendant's contention, it seems to us, rests almost solely upon the proposition of considering the first clause of the first section of the act in question alone, and ignoring all other parts of the act which bear upon the question of the city's limits,—a proposition which cannot be maintained without violating well-settled rules of construction. One clause of a statute, or contract, apparently conclusive as to some particular thing, may be enlarged or limited by other provisions of the instrument upon the same subject; and in such a case the intent must be gathered from all the provisions considered together, the interpreter having his eye on the subject-matter of the instrument, and giving effect to each clause of the latter, when it can be done. The first section of said act is as follows: "Section 1. All that tract of land known as the 'Pueblo of San Diego,' included in the survey made for the city authorities in July, 1858, by J. C. Hayes, United States deputy surveyor general for the state of California, shall henceforth be known as the 'City of San Diego,' the boundaries of which shall be fixed by the field-notes of the said survey, except the water-front line on the bay, and this shall be 'Ship's Channel' of the said bay; and the municipal jurisdiction shall extend to said limits, and over the waters of said bay, and into the ocean to the extent of one marine league from the shore."

It will be observed that if this section 1 were to be alone considered, the construction contended for by defendant would not, by any means, be assured. It provides that the field-notes of the Hayes survey (the pueblo patent) shall furnish the boundaries of the city about to be incorporated, except as to the water-front line. The front line is therefore not to be fixed by the lines of the patent. How, then, is it to be fixed? The section first speaks of the line "Ship's Channel." But a glance at the map shows that the ship's channel is a very indefinite thing. It is a body of water of indefinite width, in the form of the letter U, commencing near the place where the peninsula leaves the main-land, and running up the easterly side, through the deep and wide northern part of the bay, around the head of the peninsula, and down the westerly side, into the ocean. Now, is the intent that the front of the city shall be a curved line, supposed to be drawn through the deep water along the outer undefined edge of this indefinite channel? Or is the intent that it shall include, at least, all that lies north of a line drawn through and connecting the southerly parts of this siphon-shaped figure? The former construction would be inconsistent with the clause of the section which immediately follows, and which provides that the municipal jurisdiction shall extend "to said limits," and into the ocean to the extent of one marine league from the shore. There is no limitation attached to the words "municipal jurisdiction," and they include, of course, all the powers which the municipal corporation is given by its charter; and the charter includes all the powers usually granted such corporations, the power of taxation being expressly mentioned. There is no ground for the position that the word "jurisdiction," as here used, should be construed as meaning jurisdiction for certain special purposes only. It is subject to no limitations other than those of the charter itself.

But there are other provisions of the act which throw strong light upon the question under discussion. Section 2, which divides the city into wards, provides as follows: "For voting purposes, the inhabitants of that portion of the peninsula of San Diego which lies north of a line drawn from the southwest corner of the pueblo at Chollas valley, due west to the light-house on Point Loma, shall be considered as in the Second ward, and said inhabitants shall have the right to vote at city elections." (The land north of that line includes practically the whole of the peninsula.) And the only way to get rid of this provision, and maintain the contention of defendant, is to assume that the legislature intended to give the elective franchise to people who were not residents of the city, and lived beyond its limits, free of any burden of taxation. But such an assumption would be in the very teeth of the time-honored rule that no construction of words is admissible which gives to them an absurd signification, if any other reasonable construction is possible; and that this clause was put into the act upon the understanding by the legislature that it was making the peninsula a part of the territory of the city is apparent from subsequent provisions. Section 4 provides that no person shall be eligible to any city office, "nor shall any person be entitled to vote for the same, who shall not be a qualified voter according to the constitution of the state, and who shall not have resided in the city and ward for which he shall be elected, or offer to vote, for thirty days next preceding the election;" and section 5 provides that officers "shall be elected by the qualified voters of the city, as aforesaid." But section 27 makes it quite clear, we think, that the legislature intended to put into the area over which the new city government was to have municipal jurisdiction more "land" than was included in the patent for the pueblo, as described in the first clause of section 1. It is as follows: "Sec. 27. This charter or act shall not be construed as to give the city authorities, or the citizens of San Diego, any control or title to the land lying outside of the city or pueblo boundary line, as confirmed by the patent to the city of San Diego, except for municipal purposes only; nor shall any park, cemeteries, or other property set aside for public purposes be sold by the city authorities without an act of the legislature of this state being first obtained therefor." So there was land—not water merely, as contended by defendant—lying outside of the lines of the patent over which the city was to exercise control for municipal purposes; but as the city owned, as a proprietor, certain pueblo lands within the lines of the patent, (and this appears in the act itself,) it was thought prudent to provide that the act should not be so construed as to give the city any title, as a proprietor, to any of the land outside of those lines. But how could there be any such outside land under a construction which shuts its eyes to everything but the first part of the first section of the act?

Our conclusion, arrived at by reading and considering all the provisions of the act together, and keeping in view the subject-matter of the proposed legislation, is that the legislative intent was to erect a city government which should embrace all the land included in the lines of the pueblo patent, and also all the territory, whether covered by water or not, which lies within the sharply curved line around which the city is mainly built. To accomplish this purpose it is provided, first, that the boundaries of the new corporation shall be fixed by the field-notes of the survey which were followed in the patent, except the lines on the water front. This fixes the back and side lines on the main-land. As to the front or water lines, it is then provided that the jurisdiction shall extend over the bay, and into the ocean to the extent of one marine league from the shore. The peninsula is, then, expressly mentioned as part of the city, and it is provided that its inhabitants shall vote in the Second ward; and then, assuming that there is to be land within the limits of the proposed city outside of the pueblo boundaries, and knowing that the city will have a proprietary interest in certain lands within the pueblo, the legislature provided that as to the outside lands the act shall not be so construed as to give the city any title to them, but that it shall have over them the control and jurisdiction usually exercised by municipal corporations for municipal purposes. Our opinion, therefore, is that the said peninsula is within the corporate limits of San Diego. The judgment of the superior court is reversed, with directions to enter judgment for plaintiff for the amount mentioned in the agreed statement of facts.

ROBINSON v. DUNN, Comptroller. (No. 11,565.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 10, 1888.)

OFFICE AND OFFICERS—EXTRA COMPENSATION—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Compensation of porters of the legislature being by Pol. Code Cal. § 268, fixed at "$4 per day," services rendered on days when the sessions were unusually long are not "extra," and a resolution at the end of the session, voting additional pay therefor, comes within Const. Cal. art. 4, §§ 31, 32, prohibiting a gift to any person of public money, or extra compensation to any public officer or servant, after service has been rendered.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco: F. W. LAWLER, Judge.

D. M. Delmas and George A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for appellant. Cary, Sullivan & Sullivan, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Appeal by the defendant from a judgment commanding him to draw his warrant in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $60. The plaintiff was porter of the senate during the session of 1885, and bases his claim upon the following resolution of that body, viz.: "Whereas, during the present session of the legislature the senate has been in session during a period of several weeks, from 11 o'clock A. M. to 11 o'clock P. M., thus entailing extra work, amounting to sixteen hours, upon the porters, pages, watchmen, gate-keepers, mail-carrier and the mailing-clerk: Resolved, that the pages, porters, watchmen, gate-keepers, mail-carrier, and the mailing-clerk be, and they are hereby, allowed $1 per day for extra services for the session, and the comptroller is hereby authorized and directed to draw his warrants in the sum of $60 for each of the above enumerated employes, payable out of the contingent fund of the senate." This resolution is alleged in the complaint to have been passed a few days before the end of the session, and from this fact, and from its language, it is apparent that the compensation was for services which had been already rendered. The idea upon which the resolution rests is that the services were "extra," or, in other words, something outside of the regular duties of the employment; and, since it is not pretended that the services were different in kind from the regular duties, they are "extra" because they were for a longer time than seems to have been considered usual. But the compensation of the porters is fixed by law at "$4 per day." Pol. Code, § 268. They are not paid by the amount of work which they do, but by the day; and we think it too clear for discussion that the word "day," as used in the statute, covers whatever period of the twenty-four hours the legislators choose to remain in session. The language of the law fixing the compensation of the employes is similar to that fixing the compensation of the legislators themselves, who are allowed "$8 per day;" and it would be as reasonable to say that extra compensation should be made for a long session in the one case as in the other. The services, therefore, were not "extra," but were such as the employes were bound to render; and, this being the case, the sum voted to them must either have been a gift or extra compensation "after service has been rendered," both of which are expressly forbidden by the constitution. See sections 31, 32, art. 4.¹ This view of the

GARDNER v. TATUM. (No. 11,459.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 10, 1885.)

1. PRACTICE IN CIVIL CASES—DISMISSAL—ENTRY OF JUDGMENT.

Under Code Civil Proc. § 581, subd. 6, (as amended in 1885,) providing that an action may be dismissed when, after verdict, "the party entitled to judgment neglects to demand and have the same entered for more than six months," it is not error to refuse to dismiss an action where six months have not elapsed since the act went into effect, though more than six months have elapsed since verdict. WORKS, J., dissenting.

2. SAME—REQUEST TO ENTER JUDGMENT.

The action will not be dismissed under the above act, where the party entitled to judgment orally requested the clerk to enter judgment, and paid him the fee for so doing; and it is immaterial that the clerk kept a book in which demands for entry of judgment were requested to be made in writing, the book not being required by law, and the clerk having promised to enter the judgment.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

Langhorne & Miller, for appellant. S. G. Hilborn and J. E. Wendell, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Appeal from an order refusing to dismiss an action. The case was tried and a verdict rendered for the plaintiff on April 7, 1885. No judgment was entered thereon, and after the expiration of six months from the entry of the verdict the defendant moved to dismiss the action under subdivision 6 of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1885, which provides that "an action may be dismissed * * * (6) by the court when, after verdict or final submission, the party entitled to judgment neglects to demand and have the same entered for more than six months."

Assuming in favor of the appellant that the order is appealable, we think the refusal to dismiss was right for the following reasons:

1. It is conceded that the amendment did not take effect until May 9, 1885, and the motion was noticed for November 6th of the same year. Consequently six months had not elapsed between the time of the taking effect of the act and the time the motion was made. And we think that the intention of the legislature must have been that the provision should not apply to existing verdicts unless there was six months' neglect after the taking effect of the act. It could never have been the intention to make the provision apply to cases where the six months had already expired when the act took effect. Nor do we think it could have been intended to make the provision apply where five months and twenty-nine days of the six months had expired when the act took effect. And we see nothing which would enable us to say that the expiration of only half or a third or a quarter of the period would present a different case. The act, therefore, does not apply to the case presented to the court below.

2. But if it were otherwise, we nevertheless think that the refusal to dismiss the action was proper, under the circumstances. The rule established by the statute applies to cases where the party has been guilty of negligence. The language is that the dismissal may be had where "the party entitled to judgment neglects to demand and have the same entered." It cannot be supposed that the words "have the same entered" look to any compulsion by the party upon the clerk in case he should refuse to do his duty; for it would not be impossible that, if the question should be litigated, the litigation over it might be protracted beyond the six months. The very clumsy phraseology of the provision can only be held to mean that, if there has been negligence on the part of the prevailing party for six months, the action may be dismissed; and in this case it appears that the party cannot be accused of negligence. He paid the clerk his fees for the entry of judgment, and requested him to enter it, and "understood from said clerk that said judgment would be entered as requested by him," and "always supposed that judgment had been entered as requested by him, and had no intimation that the same had not been done until the service of the notice of the motion to dismiss." Upon this state of facts, to dismiss the action would be to make the litigant suffer for the negligence of the officer. It is true that the order to enter the judgment was verbal, and that the clerk kept an order book "in which all demands for entry of judgments are required by him to be given and made in writing," and that it was customary so to make them. But this book was not required by law to be kept. It was kept merely for the convenience of the clerk. And when he accepts his fees for entering the judgment, and promises to enter it, it is his duty to do so without reference to the order book. If the plaintiff was guilty of any negligence in relying on the promise of the clerk, it was of such a slight character as not to bring him within the scope of the provision. We therefore advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order appealed from is affirmed.

WORKS, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment on the second ground stated in the foregoing opinion, but do not wish to be understood as agreeing to the first proposition laid down therein.

In re BURRELL'S ESTATE. (No. 11,924.)
(Supreme Court of California. December 10, 1888.)

1. WILLS—CONTEST—PLEADING—ATTESTATION.

Contestant's allegations that testator's signature to the will was obtained by misleading and deceiving him as to its contents, and that when it was signed and witnessed testator was deceived, and under the undue influence of the proponent, are not sufficient to raise an issue as to whether or not the will was attested by two witnesses, who signed at the request and in the presence of testator.

2. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS—DUE EXECUTION.

On trial of a will contest, the court charged the jury that the question of the "due execution" of the instrument was not for them to consider; meaning that the question of proper witnessing was withdrawn. The issues as to mental capacity and undue influence were submitted to and passed upon by the jury. Held, that contestants were not prejudiced by the inaccurate use of the words "due execution," it being apparent that the jury were not misled.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; FRANCIS E. SPENCER, Judge.

D. W. Herrington, for appellants. T. H. Laine, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. Lyman J. Burrell died in Santa Clara county in 1884, leaving what purported to be his last will and testament. The paper was dated March 9, 1882, and was signed by the decedent, and appeared to have been properly witnessed. Philomela T. Burrell, the widow of decedent, was named as executrix, and presented the will for probate. The children of decedent objected to the probate of the will, and filed written grounds of opposition thereto. The proponent made answer to the opposition, denying all of its material allegations. The contestants then demanded a trial by jury, and asked to have the following issues submitted to the jury: "(1) Was Lyman J. Burrell on March 9, 1882, at the time of the alleged making of said will, of sound and disposing mind? (2) Was the making of said will procured through or by any fraudulent misrepresentations, or false statements or suggestions, of the proponent, Philomela T. Burrell? (3) Was said will procured to be made by the undue influence of any person? (4) Had the proponent, Philomela T. Burrell, any undue influence over the deceased which operated in the disposition of his property in the making of his will? (5) Was said will, at the alleged time of the making thereof, signed by two witnesses, at the request and in the presence of Lyman J. Burrell, deceased?" The court settled and submitted to the jury the first four of these issues, but, upon objection of counsel for proponent that there were no sufficient allegations to warrant it, refused to submit to them the last one. At the conclusion of the testimony the court instructed the jury very fully upon all of the questions involved, and among other things said to them: "Evidence has been introduced relating to the execution of the propounded paper. Such evidence you are at liberty to consider as bearing upon the two questions of testamentary capacity and of undue influence. The fact of due execution of the instrument, however, is withdrawn from your consideration, and with that you have nothing to do." The jury answered the first issue submitted to them in the affirmative, and the other three in the negative. The will was then admitted to probate, the court finding and certifying that the decedent died on the 9th day of June, 1884, in the county of Santa Clara, where he was then a resident; that the will was duly executed by decedent, and signed by him, in the presence of three witnesses; "that he acknowledged the execution of the same in their presence, and declared the same to be his last will and testament; and the said witnesses attested the same at his request, in his presence, and in the presence of each other; that the said decedent, at the time of executing said will, was of the age of eighteen years and upward, was of sound and disposing mind, and not acting under duress, menace, fraud, undue influence, or misrepresentation, nor in any respect incompetent to devise and bequeath his estate." The contestants moved for a new trial, and, their motion being denied, appealed from the order admitting the will to probate, and from the order denying their motion.

It is argued for appellants that the court erred in refusing to submit to the jury the fifth issue requested by them, and in instructing the jury that the due execution of the will was withdrawn from their consideration. The contestants were plaintiffs in the matter of Estate of Dalrymple, 67 Cal. 444, 7 Pac. Rep. 906, and it devolved upon them to allege all of the facts necessary to sustain their claim that the will was not properly signed and witnessed, and a statement in the language of the statute, or of the evidence of the facts, was not sufficient. Estate of Gharky, 57 Cal. 274. One of the allegations relied upon by the appellants is that, at the time of the making of the alleged will, the testator believed that he was by the will providing for the future division and distribution to the contestants of a large amount of land, to-wit, the 1,000 acres, etc.; "and contestants charge that, acting under and in pursuance of said belief, the signature of said Lyman J. Burrell was procured to be and was made, and not otherwise; and the said will is not the will of the said Lyman J. Burrell, and has never been ratified or confirmed by him, but was procured to be signed to said will, and witnessed as aforesaid, and so published and declared by him under the belief aforesaid." Another allegation is "that said will was signed and witnessed in the presence of said Philomela

T., and while said Lyman J. was so under the absolute control and dominion of said Philomela T., and by and under her directions, supervision, and control, and with the object and purpose, on the part of said Philomela T., of securing to herself unlawfully the whole and every part of the estate and property of deceased, to the exclusion of these contestants, his heirs at law, from all and every part thereof, and from all benefit arising therefrom, contrary to the will and wish of said deceased, uninfluenced by said proponent." The question is, were these allegations sufficient to raise an issue as to whether or not the will was attested by two witnesses, who signed it at the request and in the presence of the testator? We do not think they were. They were evidently made upon the theory that the will was procured to be made by the fraudulent misrepresentations and undue influence of the respondent. Now, assuming that the testator was mistaken as to the disposition made of his property, and was under the dominion and control of his wife, still he may have signed the paper, and may have declared to the attesting witnesses that it was his will, and they may have signed it at his request and in his presence; nor does it follow, if the facts were as supposed, that the testator was not "mentally capable of recognizing the act which was being performed before him," or that he was not "actually conscious of the transaction in which the witnesses were engaged." 1 Jarm. Wills, (5th Amer. Ed.) 87. The words "due execution of the instrument," used in the instruction complained of, may have a broader meaning than was intended to be given them by the learned judge of the court below, but, if so, they were harmless to appellants. They were evidently intended to refer only to the witnessing of the will, and we so understood by the jury; the other questions having been submitted to and passed upon by them. We find no material error in the record, and therefore advise that both of the orders appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion both the orders appealed from are affirmed.

CHAFOIN v. RICH et al. (No. 11,409.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 10, 1883.)

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY—LIABILITY OF SURETY—DEMAND ON PRINCIPAL.

Under the provisions of Civil Code Cal., relating to sureties and guarantors, the same circumstances which would release a guarantor will also exonerate a surety; and therefore one who signs a note apparently as a joint maker, but who is known to the payee to be a surety for the other, is not discharged by the payee's neglect to demand payment of the principal, and to give notice of non-payment, as by section 2807 a guarantor is liable, on default of the principal, without demand or notice.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county; E. F. HEAD, Judge.

Action by Martin Chafoin against A. G. Rich and Michael Dubs, on a promissory note. Judgment against Rich, and in favor of Dubs. Plaintiff appeals.

Geo. W. Fox, (Edward J. Pringle, of counsel,) for appellant. Edwin F. Fitzpatrick and Joseph S. Wallis, for respondent Dubs.

BELCHER, C. C. The question presented for decision in this case is this: If a promissory note is executed by two persons as apparent makers, but one of them is in fact a surety for the other, and is known to be such by the payee, must the payee, in order to fix the liability of the surety, present the note and demand payment thereof from the principal at or about the time of its maturity, and promptly give notice to the surety of its non-payment; or, in other words, has the surety the rights and liabilities of an indorser? Before the adoption of the Codes, it was held that one who signed his name to a negotiable instrument as a guarantor had the rights of an indorser, and must have notice of presentment and non-payment. Riggs v. Waldo, 2 Cal. 485; Geiger v. Clark, 13 Cal. 579; Jones v. Goodwin, 39 Cal. 493; Crooks v. Tully, 50 Cal. 254. This rule did not, however, apply to sureties. A surety was held to be liable as a maker, and not to be entitled to notice of demand and non-payment. Aud v. Magruder, 10 Cal. 282; Dane v. Corduan, 24 Cal. 157; Shriver v. Lovejoy, 32 Cal. 574; Damon v. Pardow, 34 Cal. 278. Has the rule as to sureties been changed by the Codes? It is claimed for respondent that it has, and the court below seems to have so held. There are many provisions in the Civil Code in reference to sureties, guarantors, and indorsers, but those bearing on the question in hand are as follows: "Sec. 2832. One who appears to be a principal, whether by the terms of a written instrument or otherwise, may show that he is in fact a surety, except as against persons who have acted on the faith of his apparent character of principal." "Sec. 2840. A surety is exonerated (1) in like manner with a guarantor," etc. "Sec. 2844. A surety has all the rights of a guarantor, whether he becomes personally responsible or not." "Sec. 2787. A guaranty is a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person." "Sec. 2807. A guarantor of payment or performance is liable to the guarantee immediately upon the default of the principal, and without demand or notice." "Sec. 2819. A guarantor is exonerated, except so far as he may be indemnified by the principal, if by any act of the creditor, without the consent of the guarantor, the original obligation of the principal is altered in any respect, or the remedies or rights of the creditor against the principal, in respect thereto, in any way impaired or suspended." "Sec. 2823. Mere delay on the part of a creditor to proceed against the principal, or to enforce any other remedy, does not exonerate a guarantor." "Sec. 3108. One who writes his name upon a negotiable instrument, otherwise than as a maker or acceptor, and delivers it, with his name thereon, to another person, is called an 'indorser,' and his act is called 'indorsement.'" "Sec. 3117. One who indorses a negotiable instrument before it is delivered to the payee is liable to the payee thereon as an indorser." In these sections we see nothing to sustain the contention of respondent. Being a surety, he had all the rights of a guarantor. But the general rule, established by the Code, is that guarantors are liable without demand or notice. Section 2807, supra. It is true that guarantors, who are in effect indorsers, are excepted from this rule. Fessenden v. Summers, 62 Cal. 484. The respondent was not, however, an indorser, and hence does not come within the exception. We therefore advise that the judgment in favor of defendant Dubs be reversed, and that the cause be remanded, with directions to the court below to enter judgment against him on the findings.

We concur: HAYNE C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. The judgment in favor of defendant Dubs is reversed, and cause remanded to the court below, with directions to enter judgment against him on the findings.

PEOPLE v. TODD. (No. 20,428.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 10, 1888.)

FORGERY—INDICTMENT—EVIDENCE OF INJURY.

An indictment for the forgery of a will, by which the wife of the testator was alleged to be injured, when it sets out the will, which is valid on its face, and which purports to bequeath an estate to the wife and the accused, though it does not show how the wife could be injured by the forgery, nor that the testator had any estate, is sufficient under Pen. Code Cal. § 470, providing that every person who, with intent to defraud another, falsely alters or forges a will, shall be guilty of forgery.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county, W. E. GREENE, Judge.

W. B. Todd was convicted of the forgery of a will. Pen. Code Cal. § 470, provides, among other matters, that whoever, with intent to defraud another, falsely makes, forges, or alters a will, shall be guilty of forgery.

Taylor & Craig, for appellant. Atty. Gen. George A. Johnson, for the People.

FOOTE, C. The defendant was convicted of a forgery of a will, and from the judgment rendered against him this appeal is prosecuted. The only point made for the reversal of the judgment is that the court erred in not sustaining the defendant's demurrer to the indictment. It is claimed that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. To sustain this contention, the defendant asserts that the alleged forged will, which is set out in the indictment, does not show upon its face in what way Minerva J. Todd, the wife of the testator, the person alleged to have been injured, could be affected by the forgoing of the will, and offering it for probate, nor the fact that the testator had any property to bequeath, and that the indictment does not set out those extrinsic facts. The will is a valid one upon its face, and it purports to give and bequeath an estate to Minerva J. Todd and the defendant. Whether or not the testator had any estate as a matter of fact, or whether Minerva J. Todd, as his wife, occupied such a relation towards him as that a bequest of certain of his property to Walter B. Todd would result in her injury by reason of the fact that if the forgery of the will had been undiscovered she would have received a smaller part of the estate than she would otherwise, are extrinsic facts, which it was not necessary to set out in the indictment, as they were mere matters of evidence which would tend to prove or disprove the intention to defraud and to commit forgery, and were admissible as such under the allegations of the indictment, which was sufficient under section 470 of the Penal Code. There is nothing in the case of People v. Tomlinson, 35 Cal. 506, which conflicts with this view of the law. That was a case where the alleged forged instrument was invalid on its face, and it was held that in such a case the indictment for forgery should have stated matters aliunde which, added to the face of the instrument, would constitute the alleged crime. Here the will is valid upon its face, and, if unchallenged, would, according to its apparent legal character, have invested the defendant with an estate. The injury done to Minerva J. Todd, who was named as a legatee in the forged will, depended upon whether or not the testator had any estate, and whether, if he had any, the bequest to the defendant, if valid, would have reduced her share of it. These facts were matters of proof, and went to show whether or not the intent to defraud and injure existed, or the contrary, but they were not necessary allegations in the indictment to show the validity of the will on its face. The "legal character" of the instrument once established, as was shown by setting out the apparent will, extrinsic facts were to be proved, but it was not necessary to allege them in the indictment. The indictment is framed in strict conformity to section 470 of the Penal Code, and the alleged forged instrument set out therein is valid upon its face; therefore the indictment was sufficient. In People v. Ah Woo, 28 Cal. 212, it was said by the appellate court: "So far as it is claimed that the indictment fails to show in what manner Ah Woo was or could be defrauded by the transaction, it is sufficient to say that all that is matter of evidence. The charge is direct that the transfer was made with intent to defraud Ah Woo, which is sufficient, so far as the indictment is concerned." In Ex parte Finley, 66 Cal. 263, 5 Pac. Rep. 222, the court declares that "the rule does not require that the indictment or information shall contain an express allegation of the existence of every fact the existence of which is assumed in the forged instrument. It is enough if the writing is one which, if genuine, might apparently be of legal efficacy." In 2 Bish. Crim. Proc. §§400-418, the same view of the law is upheld. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.
